For Reference

Not to be taken from this room

213503

Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2014

https://archive.org/details/ladieshomejourna71janwyet

JE 21 54

JOURNAL

July, 1954

es'
e

The Magazine Women Believe In

213503

35c

She grew up in the slums;
he in Boston.
ey quarreled, flew apart, flew together.
The most delicious, humorous, heartwarming married love story ever told, by husband, Richard Aldrich

ERTRUDE LAWRENCE
AS MRS. A

DREAD COMEBACK
by Morton Sontheimer

SPOCK TALKS WITH MOTHERS
A New Series

Now—brush away tooth decay after eating sweets!

New Ipana with WD-9 blocks formation of tooth-decay acids for hours. So always use it after eating . . . as your dentist recommends.

Almost everybody eats some sweets—a particularly satisfying source of quick energy.

But after eating sweets, you should cut down the risk of cavities . . . with new Ipana Tooth Paste. Here's why.

Many foods team up with mouth bacteria and their enzymes to form tooth-decay acids. But WD-9 in new Ipana blocks formation of these acids for hours—because it is an active anti-enzyme and bacteria destroyer.

For best results, use new Ipana regularly after eating (the way most dentists recommend) BEFORE decay acids can do their damage. In a 2-year clinical test with hundreds of people who ate their normal amount of sweets, brushing this way prevented new cavities for most people.

So remember, while no dentifrice can stop all cavities—you can protect teeth from sweet foods by brushing this way with Ipana. Start today—get new white Ipana with WD-9.

New minty flavor encourages children to brush teeth. No strong, medicinal taste in new Ipana with WD-9. And it makes your mouth so fresh and clean that even one brushing can stop most unpleasant mouth odor all day long.

PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

New IPANA® with WD-9 protects your teeth after sweets

Heart of your New Freedom Gas Kitchen: a new* ROPER automatic "CP" Gas range; the really silent SERVEL Gas refrigerator with no moving parts to wear and a 10-year warranty.

Look to GAS for the smartest kitchen in the world

*REG. A. G. A.

Go ahead! Let your kitchen coddle you — you deserve it! Own a range — a new automatic Gas range — that will turn itself on and off with a clock control. Own a range you can trust . . . a range that broils without smoking, bakes without burning, one that responds instantly to your slightest touch. Own a refrigerator with an automatic icemaker that frees you from the mess and fuss of filling and refilling ice trays . . . a Gas refrigerator. See your Gas company or Gas appliance dealer for these advanced contributions to modern living. That's how to own the smartest kitchen in the world!

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

Only Gas gives such matchless performance

GAS—the modern fuel for automatic cooking . . . refrigeration . . . water-heating . . . house-heating . . . air-conditioning . . . clothes-drying . . . incineration.

Journal

Contents

July 1954

Vol. LXXI No. 7

Journalities

RICHARD STODDARD ALDRICH tells such a great deal about himself as well as his beloved actress-wife in Gertrude Lawrence as Mrs. A (Page 26) that it hardly seems necessary to say more. He is one of the most distinguished men on the American theatrical scene. After he was graduated from Harvard, his family hoped he would be a banker, and he even tried to learn but soon gave it up. "The fascination of producing plays," he says, "is in seeing them come to life. You start with nothing but a stack of typewritten pages and in a few weeks or months you transform them into flesh and blood. It's creation—taking the author's idea and making it live. Of course you hope to get your money back and show a profit, but the sense of creating something that didn't exist before is your reward, and you have it even if the play fails. And that is why you always want to try again." And that is also why Richard Aldrich never really wanted to be a banker.

Richard Aldrich

PEGGY DRAKE (Steak and Apple Pie, Page 30) reports: "I am a real Westerner and had never been east of Denver before I was married. I was born on Circus Day in Tucson, Arizona. My ancestors were Mormon pioneers. I met Bill Drake in college and we were married two weeks after I graduated. We've accumulated a daughter, Kathy, Kenneth and Andrea (twins), and Nanki-Poo and Yum-Yum (twin Siamese cats). We live in Omaha, where my husband is Nebraska manager of the United Press."

Peggy Drake and children

If The Disappearance of Mary Blake (Page 32) makes you feel the writer knows the theater, you're right. MARY ORR is both an actress and a writer. She began her career in the Broadway comedy Three Men on a Horse. Later, in collaboration with her husband, Reginald Denham, she wrote, then acted in, their first play, Wallflower. It ran for a season on Broadway and became a Warner Brothers movie. She also helped to write, and acted in, many television dramas. Her first short novel, written without her collaborator, became the Oscar-winning picture, All About Eve. This comedy won a Screen Writer's Guild Award in 1950.

Mary Orr

Novel Condensation Complete in This Issue

32 THE DISAPPEARANCE OF MARY BLAKE, Mary Orr

Stories

30 STEAK AND APPLE PIE, Peggy Bilby Drake
34 KATHERINE (Second part of six), Anya Seton
44 THE SUNDAY SMELL, Naomi A. Hintze

Special Features

11 THE FARM PROBLEM AND ME, Dorothy Thompson
21 TELL ME DOCTOR, Henry B. Safford, M.D.
23 BUILDING INTERNATIONAL FRIENDSHIPS
23 NEW DIPLOMACY, Margaret Hickey
26 GERTRUDE LAWRENCE AS MRS. A (First part of five), Richard Stoddard Aldrich
38 THE DREAD COMEBACK, Morton Sontheimer
40 RED CARPET FOR MAMIE (Conclusion), Alden Hatch
42 DR. SPOCK TALKS WITH MOTHERS, Benjamin Spock, M.D.
76 IS THERE A PLOT AGAINST WOMEN?, Paul Jones
91 HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES: TIME OF OUR LIVES, Jan Weyl

General Features

4 OUR READERS WRITE US
6 UNDER-COVER STUFF, Bernardine Kielty
8 THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE, Harlan Miller
16 MAKING MARRIAGE WORK, Clifford R. Adams
18 SOME ENCHANTED EVENINGS (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Ruth Imler
25 FIFTY YEARS AGO • JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN
68 ASK ANY WOMAN, Marcelene Cox
72 GETTING FATHER "INTO THE ACT", Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
78 THIS IS AN UNFRIENDLY, Munro Leaf
118 DIARY OF DOMESTICITY, Gladys Taber

Fashion and Beauty

48 WE LIVE AT THE BEACH, Wilhela Cushman
50 "HE WAS THE MAN I WANTED," Dawn Crowell Norman
96, 98 VERY EASY TO MAKE, Nora O'Leary

Food

52 LOOK WHO'S COOKING, Ann Batchelder
54 LINE A DAY, Ann Batchelder
108 OLD SOUTHERN SUMMER KITCHEN, Dorothy Lehman Sumerau

Architecture and Interior Decoration

36 POTTSGROVE, Richard Pratt
46 ROMANTIC MODERN, H. T. Williams
116 EVERYTHING FOR COMFORT, Carol L. Mercado

Poems

59 DERRING-DON'T, Georgie Starbuck Galbraith
67 BEAUTY ENTIRE, Elizabeth Coatsworth
75 $1.18, Reeve Spencer Kelley
77 EIGHT-YEAR-OLD BOY, Robert P. Tristram Coffin
82 BIOGRAPHY, Cynthia Harris
105 SONNET TO AN ADOPTED CHILD, Jean Saunders
115 WHAT WOULD YOU?, Marion Lineaweaver

Cover Photograph by Tana Hoban

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect.

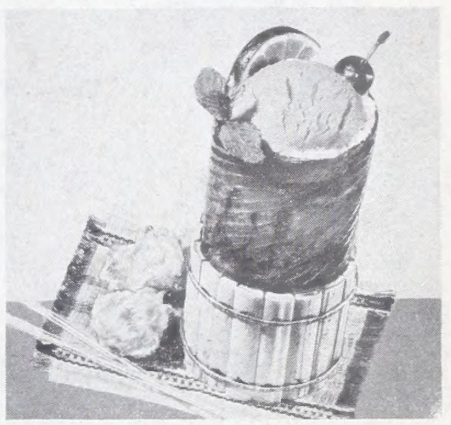
Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1954 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S., U. S. Possessions and Canada—1 Yr., $3.50; 2 Yrs., $6; 3 Yrs., $8.50; 4 Yrs., $11. Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America (except the Guianas)—1 Yr., $4. All other countries—1 Yr., $7. Remit by Money Order or Draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.



Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Vice-President and Director of Research; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

Meadow Gold Mealtime Adventures

by Beatrice Cooke

FREE! 10 SUMMER COOL-OFF RECIPES

Tropic Cooler
Peppermint Freeze
Apricot Flip Strawberry Rhubarb Frost
Chocolate Banana Float
Rhubarb Crunch a la Mode
Meringues au Chocolat
Almond Butterscotch Puffs
Pink Pear Sundae
Chocolate Ripple Ice Cream Pie

Like to tempt tired summer appetites when the temperature soars? Try serving a tall, frosty cooler. Or a luscious ice cream dessert that tastes as good as it looks. You'll make these refreshers even more delicious if you use Meadow Gold Sherbet or Meadow Gold Ice Cream. That's because they're smooth-frozen, the special Meadow Gold way. Made with the finest ingredients money can buy. Why not treat the family to a thirst-quenching Tropic Cooler soon? And send for your complete set of hot-weather recipes today

Recipe for Tropic Cooler

½ cup lime juice
¼ cup sugar
1 quart sparkling water
2 pints Meadow Gold Lime Sherbet
2 lime slices, cut in half Maraschino cherries

Combine juice and sugar. Pour into 4 chilled tall glasses. Fill three-quarters full with sparkling water. Mix well. Add scoops of Meadow Gold Lime Sherbet to each glass. Garnish each with half lime slice and maraschino cherry. Serves 4.

When your recipe calls for milk, be sure you use Meadow Gold Milk. It's as pure and creamy and good as milk can be!

©1954 BEATRICE FOODS CO.

If rich desserts are not for you, here's a happy thing to do—

have grapefruit instead

Spooning up each luscious forkful is fun, but only half the story. A Florida grapefruit salad can satisfy appetite and perk you up. Have it instead of a rich dessert and you keep your poundage down.

How so? Each can of sections or juice brings you a whole array of Florida-fresh health benefits. Vitamins are crowded in—lots of vitamin C, the buoyant health vitamin you need each day. And calories are crowded out. Reducing is easier, eating is fun—if you have grapefruit instead!

Worth its weight in health — Florida grapefruit sections or juice in cans

Plump sections tumble out ready, as is, for breakfast or dessert, or for salads. Lively tasting juice is a wonderful refresher. A can of frozen concentrate puts a pint and a half in a pitcher. Keep chilled and ready to pour.

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION, LAKELAND, FLORIDA

Our readers write us

She Likes, She Keeps . . .

Fort Worth, Texas

Dear Editors: Years ago you gave us Eleanor Roosevelt's story, Bette Davis', Joan Crawford's, John Gunther's, Karen's miracle story, the Little Princesses; and more lately Mother Was Human, Jimmy John's, Elizabeth Taylor's, and now Mrs. Eisenhower's, and in May, Anna Perrott Rose's Tinchy, the "Frightened Boy." Should this very young-at-heart author live to be a hundred and five and take a wolf child to love and rear, pléase, editors, get the story for your readers.

Is it any wonder that I like, I kiss, I keep . . . taking your wonderful magazine as long as my eyesight and money hold out?

Thanks and best wishes to your whole staff.

Sincerely,
MRS. JACK G. WEST

▶ The* Journal and Mrs. A. P. R. Wright thank Mrs. West and the many readers who wrote, for whom she stands as spokeswoman. For you all—another memorable Journal event: Gertrude Lawrence as Mrs. A., *surely the tenderest, most delightfully humorous and tempestuous true story of married love ever lived or told. Begin it on Page 26. ED.

Kitchen Police?

Simonstown, South Africa

Dear Editor: If you are one of those who would shriek at the sight of a mouse on your kitchen table, what would you do if you returned home to find a huge hairy monkey climbing over the kitchen sink with your morning loaf of bread?

The housewives here in Simonstown, South Africa, for six months now have had to fight a running battle with baboons.

Not in our yard, please!

The other day a Mrs. Bennett returned from her morning drive to the station, and found three enormous, four-foot-high baboons in her kitchen.

With amazing presence of mind, she remembered reading that unless he feels himself cornered, the baboon will rarely attack a human being. So, leaving the kitchen door open, she rushed in herself by the side porch, making as much noise as possible. Fortunately, these were well-read specimens and knew what was expected of them.

They did not wait for her to get there. The leader growled and barked like a dog as he jumped from the sink and, trailing the kitchen towel behind him, made a dash for the garden fence. Once they reached a safe distance, they all three sat down and defied her.

The raids are nearly always organized by groups of as many as ten or more. But the housewives of Simonstown are now up in arms, so there is only one way in which a battle like that can end.

Most sincerely,
OLIVER K. WHITING

Lived In—And Loved

Orange, Connecticut

Dear Editors: I wonder if forty years from now someone will be loving the house they built from the plans of the little "Salt Box" house shown in March,

Journal house 40 years later.

1954, Ladies' Home Journal. That is what I'm doing, loving greatly, a house, so comfortable, taken from April, 1912, Ladies' Home Journal and built in 1913.

Sincerely,
MRS. CHESTER R. JONES

▶ Present indications are that* more *than 1800 families in all forty-eight states, Canada, and even East Africa will soon be living in Salt Boxes. ED.

Tottering Marriage Saved

Pasadena, California

Dear Editors: For some months we have read your articles, Can This Marriage Be Saved. We knew our marriage was tottering on the brink of disaster, but were too afraid to act. When things finally became desperate, we decided to ask the American Institute of Family Relations in Los Angeles for help, which they gave immediately and with the greatest tact.

We have found we not only had our children in mind, we really adored each other and were too juvenile to admit it. Our life is wonderful! Our relations with the world are more secure and we are so grateful to all of you. We hope that many more like us can be helped. We know there are many who desire it.

Let them hope and take action. They will never be sorry.

Most sincerely,
(Name Withheld)

Poisoned Relations

Greenwich, Connecticut

Dear Editors: I can only add another voice in deploring the detrimental effect of American crime comic books abroad. I have lived in India for eight years, and have heard repeatedly from Indian friends that America cannot want peace and at the same time allow these books to be published for their children.

We have an excellent United States Information Service in India. The American Reporter which we publish is well written and widely read. All our constructive effort is largely negatived by these books, which are like a poison in our foreign relations.

Cannot you use your influence to organize some responsibility on the part of publishers to represent us abroad as honorably as we expect our Government to do? The moving-picture industry has had someone of integrity to establish standards of responsibility. Could there not be some such person to whom all export of printed material would be referred? And with that, publicity should be given to publishers and editors of all such periodicals which enter into affecting our foreign relations, for better or for worse. Publishers of worth-while magazines will not fear publicity.

We have freedom of the press, and freedom to drive an automobile. But in our driving, we are not free to injure our fellow men.

Sincerely yours,
EVELYN WARREN-BOULTON

New! a shampoo that Silkens your hair!

So alluring—so enchanting... this silken shimmer for your hair!

Just one shampoo with New Drene and your hair—

yes, yours—will shine like silk, feel like silk, act like silk!

This is a New Drene formula—

so Mild you could shampoo every day!

A PRODUCT OF
PROCTER & GAMBLE

Hardworking Mrs. Marilyn Bridgman of Watermill, New York has discovered that only Jergens Lotion gives her hands the care they need. She says:

"I scour 4500 pots and pans a year...but I avoid detergent hands with Jergens Lotion!"

Detergents are wonderful—but they could have ruined Marilyn's pretty hands. Yet her hands are soft and lovely still. Why?

Jergens Lotion! This famous formula has been continuously improved for fifty years to help heal chapped red hands instantly!

No other lotion works faster, or penetrates deeper. Lovelier hands at once! Jergens never leaves a sticky film (as many others do).

Contains two softening ingredients doctors have used for years. Yet, you pay less for Jergens, the world's favorite hand care.

Use Jergens Lotion—avoid detergent hands

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

"Let's face it. We're not getting away from it all, we're taking it with us!"

JULY, if ever, is the time to relax—that long month of long hot days when you dream of the trips you want to take. It's the time to cast off worry, to get into the car and drift along at thirty-five miles an hour with the top down, to wander off into the hills, foot-loose and fancy-free.

I just read the travel diary of a man who did the 1744 equivalent. He was Dr. Alexander Hamilton (not the Hamilton). He got on his horse and for four months rode over the countryside from Annapolis to Maine and back again. He found the roads good, and also the service on the fifty ferries he had to take. The women in Newport were the "prittiest" he saw, and those in Albany the ugliest. The "muscettoes" in Long Island were bad. The best company and conversation were in New York, but there were too many "toapers"; he got tired of "nothing but their excessive drinking." In Boston he lived at a boardinghouse on Beacon Hill from which he had a view of the whole town and the peninsula on which it stands! GENTLEMAN'S PROGRESS, the Itinerarium of Dr. Alexander Hamilton, edited by Carl Bridenbaugh. (University of North Carolina Press, 1948.)

●

I've heard it said that the most useful thing you can take traveling with you is information. That you shouldn't read just one book on the subject, but as many as you can lay your hands on. And that doesn't mean books about Italy or Sweden or England any more than it means San Francisco.

The European guidebooks are a library in themselves. The Baedeker type, that tells all—that counts the train stops and names each mountain peak—is indispensable in the foreign country itself, in my opinion. This would be the Nagel or the Muirhead or the Blue Guide—whichever one deals with the country you're visiting.

For reading ahead of time and taking notes, I have found two very satisfactory series of travel books. Virginia Creed's ALL ABOUT AUSTRIA and ALL ABOUT IRELAND are excellent. I can't imagine enjoying those countries quite so much without having primed up on them from an authority. There are also ALL ABOUT ITALY, ALL ABOUT SPAIN, ALL ABOUT HOLLAND. (Holt.)

Equally helpful and full of lighthearted suggestions are the Horace Sutton books, FOOTLOOSE IN FRANCE. FOOTLOOSE IN ITALY, and so on. (Rinehart.) In both these series you get the point of view of history-minded, sophisticated, sensible people who pick and choose, and do not recommend indiscriminately.

●

AROUND THEATERS is a collection of Max Beerbohm's reviews of London plays and people from 1898 to 1910. These were the years when he was dramatic critic on The Saturday Review, succeeding George Bernard Shaw. He saw everything—the opening night of Peter Pan and of The Passing of the Third Floor Back, even Henry James' play which was a sure-fire failure. But the special charm of the book is its turn-of-the-century air, its wit, its elegance.

The things that happen these days in the theater would make the inimitable Max turn in his grave—if he were in it. But he isn't. He is now over eighty, and graduated to radio.

●

THE FLAW IN THE CRYSTAL, by Godfrey Smith, is a first-rate English suspense novel, based on the disappearance of the two British Foreign Office men, Burgess and McLean. (For what it is worth: I heard that these two were seen in Berlin during the Four Power meeting last winter.)

●

Daphne du Maurier, who from time to time has used her fine pen on her relatives—Gerald: A Portrait, The Young George du Maurier (letters edited), The Du Mauriers—has now written a historical novel, MARY ANNE, about her great-great-grandmother. Mary Anne Clarke was the mistress of the Duke of York, son of George III, and protagonist in one of the liveliest scandals in the history of Great Britain. The book follows her from childhood in the London slums, through the mazes of political intrigue to her final exile in France. END

OLD 'N WHITE SALAD with cottage cheese
d Pineapple Slices. Inviting and easy-to-fix for family meals d informal buffet entertaining. On platter, with crisp lettuce aves, heap mound of cottage cheese. Decorate generously with ained Pineapple Slices. Accompany with French dressing fruit salad dressing

Tempt 'em with Pineapple canned tropic-fresh

Nature's most refreshing flavor

CRUSHED
canned Pineapple, good to eat "as is," also makes delicious pies, cookies, puddings, icings, sundaes, meat sauces, jams

PINEAPPLE JUICE
tastes wonderful any time you're thirsty. Chill and shake well before serving of canned Pineapple (bite-size) and the smaller Tidbits are favorites for fruit cups, to sauté with meat, for salad-making and to sprinkle on puddings and cereals

CHUNKS

Probably there never was a salad canned Pineapple couldn't improve! By adding a golden glamor-look . . . by making old favorites taste new. As with salads, so with main-course meats—with desserts and bakings, fruit servings, too—the more canned Pineapple in your eating the more you'll like all that you eat. Keep a "PINEAPPLE SHELF" in your kitchen with all 5 forms of this tropic fruit. Reach often for the pleasure flavor stored by Nature in canned Pineapple!

PINEAPPLE GROWERS ASSOCIATION, San Francisco

She stuck in her thumb,

And pulled out PINK PLUM

And cried, "What a smart girl am I!"

Smart girl, indeed! For what could be more tempting to the lips than the sun-ripe, sun-sweet color of fresh plums? And what more effective accent to the whole new range of Paris blues, off-pinks, charcoal and black? (Nice, too, to know that Cashmere Bouquet's Pink Plum stays pink, stays on—for hours—without re-touching!)

7 Cover-Girl Colors 49¢

Conover girls pick Cashmere Bouquet

"We teach our Conover School students how to use Cashmere Bouquet Indelible-Type lipstick. They apply, splash cold water on their lips, then blot. The color clings for hours!"

Candy Jones (Mrs. Harry Conover)
Director Conover School

cashmere bouquet

INDELIBLE-TYPE LIPSTICK
Super-Creamed to Keep Your Lips Like Velvet

There's a Man in the House

by Harlan Miller

"Why, Mrs. Johnson, I hoped you were going to bring your little boy with you again."

© B. A. AND CO., LTD.—"THE BEST CARTOONS FROM PUNCH"

A husband does change with the years; he even gets milder. . . . I used to exclaim bitterly when there wasn't a pencil at the phone; now I meekly put a dozen pencils there every week in the hope there'll be one when I need it.

Not that I really miss Fourth of July firecrackers. But I wouldn't object too much if Ike fired a cap pistol near a White House microphone to be broadcast coast to coast, powerfully amplified, for the encouragement of all true patriots.

When the archaeologists and geologists dig into our rock garden an aeon from now, they'll be baffled to explain how Oregon rocks, Florida beach sea shells and pebbles from Martha's Vineyard all got blended there.

Our luncheon club's deep thinker argues that Acheson, Marshall and Dulles are so dissimilar that Senator McCarthy couldn't possibly hate 'em all if they hadn't each been Secretary of State, dealing with furriners.

I've resolved to spend at least twice as much time with books, magazines and newspapers as with radio and TV. . . . Or maybe three times. . . . If the Russians can soften us up with low-grade radio, TV and the comics, they'll never need an atom bomb.

At the bridge table we agree that nothing rekindles love 'twixt wife and husband so quickly as the news that other couples rough each other up with flirtations and quarrels, yet remain happy. Magic formula for a hug and kiss after a morning brawl: "Others have it bumpier!"

"My husband often asks me," reports Betty Comfort to her dearest chum over midmorning coffee, "what Rubirosa's got that he hasn't got. I tell him Rubirosa's probably more helpful with the dishes."

It's delightful to observe better manners among the younger generation. . . . I was watching a five-hour-old baby through a big window at a hospital when he yawned prodigiously. But instantly he covered the yawn with a small hand.

Some of my severest locker-room critics argue I'd improve my golf game if I'd keep score more carefully. But shucks, all I ask of golf is to walk on the velvety fairway, once or twice outdrive with my old No. 1 iron the opponent smuggest about his new wooden clubs.

"My boy tells me," confides Peter Comfort, mixing some poison-ivy spray, "that there's $90,000,000 worth of gold in every cubic mile of sea water. And he thinks I've got a direct pipeline to it!"

Between neighbors, supreme politeness must prevail, as between two Eastern potentates. That's why, after I've waited a year for their return, I always borrow back my rakes from my neighbors without batting an eye.

If you love a girl, anything she does is delectable. I was once enchanted by a girl who liked to crumble soda crackers on her ice cream. . . . In memoriam, I still crumble crackers on my ice cream, occasionally to the b.w.'s bafflement.

Our youngest argues strongly for a power lawn mower. But I retort that our yard is level, and occupied largely by a concrete tennis court. Anyhow, he and I need the exercise; mostly he.

Another family argument I've never won: whether to eat the skins of broiled fish or of Maine baked potatoes. Epicures say yes; but my beloved ones still spurn skins. I still eat 'em, with a hangdog look; but I don't argue any more.

I can no longer conceal my deep love for our Aunt Daisy. . . . Of all the eightyish ladies I know, she's the most positive that we of the younger generation aren't really going to the dogs, we're just putting it on.

. . . When you suddenly discover that you and Junior can talk the same language,

. . . And your daughter agrees to let her red hair grow out, without a $25 bonus,

. . . Or your youngest tiptoes into your room at 3 A.M. and turns out your bed lamp and takes the book off your chest,

. . . And your Lady of Sheer Delight agrees with you ten times in a row (or you agree with her and think she agrees with you) . . .

Then you can stop muttering to yourself or raiding the icebox for midnight solace, and kiss her on the ear when she least expects it.

this is how you feel...

All over... all day
— wrapped in the flower
freshness of Cashmere Bouquet

cashmere bouquet

TALCUM POWDER

59¢
29¢ 43¢
Plus Tax

Conover Girls Pick Cashmere Bouquet

"Borrow this good-grooming cue from our Conover Career School students! A quick dusting with Cashmere Bouquet Talc smooths hot, chafed skin . . . helps girdles, stockings and shoes ease on smoothly."

Says
Candy Jones
(Mrs. Harry Conover)
Director Conover School

Now you can cook Fresh Vegetables without boiling away that garden-fresh flavor

Spry makes the difference!

Here's All You Do!

For beans — melt 2 tablespoons of Spry in heavy saucepan. Add 1¼ lbs. of sliced beans, salt, pepper, ¼ cup water. Mix lightly together. Cover and cook over medium heat 18 minutes, or until tender.

For carrots — melt 2 tablespoons Spry, add 3 cups of sliced carrots, salt, 2 tablespoons water. Cook as above for 13 minutes.

When you cook your vegetables this way, there's no liquid left to drain off . . . so the vitamins and garden-fresh flavor are in the vegetables. They'll taste wonderful, or Lever Brothers will return your money.

Spry makes just about everything you cook taste better!

Executive Editor, Mary Bass

Managing Editor: Laura Lou Brookman

Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Barbara Benson, Glenn Matthew White, Donald Stuart, Ruth Imler, Tina S. Fredericks, Helen Everitt, Peter Briggs

Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd, Ruth Mills Teague

Editorial Associates: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Elizabeth Goetsch, Nancy Crawford, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland, Rosemary Jones, Nelle Keys Perry, Adrina Kayaian

Assistant Editors: Victoria Harris, Alice Kastberg, Virginia Price, Marion Wilson, Dorothy Anne Robinson, Jean Todd Freeman, Elizabeth McFarland, Eileen Sharpe, Albert Serwazi, Dolores Knapp

Editorial Assistants: Lee Stowell Cullen, Patricia Martin, Aileen Dowd, June Schwartz, Gretchen Wehler, Babette Brimberg, Joyce Posson, Nancy Terry, Flora Casparian, Betty Jo Ramsey, Lee Ellerich, Constance Holland, Helen Schofield Lukacs, Alberte Wright, Chessy Rayner, Simone Smith, Betty Coe Spicer, Carol Mercado

"Landscape with Cottage and Hay Barn," by Rembrandt van Rijn (1606-69). National Gallery of Art, Rosenwald collection.

The farm problem and me

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

By the time this article appears I shall have relieved by an infinitesimal fraction the headaches of Mr. Ezra Benson, the Secretary of Agriculture. There will have been an auction on my Vermont farm, in which I will have disposed of a herd of registered Jersey cows and young stock and of the major portion of a shedful of farm machinery which cost me thousands of dollars.

The market being what it is, I anticipate whopping losses. What some of my friends and members of my family have called "Dorothy's Folly" is ending.

Yet the farm has not been a "hobby." My sincere ambition has been to make the farm pay, or at least to make it break even. It hasn't, and it won't. Now I know it.

For twelve years it has provided one or another farmer and his family with a modest but comfortable living. I mean it has partly done so. For when receipts are balanced against grain bills, extra labor in the haying season, expenditures for gas, seed and fertilizer, maintenance and repair of machinery and buildings, veterinarian fees, fencing, utilities and insurance, leaving out interest on capital investment, it turns out that mamma is supporting those lovely, big-eyed Jerseys with her typewriter—at the standard of living which they and the milk inspectors demand, but beyond their owner's means.

I shall drop a tear when the darlings are loaded onto the trucks. But I can't go on expending my life for cows. I know the books—down to the last detail. They balance, but with the checks from articles, or the returns of a lecture trip. I can get more net from the rent of the furnished farmhouse—and sweet, comfortable and comely it is—to "summer folks" than I ever have from milk checks.

I've done everything I was advised to do by the county agent and the U. S. Soil Commissioner. The Extension Service of the Department of Agriculture has given me an extended education at the taxpayers' cost. But what it has never been able to demonstrate is how to make a medium-sized financially unencumbered farm of some eighty arable acres, between twenty and forty milk cows and young stock, supplemented by a small flock of sheep and some five hundred laying hens, and all of them doing fine, support not me and my family, but the bedrock costs necessary to work it, and to return a modest income to its working manager.

This is not a notion but a fact. It occurred to me to rent the land and buildings, including a furnished dwelling house, all in excellent condition and the buildings insured (for less than their value) for $25,000. I didn't want to cheat anyone and inquired of the county agent what would be a fair price. He replied that he would not advise any farmer with little or no equity in necessary machinery to engage himself for more than $50 a month. That's about 1 percent on my investment, with me continuing to pay taxes, insurance and major repairs. The price would barely cover taxes. But I agreed with the county agent that anyone working for cash income and paying more would get, at best, a bare living.

I have no complaint about "lazy" farmers. All of them can quip that they don't expect an eight-hour day but would settle for an eight-hour night. In fact, I have no "complaints." But I am in a position earned by experience to know something about the assets and liabilities of the medium-sized farm, and have some views about its future. As a means of producing cash income it is too small.

Farms can succeed financially when they are large enough to employ a full-time, well-paid and expert manager, preferably the owner himself, and sufficient resident and seasonal labor to be worked, as factories are worked, by division of labor, in operational units. A herd of a hundred or more milk cows, a flock of five thousand chickens, a range of several thousand beef cattle or sheep are "economic." Such great farms actually supply most of the food consumed by the nonfarming, and even by much of the farming population.

But there is another form of farming of ancient and stable ancestry. That is the farming that does not produce for cash money, but for family consumption.

The farm owner whose effort is to house, feed and raise a large, healthy, joyful family must reduce his farm operations to what can be accomplished in part-time work by himself, his wife, his children, and occasional labor hired for a specific and limited purpose. He must earn his cash income working forty hours a week in a factory, office, store or profession, and he must find his farm within reach of such opportunities and within reach of good schools! If I could have my way there would be tens of thousands more small factories in this country, in or on the outskirts of nearly every medium-sized village, many of them tied in with the great factories of the nation, and their workers would live on little home-farms, run only to feed their families—actually extended gardens.

For the productivity of land is an awesome miracle. Ten acres of properly conditioned and cared-for land, cultivated solely to feed the stock and people living on it, can supply in abundance most CONTINUED ON PAGE 14

"Pure California lemon juice already squeezed for you! All you add is water!"

LEMON PRODUCTS ADVISORY BOARD, Los Angeles, California

"Cool! Quick! Luscious!

Make 'em both the easy, easy way!

Wouldn't your family go for that big, friendly-looking tray of ice-cold lemonade — with a high, light 'n honey of an angel food cake? Just the thing for summer afternoons — or nights . . . company time, or just "family."

And it's so simple! All you have to do is to open one of those convenient small cans of Frozen Lemonade from California and add water — one six-ounce can makes a quart of the finest lemonade. You couldn't make better if you "squoze" the lemons and "squooshed" the sugar yourself! Trim with fresh mint and add a gay red cherry! Looks wonderful — tastes fine!

Cake 'n Lemonade!" says Betty Crocker

OF GENERAL MILLS

Easy as easy, too, to have that big white cake all ready. Just bake it in the morning from our newest pride and joy — our Betty Crocker Angel Food Cake Mix. Bakes a cake as high, as light, as angel-perfect as Betty Crocker's own best 13-egg angel food recipe.

Anyone can bake it. All the fine country egg whites you need are right in the package. And, especially with ice-cold lemonade, angel food cake tastes so heavenly you just don't need an icing.

Stock up now for summer week-ends — stock up for fun with lots of California's finest frozen concentrate for lemonade — and with Betty Crocker's finest — the new Betty Crocker Angel Food Cake Mix. It's C-O-O-L!

A perfect cake every time you bake — cake . . . after cake . . . after cake . . . after cake!

NOW! the tested treatment for INFECTIOUS DANDRUFF that has helped thousands of Men and Women

LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC ... Kills millions of germs including the stubborn "Bottle Bacillus" (P. OVALE)

MANY PEOPLE never realize that they have infectious dandruff until they see those recurring telltale flakes and scales on the hair, coat or dress shoulder. When dandruff is due to germs, it's a real infection so don't neglect it. It calls for quick treatment ... persistent treatment ... antiseptic treatment!

So start right now with regular use of Listerine Antiseptic and massage twice a day.

Kills "Bottle Bacillus"

Listerine Antiseptic gives your hair and scalp a thorough antiseptic bath ... treats the infection as an infection should be treated ... with real germ-killing action.

Yes, Listerine Antiseptic kills millions of germs associated with dandruff, including the stubborn "Bottle Bacillus" (P. ovale), the very germ that so many dermatologists say is a causative agent of the trouble.

Improvement in 76% of Test Cases

Remember, in clinical tests twice-a-day use of Listerine Antiseptic brought complete relief or marked improvement in dandruff symptoms within a month to 76% of dandruff sufferers. Lambert Pharmacal Company Division of The Lambert Company.

At the first symptom ... Listerine Antiseptic—Quick!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 11

of the food, except sugar, coffee, tea, flour, salad oil, and salt and pepper, for a family of eight to ten people.

I know what I am talking about. The one unquestionable asset we have from our farm is not what we sell but what we eat ourselves.

One reason the nation's storehouses are glutted with butter, meat and dried eggs is that thousands of men who produce them can't afford to feed them to their own folks, because they need cash to pay for machinery and other costs. So farmers selling thousands of pounds of milk per month to creameries eat margarine, and tilling scores of acres of land eat canned vegetables and store meat.

We sell at a loss but consume at a profit.

At this moment 30 cubic feet of freezer space on our farm is crammed with veal, lamb, pork, poultry, every vegetable that grows, and raspberries, strawberries and peaches. On shelves in the storage cellar are 250 quart or pint jars of corn, succotash (no room in the freezer), tomatoes canned and in purée form, mincemeat, sauerkraut, dill, mustard, and bread-and-butter pickles, fruit, boiled cider, jams and jellies. Except for prime beef, I never buy a pound of meat, whether living on the farm or in New York, to which I have it shipped, and where I have another, smaller freezer. Cream desserts, and cakes made with six or more eggs, are no luxury on the farm. I don't earn my living by raising food, but I save enormously by so doing—and consuming it in the family. I lose only by selling it. My real trouble is our family isn't big enough to eat what we could produce, not on 80 acres—and counting rough pasture, bogs and woods, over 400—but on a maximum of ten.

To be happy is not the purpose of our being, but to deserve happiness.

—J. H. FICHTE

These ten ideal acres, in the farm for home abundance that I envisage, would be divided:

1 acre for home and buildings, lawn, shrubbery and flowers.
⅛ acre potatoes.
⅛ acre vegetables.
⅛ acre fruit.
3 acres of prime pasture
3 acres of prime hay.
2⅝ acres of wood lot.

A potato patch of ⅛ acre will produce all a family can eat, as well as seed for the next crop.

On the ⅛ acre of my own vegetable garden I grow every vegetable that will flourish in the Tuscan gardens around Florence, Italy: lettuce of many varieties, including Oak Leaf, which survives sharp frosts; bushels of asparagus; green, wax, pole, shell and Lima beans; peas, and the too seldom grown "sugar peas" of which you eat pod and all; sweet corn of earlier and later varieties, tomatoes (bushels of them), leeks, onions, garlic, winter and summer squash, salad and pickling cucumbers, spinach, carrots, beets, salsify. Plants, started in a cold frame, produce broccoli, cauliflower, kohlrabi, eggplant, celery, peppers and cabbage—white, red and savoy. An herb garden, of about 6′ x 10′, produces every herb mentioned in the Gourmet Cookbook.

FROM July onward our kitchen, and the colonnaded porch that shades it, often resembles a factory, with everyone shelling peas, cutting beans, cleaning broccoli. One can't read and write all day. I'd rather help my cook, a countrywoman neighbor, than go to a cocktail party or play golf, and the house guests are drawn in, apparently to their city-weary pleasure.

My ideal ¼-acre fruit orchard would have twelve fruit trees: five apples, three pears, two plums and two cherries. Peaches and apricots won't grow in New England. But there would be five or six grapevines (trained on poles with telephone wires stretched between) a 50′ row of red and black raspberries, currants and a few blueberries, and a 12′ x 12′ plot of strawberries.

Two cows (bred to freshen at different times, so there would always be one milking; a cow, in case you don't know, milks 305 days a year and is dry 60 before calving).

A flock of five or six ewes (sheep), fifty laying hens, one or two hogs.

One first-rate Jersey cow will produce 30 or more pounds of very rich milk per day.

BUT she's going to fetch a fancy price and I'd settle for two pretty good ones, whose barn records show they average 24 pounds each per day. Don't buy a cow in a poke or trust your own discerning eye. Buy only from a DHIA (Dairy Herd Improvement Association) herd. Members of this association, who support it themselves, are visited every month on unannounced days, by an expert dairyman who himself tests each cow in two milkings according to the amount she eats, the milk she gives and its butterfat content. He's impartial and accurate. So don't buy Mary, Daisy or Jill without seeing what she's produced during the previous year of lactation. And don't buy her if the butterfat content of her milk is under 5 per cent.

Two such cows should give you 48 pounds (24 quarts) of milk a day, of which you will take, say, 4 quarts (8 pounds) for your family—with much more cream content than you'll ever get in the milk you normally buy. You can lift your coffee cream from the top of the bottle. That leaves you 280 pounds per week to separate into cream and skim milk. If you use a quart of heavy cream per week, you will have sufficient left to churn from 7 to 8 pounds of butter (25–27 pounds of milk to make a pound of butter). And you will feed your skim milk and buttermilk to your calves (when they appear), and to your hogs, hens and pullets.

You will raise the pasturage on which your cows feed in summer, and the hay on which they feed in winter, and buy the grain rations they are fed at milking time—one pound to every three pounds of milk. This is a high ratio, but see how the cows take it. Cows rarely overeat. They aren't humans.

You will hire a man with a tractor to cut your three acres of hay, two for the cows and one for half-a-dozen sheep. It must be first-class, high-protein hay, producing at about three tons to the acre, and it will cost you to plant it in the first place, for labor, with machinery, seed and fertilizer—and have the soil tested first—about $200. But hay is a perennial and if you keep it manured and lime-dressed it won't need replanting for six to eight years. Harvesting by a hired worker with his own machinery will cost about $60.

Your two cows will reproduce themselves each year, and until you foresee the advisability of replacing one or another of them raise their calves for veal, feeding them your fortified not too heavily skimmed milk, a raw egg daily, and nothing else. They should each weigh 150 pounds slaughtered and skinned.

Half-a-dozen sheep should yield you the same number of lambs in April, and be pasture-fed except when the ewes are lambing and must have grain, or you're fattening the lambs for three weeks before slaughtering. And you will raise lambs, dressing at 25 pounds each, superior to any you have ever eaten. Don't sell your sheep's wool. When you've accumulated a couple of shearings send the wool to a factory that will weave it into blankets, cloth or knitting wool, at a fraction of the price you'd pay for goods of equal quality. There is at least one such place in Maine.

As far as possible, make your land fulfill two functions. Your orchard, thickly planted to Ladino clover, will be an ideal range for the fifty pullets you will raise to layers each year, and what they eat off the ground will reduce your grain bill by 20 per cent. So will skim-milk and buttermilk rations.

A sheep tethered so he can't reach flowers or shrubs will mow your lawn and like it.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 69

1954

PERFECT RICE WITHOUT COOKING

Just add to boiling water for perfect rice every time!

MINUTE
BRAND
RICE

PERFECT EVERY TIME

PRE-COOKED

No washing! No rinsing!
No draining! No steaming!

You don't boil Minute Rice. You merely add this pre-cooked rice to boiling water, remove from heat—and presto! The whitest, fluffiest, most delicious rice that ever brightened a dinner table! No work, no watching, no sticky pans. And Minute Rice is foolproof—you get perfect results every time! Thrifty, too—costs just pennies per serving. Be sure to get the big economy package.

Product of General Foods

Ready In No Time . . . Welcome Anytime!

MINUTE RICE WITH CLUB STEAK

Surest way to a man's heart—a sizzling steak with plenty of fluffy rice to soak up the juices! What could be easier, with handy Minute Rice so easy to prepare? For 4, simply add 1 1/3 cups Minute Rice and ½ teaspoon salt to 1½ cups boiling water. Cover; remove from heat; let stand 13 minutes. Look how every grain swells up plump and separate—perfect rice for certain, without work or guesswork!

You'll find dozens of delicious ways to serve this wonderful rice—with meat, poultry, sea food—in soups, casseroles, desserts. Exciting recipes on every package—"quickie" treats only Minute Rice makes!

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS, Ph.D
Pennsylvania State University, Department of Psychology

Making marriage work

Many brides worry because their emotional acceptance of sex is incomplete at first.

How a Bride Adjusts to Marriage

THIS summer and fall, thousands of young couples will be busy "getting settled" in their new homes. Before the wedding the most urgent practical questions were decided, such as where to live, whether the bride should work, and how to budget the income. Now household arrangements must be worked out in detail, and everyday necessities of life provided routinely.

Meals must be cooked, furniture placed; there are pictures to hang, grass to cut, letters to write. The budget makes no allowance for dry cleaning, the living-room sofa doesn't fit its space, a change in the bus schedule complicates transportation to work. Even trivial domestic problems require attention, and the major responsibility falls on the bride.

In her preoccupation with the mechanics of the household, it is important that she does not lose sight of other objectives. For the vital element in any marriage is the personal relationship between husband and wife. And the quality of that relationship in the future is greatly influenced by the couple's emotional adjustment now. Practical problems during these first months of marriage, however pressing, are seldom crucial unless they impede or delay adjustment.

Sensible young couples know that each partner will have to adapt to the tastes, habits and attitudes of the other. But the process of adjustment is more complex than that. It involves the interplay of all their separate qualities of mind, heart and character, and also of their physical characteristics and sexual needs. Too often, the relationship between husband and wife is handicapped at the beginning by the bride's inadequate or faulty understanding of the role of sex in marriage.

To be sure, the modern girl is probably better informed about sex than her mother was. Through discussion, reading and perhaps courses in marriage she has become intellectually aware that sex is an essential part of marriage. On the conscious level, she rejects the old-fashioned idea that sex is a wife's unwelcome duty, a husband's right.

But her emotional acceptance may be incomplete, and hampered by inward feelings she herself doesn't recognize. As a single girl she was taught to control and restrain her sexual impulses (if not actually to be ashamed of them). After years of practice in being sexually unresponsive, it is not surprising if she is slow to respond fully in marriage.

Her husband, though disappointed, will try to understand and be patient. He, too, wants their relationship to be based on co-operation and mutual desire. But because sexual responsiveness typically develops earlier in men than in women, his self-denial will impose a real hardship on him.

The ideal time to seek improvement, if needed, is in the early months of marriage, when the desire to please each other is most intense, and before resentments, constraints and misunderstandings have become habitual. But as many letters that have come to us recently show, wives often don't recognize the difficulty until they have been married several years, when the situation is much harder to correct.

Any wife who wants love to endure will try from the beginning to meet her husband's needs in this as in other respects. She will do so, not because it is her duty or his right but because sex is the physical means of expressing love. Her very wish to please her husband will increase his appreciation and understanding. In self-forgetfulness, happiness will be found.

Can May Marry December?

"AT nineteen, I married a man fifteen years my senior. The difference in age seemed unimportant then, but, ten years later, it has become a serious obstacle to my happiness and I suppose to his. I thought I loved him, but I didn't. We have no children, and if I didn't have a job I couldn't stand the monotony of our marriage. He wants to stay at home every night, I want to go out occasionally. He is narrow, selfish, has no sense of humor and frowns upon any frivolity, his name for anything that isn't useful. The only reason I put up with him is because he would be miserable if I left him. The road ahead is so depressing that I don't know what to do."

No two individuals considering marriage can afford to disregard an age barrier as wide as this. Though the couple may seem congenial initially, differences may appear later. Further, as they grow older, the gap may widen rather than narrow. As in this case, the elder partner loses interest in activity and recreation outside the home along with the decrease in his physical energy; but the wife, still a young woman, craves some of the gaiety and fun enjoyed by her contemporaries. The bitterness of the argument is likely to be intensified by the husband's envy (conscious or not) of his wife's youth, her resentment of his assumption of authority.

Such marriages can be happy. But to an even greater extent than in conventional marriages, success depends on the efforts and resources of the wife. The suggestions listed below, based on our research, are directed primarily to wives already married to older men. But the young woman considering such a marriage may be guided in her decision by asking herself if she is equipped for the required role.

She accepts his goals. Most young married couples naturally share many objectives. Both want a home, a family, job success; they work together to achieve them. But the mature husband has achieved or modified his earlier ambitions. His wife cannot expect him to retrace the steps he took as a younger man. Instead, she must identify herself with his goals.

She establishes common interests. Here again, when husband and wife are the same age, they naturally gravitate toward many of the same pursuits. But whereas a young wife likes movies, dancing and popular music, her older husband enjoys reading, symphony concerts or an evening of bridge. Instead of forcing her preferences on him, or abandoning all her accustomed pursuits, the wife tries to find among their separate interests some that both can share, a circle of friends agreeable to both. Otherwise their companionship is unrewarding.

She respects his judgment. This is not only the tactful course to follow, it is common sense. Because of his wider experience, she should accept his opinion when possible, and respect it always.

Shared goals, companionship and respect are essential components of any marriage. The husband and wife who love each other deeply and wisely enough can cultivate them and achieve happiness, regardless of age.

Ask Yourself: Are Our Standards Compatible?

Research shows that compatibility of husband and wife depends more upon their being socially than intellectually well mated. The greatest identification results when their attitudes and standards are in harmony. Circle the number of each item below which you believe applies to your marriage.

We hold and practice about the same standards in regard to:

1. Telling the truth and being ethical.
2. Provision for, and use of, leisure time.
3. Smoking, profanity and drinking.
4. Respect and consideration owed relatives.
5. Paying debts and handling money matters.
6. Selection of, and association with, friends.
7. Personal grooming and neatness of dress.
8. The courtesies we show each other.
9. Religious beliefs and observances.
10. Keeping confidences and avoiding gossip.
11. Behavior toward persons of opposite sex.
12. Training our children.
13. The meaning and aims of marriage.
14. Time that we share as ours alone.

In the most compatible and happiest marriages, 11 or more similarities are designated. The average marriage scores 8 to 10, while incompatible marriages total 7 or fewer. Instead of blaming your husband for not thinking as you do, why not try to work out an acceptable compromise? Note that similarity of beliefs is stressed, rather than the beliefs themselves.

Do You Agree?

Do you believe in high-school boys and girls going steady?

No. An individual needs to know and date as many as twenty-five or thirty persons to learn how to make a suitable choice of a mate.

Pillsbury

(no doubt about it)

The only leading cake mixes with country-fresh eggs right in the mix

MILK IS ALL YOU ADD

(Now available in Canada, too!)

WHITE

CHOCOLATE FUDGE

GOLDEN YELLOW

SPICE

P. S.—Add water to Angel Food

HOBAN-GALLOB

There'll be stars in his eyes for the girl who also finds—and shares—excitement in the world of everyday.

SUB-DEB edited by RUTH IMLER

You sit on the top of a Ferris wheel; the car rocks, you catch your breath, he touches your hand and you shiver as you look at the whirlpools of light below. Then the wheel takes another turn, gently starts, stops and rocks its way down. And that dizzy romantic moment is over. . . .

Sometime this summer or next summer or the summer after that, you'll meet your "stranger," possibly on a crowded seashore, and you'll dream of a "lifelong romance." Such a thing couldn't exist, of course, but a lifetime can be shot through with romantic moments. For romance can be more than a personal relationship, it can be a way of life. Some people have lives as dull as dishwater, and others, who go through exactly the same experiences, have lives with a champagne sparkle.

They say that genius is an infinite capacity for taking pains; we say that romance is an infinite capacity for making a fuss. So be fussy. Especially about the way you look, act and think. Especially if you'd like to inspire romantic notions in a—let's face it—boy!

The Way You Look

▪ fastidious: Be fussy about the way you iron the tucks on a blouse or the ruffles of a dress; insist—by sewing up seams and making extra darts—that your clothes fit you trimly, not snugly or tightly; be firm with yourself about touching up make-up in private only and never immediately after you get into a restaurant or dance.

▪ pretty: Because you're unafraid (you want to look "sweet") to wear pink, blue or yellow, or to sport a colored shoe or a sissy umbrella (because everybody else does not!).

The Way You Act

▪ thoughtful-plus-imaginative: A Christmas card to a friend is thoughtful, but a "Happy Fall" message decorated with hand-drawn oak leaves on the first crisp day is romantic. It's the unexpected gift of time or thought that's romantic. It's thoughtful to settle for the same old movie-and-hamburger date, but it's romantic (and just as inexpensive) to suggest a sunrise bike hike, cooking breakfast outdoors after you've reached your destination; or to cook dinner for your date yourself some night, complete with candlelight and lace tablecloth.

▪ a little unpredictable: Enjoy getting caught in the rain (he'll be expecting you to worry about your hair); know something about cars, politics, economics and sports (you're not supposed to); compliment him occasionally on his appearance; don't try to crowd all your short life's history into your first hour with an exciting new date—save a little, so that later on he can say, "Why, I never knew you did," or "I never would have thought that you ——"

▪ feminine: Harsh or vulgar language, a strident voice or a boylike gait scares off romance; treasure your high moral standards, but don't preach 'em—express your interest and affection for boys in small ways: a touch of the hand, a sudden smile, the repetition of a remark of his you'd obviously tucked away for remembering.

▪ gracious: Too many girls discourage the romantic impulses of boys by laughter or ridicule. If a boy compliments you on your appearance, just for instance, thank him; never say, "Bet you tell that to all the girls," or "Are you blind or something?" or, worse, press him for further details! You can show your admiration and respect for a boy's abilities by treating him as an individual and not just another boy. If he knows something or can do something that will be of genuine help or interest to you, ask it of him—he'll be delighted.

The Way You Think

▪ about yourself: That you are the only person in the world exactly like yourself, so therefore both precious and exciting; that as a woman you have inherited all the grace, mystery and loveliness of every woman who has ever lived (study the lives of charming women); that you have the capacity to add to yourself constantly: a new language, a new recipe, a new poem, a new idea.

▪ about others: That everyone you meet is the hero or the heroine of an absorbing story. Ask the next person you meet 1—where he was born; 2—what his first memory is; and 3—what his favorite book is and why. You'll be intrigued with his answers—and with him!

▪ about the moment: That now is what matters. Enjoy the smell of fresh bread from a bakery, the symmetrical display of fruit in a store window, the splashings of a sparrow in a mud puddle. Marvel at the changing of your body as you become more woman and less child.

▪ about life: That it is capable of offering you beauty and adventure as well as pain and disappointment. Give it all you have and demand the same in return. If you do, you won't miss one thrill of romance and you'll be ready for love when at last it comes to you. And it will.

Now! This new Richard Hudnut Home Permanent

ives you a choice of 3 waving and drying methods...

and Beauty Rinse Neutralizer guarantees best results whichever method you use!

1. RICHARD HUDNUT PINCURL METHOD...

for casual curls: this pincurl permanent really takes, because the soft waves and casually curling ends are locked in with Beauty Rinse Neutralizer. So smooth! A perfect joy to comb and manage!

2. RICHARD HUDNUT SALON METHOD...

for firmest curls: this is the professional way to get deep, lasting, natural-looking waves and nice, bouncy end-curls. And because of Beauty Rinse Neutralizer, there's never any "first day frizz"!

3. RICHARD HUDNUT ON-CURLER METHOD...

for step saving: this is the most satisfactory on-curler method there is, because Beauty Rinse Neutralizer safeguards your hair. It works instantly to give you good, firm, springy curls that stay!

USE THE WAVING AND DRYING METHOD YOU WANT, get the results you want: because the Beauty Rinse Neutralizer in this new Richard Hudnut Home Permanent gives hair the strength it needs to really hold a good, natural-looking curl. $1.50, plus tax.

Today's active people want

Light Refreshment

MAYBE it's the popularity of the beaches that's helped to make the world so figure-conscious.

Or maybe it's today's finer figures, and the pride their owners take in them, that have made the beaches popular.

Either way, the reason Pepsi-Cola is in greater favor than ever today, at beaches and everywhere else, is the fact that Pepsi has adapted itself to the modern desire to stay trim and fit.

Today's active people prefer lighter foods, lighter beverages. And today's Pepsi-Cola, never heavy, never too sweet, is reduced in calories for today's sensible taste in diet.

It is the modern, the light refreshment. You'll find Pepsi-Cola everywhere, in the familiar economy bottle that serves two people, or in the smaller, single-drink size, just right for one.

Have a Pepsi. It refreshes without filling.

Pepsi-Cola
refreshes without filling

MUNKACSI

Tell me Doctor

Editors' Note: There are many questions which women would like to ask a trusted physician, but there is not always the opportunity. In a continuation of this series, Tell Me Doctor, Doctor Safford will answer some of these questions which have been sent to him by readers. The questions are all real but the names are fictitious.

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

ave periods of premenstrual de-ion, with crying jags."

OMETIMES wonder if I am not going ," the tall, dark-haired girl wept. There circles under her eyes, suggesting sleep-ights. She had wrung her hands futilely her history was being taken. "You think me an awful idiot."

n the contrary, I think you are tolerat-ery well the condition which is affecting -much better than a number of other en whom I could name."

that true? I supposed I was just a sort ak."

ot at all. Suppose you go into more de-bout your symptoms."

Well, about ten days before I am due to truate, I begin to feel an almost intoler-sense of foreboding. I know I should brains enough to realize that nothing is going to happen, but I can't seem to ll, or lie still, or relax. I am as irritable bear with a sore paw and snap at every-. I don't sleep nights. I have vertigo and aches frequently. Please don't laugh I tell you that sometimes I feel as gh I were literally going to jump right f my skin."

can see no cause for mirth in anything have told me. What you are suffering is, in all probability, a severe case of enstrual tension. Let me ask you this: ou experience relief once the menstrual has been established?"

es, almost immediately—or within a few hours."

nd the relief is complete?"

is *won*derful! Of course I do have a sen-n of heaviness, low down in the abdo-for a while. I feel sort of bloated in that n."

hat is to be expected, and there is a good n for it. How about your breasts at such ?"

hey are heavy—and tender, always. An-thing I've noticed is that at this time I nore. Is it because I'm so nervous?"

hat is undoubtedly a factor."

ut in spite of eating more I don't seem t any fatter."

re you sure of that?"

think so. I have been at my present ht for at least three years. A hundred and ty-three pounds. You wouldn't call that or a girl five feet eight, would you?"

"No. You told me you were due to menstruate within a couple of days. Suppose we check that weight. Will you step on these scales? There! What do you think of that?"

"Why—the scales read a hundred and twenty-nine pounds. Are you sure they are correct?"

"You saw me balance them before you stepped on."

"Then I am fatter?"

"You are heavier. Yes, indeed, you had to be."

"Do you suppose I gain this much every month, and then lose it?"

"I do. You have been taking on more fluid than usual and retaining it in your tissues. Why do you think your lower abdomen feels bloated? And your breasts heavier and larger? And your weight greater than you imagined? It is that you have been ingesting more fluid, and not eliminating it. This is due to extensive changes which have taken place in the physiology of your body. The cause seems to be an imbalance of the ovarian hormones, activated by the approach of the menstrual period. Estrogens have a salt-retaining effect.

"We are getting into the realm of physiological chemistry now; let me see if I can simplify the explanation.

"You probably have been told or have read of the advisability of taking a certain amount of salt in hot weather when perspiration is easy and large amounts of fluids are craved. The reason is this: Salt makes the fluids remain in the tissues. 'Take a salt tablet now and then,' you may have been counseled. 'You won't have to drink so much water.' Have you been told that?"

"Oh, yes. Frequently."

"See how it applies to your present condition. With increasing ovarian activity, there is an increasing production of estrogen, one of the ovarian hormones. Estrogens have a salt-retaining effect. So your salt intake is encouraged to remain, with a consequent water accumulation. No wonder you are heavier, since your tissues are bloated. You are particularly conscious of this in the region of the lower abdomen and breasts, and it makes you miserable."

"That seems to be a clear explanation, Doctor."

"This subject of premenstrual tension is serious for many women. There is more than bodily suffering to be considered. There is the effect on the social adjustment of these individuals."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 107

r Safford's new book, The Intimate Problems of n, containing several chapters which have not red in the Journal, has been published by Haw-Books, Inc., 70 Fifth Ave., New York 11, N.Y.

"Watch your skin thrive on Cashmere Bouquet Soap!"

says Candy Jones

(Mrs. Harry Conover)

Conover School Beauty Director

"I've seen this soap help girls from 11 different countries—with every type of skin—dry, normal and oily."

"It's such wholesome beauty care!" says chic Paris stylist, Georgette. "No wonder American complexions are so pretty!"

"French women are wise in the ways of beauty," says glamorous Georgette, "but I must say I've learned a lot about complexion care since I started using Cashmere Bouquet.

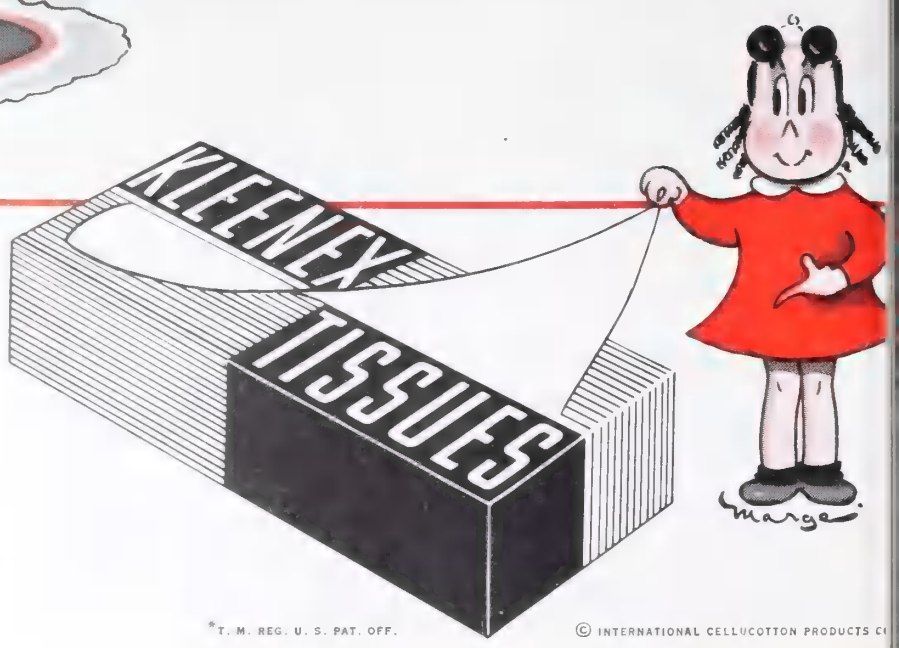
"My skin tends to be oily, so Candy taught me the special Conover beauty-wash method. Twice a day, I cream Cashmere Bouquet's rich, mild lather over my face with my fingertips. It leaves a fresh glow, a softer, smoother feel. And I love the flowery fragrance!"

P.S. "Cake make-up helps oily skin keep that glowing, Cashmere Bouquet look all day. Cream-base foundations lend the same perfection to dry skin."

Candy

Complexion and big bath sizes

Did you ever?



By LITTLE LULU

Ever fumble for a tissue in the middle of the night– When you want one in a hurry without turning on the light?

Next time, don't let an ordinary brand or box defeat you!
Keep Kleenex tissues near your bed they pop right up to meet you!

Be thrifty–Buy quality

Buy Kleenex

For extra softness–extra strength

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

© INTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS C

Building international friendships

. . . Arkansas Student Exchange

New Diplomacy

By MARGARET HICKEY

IT is no longer true, if it ever was, that "you have to be either rich and old or young and wicked to travel abroad." College and high-school students in the United States have many opportunities to visit other countries cheaply. One twenty-year-old student traveler who cycled through Europe recently reported he had to sell his bicycle in Paris. "Expenses zoomed to nearly two dollars a day," he explained.

It is still not so easy for foreign youngsters to visit and travel in the United States. The American dollar may seem small to us, but it is as large as the moon, and almost as hard to get, in most other countries. But variously subsidized scholarships are permitting many foreign students to live and study in the United States. Besides knowledge and skills, they take back home a true picture of life in the United States that false propaganda will never be able to distort.

Last year, under American Field Service International Scholarships, 265 overseas students studied in American high schools and 254 American youngsters lived with European families during the summer. This is a program of community cooperation in which individual families welcome students into their homes. The Young Adult Council of the National Social Welfare Assembly has another plan for getting the youth of various nations acquainted. In August, fifty well-informed young Americans will be in Singapore when the World Assembly of Youth meets to discuss problems facing young people in every part of the world.

Girl Scouts are going abroad too. A troop from Manchester, Connecticut, pooled its earnings from a year's potato-picking and baby-sitting to pay a visit to pen pals in Belgium. In Indianapolis, a troop sold doughnuts to help pay its expenses to France. Twenty-two other Girl Scouts are going to six European countries with assistance from the Juliette Low World Friendship Fund. As a part of the two-way exchange, American Scouts will soon welcome thirty-six Senior Guides from six foreign countries and six two-girl teams from South Africa, the French Antilles, Belgium, Panama, Switzerland and the Netherlands.

These and many other arrangements are bringing the youth of all nations together. The Institute of International Education estimates that each year 70,000 persons are on educational-training missions between the United States and other countries. Getting to know people from other countries at the family dinner table, in the classroom, workshop and field is the world's best diplomacy. Good neighborliness succeeds where high-level conferences may fail.

"THREE wives are better than two," the young man from Thailand told his English instructor. In her extracurricular job as president of the University of Arkansas Foundation for International Exchange of Students, Mrs. Jessie O'Kelly hears many rather fantastic things.

During one class session, Marnop Debhavalaya, also from Thailand, remarked that he had once been a monk.

The French boy, Norbert Felter, was incredulous. "Non!" he gasped. "You—not a really monk?"

Tan-hued Marnop is about five feet tall, a bit roly-poly, poised with great dignity on tiny, square-toed feet. A grave young man. His smile, though, is pure sunshine. "In my country," he said, "where my faith is customary to give one year in a Buddhist monastery. Is what-you-call sacrifice?"

"This is before you are married?" Norbert inquired.

"Oh, no. I am married then."

"Well," said Norbert, "you don't give up a wife to be a monk. What do you give up?"

"We don't eat tiger meat."

By then the class was in a hubbub in a variety of accents. Praderm Titatarn once caused similar confusion merely by saying, "I have tin elephants." ("You have ten elephants!" "No—really I have eleven elephants." "Oh—I thought you said ten." "That's right. They are tin elephants." "Then they are not real, they are tin?" "No! They are real tin elephants. They work in our tin mine." "They go down into the mine and mine tin?" "Oh, no. Tin elephants haul the tin." "All ten at once?" Slowly, "My family has eleven real elephants that haul tin. One at a time." "Oh.")

As Som Smerasuta explained to Mrs. O'Kelly, it is an old saying in his country that three wives are better than two. But it is a very sensible saying. In Thailand, where a man can have as many wives as he can afford, only the first and her children inherit the family fortune if he dies. Therefore, a second wife might be CONTINUED ON PAGE 78

BERN KEATING

An old American custom—toasting marshmallows at the fireplace—brings smiles to the faces of international students at the University of Arkansas. At the home of a law professor, they enjoy relaxing from their books and trading reminiscences about traditions and get-togethers in their homelands.

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

Tube 75¢ plus tax
Jar $1.00 plus tax

BRECK CREAM TREATMENT WITH LIPICIL* · A NEW AND EASY WAY TO MAKE HAIR SOFT AND BEAUTIFUL

1 Breck Cream Treatment offers a new and easy way to make dry or damaged hair soft and manageable. Breck Cream Treatment also aids in removing dandruff

2 In addition to lanolin, Breck Cream Treatment contains Lipicil*, an ingredient which aids in the treatment and prevention of hair dryness, dandruff and hard to manage hair

3 Breck Cream Treatment is easy to use. After your shampoo, massage onto the hair and scalp. Rinse and set. When dry, your hair will be soft, lustrous and as beautiful as a bride's

Lipicil is the Breck Registered Trade Mark for a stabilized lipide complex.*

Breck Cream Treatment is available at Beauty Shops, Drug Stores, Department Stores and wherever cosmetics are sold

JOHN H. BRECK INC. · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3, MASSACHUSETTS
NEW YORK · CHICAGO · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANADA

Journal About Town

Gossip about people you know, Editors you like, and what goes on in New York

Fifty Years Ago in the Journal

IN July, 1904, everyone was talking about the solid-gold dog at the St. Louis Exposition. The famous Victor trade-mark was cast by Tiffany's to advertise the new talking machines. Thirty thousand homesteaders hustled out to South Dakota for a stake in the last large Government grant to settlers, some 400,000 acres. Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm headed the best-seller list, and the immortal Merry Widow Waltz was written.

And writes Editor Edward Bok in the July, 1904, JOURNAL, "This magazine is repeatedly asked why it does not devote more attention to the servant-girl problem. Since 82 per cent of American families keep no servant at all, we feel that although it is a throbbing problem, it is not a matter of national interest."

"Good Health for Girls: A refreshing summer drink is oatmeal water. This may be made into a thin gruel."

Advises Margaret Sangster: "If you are going to the St. Louis Exposition, dear girl, be sure and count your pennies first, as prices there are high. Board will be at least a dollar a day and this may not include all your meals."

"Hilda: A very faint perfume, a mere suggestion, is admissible in a lady's toilette but a decided scent such as rose or violet is vulgar."

Remarks the JOURNAL's Needlework Editor, "The new Madeira embroidery is so new that it is a fad this season, and next year will be a craze, yet I argue for it a long life."

"In order that children may learn politeness, they must be treated with courtesy," reminds the Lady from Philadelphia.

You could buy a camera for $5 in July, 1904, according to a JOURNAL ad. Family albums bulged with such happy vacation shots as this mammoth teeter-totter.

JOE DI PIETRO

Gertrude Lawrence (portrait by Ben Ali Haggin) seems to keep a watchful eye on her husband, Richard Aldrich, as he and Hugh Kahler go over the manuscript for Gertrude Lawrence as Mrs. A, which begins on Page 26.

THE portrait of Gertrude Lawrence, painted by Ben Ali Haggin in 1931 when the actress and Noel Coward were playing together in Private Lives, dominates the scene here as Hugh Kahler and Richard Aldrich, in the latter's apartment, make final changes in the manuscript of Gertrude Lawrence as Mrs A, starting in this issue. Her personality, Hugh said, still dominates the whole apartment. Every one of a hundred ornaments was a very personal possession—gifts from practically every great name in the theater of today. Hugh especially admired a tiny golden sewing box, with miniature gold thimble, scissors and all. Dick told him it was something Gertrude had looked at longingly in a shop for weeks, but considered too great an extravagance to buy for herself, though nothing was ever too extravagant for her to give. "So this became my gift to Gertrude," Dick explained to Hugh. "It was the kind she liked best to get."

When Henrietta Murdock was describing a club here called Obesity Limited, whose members weigh in once a week and pay $1 for every pound they fail to lose of their weekly quota, Dottie Robinson, the beauty assistant, told of the Lean Jean Club in Byron, Michigan, one of whose members wrote in about their penalty for breaking the club's reducing rules. It's to wear a badge that says, "I've been a little pig."

The Botanical Garden uptown here is working on a new variety of sneeze-free goldenrod.

Ever since we told here in February about Smokey, the now-famous fire-prevention bear whose fur was singed in what we said was a blazing Arizona forest, our mail about this matter has been very heavy, and all of it from New Mexico. That's where the fire really was. Our mistake.

A breakdown of 1953 automobile accidents shows that cars traveling straight ahead killed 30,760; cars turning right, 960; turning left, 2200; backing, 380; slowing or stopping, 460; skidding, 2210. . . . Studies show that "golden brown" is the common hair color in the United States, including about 30 per cent of the men and 27 per cent of the women; about 11 per cent of the men are "golden blond," but less than 11 per cent of women. Red hair is twice as common in women as in men.

The skirt that little Adrian Vaughan is clutching on this month's cover is her mother's. And if you recall the beaming baby who looked up at you from the March, 1953, cover, that was Adrian's little sister Valerie. And according to Tana Hoban, who took both pictures, by the time you read this there may be still another cover girl in the Vaughan family.

Women buy more cosmetics today than they did ten years ago—but try to achieve a more "natural" look: rouge has declined in usage almost 30 per cent. . . . Since 1940, hospital insurance in American families has increased from 9 per cent to 57 per cent; surgical insurance, from 4 per cent to 48 per cent. However, about one sixth of our population owes medical bills averaging $127.50.

Tipped off to look up a certain page in the West Point yearbook for 1915, we found ourself reading about a cadet named Eisenhower. He was down as "Daredevil Dwight, the Dauntless Don," and described as one of the handsomest cadets at the Point. . . . Did you know, by the way, that on Mamie's charm bracelet there is a heart marked "Ike"?

Studies show that the housewife who belongs to many clubs, organizations and committees is likely to be restless and dissatisfied: the woman who likes housework, children, and belongs to only one or two clubs is usually a happier wife.

In Baarn, Holland, last winter, Betty Hoffman met a woman whose story she can't forget. Now the wife of an American Red Cross official in Germany, she was an Army nurse in the Philippines when the Japanese invaded. Before taking to the hills with the guerrilla forces, she only had time to grab a little clothing, some medical supplies, and six issues of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. For the next two years her group read those six JOURNALS to tatters. What they minded more than the Japs, she told Betty, was having to wait until their liberation to read the ending of Daphne du Maurier's Frenchman's Creek.

When Joannie Norman was here from California recently, visiting her sister-in-law, our beauty editor, Dawn asked her why she was always darting into antique shops. "I'm trying to find needles for my sewing machine," was why. Seems Joannie uses a pre-1900 Wheelock & Wilson, and has since sent us this picture to prove it. The formal she's making is from Nora O'Leary's pattern pages. So is the dress she's wearing. The poodle is Lady Paulette Powder Puff.

Joannie Norman and her turn-of-the-century sewing machine.

JOHN ENGSTEAD

GERTRUDE LAWRENCE

AS

"Mrs. A"

An intimate biography of the great star by her husband,

RICHARD STODDARD ALDRICH

DOROTHY WILDING

"I'm not Gertrude Lawrence. I'm Mrs. Richard Stoddard Aldrich—and I adore it!"

TO her friends, she was "Gertrude" or "Gee." When she was on tour and her play was doing big business, she might dash off a brief, jubilant note signed "Mrs. Gotrocks." I would always be primed to find her in what she felt was a subtle, literary mood by the signature "Emily Brontë." If she was feeling lonely and acutely conscious of the enormous distance and the dangers dividing us, as when she toured the Pacific bases for USO and I was on duty in England, she became "Your Bunkie." But at all other times in letters and wires, from the first penciled note she left on the pile of handkerchiefs in my bureau drawer the day after we were married, to me she was "Adoringly Mrs. A."

The name was her own invention. She never used it in writing to anyone but to me, and she never referred to herself as "Mrs. A" except when we were alone. It had a significance for us both which made it peculiarly and preciously our own. Millions will remember Gertrude Lawrence lovingly always. But Mrs. A is a woman who was known slightly to not more than a dozen persons. And fully, intimately to only one—myself.

Copyright, 1954, by Richard Stoddard Aldrich

"Poor Richard Aldrich! He thinks he has married Miss Lawrence. He'll soon find out she isn't 'Miss' but 'Myth' Lawrence."

This sally of Constance Collier's was repeated to me. I thought it amusing and apt. After all, a good many myths had grown up around Gertrude during the seasons she had been enchanting audiences in England and America. She was of the stuff of which legends are made. You were always hearing about the outrageous pranks she played in the theater and out of it, her quick wit, her love of parties at which her irrepressible comedy spirit made her the glittering center, her extravagances which had run her into bankruptcy, the men in love with her, her fabulous clothes, furs and jewels; above all, her glamour—a word which she had brought back into parlance, and the only term our language affords which even haltingly describes her radiant charm.

"Myth Lawrence," I called her teasingly when we were taking a late arm-in-arm stroll across the lawn toward the dunes, something she always liked to do the last thing at night.

I was unprepared for the seriousness with which she took the witticism. She drew closer and her hands—strong, capable and as he valiant Anna in The King and I — her last and perhaps eatest role — she "whistled a happy tune" all of her life.

MM

Knowing her husband's love for the place where he had spent boyhood summers, Miss Lawrence made "Northfield" a magic word, "to quench domestic flash fires." Spoken by either during a quarrel, it bound both to two minutes of silence.

RICHARD C. KELSEY

"She was not to be comprehended all at once."

eloquently mobile as her face—tightened on my arm. "Darling," she said, "those things get laughs, but only by people who can't get love. We have each other. But oh, do let's be careful!"

Here, as I was to discover, was the keynote of all her thinking and feeling about our marriage: "We have each other; but do let's be careful." All that this portended I was not to understand until we had been married some time; until I had found my way through the enveloping myths, the inconsistencies and contradictions of her nature—of all that gave her her prismatic radiance—to the truth of Gertrude Lawrence. I might never have found this, as many men never reach a clear understanding of the women they love and marry, if the war, my four years' service in the Navy and Gertrude's career had not separated us frequently, sometimes for long periods. We both chafed at these absences, although neither of us ever questioned their necessity. One of the conditions that I insisted on before our marriage was that our careers were to be entirely separate. Though we came to each other for advice and drew generously on each other's professional experience, it was always as husband and wife. I never wished to become Gertrude's producer, and she was never my star. In the theater, therefore, we went our separate ways.

As the years went on I believe we both came to see that the separations, presenting innumerable problems, challenges and readjustments, gave us an insight into each other which uninterrupted companionship might have inhibited. There was scarcely a day when we were apart that we did not exchange letters or wires. Naturally shy in expressing her deepest feelings in words except through the medium of paper and ink, Gertrude was one of the rare human beings who write without self-consciousness tugging at the pen. She had a freedom of expression, as well as a freedom of affection, which I never attained. I envied her these from the bottom of my heart.

Her letters were often not more than a few lines penciled in her strong square script on whatever paper came easiest to her hand in hotel suites, theater dressing rooms, on ships, trains and planes. If she couldn't write, she sent Ouija board evidently escaped ban on frivolities such as theater. Grandmother Joy, Aunt Alice, Uncle Jim, Mother.

Mother believed in family tradition, Congregational Church, gilt-edged bonds.

a telegram. These messages, however sent, are the intimate spontaneous expression of whatever she was thinking or feeling at the moment. Reading them is like feeling her hand steal into mine.

She had the quality which above all others endears a woman to a man: with her, intimacy never frayed out into familiarity. She was not to be comprehended all at once. Instead, she grew steadily through the twelve years we had together, developing and disclosing new and unsuspected facets of her character as circumstances and the needs of other human beings close to her called them forth. The provocative spices of surprise and change were always present, seasoning our relationship, giving it savor and zest.

Not all the changes effected by our marriage were only in Gertrude. Alterations even more profound went on in me. These were the inevitable results of the exposure of my cautious, less-expansive nature, inhibited by an undiluted Puritan New England ancestry and by childhood associations and training, to the warm, vital forces that flowed so richly through her. Gertrude was the most outgiving person I have ever known. In her the need for affection, urgent as this was, never amounted to the need she felt for bestowing affection on human beings, on animals, on birds and plants.

Scarcely less marked than her influence on me were the changes she brought about in other members of my family circle. None of us—Aldriches, Joys, Hobarts—are what we were, or what we would have been if she had not been a vital element in our lives. This is especially true of my mother.

Mother was in her eightieth year when I telephoned her on the morning of CONTINUED ON PAGE 96

CULVER SERVICE

Understudy to Bea Lillie in a Charlot revue, her big chance came when Miss Lillie fell off a horse and broke collarbone.

SASHA

With Noel Coward in Private Lives, at the Times Square Theater, N. Y. "This is Gertrude the way I first saw her."

"Born there? He is Plymouth Rock!"

CECIL BEATON © CONDE NAST

"Scotch terrier, Mackie, worshiped her, tolerated her friends, and was her inseparable companion."

At their cottage on Cape Cod, Miss Lawrence gardened, painted, sawed; was "not above stopping the drains so she could display her talents as a plumber."

CULVER SERVICE

In Skylark, at the Cape Playhouse, she awed producer—her future husband.

VAN DAMM

When Gertrude acquired the rights to The King and I, her mother-in-law gave her a first edition of the real Anna Leonowens' memoirs, which she had owned 60 years.

"Aren't we lucky to be so intelligent about marriage?" asked Jane.
Fitz could have hit her.

Steak and Apple pie

"With this ring

I thee wed." . . .

Fitz wondered

if he should have added,

"I think."

ON their wedding night, Jane helped Fitz move his two suits and seven shirts and several hundred books from his single room in the Village to her apartment in the Village.

They had been married during lunch hour in City Hall—a legal minimum of formalities, without flowers or music, and with completely indifferent witnesses borrowed from an office across the hall.

Jane had liked it. Jane had said, "It wasn't the least bit stuffy or provincial!"

Fitz agreed, though he did not tell her that until this very moment, as they sat cross-legged on the floor, looking up at the bookshelves, he had not felt very much married.

"Look," he said, "tête-à-tête!" pointing at their two yellow-bound volumes of T. S. Eliot, one of which had just made the symbolical taxicab trip through the Village and now nestled against its mate.

Jane smiled at him indulgently.

After all, it was their wedding night.

Fitz was a blunt-faced young man of twenty-two. Jane was almost as tall as he, blond, with her hair pulled back straight in a horse's tail that bounced nervously. She wore very dark lipstick and no other make-up, flat shoes, and tweeds that had a tendency to fly out when she walked and disguise what Fitz considered to be, when he wasn't too preoccupied to think about such things, a quite marvelous body.

They both wore blackish horn-rimmed glasses, and they had met during a debate tournament while they were seniors in neighboring New England colleges. They had both come to New York, though not because of each other, but quite apart, each to seek the unfolding of his own personality and enough money to pay the rent.

They had met again at a friend's cocktail party, and had both immediately apologized for their presence in such a prosaic situation.

They had left the party early, together. From there, affairs had advanced until Fitz found himself suggesting the even more prosaic situation of marriage.

"But marriage is so . . . insidious!" Jane said.

"What?" Fitz blinked.

"Well, take a love affair," Jane said thoughtfully. (Though they'd never even discussed an affair. After all, their New England upbringing!) "A love affair keeps you on your toes, more or less. Any time one party starts getting dull and

CONTINUED ON PAGE 70

By PEGGY BILBY DRAKE

ILLUSTRATED BY

THE JOURNAL'S COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE
CONDENSED NOVEL

The

He came a stood over her.
"I'll tell you what will happe
if you try it—if you dare."

What she had done
she had done through love.
But would any man believe it?
Would Carter?

Disappearance of Mary Blake

By MARY ORR

IT was five o'clock on a Thursday afternoon in May in New York. Mary Blake, the wife of James L. Blake, prominent young advertising executive, lay on the bed in her attractive apartment. She was not asleep. But she lay quietly, her eyes focused on the ceiling, thinking. Outside the bedroom door, in the kitchen across the hall, she could hear the colored maid fussing about cleaning a cupboard. Suddenly she raised herself to her elbow and called out:

"Leila!"

The fussing ceased as the girl stopped her work and came to her mistress. "Yes, Mrs. Blake?"

"Since Mr. Blake is in Washington, I've decided to dine out tonight, and I've made a dinner engagement. You may go home as soon as you're through."

"Yes, Mrs. Blake," the maid replied.

"Oh—hand me my pocketbook, Leila." The maid brought her a large patent-leather bag which had been casually tossed on a chaise longue in a corner of the room. Mary extracted three ten-dollar bills from her purse and handed them to her. "Here you are."

"Thank you, Mrs. Blake."

"I'm going to try and sleep now, Leila, so good-by. I'll see you on Monday."

"Yes, ma'am."

The maid closed the door quietly. Half an hour later she left the apartment.

At ten minutes to seven Mary Blake came down in the elevator. She was dressed in an attractive light-blue suit with a matching hat. Around her neck was a small sable scarf.

As she walked through the lobby, the doorman respectfully tipped his hat. "May I get you a taxi, Mrs. Blake?"

"No, thank you, Joe," Mary said. "I'm not going far. It's such a pleasant evening, I think I'll walk."

Joe stepped out to the sidewalk as he held the door open for her. He watched her stroll to the corner and turn down the side street. That doorman was the last person known to have seen Mary Blake alive, for when she turned that corner, to all intents and purposes, she walked off the face of the earth.

On Sunday night about eight, James Blake called his wife from Washington. The telephone did not answer. She's probably out to dinner or gone to a movie, he thought. He spent a busy evening with the client he had come to the capital to see. When he returned to his hotel room, it was one in the morning. He picked up

CONTINUED ON PAGE 82

ILLUSTRATED BY R.G. HARRIS

"I do well, my lord. Is she not lovely?"
John smiled assent—
the infant looked like all others to him.

Katherine

She twisted from him wildly.

"Aye, I love you,"

she cried bitterly,

"though I knew it not till now."

"I'll not force you, Katherine—you shall come to me of yourself."

By ANYA SETON

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

Convent bred, and thus never having looked in a mirror, Katherine de Roet was unaware of her startling beauty when she was brought to the English court where her sister Philippa was maid in waiting to the queen. Philippa was betrothed to the court scrivener, Geoffrey Chaucer. Katherine, too, was of marriageable age—fifteen—but without a dowry there was small chance that she would marry well. When Sir Hugh Swynford, boorish knight in the retinue of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, asked her hand, generously overlooking her lack of dowry, she felt that she had no choice; although she could not love Hugh, she determined to make him a good wife. Dressed for her wedding by her friend, Hawise, daughter of the fishmonger, Katherine was radiant. The duke and his gracious lady, Blanche, came to the wedding, and the duke kissed the bride in accordance with custom. But strangely, the kiss stayed in his mind. He could not forget the girl; there was the mark of destiny upon her.

KATHERINE'S wedding night was spent at a pilgrim inn near Waltham Abbey. Hugh had meant to go farther, but he listened to Katherine's timid plea that she might stop and see the famous Shrine of the Black Cross.

Hugh was not in the least devout; he had never bothered to visit any shrine before. As he and Katherine mounted the pilgrim steps, while he looked up at the black cross, a strange thing happened. Somehow the buckle which fastened his scabbard to the belt had loosened, and as he bent his knee his sword fell with a clatter, then rolled down the steps to the chancel floor. Other pilgri shrank back, murmuring and exclaiming. It wa sign, they said, that the Holy Cross was angry w the knight. Then a fat monk hurried up from behi the shrine, and said that indeed it was a sign, alm a miracle. He deemed that the Holy Cross wish the sword offered to it as a gift.

Hugh stood silent amid the commotion. T sword was of finest Damascus steel, the hilt crusted with small rough emeralds. This sword h been his father's and had saved Hugh's own life many a skirmish. He looked down at it and sho his head, muttering, "I will not give up the sword

e monk peered into Hugh's shut face and said that there might be another way to avert
. The shrine had need of embellishment. It be that for the price of the sword the Blessed would be appeased.

gh looked from the monk to the heavy black towering dark and sinister above him. He hat Katherine had drawn aside and stood ing, her cheeks gleaming white in the darkness hood.

opened his purse and put into the monk's retched hand four marks. The monk murmured liction and walked quickly behind the shrine.

Hugh descended the steps, picked up his sword from the floor and strode from the church while Katherine walked after him.

They went to a mean and shabby inn, the Pelican, because Hugh had given up nearly all the money that he had. The stuffy little loft room was no fitting bridal bower. The straw was moldy on the square box bed and hidden but in part by stained old quilts. In the dusty corners black beetles scampered.

Hugh looked sideways at Katherine, then shouted for Ellis to bring up a flagon of ale, and of this he drank cup after cup. He offered some to Katherine, but she merely wet her lips, and gave him back the cup. She had become very still, and stood by the tiny window, gazing out into the twilight toward the abbey.

She turned her head a moment when Hugh banged down the oaken strip that bolted the door. She saw that his face had grown dark red, and heard the sound of his breathing. She shrank nearer to the window, and her hand clenched on the sill.

He came up behind her. "Katherine!" he cried. "Katherine ——" The pain of his grip on her shoulders almost made her scream, and yet she knew that his fury was not directed at her, and through her fear pity flickered and was gone

CONTINUED ON PAGE 15

Like a castle in the style of a farmhouse.

Pottsgrove

By RICHARD PRAT
Architectural Editor of the Journal

THE early ironmasters of Southeastern Pennsylvania took the ore from the earth, and in their furnaces and forges turned it into usable iron—incidentally, of course, into the gold of great fortunes. The father of John Potts was among the foremost of these ironmasters, a Philadelphia Friend; and when John became head of the family on his father's death, and head of the family iron business, too, he was forty years old, married to a daughter of another famous ironmaster, and father of seven children (ultimately thirteen). That was in 1750. He decided forthwith to build himself a suitable house, near what is now Pottstown, and this is it. Its simplicity befits a Quaker background, and gives nobility to its bigness and beauty. You are welcome to wander through it, and to do so is a delight. Among the great country houses of the large early landowners thereabouts, this is probably the greatest. They were truly manorial houses, often far apart because of their great extent.

Fifteen miles away toward Philadelphia, John Potts' fourth son, Isaac, an ironmaster, too, lived in one which became forever famous in the winter of 1777 as Washington's Valley Forge Headquarters. Each manor had its workers' homes, its furnaces and forges, its springhouse, gristmill, and its barns like mighty fortresses; and all with walls laid up in this warm and wonderful Pennsylvania stone. . . . You can tell from the way Pottsgrove looks today how beautiful it must have been, even when it was new.

The high post bed through which you see the southeast bedroom is Philadelphia Chippendale; the highboy, Chippendale. In all the eight principal rooms, upstairs and down, there are corner chimney pieces.

EZRA STOLLER

The three-part mahogany Chippendale dining table and eight matched Chippendale chairs were made in Philadelphia when the house was brand-new. All woodwork in the house is the original color.

With thirteen children, there had to be a children's dining room. Its simplicity and fine generous proportions are as pure Pennsylvania as the more formal rooms with their proudly stalwart paneling. Through the doorway to the right of the painted dower chest you get a glimpse of the miller's house, a picturesque appendage.

Complacency has lowered our defenses against VD; taught youngsters to be contemptuous of syphilis and gonorrhea while these diseases spread through their b

THE DREAD COMI

Undiscovered and untreated syphilis still menaces the hea

By MORTON SONTHEIMER

• Gonorrhea and syphilis must be exposed to the cleansing light of universal knowledge because they maintain themselves almost entirely on public ignorance and public indifference.

If the present Federal appropriation for VD is cut, it will result in destroying the case-finding, case-holding and educational parts of the program. This program is the backbone of the VD-control problem.

There is still desperate need for state-wide supervision and correlation of the various programs in the states and large cities.

DR. HERMAN N. BUNDESEN
President, Chicago Board of Health

FIVE years ago there was reason to believe that the venereal diseases were just about finished. Most people believed that the twin plagues of syphilis and gonorrhea had been conquered. For there was no doubt of the weapon. Penicillin could not only cure either disease, but it could cure quickly and painlessly. By 1949 the case rates were toppling, the VD wards were emptying, the death rates were dwindling.

Scientists turned to other fields. Doctors ceased looking grim and assumed their most competent smiles. Women's clubs gave themselves a well-deserved pat on the back for having been in the forefront of the great crusade against VD that started in the thirties. Public-health authorities said that the "next big problem" was mental hygiene. It seemed all over but the shouting. In recent months, however, some disturbing events have begun to come to light. They emphasize this all-important truth: undiscovered syphilis is th enemy of society. It can be a killer of the inno

In Georgia, health authorities are still a over what has come to be known as the " Point Story." The story started when a y draftee from the Georgia town of that name referred to a local diagnostic center by the A because he was presumed to have syphilis. It e with the discovery of an epidemic of 68 cas syphilis, all traced from the one person disco by accident. Dr. C. D. Bowdoin, of the Ge Health Department, commented:

"We have been unable to determine wh how this happened. We feel that if this c happen to us in a six-week period of time small community in Georgia, it is happenir other parts of Georgia to a greater or lesser e and could be happening anywhere in the U States. We hope that it will cause people to thi

EPORTED SYPHILIS IS INCREASING*

THESE STATES:	IN THESE CITIES: †
izona	Akron
nnecticut	Buffalo
strict of Columbia	Cincinnati
uisiana	Detroit
ichigan	Miami
evada	New Orleans
w Jersey	New York City
w York	Newark
egon	Portland
ode Island	Providence
uth Carolina	Rochester
ah	Seattle
ermont	Syracuse
rginia	Toledo ashington est Virginia

EPORTED GONORRHEA IS INCREASING*

THESE STATES:	IN THESE CITIES: †
abama	Akron
strict of Columbia	Atlanta
eorgia	Boston
inois	Chicago
na	Cleveland
nsas	Detroit
ntucky	Los Angeles
uisiana	Louisville
aryland	Minneapolis
assachusetts	New Orleans
innesota	Newark
ontana	Norfolk
rth Carolina	Oakland
vada	Pittsburgh
w Jersey	Providence
w Mexico	Rochester
ah	San Francisco
yoming	St. Louis
	St. Paul
	Syracuse
	Worcester

creased reported case rates, fiscal year 53 over 1952, compiled by Division of ereal Disease, U.S. Public Health Service.
udy of cities of 200,000 population and e only.

ROBERT FRANK

BACK

this nation.

octor Bowdoin was right—it was indeed hap-ng in other parts of the United States. There also other significant developments.

Detroit, Dr. Edward D. Spalding, a heart ialist, was shot dead as he stepped out of his e building. Fortunately, a bystander saw the who killed him walk calmly from the scene. ollowed the man and led police to him. When asked him why he killed Doctor Spalding, he ally replied, "Doctor Spalding? H'm-m, I the wrong man. I don't know any Doctor ding."

ear Holbrook, Arizona, Mr. and Mrs. Ray-d Allen, a young Pennsylvania couple, camped de the road for the night in their trailer. Sud-y a powerful six-foot man burst into the er, tied up the couple. Then he raped the young , set fire to her hair, burned her body with spaper torches, and after five hours of torture choked her to death. The husband, forced to watch, finally worked loose, got his pistol and shot the intruder.

What gave these two awful cases meaning was that it later developed that each demented killer was in the late crazing stages of syphilis. Since violence is rare among victims of syphilitic insanity, even the experts were impressed. If there were two such homicidal cases, it was obvious there must be a vast amount of nonviolent psychosis from syphilis.

"Ninety-four million people [six out of every ten] live in areas where venereal disease is out of control in this country," estimates Dr. James K. Shafer, of the Public Health Service.

Has penicillin, the great cure, failed? On the contrary, improved penicillins are more effective than ever. Then what happened? A victory was won, then thrown away. Most people concede that after two world wars demobilization each time came too fast and too fully, leaving the nation unprepared to meet recurring dangers. The same thing happened after our triumph over the tough, implacable enemy, VD.

At the last annual meeting of the American Academy of Dermatology and Syphilology, doctors thought the organization might shorten its name. Then the members heard from New York University's Dr. Charles R. Rein, and Dr. John C. Cutler, of the United States Public Health Service, that fifteen states and the District of Columbia reported more syphilis last year than the year before, that there are today approximately two million cases of syphilis in this country, undiscovered and untreated or inadequately treated. The Academy did not shorten its name.

The Academy heard only part of the story. The gonorrhea rate increased in eighteen states. The rate for one or the other of the two diseases, or both, was up in twenty-nine of America's largest cities.

Doctor Rein, in his report to the dermatologists, summed up: "Syphilis and gonorrhea have a remarkable potential for epidemic outbreaks, especially when the public, physicians and health departments become too complacent."

You could almost measure our complacency in dollars and cents. In 1948 the Federal Government was spending 17 million dollars a year to fight syphilis and gonorrhea. Results were soon spectacularly evident. Immediately, then, the Government began slashing the VD appropriation. By 1952 it was only 10 million. Last year that was cut in half. This year's budget allows less than two and a half million.

"Great advances have been made," said the congressional committee reporting on the last appropriation. "However, the committee believes that the point has been reached where states and communities can take care of the problem with a minimum of assistance."

But the states and communities also cut appropriations for VD control!

Each slash carried away a valuable part of the control program. First, the educational efforts, to make people recognize and seek treatment for VD, were all but eliminated. Then clinics began shutting down. Then laboratories that ran tests to discover VD were closed. Next to suffer were the case-finding services with their social detectives tracing the hidden cases and bringing them in for treatment. Discouraged or discharged for economy, 478 members of VD control staffs left the service in a single year. Many of them were highly trained medical experts whose skills were much needed.

Oddly enough, the more control efforts were cut he better conditions looked for a while. The answer—and a few unheeded experts tried to point it out at the time—was that as efforts to find and treat VD cases diminished, fewer came in for treatment. Naturally, then, fewer cases were reported.

How that can happen was demonstrated not long ago at Camp Lejeune, the Marines' training base in North Carolina. The camp had one of the highest VD rates among naval installations in the United States. There is a public-health rule that military VD rates reflect rates in the surrounding civilian population. But Camp Lejeune seemed to contradict this. The three surrounding counties reported little or no VD.

However, when public-health authorities moved in with clinics, case-finding and rigid control measures, the VD rates of the surrounding area immediately went up. VD, of course, had been there all the while. It simply wasn't being found.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 77

■ Morton Sontheimer's article sounds a warning to an American public that has been lulled into a false sense of security about a great social danger. There remains in this country a vast reservoir of venereal disease. It can burst forth at many places to pollute our youth—it already has.

The fact that we now have the means of curing VD quickly and easily is not enough. We must educate potential victims to the danger, enable them to know when they have it, and bring them in for treatment.

To abandon these simple public-health measures would be tragic.

It is particularly fitting that the American public should now be alerted to the recurring menace of VD by LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, which courageously pioneered in bringing the original danger of syphilis and gonorrhea to the attention of America nearly twenty years ago.

CONRAD VAN HYNING
Executive Director,
American Social Hygiene Association,
New York City

● When the Federal Government drastically cuts its appropriation for venereal-disease control—as it indeed has done—some wealthy states can still carry on an adequate program against VD. But many poor states cannot. The danger to all of us, though, lies in the fact that the organisms of gonorrhea and syphilis know no state boundaries. A pool of venereal infection spreads in ever-widening circles, tainting first the promiscuous and, as it goes on, inevitably the innocent too. As Morton Sontheimer's article so clearly demonstrates, we have become far too complacent about an adversary that is constantly ready to regain lost ground—wherever it has not already done so.

HAROLD ERICKSON, M.D.
President,
Association of State and Territorial Health Officers, Portland, Oregon

FRANK TURGEON

RED CARPET FOR

By ALDEN HATCH

President Eisenhower broke precedent at inauguration by insisting his wife ride beside him to White House. (Other Presidents rode with Vice-President.) Mamie's Inaugural Ball gown was given to Smithsonian, as was wedding dress.

INTERNATIONAL

"Don't you ever stand up for me, Mamie," Ike admonished her when she, with 10,000 others, rose in homage to Columbia's new president.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Inspecting White House with Mrs. Truman, Mamie planned some changes, furniture arrangements, thriftily decided that Margaret's curtains would do for her.

UNITED PRESS

Bathrobe-clad Eisenhowers waved gaily from campaign train at 3 A.M. "We had been so long away from people who looked happy."

MAMIE

"Mamie, will it be all right if I say a prayer before the inauguration?" asked Ike. . . . "It's always good to say a prayer."

CONCLUSION

THE President of Columbia's house at 60 Morningside Drive was a Georgian-style palace of pink brick and white marble about twice as big as Quarters One. It had been built to the specifications of President Nicholas Murray Butler, who enjoyed life in the grand manner. The first floor consisted of a spacious entrance hall, a long, elaborate drawing room and a state dining room, with a small reception room off it which Mamie used as the family dining room. On the second floor was a suite of slightly less formal rooms, including a big library and a sitting hall. Third and fourth floors were bedroom suites. The kitchen was in the basement. Mamie looked the house over and decided that the kitchen would not do at all.

Columbia's trustees were so delighted to get Eisenhower that they were ready to do anything to make Mamie happy. They had their architects draw up a plan of alterations, which they were told would cost Columbia $225,000. Slightly aghast, they consulted Ike and Mamie again. It was sheer nonsense to spend money like that, the Eisenhowers agreed. But Mamie insisted that the kitchen be brought upstairs for the convenience of the maids. This could be done by making the oversize dining room a few feet shorter. A kitchenette was installed on the bedroom floor where the Eisenhowers could—and did—cook their own meals when they felt like it. A sun porch was built on the flat roof, where Mamie put the Philippine porch furniture. That is where the Eisenhowers spent most of their time.

Eisenhower retired as Chief of Staff in February, 1948. Mamie thought that they might have time for a short vacation before he took up his duties at Columbia, but that was not what happened. Instead Ike took the two months' interim to record his own story of his campaigns for posterity. The writing of Crusade in Europe in so short a time was almost as stupendous a literary feat as the campaign was in a military way. The house was full of secretaries; editors from Doubleday, who were to publish the book; and military aides running about checking facts. For eight hours every day Ike paced back and forth dictating steadily. At night they worked on revisions of the text. Mamie hardly saw her husband. It was worth it, though, for Eisenhower netted over $500,000 from the sale of the book. For the first time in their lives Ike and Mamie were financially secure.

Just as the book was finished, the Eisenhowers made a flying trip to see their first grandson, Dwight David Eisenhower II, who was appropriately born in the post hospital at West Point.

When the Chrysler turned into the driveway under the glass canopy at 60 Morningside after the long drive from Washington, John and Barbara were there to greet the Eisenhowers. Behind them was Mrs. C. Gage Lent, the housekeeper, and the three maids whom she had engaged to take care of the house. It was a sort of lord-of-the-manor welcome that amused both Ike and Mamie. Grandeur quickly evaporated when it was discovered that there was no food in the house. Since it was Sunday evening, the Faculty Club was closed, and nobody felt like going to a restaurant.

In this emergency Mrs. Lent offered to run around to a delicatessen for some food. So that first evening the CONTINUED ON PAGE 110

Copyright, 1954, by Alden Hatch. The complete book is soon to be published by Henry Holt & Co., Inc.

PRESS

Barbara Ann and Dwight David, 2nd, with Grandmother Eisenhower, greeted grandfather on his return from Europe in 1951.

When our young editors learned about Doctor Spock's conducting a regular Journal page, they were as jubilant as all young mothers will be. So were their youthful "assistants"—each a "Spock baby"!—welcoming him here. L. to r.: Dawn Crowell Norman with her Cynthia, 2; Devon Fredericks, 4; Diana Norman, 4; Dick Bass, 7; Mary Bass; Stephen Smith, 5; Tina Fredericks; Wendy Smith, 2; Nora O'Leary Smith; Stacey Fredericks, 2½; Kate Hoffman, 2; and Elizabeth McFarland Hoffman.

DR
WITH

When young mothers t inevitably turn

By BENJAMIN SPOCK, M.D.

I'VE often been asked, "Why didn't you say anything about pacifiers in your book?" The answer is that I was afraid to. Twenty years ago, and even ten years ago, a pacifier (an arrangement like a rubber nipple without a hole, attached to a disk, which a baby can suck at without choking on) was considered by many people unhygienic, germ-laden, habit-forming, tooth-deforming, disgusting. I'd heard of cases when a total stranger—of the indignant, self-righteous type—would come up to a baby carriage where a baby would be lying, sucking happily on a pacifier, snatch it out of the baby's mouth and hiss at the mother that she didn't deserve to be entrusted with an innocent baby's welfare.

I didn't want to get mothers into this kind of trouble and I didn't want doctors to think my book so unreliable they would advise parents not to use it.

The climate has changed a lot in the past ten years. Lots of things that were generally frowned on then (irregular feeding schedules for infants, waiting for a child to "train himself" for the toilet) are now not just permissible but quite stylish.

I had used pacifiers quite often in my pediatric practice in New York in trying to prevent thumb-sucking. I was going on the theory which Dr. David Levy proposed: that a baby in the first year of life turns to thumb-sucking because he hasn't had enough minutes of sucking at the bottle each day to satisfy his particular need. I believed that the sucking need was particularly strong in the first three months of life, and yet that is the period when most babies are still unable to get their thumbs in their mouths when they want to—they haven't the co-ordinatio
So I figured that the first month or two of lif the time to try hard to keep the nipple holes enough so that each feeding took at least t minutes, and then, if it was a baby who still se to be trying to get his thumb, too, to give hi pacifier in addition, freely, just as much wanted or was willing to take it.

The first baby I tried it on was what mig called a desperate case. The older child had b severe thumb-sucker. The mother had been w not to interfere actively, according to my a But this caused trouble with her husband an child's four grandparents, all of whom happen hate to see thumb-sucking and kept clucking scolding the mother. The new baby began to his thumb noisily in the delivery room an mother and I both realized we were facing a She just couldn't take that amount of disapp for three or four years more.

She made it her business to pop a pacifier i mouth every time he was awake, and he loved couple of months later he was beginning to be with it at times, and a couple of months later s spat it out for the last time. He never want again and he never sucked his thumb. Of cour mother and I thought we'd discovered the that would prevent all thumb-sucking.

Unfortunately, the method never worked s again. That's often the way in experiments. I on recommending pacifiers in cases where the ents particularly dreaded the development of th

Spock says:—"I think girl babies are as wonderful as boy babies."

Spock says:—"Every time you pick your baby up—every time you change him, bathe him, feed him, smile at him—he's getting a feeling that he belongs to you—and that you belong to him."

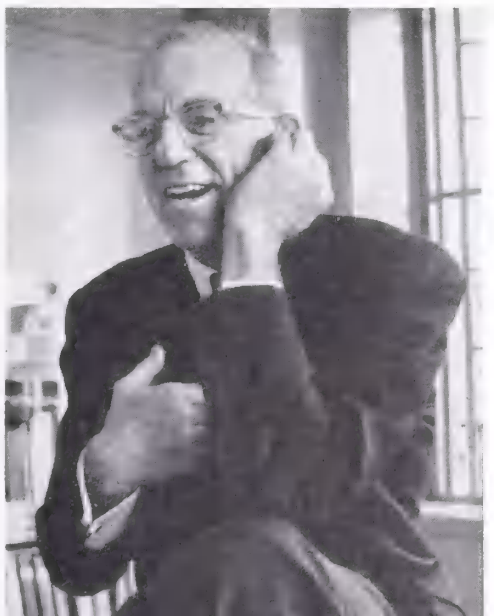
Spock says:—"Don't be afraid to trust your own common sense. . . ."

SPOCK TALKS MOTHERS

ut their children—and they always do—the conversation Spock. The JOURNAL is happy to have him enter the discussion.

ng, or where the very young baby seemed to an unusually great need to suck. (A baby who lready learned to get and enjoy his thumb is ant to give it up for a pacifier—the only easy o start the pacifier is in the earliest weeks.) ough no experiment with a pacifier was ever so ssful as the first I tried, I got the impression n the average it worked better than the thumb as given up somewhat sooner.

there were complications. Several babies who on their backs, and were allowed to sleep with acifier in their mouths, got themselves and mothers into trouble when they learned to turn onto their stomachs in their sleep. They'd lose acifier and wake and shriek for it, sometimes -dozen times throughout the night. These moth- ere mad at me. I sup- the answer would be ve the pacifier any the baby wanted it he was awake but al- to take it out of his n as soon as he went ep.



few other mothers to resent the pacifier a child continued to it after the first year. thumb-suckers con- to want the thumb hree, four or five years ge.) These mothers happened to think the pacifier looked cute bobbing in an infant's mouth, but thought it looked babyish and unattractive in a runabout child. I can't help feeling that if you are going to let a child become dependent on a pacifier in the first year it isn't fair to try to tear it away from him later just because he has learned to walk.

Aside from the question whether a pacifier, used early, is some help in preventing an even longer-lasting thumb-sucking, there is its helpfulness in other conditions. I tried it several times, early, for babies who were wakeful, high-strung, fretful during the early months and thought that it was a great comfort to some of them.

Dr. Milton Levine, a pediatrician in New York City, wrote a medical article a few years ago reporting his success with pacifiers for babies with real "three-month colic." I was sorry I was no longer in pediatric practice so that I could try it myself. I certainly had never found anything else that was a dramatic success for this distressing condition.

I'd be interested in hearing from any of you who have had particular successes or failures with pacifiers, for these or other conditions. END

OS BY JOE DIPIETRO

Spock says:—"Enjoy him as he is—that's how he'll grow up best."

SPOCK EXPLAINS

When the Goulds asked me to write regular articles for the JOURNAL I answered that it tired me out just to think of writing a full article on one subject each month. For a week I'd be putting it off but having no fun. Then it would take another week of evenings to write it, what with sharpening pencils and wondering how to begin. And I'd always be worrying about running out of major topics unless I kept repeating myself.

But I said I thought a column would be a lot easier. It wouldn't have to be so long or so stuffy. For these same reasons I could imagine you parents enjoying it more. The editors suggested a column that would answer readers' letters because then I'd surely be dealing with topics that interested you most. Also, people like to feel they can get at a lecturer or writer and bring him down in a practical and personal way to their particular problem. I liked the idea of letters for part of the time, but I also want a chance to take up topics like legislation affecting children (it sounds dull but isn't necessarily dull), preparation for parenthood, personal experiences, that readers wouldn't bring up but I will be bursting with opinions about.

There will be difficulties in letter answering. A person who has an unusual or severe medical or psychological problem naturally turns to a lecturer or writer, but such a case has little interest for most readers and is usually much too complicated to be explained in a letter or adequately discussed in a column. There's no chance at all that I can answer any letter personally, and of course others on the magazine have not the medical training to do so. So please don't write for special advice. We'll be glad to have letters suggesting topics of everyday interest and I promise to take up the ones that are mentioned most frequently. END

The Sunday Smell

How can you know what is right and wrong... unless, miraculously, there is a sign?

AT the last moment Beth Adams snatched two dangling bobby pins from her back hair, and then with as much dignity as she could muster she and her three white-collared sons followed the tall, handsome, white-carnationed usher down the aisle to their accustomed pew.

She gave the usher a small smile and rolled her brown eyes slightly, which meant, What a rat race; I know I'm a mess; you look elegant with your white carnation.

He bowed and handed her an order of worship.

"Didn't daddy know us?" whispered John, who was six.

David, eleven, hissed that his little brother was to shut up.

Beth reached for the program which Mike, eight, had already started to fold into an airplane, noted that his nails were black-rimmed in spite of a thorough scrubbing last night, and put her other hand over her eyes as she bowed her head for the brief invocation.

This was the first time she had sat still with nothing to do since early morning, and she felt shaky from all the rushing. Unexpected guests had stayed late last night, so that the usual Saturday-night assembly of Sabbath attire for her three boys and one girl had been postponed until this morning. What a scramble it had been, with the kids behaving as they always seemed to do when she was harried. David, newly conscious of hair, had hit John because he spilled his bottle of hair lotion. Four-year-old Melinda had cried because her brand-new starched petticoat had to be hidden under last year's dress. Mike had stayed at her heels. He had been in one of his expansive moods—sometimes so endearing, this morning so trying—and had observed that Sunday had a different smell. "I mean, if I was someplace without any calendar and some crook or somebody had knocked me out and I came to, well, when it was Sunday, mom, I bet I'd know it."

She couldn't remember whether she had answered him, since at the moment she had been busy with the polishing of four pairs of shoes and the browning of the chicken. Good heavens! she thought now. Did I or did I not turn down the heat under that chicken?

The congregation was standing and David handed her a hymnbook opened to the first hymn. It was O Day of Rest and Gladness. She sang it without enthusiasm. Day of rest, she thought, and a glance at the hymnal confirmed her guess that the words had been written by a man. Sunday was unquestionably the hardest day of her week. She wished she could figure out some way to make it easier. Not try to have a big Sunday dinner and the best dessert of the week, maybe. Or skip church. Some people did it that way and often she was tempted. How good it would seem to lie abed late, have sandwiches for lunch; work around outside a bit, just take it easy. There were those who argued, not without convincingness, that there was more actual religion in that kind of Sunday.

Church-on-Sunday she thought of as being an important part of the life she and Dave were trying to give their children, and yet increasingly, it seemed, the children employed every known maneuver,

CONTINUED ON PAGE 75

ILLUSTRATED BY RGHARRIS

Michael hit David against the leg for reasons unknown, and Beth redistributed her sons.

by Naomi A. Hintze

New idea—a duet of coffee tables instead of the usual big one. Advantage: they move easily at your guests' convenience. Antique-blue taffeta-and-foam-rubber seat cust

Romantic Modern

By H. T. WILL

look graceful and trim.

modern room that adds charm to comfort. A color scheme as lighthearted as a nese waltz. Accessories that sparkle and please the eye.

HAROLD FOWLER

HERE, in a modern mood, is a room where time stands still and cares of the day fall away, a room that says, "Modern can be touched with magic! Because a room is comfortable, functional, practical, it does not have to sacrifice beauty."

Take our color scheme, for instance. It is as iridescent as a jewel, yet the soft blue cotton-and-rayon tufted rug is both inexpensive ($139.50, 9′ x 10′) and washable. At each side of the fireplace, brass-fitted chests are a high-luster vivid pink lacquer—also washable and impervious to water and alcohol. These, incidentally, started out as unpainted chests and conceal multiple storage drawers and shelves. Two chairs of cane and beechwood are painted a cool aquamarine and pillowed in chintz fresh as a water color. Draperies of clover-pink silk filter the light, and at night shutters can close and still let in a flutter of breeze. For dining or an after-dinner game, a round table of gold-toned mahogany is combined with chairs of white ash with woven cellophane seats. A room to come back to with joy again and again and again!

Strictly contemporary—brass-and-mahogany desk with white glass top.

Contrast in woods adds distinction. Chairs are white ash with woven cellophane seats and table is gold-toned mahogany.

Quartet in shorts—linen ones worn with silk top, cotton seahorse blouse, jersey pull-over, pretty print. Add fun belts, big straw bags.

Carrousel at the beach—mother wears full skirt and blouse of gingham in checks of three sizes. Child in piqué dress and faded-blue sneakers.

Monogrammed piqué bathing suit by Carolyn Schnurer; Gustave's crushed kid slippers with strawberry trim. Linda in terry-cloth shorts and shirt.

Sunfish cotton print in a halter dress to wear to lunch. Patent slippers with straw bows, by Ben Sommers. Bracelet by Rettenmeyer.

WE LIVE AT THE

Bicycling—mother and daughter in chambray-denim shorts stitched in white, cotton shirts.

easide fun—wool bathing suit Brigance, child in seersucker.

Lunching in checked cotton and piqué by Muriel Ryan. Little girl in a garden print.

Going to town in silk-and-cotton dresses by Nornie Lanz.

WILHELA CUSHMAN

U.S.A. style . . . seaside, countryside

Everybody looks young, feels young. Mothers are like big sisters in their shorts, pull-overs and printed shirts. Big sisters are like little sisters in their seersucker bathing suits, terry-cloth tops, crazy cotton beach hats. Checked gingham and white piqué are universal in bathing suits and lunchtime dresses. Everybody has a roomy hip-length jacket and a blanket-size, bold-colored beach towel, a special silk or cotton print for buffet lunches, at least one bare-back sun dress, bright cotton or straw-cloth shoes.

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

BEACH

"He Was The Ma…
…but I had to remake myself first"

Most every girl harbors in her heart the desire to fall in love, captivate and marry the man of her dreams. But sometimes the steps that lead from the wish to the wedding are discouragingly steep. Following is the story of one girl who spent most of her …hree years convinced she would …s a butterball — but never a bride.

Quartet in shorts—linen ones worn with silk top, cotton seahorse blouse, jersey pull-over, pretty print. Add fun belts, big straw bags.

Carrousel at the beach—mother wears full skirt and blouse of gingham in checks of three sizes. Child in piqué dress and faded-blue sneakers.

MEASUREMENTS

…SS …E	BUST	WAIST	HIPS	THIGHS	ANKLE	UPPER ARM	RING SIZE
…″	56″	48″	59″	28″	13″	18″	10
…″	39″	27″	39½″	22″	9″	12″	6½

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN

Beauty Editor of the Journal

…s 16 …ore a …my …unds. My …etter …mes, Then …llow. …ble. I …RNAL …e me …ould …yself. …unds. …sked …oing …osed. …ks to won-

Here is Doris' story as she has told it to us:

WILL never forget my first date with Dennis. Although we had been brought up in the same town, and I had had a crush on him for years, we had never been introduced. It was a blind date arranged through a mutual friend. Fearing he might back out if he knew whom he was dating, she told him it was to be a surprise.

I wore my prettiest dress, a yellow linen, and had the works—shampoo, set and manicure—at the beauty parlor. But a 240-pound girl, even meticulously groomed, is hardly a catch for a handsome, eligible Air Force sergeant. When Dennis saw me his face dropped a mile.

He took me to a movie, making sure to walk behind me as we entered the theater. He didn't want to be seen dating Fatty Stradley. After the show, he asked, "You don't want anything to eat, do you?" I was home almost before I could answer "No, thanks." His duty done, the man of my dreams disappeared into the dark, calling back, "I'll be seeing you." It was obvious he didn't mean to if he could help it. The average girl might have given

CONTINUED ON PAGE 73

Doris pictured on her honeymoon with the "man of her dreams," Sgt. Dennis McFall. Says Dennis: "I'm very proud of my wife. She's a wonderful girl and through her own efforts she has made herself wonderful-looking too!"

JOHN ENGSTEAD

I Wanted.

Gentlemen

Raw-Vegetable Appetizer Soup
Ginger Beef on French Bread
Corn on the Cob Skillet Beans
Relishes
Apple-Apricot Pie with Cheese or Watermelon
Coffee
(Planned for 8)

Look who's cooking

IT'S July and vacations are here. Your dear old buddies from back home are on the march. They aren't coming in to borrow two eggs and a cup of sugar. They are coming to sit out from two days to two weeks of your hottest months. They toil not, neither do they spin. They eat.

So now, whether you're entertaining house guests or having a few of your cronies in for luncheon and a game, an appetizing, cool and photogenic menu (eye appeal as well as taste) is in order. The first course, a favorite of all, is brought right from the coldest spot, in fragile, frosty cold cups, and with it come salty biscuits and thin slices of pumpernickel. It is jellied chicken broth and here is the receipt:

Ladies

Jellied Chicken Broth
Shrimp Rockefeller
Green Salad
Hot Rolls
Ice Cream in Melon Rings
Iced Tea
(Planned for 6)

STUART-FOWLER

by Ann Batchelder

Jellied Chicken Broth

often 2 envelopes unflavored gelatin in ½ cup chicken broth, our own or canned. Dissolve over hot water and add to 4½ ups cold chicken broth. Mix it well and chill it until jellied. It peace of mind to get this into the refrigerator a day or night efore. Add ½ teaspoon curry powder to ⅓ cup thick com- ercial sour cream. When it's serving time, fill chilled soup cups vo thirds full of the jellied broth. Garnish each cup with a poonful of the sour-cream mixture, and sprinkle each with teaspoon chopped chives. It's well to hang a fancy cut of mon on the cup and put a flick of ground peanuts on top.

The main course of this luncheon is:

Shrimp Rockefeller

Chop very fine ½ pound fresh spinach, washed and well drained and then dried in a towel (this is important and don't forget it), 6 scallions or little green onions not old enough to answer back, ½ head lettuce (make 2 cups chopped), 1½ stalks celery, 1 clove garlic and ½ cup parsley. Chop it all up. Heat together ½ cup butter or margarine, 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce, 2 teaspoons anchovy paste, 1½ teaspoons salt and ⅛ teaspoon Tabasco sauce. And scant the last—once in, it's in for good. Out on the table, it may go in, if you like it. Add chopped greens (about 1 quart in all) to the seasoned mixture and simmer 10 minutes or until the vegetables are tender. Add ½ cup soft bread crumbs. Taste for seasoning. By the way, CONTINUED ON PAGE 79

KAROLIK COLLECTION, MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS, BOSTON

"Cotton Plantation," probably painted just before the Civil War in Louisiana. It is signed "C. Giroux," but nothing is known of the artist.

Linen Day

By Ann Batchelder

1 If I Could Learn

I often feel if I could steal
Down by a river's brink,
And there could stay one livelong day
Nor idly dream the hours away—
I'd learn to think.

If I could wake and measure take
Of the sky's unsullied blue,
Make heaven seem more than a dream
Like fishing in a quiet stream—
Dreams might come true.

If I could live and learn to give
With both hands open wide,
My love would be an unplumbed sea,
Returning waves of love to me—
And more beside.

2 Quaint as a crinoline, but the nicest summer refreshment you can think of. Cake and lemonade—angel cake would be my choice. And so easy, what with cake mixes and lemonade concentrates.

3 A vacuum bottle of coffee is a must in the picnic basket. But some take it black, some like cream. What to do? Have it black in the bottle, then take along a little can of powdered cream compound. You're all set.

4 An easy summer way to baked ham is via the canned-ham route. Needs baking in a slow oven only long enough to heat it through. I like mine glazed. Sieve enough canned apricot halves to make 1 cup. Add 2 tablespoons prepared mustard. Glaze the ham with this. Garnish the platter with canned apricot halves for pretty.

5 A slick fish dish, to my mind, is this one, done with herbed crumbs. Part 1: Cut 1½ pounds fish fillets into serving pieces and arrange in a greased baking dish. Sprinkle with salt and dot with butter or margarine.

6 Part 2: Combine 3 cups soft bread crumbs with ⅓ cup melted butter or margarine. Add ¼ teaspoon pepper, ¼ teaspoon orégano, ¼ teaspoon marjoram and ¾ teaspoon salt. Toss lightly. Cover fish with crumbs. Bake at 375° F. 25 minutes, or until crumbs are brown.

7 A hot-weather salad is composed of little "cocktail" shrimp, unsweetened fresh pineapple cut into pieces, and sliced ripe olives. Dress with mayonnaise. Serve very cold in lettuce cups and garnish with water cress and salted almonds.

8 Did you know that grated orange, lime or lemon rind for flavoring will keep a week, maybe longer, in a tightly closed glass jar in the refrigerator?

9 Surround a platter of creamy scrambled eggs with buttered toast points spread with puréed avocado lightly sprinkled with salt. Scrambled eggs with personality!

10 The only blue food comes to market just before the Fourth of July. Just in time for a festive dessert to honor the day. Alternate spoonfuls of softened raspberry sherbet and vanilla ice cream in a freezing tray. Freeze firm. Spoon into sherbet glasses. Sprinkle with blueberries.

11 From an old cookbook: "My mother's receipt for plum cake was left to me, a treasured heirloom," writes Mrs. Anon. Here it is: "Ten pounds flour, ten pounds sugar, eight pounds butter, twenty-five pounds currants, two ounces mace, two ounces nutmeg, one half pint rosewater, one half spirits, two pounds citron, ninety eggs. Make into a paste." My ma wouldn't have willed it to me. She'd have felt sure I'd have tried it.

12 It's the season again when cold soups come to the table frequently. I have some ideas for dressing up familiar favorites to bring surprise to the palate and delight to the eyes. Fold a tablespoon or so of chopped, buttered, toasted almonds (you can buy them in a can) into each cup of otherwise plain jellied consommé.

13 Here's another: Thin canned cream-of-chicken soup with the proper amount of milk. I like to use half light cream. Flavor with 1 teaspoon curry powder blended with a little cold water. Be generous with minced chives. Good? You bet it is.

14 Folks say that fruit appetizers are working their way into the hors-d'oeuvre department. Here's one that goes over well: Serve frozen pineapple chunks thawed to the almost, but not quite, stage on a bed of grape leaves. Have a grape arbor? Pick some. More to come.

15 Set 2 bowls alongside—one containing grated American cheese and the other grated coconut. Spear the pineapple chunks with toothpicks. Now to dip in either cheese or coconut. Try both. Delicious!

16 At a party a spell back I came across an hors d'oeuvre so elegant that I must share it. Mix together finely chopped cucumbers and water cress. Add diced lobster meat and mayonnaise. Fill tiny cream-puff shells or pastries, or spread on pumpernickel bread.

17 Cool as an old maid's stare at a debutante ball, the ripe cantaloupe doubles as a bowl for other fruit. And provides a lovely dessert. Cut it in half, lengthwise. Remove seeds. Fill with cut peaches, cherries, seedless grapes; over all squeeze fresh lemon and orange juice, add a little powdered sugar and chill like a polar breeze.

18 The Fourth is a holiday and a party is indicated. Fried chicken is a must. Fry young broilers, split, until brown all over. Cover with bacon in a pan. Add 1 cup milk, ½ cup cream and 1 cup chicken broth and bake in a moderate oven—350° F.—for about 45 minutes.

19 Cont'd: Take out the broilers and keep hot. Finish the sauce, adding broth as you need it, thickening to a heavy cream consistency, with a little flour and seasoning properly. Garnish with canned apricot halves heated in their own sirup. Pass the sauce separately.

20 Another easy-come-easy-go dessert, for it's summer and let's be a little lazy. Ice cream? Why not? Take slices of angel cake, cover each slice with a good scoop of peach ice cream. Add a rain cape of pie meringue over the whole business. Bake in a hot oven just long enough to tinge with brown.

21 And who isn't looking for a cooling summer drink? Empty the contents of 1 can lemonade concentrate into a quart container, and fill the container with chilled ginger ale. And if you like a touch of pink, ¼ cup raspberry sirup will not go amiss. This, should you inquire, is known as a Lemon Sparkle. Refreshing too.

22 A salad homer. First inning: If it's on your mind to give family or guests a salad treat, get some little tomatoes, peel them and marinate in oil and lemon juice. Slice some hard-cooked eggs, a few slices of crisp bacon, and 6 or 8 artichoke bottoms (the kind that come in glass jars).

23 Second inning: Add some cut celery hearts, and some sliced black olives. Toss together with Roquefort mayonnaise. Lettuce, of course. The last word in salads.

24 Mulled cranberry sauce is a good relish to go with the cold-meat platter. To a 1-pound can whole-cranberry sauce add 6 cloves and a piece of stick cinnamon. Let it stand in the refrigerator 24 hours to "mull."

25 Back to salads. Sprinkle well-chilled canned grapefruit sections with celery seed or celery salt. Arrange on shredded lettuce and serve with French dressing.

26 If your family goes for barbecues, try this: Slice 1 can luncheon meat into 6 slices and arrange in a shallow skillet. One with a cover. Pour over the meat some ready-made barbecue sauce. Cover and simmer 5 minutes or until the meat is heated through and the sauce bubbling. Serve with French bread and a green salad.

27 Variation on the "sardine on rye" sandwich: Spread thin slices of rye bread with butter or margarine, then with mashed sardines. Top with thin slices of cucumber and tomato. More rye on top, of course. Good!

28 Summer calls for fruit desserts. Serve chilled canned pears with lemon sauce; sprinkle on toasted coconut.

29 Freeze an ice-cube tray of tea—with a sprig of fresh mint in each cube. For iced tea, naturally.

30 From now until the leaves fall hamburgers will be sizzling in patios and back yards. I know something good to serve with them. Read on.

31 To 1 cup chili sauce add 1 tablespoon horse-radish, several dashes of Tabasco. Combine with 1 cup chopped water cress. Hot! But good, Esmeralda. Your Annie.

How to plan Ideal Summer Meals around delicious bowls of Soup

NE MARSHALL
r Home Economics
ell Soup Company

THERE'S NO NEED to stifle in a hot kitchen this summer. With a well stocked Soup Shelf you can have tempting, easy, delicious meals—planned around soup.

For example, keep plenty of Chicken Noodle Soup on hand. It's generous with chicken and egg noodles, in en chicken broth. Don't forget Vegetable Soup, s almost a meal in itself, with 15 tender vege- s in hearty beef stock. And another very satis- g soup is Bean with Bacon, thick and savory.

n favorite sandwich fillings ready for use . . . neal's practically on the table in no time. And a good meal! Really ideal, for Summer. e to order to give you more time for porch, or park.

EGETABLE SOUP, with deviled ham spread, a honeydew and raspberry salad.

HICKEN NOODLE SOUP, with sliced egg and n sandwich, tomato and watercress salad.

EAN WITH BACON SOUP, with brown bread cream cheese sandwich and tossed green salad lettuce cup.

SUGGESTIONS FOR USING

Campbell's SOUPS

RED CROSS
Cotton Balls

For removing nail polish removing make-up

applying home permanents

For { beauty care baby care first aid use sterile

Johnson & Johnson

No connection whatever with American National Red Cross

KATHERINE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 35

In the quiet dawn light after Katherine had been weeping for many hours, she heard the nightingales singing from a thicket behind the inn. She eased her bruised body into a position as far from Hugh as possible. He lay on his back, snoring heavily.

Hugh stirred and murmured in his sleep. He reached his arm out as though he searched for her. She lay motionless, watching coldly through narrowed lids. His gesture did not touch her; he was as alien to her now as had been the panting, heaving beast earlier. But she would never be afraid of him again. Nothing that he did could touch her. She would be a dutiful wife, but yet she would be free. Because he loved and lusted and floundered while she did not, she would be forever free.

Thus Katherine thought on her first morning of wifehood in the ugly loft room of the inn at Waltham Cross.

On their way to Lincolnshire, Hugh, Katherine and Ellis spent three more nights on the road. Katherine was neither happy nor sad. She treated Hugh in a cool, friendly-enough manner. He marked with jealousy that all her warmth and tender pleasure went to the little mare he had given her. She had named it Doucette, and she was forever patting its neck and murmuring little love words to it. Hugh felt hot anger at the horse, but this he tried to hide, being afraid of Katherine's scorn.

Wednesday, when they were a few miles south of Lincoln Town, they turned off the Ermine Way and climbed the ridge to see Hugh's smaller manor of Coleby, which he held in fee from the Duke of Lancaster. This manor was much neglected, its house nothing but a crumbling shell, where Hugh's reeve, a sottish man named Edgar Pock-face, dwelt in the leaky hall with a brood of fifteen children. The reeve came lurching out the door as he heard horses. Hugh dismounted, glaring around at the tumble-down dovecot, the byres and stables half unroofed.

"By God's blood, Edgar Pock-face!" he cried. "Is this the care you give my manor?"

Edgar mumbled that the serfs refused to do their work, it had been so long since Sir Hugh or his bailiff had come here they had near forgot they were not freemen.

HUGH raised his hand and struck the stupid face a vicious blow. "Then this will remind you that you are not free!" The man staggered back and fell in the muck. Then, as though he had settled the whole matter of the manor's management, Hugh mounted his horse and, gesturing to Katherine and Ellis, led the way back to the highroad.

Katherine was pained and puzzled. She did not yet know that Hugh was the most indifferent of landlords, caring nothing for husbandry. He had not been home in three years. So long as Hugh gave knight's service to the duke, his wants and those of Ellis were provided for, and soon his wartime wages from the duke would commence. It was on the prospects of these that he had raised cash in London to finance his wedding and buy Katherine's palfrey. But the forced gift to the Black Cross at Waltham had so reduced him that now he had but a few pence left.

Katherine did not think long about the dilapidation of Coleby, assuming that all would be different at Kettlethorpe, the home manor. It had been drizzling all day, but now the dun clouds dropped lower and the rain sliced cold and straight as knives.

They plodded on, meeting nobody. As they drew nearer the manor lodge the wind came up and blew the rain in their faces. It was dark when they saw upon the left a pair of tall iron gates, and a cottage just inside.

"Kettlethorpe!" said Hugh. "We'll soon be dry and sheltered, Katherine."

But no one came to open the gate. The lodgekeeper's thatched shanty remained dark and no smoke came from its chimney.

"The devil and his foul fiends take this wretched churl. I'll have him put in the stocks!" Hugh drew his sword and dealt the old padlock a violent blow. The chain that held it parted; the padlock dangled free.

Ellis pushed back the creaking gates and said in surprise, "This road has not been used for long, Sir Hugh. 'Tis full overgrown."

There was, in fact, no road at all, though its place was marked by an avenue of magnificent wych-elms, tall as steeples. Beneath the elms there was a tangle of weeds, bushes, long grasses. The horses balked, seeking some easier way. Ellis had to go ahead on foot, beating down the thicket with his sword.

Is there no end to this journey? Katherine thought, shivering, and noted that Hugh had fallen silent.

For nearly a mile they fought their way along the abandoned road, then suddenly Katherine saw a church on her right, a dark shape of the cross against the darker sky, while to the left there were a huddle of buildings. Still there were no lights, and no sound but the wind and the slash of rain.

They rode into the muddy outer court, and now Katherine saw the gleam of a small moat and a low stone gatehouse, its wooden bridge drawn up against the arch.

"Ho, Kettlethorpe!" shouted Hugh. "Gibbon le Bailey! Lady Nichola! Open up!"

Still the uncanny silence held. Then it was broken by a frenzied baying from the inner court.

"'Tis old Ajax," cried Hugh, with unconcealed relief. "Someone's there. Open up!"

A dim white head peered out of the peephole above the gatehouse, and a voice cried, "Who is't now that makes such a clamor?"

"Toby Napper, what ails you all? A fine welcome this for the lord of the manor and his new lady!"

The white head disappeared, the windlass began to creak until the rickety bridge flopped across the narrow moat. The horses crossed into the inner courtyard where the hound came bounding and growling at them. But he knew Hugh's voice, and when Hugh gave him a powerful kick he slunk into the shadows.

Then Hugh turned on the gatehouse keeper, who stood holding a wavering horn lantern. "Where're the stableboys? Where the house servants?"

"Nought but me, m'lord, for this year past. M'lady turned 'em out. No one sleeps in the manor but me and m'lady—and—and Gibbon."

"Aye, and what of Gibbon? Why isn't he here?"

"Ah, he's dying, is Gibbon," said the old man unctuously. "There's a worm gnawing of his bones. He lies abed all day and move."

Hugh made an exclamation, grabbed lantern and threw open the unbolted the great hall. Inside it was as dark an as out. There was no fire. The eating planks and benches were stacked high far wall. Rain splashed through a hole thatched roof.

"Ellis!" Hugh cried. "Gallop to the and bring back serfs. We must have fo warmth, no matter what's amiss here!"

The squire ran out and mounted his Hugh put the lantern on the hard-earthen floor. He turned slowly from o of the hall to the other, remembering it days of his boyhood when there ha torch and firelight, the smell of roasted and ten servants running to attend the ford appetites.

KATHERINE crumpled down in one window embrasures, so cold and wear she could not think. Then through h haustion she heard a rustling at the d woman stood there, staring at Hugh. S small and thin as a stick, her black flapped around her in the wind from t opened door, and her triangular widow was no whiter than her narrow face.

"Is it you—Hugh?" She spoke in a sighing voice in which there was neithe prise nor pleasure nor dismay. "I th you'd come. They told me so."

Hugh had jumped back as she appeare denly, gliding into the hall. "Aye, lady said warily, not moving toward her. come home, with my bride." He point Katherine. "And I mislike the welcom give to the new Lady of Kettlethorpe."

The woman turned her mournful ga Katherine. "A bride?" she said. "A bri Kettlethorpe? They did not tell me that."

"Who did not tell you, madam?" snapped.

The Lady Nichola Swynford waved a hand vaguely toward the east. "The folk live in the water, in the river, in the well. mustn't say their name. They tell me things."

"God's wounds," Hugh whispered, c ing himself. "She's lost the few wits she h

The girl nodded. They both watched Lady Nichola, who began to drift restl around the hall. As the black-robed f came to the water that streamed through

"It's either the roar of a wild panther or the trolley car on Main Street."

to the dais, she stopped. She cupped ds and caught some of the water, mur-soft words to it.
erine shut her eyes again. A merciful ss fell across her mind.

ng the next days at Kettlethorpe, Kath-d opportunity for the exercise of many s she had not known she possessed.
ong young body recovered soon from austion of her arrival; the acceptance itions so different from her imaginings nger. Yet a sturdy common sense came id. For better or worse, this was now ne, and she the lady of the manor. She ld enough to feel pride in the sudden ibilities thrust upon her.
ethorpe had never been a populous or lly productive manor, the soil being only to the growth of hay, flax, hemp ch. Earlier owners had had large hold-sewhere to supplement their rents, as ugh's father until mismanagement had ed off Nichola's dowry, leaving the rds only Coleby and Kettlethorpe.
hese two would have supported them ufficient comfort, were they well ad-red. Hugh had near sixty serfs at Ketpe, plenty to give him week work on his arms, boon work at the harvests, and work to run the manor. The trouble was l: the Lady Nichola's eccentricities and rtal sickness which had attacked Gib-e bailiff.
e days after Katherine's arrival she deo see this man who lay in a wattle-and-ut at the end of the courtyard.
weather had cleared and Hugh, having and whipped some sulky serfs from vn field work and back into the manor , had taken Ellis and ridden into the o hunt for sorely needed food. The must be replenished; they were com-empty. Lady Nichola lived on sheep's d stewed herbs which she cooked her-bbon existed on the fitful donations of y Brewster, the village alewife, but her duties and brood of babies left her me for charity. No one knew what old ved on in the gatehouse, but he was , despite his age, and there had been to notice the squeal of snared rabbits ord's hunting preserve.
erine had not asked Hugh's permisvisit the bailiff. Already she had learned mention of painful subjects induced in angry stubbornness which might well d to refusal.
vaited until she saw the tip of his long-sappear into the forest, then set herself ured inspection of her domain. She deo visit the Lady Nichola first in the oom. She had not seen her mother-ine the night of arrival.
ower had been built, as had the manor, red and fifty years ago. It was attached hall and solar, but there was no com-tion with these except by the outside e, which also served the solar. The plan was simple. There was the d two-storied hall, forty feet long, and row solar where Katherine slept with was tacked high onto its western end.
n the solar lay an undercroft for stores.
eastern end of the hall there was a
, and a half loft above it where the s slept. These and the tower with its donjon and two round rooms above there was to Kettlethorpe.

s a more primitive dwelling than any ine had ever known; even the convent ppey had been more luxurious. And the ings at Kettlethorpe she deemed shocklain and scanty for a knight's home.
nks and trestles and benches in the hall roughly hewn as those in a rustic's cot, he solar was furnished only with a box frame heaped with a moldering feather bed and a bearskin for a cover-surprised her that there should be no of the slightest value to be seen, nor a y to keep out the constant drafts.
he ascended the outside flight of wooden nto the tower, her heart beat fast, for ard the Lady Nichola's high murmur-at out onto the still air. The dairymaid at the Lady Nichola had water-elf sickness, a fearsome spell; and none of the servants would go near her.

Katherine mounted the stairs and entered the tower's ancient guardroom. The room contained only two ironbound chests. In the center of the stone floor there was a rusty grille over the air shaft to the donjon beneath; it had long been empty of all but rats that tunneled upward from the surrounding moat. Katherine saw that dust lay thick on the chests and a drift of dead leaves had blown into the corners.

She climbed the narrow stone steps and came to the top room. A mangy deerhide barred the doorway. The murmuring had stopped; there was a listening silence within.

Katherine cleared her throat and called softly, "My Lady Swynford! It's Katherine, Hugh's bride. May I enter?"

She heard a scuffling noise as though something were being quickly hidden and a tiny stifled sound, sharp and high, but there was no answer.

She pushed the deerhide and entered. "Ah, no!" she cried when she saw the little black figure. "My poor lady, you mustn't be afraid of me!"

THE Lady Nichola, her arms clasped tight across a lumped cloth on her breast, crouched behind her bed. Her dark eyes were fixed on Katherine with dumb terror.

"Dear lady, I won't hurt you. I've come up to do you honor. See, I'll come no nearer." Katherine's voice, low and soft as a viol, thrilled with pity.

Nichola stared unbelieving. "You'd take her away from me," she whispered. "Don't take her away!"

Though the Lady Nichola was over forty and her scant dark hair was streaked with gray, yet her little face, twisted by fear, was somehow childlike.

Katherine stood stock-still as she had promised and saw the clutch of the claw hands slowly relax on the bundle they protected. The cloth heaved and squirmed.

"What have you there, my lady?" said Katherine very gently. "I swear by St. Mary and her blessed Son that I'll not touch it, nor do anything you don't wish."

"But Hugh would—he'd take her away from me and beat me as his father did. Beat me because I'm barren."

Katherine stiffened. "No," she said. "No one shall beat you."

The Lady Nichola crept forward to the bed. She put the bundle down on the coarse hemp coverlet. The cloth heaved and from underneath there walked out a small bedraggled kitten. It wore a collar of woven grass from which dangled a leash of plaited scarlet wool.

Almost Katherine laughed, for she had expected some shocking thing, a baby perhaps—crazed women did steal babies. "Dear, my lady," said Katherine, "'tis no sin for you to keep a kitten."

"They gave her to me," said Nichola, stroking the little beast while she tied it to the bedpost. "She was drowning in the river, because they wanted her themselves to play with, down there amongst the reeds, but they let me have her. Sometimes they're very kind. But they didn't tell me you were coming—Hugh's bride." Suddenly the unseeing stare left Nichola's red-rimmed eyes. "So there's a new Lady of Kettlethorpe," she said. "How did you come to be here?" She sat down quietly on the bed.

Katherine was startled at the change. Now for a few minutes while there was sanity in Nichola's questions, Katherine told her something of her life and how she came to marry. Nichola nodded from time to time and listened sadly.

"I, too, came from the south," she said, "to this most dismal place. But I was always afraid. He would not have hated me so, had I not been afraid." She twisted her head and looked at Katherine. "You're beautiful. Yet you will molder here, even as I, and grow ugly and afraid unless—unless ——" She jumped up, her voice soared to its high chanting note. "I'll weave a spell for you, Hugh's bride. I'll make a potion that'll save you."

She ran to the iron pot which hung on a tripod against the smoke-blackened wall. She blew the smoldering charcoal embers in the

Are you the master of your car?

MOTORING is a favorite pastime for millions of Americans . . . especially during summer when the countryside is so inviting. However, since traffic is heaviest during summertime, long vacation trips . . . or short weekend drives . . . can be hazardous.

Safety authorities say that motoring can be safer and more pleasant and relaxing if all drivers learn to keep their cars under control in varying road, weather and traffic conditions.

No driver should ever "take the wheel" when preoccupied, confused or fatigued. When perception is dimmed, no one can be sure he can control his car. If you are planning a long vacation tour, it is wise to keep the following facts in mind for your own safety and that of others.

The majority of accidents due to fatigue occur after long periods of driving. If long distances must be traveled in a day's time, pace yourself to avoid getting tired. If you do feel tired, pull off the road and take a short nap.

The competent driver always keeps control of his car by traveling at safe speeds. The rate of speed is still the greatest single factor in automobile accidents. In fact, if existing speed laws in every state were rigidly observed and enforced, many thousands of lives could be saved every year.

For safer summer driving, here are other precautions to take:

1. Follow other cars at a safe distance. This distance, of course, should be increased at night or when the weather is bad.

2. Always be alert for what other drivers may do, and try to anticipate their possible mistakes.

3. Keep a sharp lookout for pedestrians, especially at night and when passing through congested areas.

4. Have your car regularly and thoroughly checked by a competent mechanic, especially before taking a long trip.

If you are a relaxed and alert driver, and observe all traffic and safety regulations, summer motoring can be fun.

COPYRIGHT 1954—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.
1 Madison Ave., N. Y. 10, N. Y.

Please send me the free booklet, 754J.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

...that Country Fair flavor!

Ripened in the country sun, fairly bursting with that farm-kitchen goodness—DOLE Fruit Cocktail! Whole California peaches and pears are crisply gem-cut. Those carnival-bright cherries and grapes are the juiciest you can bite into. And the pineapple? DOLE-grown in Hawaii, of course. Open up this prize package and serve your family eating pleasure!

pan beneath, and catching up a fistful of dried herbs, began to cast them in the pot.

"Nay, dear lady," said Katherine gently, "I want no potion." But she saw that the moment of reason had passed. Nichola did not hear her.

Katherine turned away and slipped from the tower room. She felt no fear now of the Lady Nichola, but she was heavy of heart. She descended the steps to the courtyard. Ajax, the great mastiff, walked over to her stiff-legged from his kennel, sniffed her gown, then stalked away toward the stables. She followed him and, entering, went to Doucette's stall. The little mare greeted her with a whinny, and she threw her arms around its neck. Then she looked at her horse and a sudden anger possessed her.

She spied a stableboy's bare legs protruding from a mound of straw in the next stall. "Wake up, you lazy churl!" she cried. "What's your name?" Katherine surveyed him with disgust—his matted hair, dangling red hands and torn, dung-spattered tunic.

"Wat—that be Walter—Wat's son, m'lady."

"Well, Wat Watson!" cried Katherine. "Why have you not curried my palfrey? Why is the hayrick empty?"

Wat swallowed and said that the hayrick was empty because there was no hay.

"There's green grass in the meadow beyond the moat," she snapped. "Go pull enough to fill the manger. Then curry Doucette and water her. When you've finished, clean out this foul stable. You should be shamed!"

He nodded, openmouthed. Later in the alehouse he told the story with embellishments. He said that Katherine had belabored him with a pitchfork and roared at him with strange oaths. Nobody believed all this, but it confirmed the general apprehension that the easygoing days were over.

Buoyed on the wave of her anger, Katherine quitted the stables, picked her way through ancient refuse to the hut where she knew the bailiff lay, and tapped upon the door.

A man's harsh voice said, "Who's there?"

She answered, "Katherine Swynford, the new Lady of Kettlethorpe."

"Enter then!"

The stench inside the hut nearly knocked her over. She gasped and stepped back into the courtyard. "Is he unclean?" she whispered, not knowing that she spoke.

"Nay, lady," said the bitter voice in the darkness, "I'm no leper. Would that I were, for I'd be with others of my kind and tended by the brothers."

Katherine came back within the door.

"Open the shutter, lady," said the voice, half sneering. "'Twill sweeten the air for squeamish noses."

KATHERINE flung back the little window shutter. The cool spring breeze blew across the room and out the door. She looked down at the man who lay on a straw pallet on the floor. A russet mantle covered his body; she could see but his arms. And in his ivory skull-head the eyes were sunk so that she scarcely could see that they were blue. Only the curling brown hair of his head and his matted beard showed that he had been a comely man.

"Behold Gibbon, your steward, my lady," he said. "I can move nothing but my head, and these fingers—see!"

"What is it, Gibbon?" she asked.

"I know not. It began two years ago with a weakness in my legs. They trembled much. The trembling crept from limb to limb, but now they do not even tremble."

"You've had a leech?"

"A barber from Torksey bled me often. It does no good."

"Does no one tend you, Gibbon?"

"Oh, aye—when they remember. Old Toby at times, big Margery Brewster from the vill."

Katherine frowned. "There must be many changes on the manor!" she cried. "I'll see that you're tended properly—then you'll get better."

He looked at her with some attention. A feeble smile narrowed his sunken lids. "You're full young to be so resolute."

"Is there much pain?" she said. There was a flagon of ale on the floor, and a piece of bread. She poured ale into a wooden cup and held it to his lips.

He shook his head to the ale. " was here this morning. I was fed. N no pain. Where's Hugh gone? I horses in the courtyard."

"Hunting in the forest. We need m said it lightly, that he might not thin proach to his stewardship.

"Hugh told you nought about me, Gibbon looked up at her. It had b since anyone had lingered to talk to

"No," she said, "he spoke never nor of his manors."

"Aye, it was always that way. Hug tle interest in his lands, but I had. I fe him, and ruled his villeins. We were
ing. Soon we might have made th worthy of Swynfords. I can guess wh tion it's in."

"I've wondered," she said, hesitatin
there are no furnishings, except the ru

"Hugh sold them at his father's de had to pay relief and heriots to his feuc of course, before he could claim h itance. Hugh should find a new bailiff
You will need help to administer your

"I bring no dowry," said Katherine.

His silence hurt her so that she fo illness and added sharply, "Is it the cu Lincolnshire for the hired bailiff to himself so deeply in his master's affairs

Gibbon turned his eyes back to he but madam, I, too, am a Swynford. H I are half brothers."

"But I don't understand ——"

HE made a derisive sound in his "Simple enough, for I'm a bastard. A most dear father, Sir Thomas, had me by the Gilbertines at Sempringham. W father made full confession on his de Hugh summoned me to aid him on th
It was generously done, and I was grate

"Aye, it was generously done," Ka murmured, turning this new aspect of h band over in her mind. "Gibbon," sh
"will you help me when you can, tell m must be done here?"

His lips moved in assent, then fell sla

She went quickly out of the hut in sunny courtyard. Dear God, this is n home, she thought. Soon Hugh and Ellis to Aquitaine and I shall be here alone crazed woman, a dying man and a pack o lious serfs.

Then from the forest she heard a wi looing and the fainter winding of a ho least there would be meat for dinner.

Hugh left Kettlethorpe in the middle gust, on the day after the Feast of the As tion. They had managed to celebrate thi with some of the traditional lavishness.
had been dancing on the green, while little church for blessing the peopl brought samples from the harvest: oats ley and flax plants, in woven baskets.

In June the Manor Court had been he Hugh had dealt out punishment to his He exacted immediate payment of the ov rents and fines and clapped those who for time into the stocks, besides perso flogging others.

Katherine had had a litter made for G and he had been carried into the hall to s the court. When he found the strength t advice, Hugh usually heeded.

So now in August, the administration manor had improved. New officers had appointed from among the villeins: a hay to guard the fields and pastures, and a Sim the Tanner, the shrewdest man in th lage. Sim was cold-eyed and slippery mackerel, but being an indefatigable w himself, would brook no excuses from th leins it was now his duty to oversee.

Gibbon had suggested that the tann chosen. No life had returned to the ba useless limbs; still, cared for now by a lad, his mind had lightened and a trace of came into his bone-pale skin. No new had been found, and in truth Hugh woul have known how to look for one, nor the money for his wages.

On the night of the feast, when Hugh Katherine went to bed, he, being hot wi and suddenly aware of how sorely he miss her, pulled her roughly toward him

"Let me be, Hugh," she said sharply.

er flared. "How dare you shove me
" As she stiffened, turning her head lrink-soured breath, he struck her, t hard, across the cheek.
she said with biting contempt, "like e son. But you will not need to beat blackthorn stick for that I'm bar-hy should I not!" Then he caught ng. His clenched fists fell open. "Are child, Katherine?"

elieve," she said coldly.
think you it'll be born?" Hugh's ked with gladness.
y, I suppose," she answered in the tone.
y?" said Hugh eagerly. "No doubt k with you. It won't take us long to astilian rabble."
e you'll be back, Hugh!" She spoke tly, though in truth she could not ow it would be in May, and longed m go.
must be a midwife on the manor,"
. "I believe 'tis the parson's wench, k Gibbon. And mind you keep away crazed Nichola; she might upset you avings, might mark the child."
careful, Hugh." She was faintly y his solicitude. And when he again toward him, but now with clumsy ce, she suffered the scrape of his rd while he kissed her hungrily.
xt morning, before the dew was off the church bell rang and all the vil-embled to Godspeed their manor as dressed in gleaming armor from s had polished every trace of rust or he came through the gatehouse and e drawbridge, his serfs gave a polite ey made way for the parish priest, ered through the lich gate to give sing. Hugh and Ellis knelt on the receive it. The priest murmured ged them with holy water.

ose and clambered into the saddle mounting block. Then he sat stiff to look down at Katherine. "Fare-God keep you, my Katherine."
ou, my lord and husband," she re-Guard him well, Ellis," she added.
ne dutifully waved good-by until otting horses faded from sight down avenue of wych-elms. She felt ief nor the slightest doubt that Hugh urn. Her certainty of his safety arose ch from ignorance of war as from a ecognized trust in the overlord he ve. Because the Duke of Lancaster nerable, so would his men be.
ay grows warm, lady," said the pping his shining red face. "'Twill rime."

NE took the hint. "Come in and r fast with me, Sir Robert. I believe l some mead left from the feast."
nner, the reeve, who stood waiting to peasants back to their tasks, gave a ort. Nobody believed that the priest d his belly. A greedy and lazy man rt de Northwode, but well liked by nonetheless. He came from the par-as the only son of a freeman black-o prospered enough to finance his in the world. Robert took minor d when the old rector died Hugh, at suggestion, appointed Robert to the rtainly there were no other eager
s.
however, was pleased. It was agree-addressed by the priest's honorary sir" and to have become the chief the parish after the manor lord. Be-and lusty, he soon picked a hearth-tout good-natured wench from the nd with his Molly and their four ants he made himself very comfortagh canon law denied her the title of ly was not ill thought of. Celibacy asked of monk or friar, but hardly atural a man as a village parson, nor Bishop of Lincoln trouble himself egularities in poor parishes.
ine had hoped for spiritual and intelidance from her manor priest. But discovered that Father Robert could neither read nor write, and that to her timid confessions he scarcely listened, but granted absolution in a hurried gabble before she had finished, while his flat Lincolnshire accent made the Latin he had learned by rote almost ludicrous.

More and more during the autumn months as her pregnancy advanced Katherine drew into herself. She scarcely found the energy for talks with Gibbon and he did not trouble her, having established a fair working relationship with the reeve.

The Lady Nichola was no companion. Now that the weather was bad, she kept always to her tower room with her cat and seemed to be confused by Katherine's rare visits. Besides, the girl was not unmindful of Hugh's command. Who knew what might not mark the child?

After the leaves fell and the freezing November rains began, Katherine stayed almost entirely in her room, either shivering by the smoking fire or huddled in the great bed beneath the bearskin. Sometimes she roused herself and plied a listless needle to make swaddling clothes for her baby. But the baby still seemed imaginary.

"It'll be different when you quicken, lady," said Milburga. This was the servant Katherine had chosen as personal waiting maid because she was cleaner and less stupid than the others.

On St. Catherine's Day, November twenty-fifth, Katherine awoke to find that she had been crying in her sleep, and knew that she had dreamed of her childhood. The fire had died to ashes. Katherine looked at the cold gray ashes and her tears changed to a loud and passionate sobbing. When Milburga bustled in with the morning ale, the maid exclaimed, "Mistress, what ails ye?"

As the girl merely hid her face in her arms and continued to sob, the woman drew back the covers and made a quick examination.

"Have ye pains, here or here?" she demanded.

Katherine shook her head. "Leave me. Go away," and she sobbed more violently.

Milburga's sallow face tightened. "Stop that, lady! Ye'll harm the child."

"Oh, a murrain on the child!" cried Katherine wildly, rearing herself on the bed.

"St. Mary protect us!" gasped Milburga, backing away.

The wild, angry grief fell off Katherine like a mantle, leaving her afraid. "I didn't mean it. Send for Sir Robert. Tell him he must celebrate a Mass. This is my saint's day—my sixteenth—that's why—why ——"

But of what use to explain to that shocked face that she had been sobbing for her own childhood. Even at Sheppey the nuns had made a little atmosphere of fete and congratulation for her on this saint's day. Here there was nobody to either cherish her or care.

MILBURGA, bound on her errand to the rectory, paused in the kitchen to regale the other servants with their mistress' shocking behavior. They clustered around exclaiming, the cook and the servitor and the dairymaid. All work stopped at once, except that little Cob o' Fenton, the towheaded spitboy, crouched in his niche in the great fireplace, automatically turning the handle with his toes. They were roasting a lean old ewe, and her scanty grease smelled rancid as it hissed into the fire. The manor food was poor, and slackly prepared, now that Lady Katherine kept to her room.

The initial good will Katherine had aroused on the manor by reason of her beauty, youth and the promptness with which she had done her duty in conceiving an heir had soon died down. After all, she was a foreigner. She spoke an English they had trouble understanding. And moreover, she was a nuisance. Were it not for her, the house carls might all have returned to their own pursuits, as they had before Sir Hugh's brief visit. Katherine, sunk in sickliness and torpor, knew that they gave her grudging service, but had not the spirit to care.

On the fourth Sunday in Advent she dragged herself up and, feeling a trifle better, crossed over to the church for Mass. She sat alone and watched as through a fog the priest lurch and gabble through the service. She tried to fix her thoughts upon the elevation of the Host, yet all she could think of were the rolls of pink fat on the priest's neck and the quivering of oily curls around his tonsure.

It was at that moment that she felt the baby quicken, and was frightened. Katherine stifled a cry and rushed from the pew through the side door of the church into the open. She sank on the bench beneath the lich gate and drew great lungfuls of the cold, sparkling air. Her terror receded and she grew ashamed. She must go back into church and apologize to the Blessed Body of Jesus for her irreverence. She got slowly to her feet, then turned, for a horse came galloping down the frozen road.

The horseman reined his mount before the drawbridge and Katherine, with a great leap at her heart, saw that he wore on his tunic the Lancaster red rose.

She ran across the court. "Whence do you come? Is there news of the war?"

The lad was Piers Roos, the duke's erstwhile body squire, who had been left at home to serve the duchess. He said with some uncertainty, "My Lady Swynford?"

She nodded. "What news do you bring?"

"Nothing but good. At least we know no war news yet from Castile. I come from Bolingbroke, from the Duchess Blanche. She sends you greeting."

"Ah." Katherine's drawn little face softened with pleasure. She had never dared hope that the Lady Blanche would remember her.

"She bids me escort you to Bolingbroke for the Christmas festival," Piers told her, "if you'd like to come."

Her indrawn breath and the sudden shining of her eyes were answer enough, and Piers Roos laughed, seeing that she was even younger than he was and not the solemn woman she had seemed as he dismounted.

"We'll go tomorrow, then, if you wish. The ride'll take but a day."

"I—I cannot go fast," faltered Katherine. "I—they think I should not ride at all."

"What folly," said Piers cheerfully, understanding. "The Lady Blanche is larger than you and she still rides out daily."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 62

DERRING-DON'T

BY GEORGIE STARBUCK GALBRAITH

There's little, my hero, you wouldn't do
For me, your lady. I know that's true.
You'd scale Mt. Everest any time.
But what are the chances, beloved, you'd climb
The attic stairs to find me a carton?
Of course you'd leap like a dauntless Spartan
To slaughter a dragon; but, dearest spouse,
Dispose mayhap of a plain old mouse?
You'd swim the Hellespont might and main;
But empty the garbage in the rain?
You'd fetch me the moon, that's perfectly clear.
But change me a bulb in a chandelier?
I wouldn't ask it! I want to save Your strength, my gallant, for something brave
Like moving a mountain, not female sport
Like moving a pennyweight davenport!

"Coffee-break"

with

Mary Margaret McBride

Really, I can never get over our American coffee. It just isn't found anywhere else on earth. We brew it to a pleasantly smooth flavor and distinctive aroma that are entirely different from French, Italian or Turkish coffees. And these warm days, nothing can equal the refreshing lift of our own country's summer version of the year-round favorite — coffee iced. The cardinal rule is this: good iced coffee always starts with good hot coffee! And for perfect iced coffee every time, don't fail to follow these directions of the Coffee Brewing Institute:

The Pre-Cooled Way

Make your regular strength coffee — one Standard Coffee Measure or two level tablespoons of coffee to each ¾ measuring cup of water. Cool in a non-metal container for no more than three hours. The container should be tightly covered in the refrigerator. Serve in a tall glass filled with ice cubes . . . add sugar and cream to taste.

The Quick Way

Make your coffee double strength by using half the amount of water to the usual amount of your favorite brand of coffee. Pour hot into tall glasses filled with ice cubes. The extra-strong coffee allows for the dilution caused by the melting of the ice.

A theory that seems to have originated in the tropics is that hot coffee makes you feel cooler. It may be true, too. The hottest, spiciest foods, you know, are traditional in the hot climates. But hot or cold, everyone agrees that there's nothing like the gentle stimulation of truly fine coffee.

The Coffee Brewing Institute, Inc.

120 Wall St., New York 5, N. Y.

This one centers around a variety vegetable salad served with the one and only Miracle Whip, or Kraft Mayonnaise. Add cheese and meat slices and you have a menu that's hefty enough to serve for supper, if you prefer, instead of lunch.

Light and refreshing for a ladies' luncheon! But not too light . . . Kraft Mayonnaise makes the frozen fruit salad filling as well as luscious. New Casino or Miracle French will bring out the goodness of the other fruits and dress the tender greens to perfection.

Here's one for the family or for company—hearty salmon salad, made with Kraft Mayonnaise, and deviled eggs that are full of zip and quick to fix with Miracle Sandwich Spread. Lots of nutrition on this plate, too.

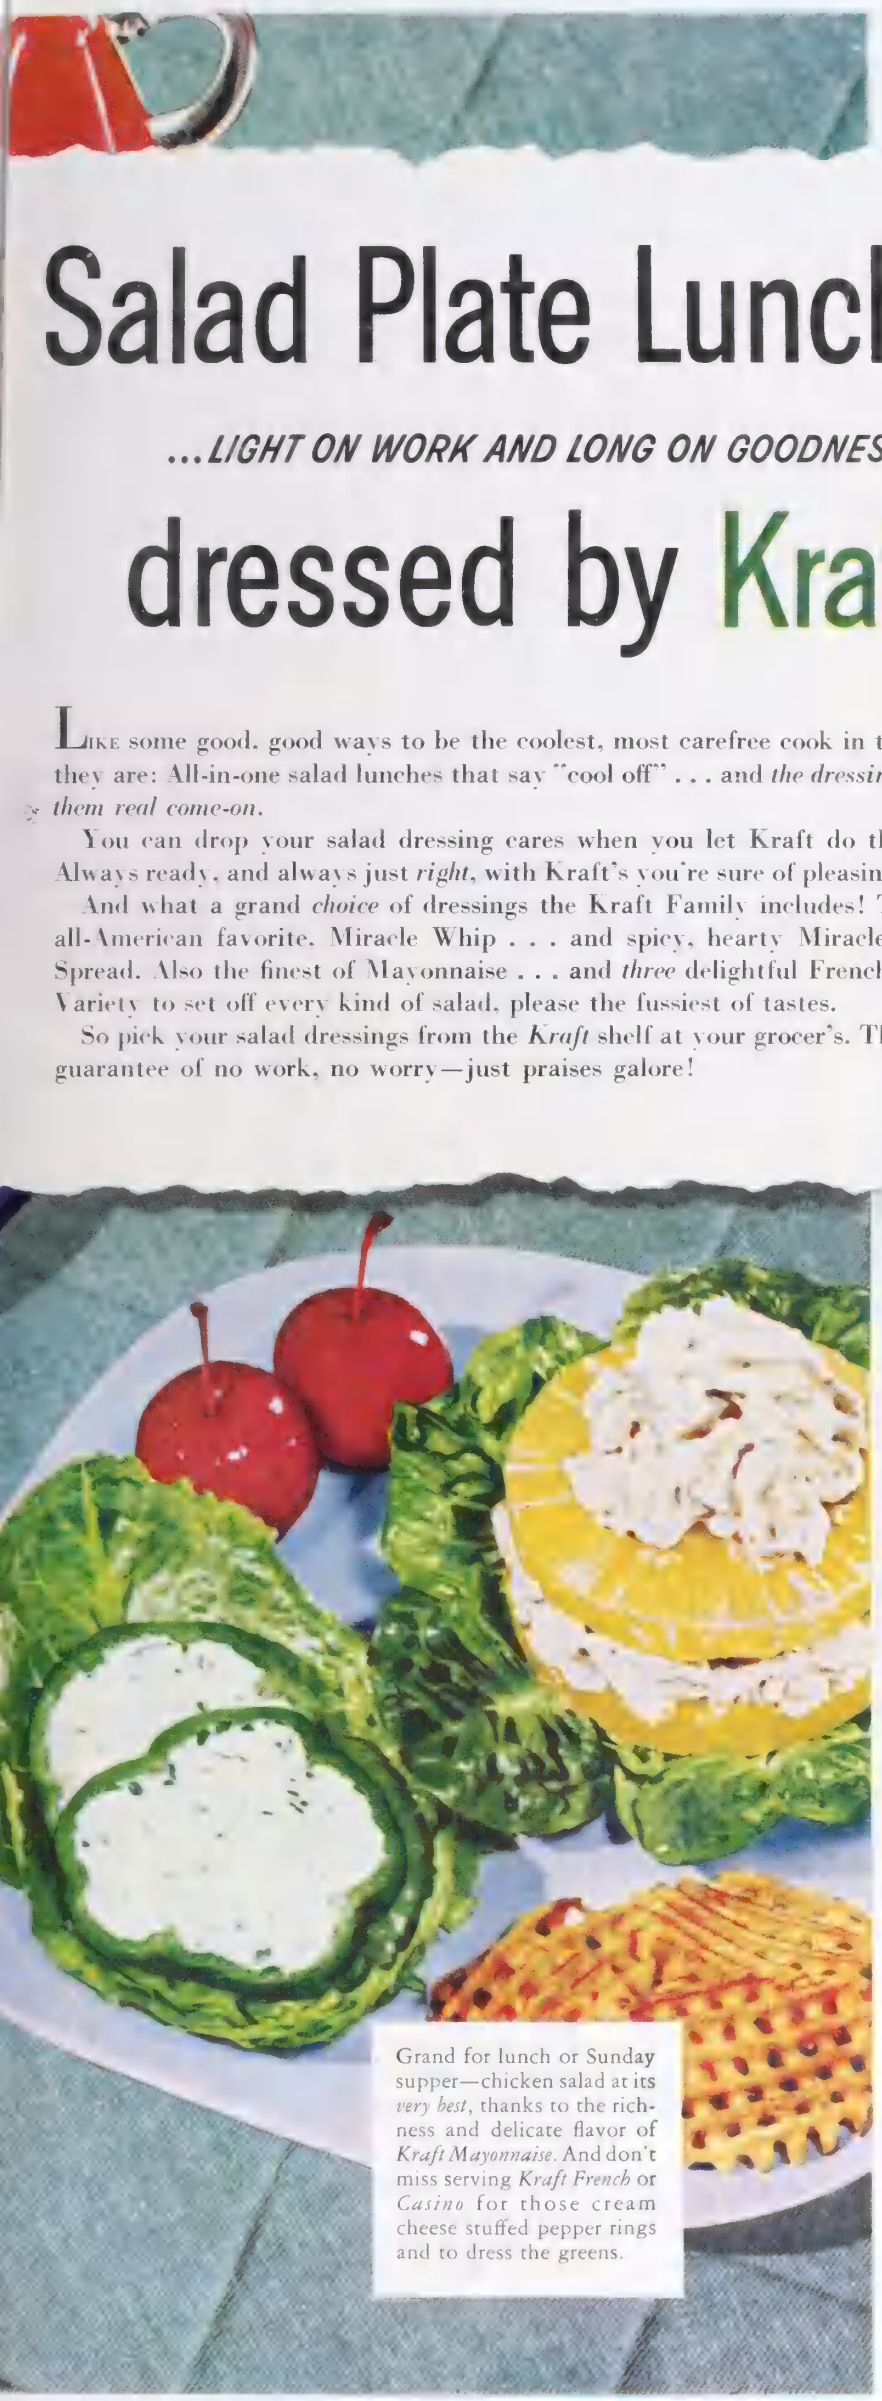
So hearty, the men will go for this! Serve it either for lunch or for the main meal on a hot, hot day. The one and only Miracle Whip makes—absolutely makes—the coleslaw in the ham roll-ups. For the beans and greens, give the folks a choice of Miracle French or Kraft French

Salad Plate Lunches

...LIGHT ON WORK AND LONG ON GOODNESS



dressed by Kraft

Like some good, good ways to be the coolest, most carefree cook in town? Here they are: All-in-one salad lunches that say "cool off" . . . and the dressings that give them real come-on.

You can drop your salad dressing cares when you let Kraft do the making. Always ready, and always just right, with Kraft's you're sure of pleasing.

And what a grand choice of dressings the Kraft Family includes! There's the all-American favorite, Miracle Whip . . . and spicy, hearty Miracle Sandwich Spread. Also the finest of Mayonnaise . . . and three delightful French dressings. Variety to set off every kind of salad, please the fussiest of tastes.

So pick your salad dressings from the Kraft shelf at your grocer's. They're your guarantee of no work, no worry—just praises galore!

Grand for lunch or Sunday supper—chicken salad at its very best, thanks to the richness and delicate flavor of Kraft Mayonnaise. And don't miss serving Kraft French or Casino for those cream cheese stuffed pepper rings and to dress the greens.

MIRACLE WHIP—Far and away the best liked of all dressings for salad is Kraft's original creation, the one and only Miracle Whip. Sandwiches, seafoods, salads—all get a lift from Miracle Whip Salad Dressing. There's nothing else like it!

KRAFT MAYONNAISE—True mayonnaise at its finest—made of the choicest ingredients mixed satiny smooth in Kraft's own exclusive beater. You'll love the delightful flavor and luxurious richness of Kraft Mayonnaise.

MIRACLE SANDWICH SPREAD—A Thousand Island type dressing, Kraft adds lots and lots of special pickle relishes to Miracle Whip to make handy, hearty Miracle Sandwich Spread. Wonderful on salads and grand for sandwiches just as it comes from the jar.

There's a just-right KRAFT DRESSING for every taste... try them all!

KRAFT FRENCH—Creamy-thick so it doesn't separate, Kraft's is the most popular French dressing ever offered for sale. If any of your family think they don't like French dressing, try Kraft French for a happy surprise.

MIRACLE FRENCH—Robustly seasoned with onion and garlic, Miracle French is the liveliest of Kraft's three French dressings. Use it as a marinade for potatoes for potato salad and for meats before broiling or baking.

KRAFT OIL—If or when you feel the urge to make your own French dressings, use wonderful Kraft "all-purpose" Oil. You'll love the way this fine Oil blends with other ingredients and gives satin smooth results.

CASINO FRENCH—New Casino has a most intriguing flavor—somewhat sweet, somewhat garlic-y—especially fine on fruits. It takes twelve different seasonings, in most precise proportions, to get that special flavor! Try Casino soon.

Kraft Salad Dressings are also available in Canada.

Recipes and Menus—for these Salad Plate Lunches are free at your food store in a nice little leaflet. Or write to Kraft Kitchen Recipes, Box 5756, Chicago 77.

Recipes—for 500 wonderful salads!

"THE SALAD BOOK"—by Marye Dahnke, Director of Consumer Service for the Kraft Foods Company—has 320 pages, full color pictures, costs only 35¢! On sale at book stores and wherever Cardinal Pocket Books are sold.

KRAFT
THE NAME THAT MEANS WONDERFUL SALADS

Combine Style Distinction with Scientific Design

You'll discover what real walking ease is like when you step out in your first pair of supremely comfortable, foot-flattering Dr. Scholl's Shoes. Made over Dr. Scholl's scientifically designed lasts, their glove-like, foot-cradling fit makes them ever so kind to your feet.

Dr. Scholl's Shoes are made in all sizes for all types of feet — Women's, some styles 2½ to 13, AAAAA to EEEEEEEE; Men's, 5½ to 16, AAA to EEEEEEE. Expertly fitted at Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort® Shops and Shoe and Department Stores in principal cities. If not obtainable locally, write for catalog, Dept. 47, Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago 10, Illinois.

THUM

For Prolonged and Persistant

NAIL-BITING • THUMB-SUCKING

USED BY PHYSICIANS, DENTISTS, NURSES FOR OVER 20 YEARS — AT YOUR DRUG STORE

Sell Custom-Made PERSONAL CHRISTMAS CARDS

Limited number of men and women wanted to make exceptional profits with big Album presentation of highest quality Personalized Christmas Cards from $9 to $23 per 100. Exclusive designs reproduced with finest craftsmanship. 40% commission. Added profits with lower-priced "Personals" and big line of top-value Box Assortments. Write fully for samples.
WALLACE BROWN, 225 FIFTH AVE., DEPT. S-309, NEW YORK 10, N.Y.

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

Searching for a surprise? French fry some—

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

—it's the Quality Pack"

FREE! Big Recipe Booklet. Send name of your food store to Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa.

Fancy Mushrooms at a popular price

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Keep it Clean WITH

ANGUS ALL-PURPOSE-DOUBLE CLOTHS

No need to buy a dish cloth AND a cleaning cloth... Angus is the answer to EVERY CLEANING NEED. Not "rags", but full-size, quality double cloths... Soft, Durable, Highly Absorbent and they PROTECT THE HANDS.

TORREST YARN CO., LANSDOWNE, PA.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 59

"The Lady Blanche!" Katherine repeated, wondering that she should be amazed, and why the young squire's information came as a small unpleasant shock. "When?"

"Oh, March or April, I believe. I know nought of midwifery." He laughed outright, and Katherine after a minute joined him.

The energy Piers' invitation brought her buoyed Katherine through all difficulties. She ordered Doucette curried and groomed and ignored the disapproval of her household.

Next day she smiled and hummed as she crossed the inner court to take leave of Gibbon.

"Aye, mistress," he said sadly, "you're in a fever to be quit of Kettlethorpe."

"Only till Twelfth Night," she cried. "Then I'll be back. And I'll not pine any more, I promise. I'll help you on the manor again."

Bolingbroke was a small, fair castle set in meadowlands. It was the Lancasters' favorite country castle. There Blanche had spent much of her girlhood, and there she and John had come in the first days of their marriage.

From the moment when the Lady Blanche herself met Katherine in the Great Hall through the twelve days of Christmas, Katherine managed to forget Kettlethorpe. With the rest of the duchess' company, she immersed herself in the serene and gracious aura which surrounded Blanche.

The duchess, thickened by pregnancy, was no less beautiful and Katherine admired her passionately.

There were few guests. The Cromwells from nearby Tattershal Castle rode over Christmas night, and the Abbess of Elstow, who was cousin to Blanche, spent the days between St. Stephen's and New Year's, but so intimate was the castle gathering that Katherine wondered much, while she rejoiced, that she had been invited.

She put it down to kindness of heart, and tried to repay the duchess in every way she could. The duchess responded with affection and growing interest in the girl. Yet it was a sentence in a letter she had received from her husband which had prompted the invitation.

The duke had written soon after landing in Brittany, telling many items of news: that Joan, Princess of Wales, was enceinte again; that King Pedro had with him at Bordeaux his handsome daughters, and that the desolate plight of these princesses had captured the sympathy of all the English.

Descending into less exalted vein, the duke had shown his usual consideration for Blanche's comfort at home. She found in the last paragraph the question, "Have you seen aught of the little Swynford? Her clodpoll knight is here and confides that he has got her with child. It might be kindness to see how she does, alone, on their manor."

Blanche hastened to obey without question and in generous measure. She was rewarded, for she enjoyed Katherine's visit.

THE girl's admiration touched her. The two women sat together and embroidered through the winter dusks. Sometimes Blanche picked up her lute or gittern and they sang—plaintive love songs, or Christmas carols to the Virgin. And at the singing Blanche knew herself surpassed, for her voice sometimes flatted, while Katherine hit true and round on every note.

"Do you make much music at Kettlethorpe?" inquired Blanche one evening.

"No, madam," said Katherine. She had, from pride and a desire to forget the place, always evaded the duchess' polite questions about her manor.

"Are your minstrels unskilled?" asked the duchess in some surprise.

Katherine thought of her hall, which was barer and meaner than the cow byres here, and could not help laughing. "We have no minstrels, madam. It's not," she added quickly, "a manor quite like any you have known."

The duchess raised her pale arched brows and, seeing Katherine's unwillingness, said no more. She determined to make the girl some presents on New Year's Day and, dismissing the matter, she turned smiling as her two little girls ran into the ladies' bower to announce that mummers had arrived and had playfully chased the children around the courtyard.

"Dragon, mama! All fire!" Elizabeth shrieked, dancing on her little red shoes and pointing to the window. "Big dragon! He'll eat us up!"

"It's not a real dragon, mother," explained Philippa earnestly. "It's only a man in a disguise. You mustn't be frightened."

Katherine, watching, thought how like the good little Philippa that was. At six and a half, she was already a blurred copy of Blanche, well mannered and considerate, though she gave no promise of Blanche's beauty.

Elizabeth, who was not yet three, outshone her elder sister. She was willful and demanding and extremely spoiled, for she had charm.

The baby danced over to Katherine singing, "Dragon, dragon, come see 'Lisbet's dragon!"

Katherine was more than willing. She looked to the duchess for permission, then took the children's hands.

When they reached the courtyard, it was full of retainers and villagers who had come to see the fun. The mummers let out a shout of greeting to the ducal children and cavorted around the trio, singing "Wassail, wassail!" There were a score of them, each disguised as an animal—goats, rabbits, stags, dogs and bulls—except their leader, the Lord of Misrule, who wore a fool's costume tipped with jingling bells.

Dr. Adolf Meyer, Johns Hopkins psychiatrist, was sought out by many of the world's great figures. Queen Marie was no exception. One of her friends brought her to Doctor Meyer and said, "I want you to meet the Queen of Rumania." To which the doctor answered, "How long does she think she's been queen?"

The dragon was indeed a wonderful object. He writhed realistically and, opening and shutting his painted canvas jaws, emitted clouds of evil-smelling brimstone.

But then the mummers' play grew bawdy. Katherine gathered up the protesting Elizabeth and shepherded Philippa back to their mother.

By the time they reached Blanche's firelit bower, Katherine had silenced the baby with a firm command and then the crooning of a little French nursery song. When she went to put her down beside her mother, Elizabeth clung fast to Katherine's neck.

"You're truly good with the children, Katherine," said the duchess. "But you should not carry that heavy child in your condition.... Elizabeth, let my Lady Swynford go!"

"Won't," cried the child. "I like her better'n you."

It was only a piece of baby naughtiness. It ruffled the duchess not at all, who merely called Elizabeth's nurse from the anteroom, yet it gave Katherine a strange guilt as though she had somehow unwittingly hurt this lady who had been her kindest friend.

She thrust Elizabeth at the nurse, who vanished with her howling charge. Katherine picked up her embroidery and fought off the unease that had come upon her.

It passed, of course. She reasoned it away, telling herself that women in her state were given to fancies and that it was a piece of presumption for her to think she might affect the duchess in any way at all—just as her cheeks grew hot with shame when she remembered what a ridiculous dither she had been in at the duke's perfunctory kiss in the church.

Here in his castle with his wife and children, she saw her folly in its true light and, in some way allied to this, she began to think more kindly of Hugh.

Katherine duly returned to Kettlethorpe in Piers Roos' charge but the duchess, having decided that the roads were too icy for horseback, sent her in one of the great ducal chariots. It was drawn by four horses and was as lavishly carved, gilded and painted as Blanche's own bridal chests. Katherine lay inside on a velvet couch and, despite the jouncing and lurching of the springless wheels, she fo that this piece of generosity somewhat all ated her sorrow at leaving Bolingbroke. So the other evidences of Blanche's kindnes coffers at the rear of the carriage. Kathe had two dresses now, and a length of Flem woven wool with which to make a third. Th was fine linen for baby clothes, and there w a lute, an English psalter and an ivory cruc The duchess after consultation with Piers finally realized something of conditions Kettlethorpe.

THE ride home took fifteen hours and the miles were nearly as wearisome as they been when she first came in May with Hu And her welcome was scarcely better. manor house was dark, the servants, not pecting her, had gone to bed and when rou out by Piers were surly and unhelpful.

Katherine went up to her dank, musty-sm ing solar. She did not undress but crept as was between the clammy sheets. The ni candle flickered and blew out in a gust fr the east wind through the shutter.

Nothing had changed. Katherine pulled bearskin around her ears and, clenching teeth, prayed violently for resignation.

The winter snows melted in the strength ing sun. April came in with soft cloudless d and gentle nightly showers. The whole ma pulsed with spring, and Katherine spent m of her time outdoors basking on a bench in courtyard. She could not walk far now, she was no longer sickly or unhappy.

In Holy Week, a wandering Gray Fr turned up at the manor to beg a night's h pitality. He told Katherine that eleven d ago the Duchess Blanche had delive of a fair healthy son, christened Henry.

"Oh, I'm glad!" cried Katherine. Te came to her eyes, of honest joy for Blanche.

On the last day of April, Katherine awo early and was filled with restless energy. S dressed before the sun was up and, walki into the woods, gathered armfuls of flow and flowering branches. She carried them the hall and began to prop them in corne and in the window embrasures. Then, see that the long oak table was spattered w candle wax, she called into the kitchen Milburga.

The maid found her mistress feverish polishing the table and, noting the flowers a branches, nodded sagely. "Aye, lady, I see ye hands're restless and ye feel the need for bus ness. For sure your time be nigh."

Katherine looked up startled. "No, I f well, better than for long. I but wanted to bri the May into the house for tomorrow." H voice wavered, for she thought of May Day year ago in London.

"I'll go tell Parson's Molly ye'll be needi her," said Milburga stolidly.

"Nonsense, the baby isn't due yet."

"Aye, I'd best warn Parson's Molly," r peated the woman, "or she might be off at su down to light the fires and launch Ket's bo on the river."

Katherine bit her lips. Milburga knew th Katherine had forbidden the outlandish ritu performed by her tenants on this St. Wa purga's Eve. Gibbon had warned her of it, an described it as a brutish heathen festival whic had come down from Druid times. The serfs l fires on a hill near the Trent and after an org of dancing, guzzling and worse they launche a coracle on the river. The coracle would co tain three slaughtered newborn lambs.

Katherine had been shocked and issued command forbidding them to hold Ket's ri this May Eve.

"I told you, Milburga, that I forbid th thing tonight," said Katherine.

The maid's lips twitched. "To be sure, lad So I needn't warn Molly?"

"Certainly not!"

Thus it was that an hour after sundow Katherine felt her first pains and found herse alone, deserted by all the housefolk. She ran t the door and down the stairs calling "Mi burga!" There was no answer. She went ou into the court. "Toby!" she shouted. Thoug the bridge was down, the keeper was not there She turned and stumbled to Gibbon's hut.

"God's wounds, what is it?" cried the man slow voice in the darkness. "Is it you, my lady ur time has come. Go up to bed, send for midwife! Oh, aye—I'd forgot—they've to Ket's Hill. Devil take this useless body ne."

What shall I do, Gibbon?"

o to your bed." He spoke briskly. "It be long before they come back. Be brave little; it won't be long." Though he knew that last year they had stayed the night gh at their wicked rites.

ye," she said, "I'll go to bed."

e crept up to the solar and, throwing off own, lay on the sheet in her shift.

ward midnight Gibbon, lying in the hut, d the first scream shrill down across the yard. In her tower room, the Lady ola, too, heard the scream.

e wandered down the stone steps and ss the guardroom when she heard the d again. She knew it came from the solar pushed the door slowly open.

HAT was it on the bed that writhed and d, and ever and again gave forth a wailing She moved nearer and saw a mass of ed hair and two wild eyes in a glistening Hugh's bride?" she whispered. She blinked eaned over the bed. "What has been done ou, Hugh's bride?"

For the love of God, lady!" cried Kath-. "'Tis my baby that will not be born." grabbed at Nichola's hand, clenching it the bones cracked, and with the pain that desperate grip the shadows receded ichola's mind.

e had borne no child herself, but she had birth once long ago on her father's manor. sat on the bed and held Katherine's hands, winced when the girl pulled on them ically. Between the pains she murmured ning words and wiped the sweat-drenched with a corner of the sheet.

esently Katherine quietened a little, fall-nto an exhausted doze. Then the girl's la-ng body renewed its struggle.

he sun had climbed above the forest when vas delivered at last.

Oh, what is it?" Katherine cried when she d speak.

'Tis a girl, a baby girl," said Nichola ly. "I remember—there is something s be done ——" She fumbled at her girdle e she kept the little knife she used for cut-herbs. She bound the cord tight with a torn from the sheet, then clipped sharply. baby gasped and let out a wavering cry. ola started when she heard the cry. She d the linen coif from her head and ped the baby in it, then cradled the little lle against her chest.

Ah, let me see her," Katherine whispered. e her to me."

chola drew back a step. Uncertainty came her face which had been sure and intent re.

What do you want, Hugh's bride?" she d. "What is it that you want?"

want to see my baby, bring her here, ——" The girl could not understand why woman who had been her only comfort ight long should back away and shake her . Neither of them heard a commotion in courtyard.

he baby whimpered and Nichola, bending kly, kissed its face. "Ah there," she ned, "my pretty one, you want to see , don't you? We'll go to the river ——"

eadly fear smote Katherine. "Lady!" she l. "Come here!"

ichola backed yet another step. She stood ant, then shook her head. "Nay, they of iver want to see her. I must hasten ——" atherine stumbled from the bed and amed. Nichola ran through the door, e footsteps clattered up the stairs. The an shrank by the open door, cowering the baby. A man stood on the landing.

Oh, stop her, stop her!" Katherine sobbed. e's stealing my baby!"

wift as light the man took the bundle from hola, who let out a long quivering moan. ut the baby on the bed, then turned to the who had fallen to her knees. "In God's e, Katherine!" he cried and, picking her up, her on the bed beside the baby.

he stared up at him. "My lord duke," she spered in feeble wonder.

It was past high noon when Katherine came to herself again and heard the subdued muttering of women's voices. At first she could not think what had happened, but then she remembered and started up with a cry, "My baby!"

The kind round face of Parson's Molly bent over her. "Here, lady. Here's the tiny maid, all snug and swaddled and content." She put the infant in the crook of Katherine's arm. "As fine and fair a babe as I ever see." Over Molly's shoulder Milburga's frightened, peering face nodded agreement.

No one knew what the duke would do. His anger had been terrible when the housefolk came stumbling and lurching back across the drawbridge from Ket's rites. He had not whipped them, nor berated, but the tone of his voice as he gave orders banished their drunkenness like a purge.

The Lady Nichola, sobbing, had been chained to her bed in the tower by the duke's men.

The women now heard footsteps on the wooden landing and a knock outside. Molly went to the door and curtsied as she said low, "Our lady sleeps, my lord duke, but we've washed her and the babe."

John pushed her aside and strode into the room. He stood looking down at Katherine. Her long lashes quivered and she opened her eyes.

"I don't wish to disturb you, Katherine," he said gently. "I came to see how you did—and the babe."

"I do well, my lord. Is she not lovely?" She nuzzled the baby's head.

John smiled assent, though the infant looked like all others to him.

"How came you here, my lord?" she asked, drawing her arched brows together. "It seems strange, now I begin to—to wake."

"Having business in Lincoln, I thought to pay you a May Morn visit, and—I scarce expected to be so opportune." He frowned. "I thought you might like news of Hugh."

"Aye—where is Hugh?"

"Still in Castile, with my army, but unharmed. I'll send him back soon. My ship waits at Plymouth. I came back because I have a son."

"Ah, yes. How does my Lady Blanche?"

"Fairly." He said no more, seeing that Katherine was not fully awake and making an effort to be courteous. He turned to the window.

Blanche had been well enough for him to leave Bolingbroke and make this hasty trip to Lincoln to inspect its castle, which he owned. Conferences with the constable had taken little time and it had been on impulse that he decided to ride on to Kettlethorpe and see Katherine.

HE returned to the bed. "Your villeins must be punished," he said. "I understand from your bailiff that you forbade their extraordinary rites last night. These serfs cannot be permitted to defy you. I shall leave one of my men here—a Gascon named Nirac de Bayonne."

John smiled suddenly. Nirac amused him with his quick tongue, nimble wits and sly humor. John had saved his life at Nájera and the fiery little Gascon had been passionately grateful. John knew that Nirac would obey his commands loyally.

He glanced toward the courtyard window where the sun already slanted above the church spire and said:

"Yes—I'll leave you Nirac until Swynford gets home. And, Katherine, your baby must be christened—now."

Katherine gasped and drew the baby closer. "Is there danger for her? Does there seem something wrong?"

"No, no—there's nothing to fear. But we'll christen the babe at once, because I shall be its godfather."

"Oh, my sweet lord," whispered Katherine, flushing with delight. "It is a very great honor."

"Yes," said the duke, "and will help insure your safety and the babe's." It was for this reason he had suggested it. A child so honored would be powerfully protected, and even Katherine's unruly serfs should be intimidated.

The christening took place an hour later in the little church of Sts. Peter and Paul. Parson's Molly held the baby and served as godmother, since there was obviously no one else in the least suitable. The baby was christened Blanche Mary, as Katherine had asked. She wailed satisfactorily when the holy water doused her head.

Katherine heard the ringing of the church bell and dissolved into happy tears. My tiny Blanche, she thought, Blanchette, named for the lovely duchess and the blessed Queen of Heaven.

Surely all the good fairies had hovered near this christening and brought the baby luck, though there was scarcely need for luck greater than sponsorship by the duke. How good is he, she thought, and she felt for him the same gratitude and humble admiration she had for the Lady Blanche.

When the duke preceded Molly and the baby back into the solar, Katherine greeted him with a soft little cry and, taking his hand, kissed it in a childlike gesture of homage.

The duke, receiving it as such, bent over and kissed her quickly on the forehead. "There, Katherine, your babe is now a Christian and you and I have become spiritual brother and sister. So I must leave you. I can scarce reach Bolingbroke tonight as it is."

You'll take less time and less effort to clean this NEW

KENFLEX FLOOR
VINYL TILE

KenFlex Colors shown above: Marigold and Desert Sand with Daisy ThemeTile

Defies grease, dirt and wear

Beautiful new KenFlex tiles clean quicker, easier, wear longer! This colorful new flooring combines all the beauty of shining, seldom-needs-scrubbing vinyl with tough, wear-famous asbestos fibers. KenFlex resists grease...staining liquids wipe up easily from its smooth lustrous surface. Dirt and grime from constant foot traffic can't grind in to mar its beauty. Created in 15 exquisite clearer, brighter colors that go all the way through each tile, can't wear off. See KenFlex today at your KENTILE Dealer's. Find his name under FLOORS in your Classified Phone Book. In Canada, T. Eaton Co., Ltd.

KenFlex is ideal for every room in your home from basement playroom to bath and bedroom. It is easy and quick to install yourself. For example, an 8'x10' KenFlex Floor may cost only $25.50

KENFLEX
VINYL TILE ®

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

KENTILE * KENCORK * KENRUBBER * KENFLEX * KENFLOR
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
© 1954 KENTILE, INC., 58 2ND AVENUE, BROOKLYN 15, N. Y.

Perfumed with a mild fresh fragrance

This is what you voted for—Sani-Flush with a mild fragrance that leaves bathroom atmosphere refreshed. And the toilet bowl sparkling clean. Sani-Flush works chemically—no messy scrubbing. Cleans thoroughly, even the film you can't see. At all grocers. The Hygienic Products Co., Canton 2, Ohio.

Sani-Flush

for a REALLY CLEAN toilet bowl

REALLY REPELS MOSQUITOES CHIGGERS AND FLIES

SPRAY ON FROM PUSH-BUTTON AEROSOL

YOUR DEALER TRU-PINE CO. CHICAGO 20

Sell CHILDREN'S WEAR

MAKE EXTRA MONEY

with FREE Style Display

Make EXTRA MONEY introducing world's cutest Children's Dresses. Big selection latest adorable styles for girls 1 to 14 years...amazing low prices. Mothers thrilled...order on sight! Big, complete style display FREE. Rush name, address NOW.

HARFORD FROCKS, Dept. M-1354, Cincinnati 25, Ohio

NEW! Dr. Scholl's BALL-O-FOOT Cushion

LOOPS OVER TOE

QUICK RELIEF for Callouses, Tenderness, Burning at Ball of Foot

Made of soft LATEX FOAM

It's entirely NEW! Without adhesive, scientifically designed Dr. Scholl's BALL-O-FOOT Cushion loops over toe and nestles under ball of foot. Relieves painful callouses, burning, tenderness at once. Gives priceless walking ease. Your shoe—not you—absorbs the shock of each step. Flesh color. Worn invisibly. Washable. Only $1.00 pair at Drug, Shoe, Department and 5-10¢ Stores and Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort* Shops everywhere. If not obtainable locally, order direct, enclosing price. State if for woman or man.

DR. SCHOLL'S, INC., Dept. 8B, Chicago 10, Ill.

She nodded. "I know, my lord. And when you see Hugh ——"

"Aye," he broke in with sudden curtness, "I'll tell him all and send him back. In the meantime, here is Nirac."

The little Gascon had been hovering in the doorway. The man was like a blackbird with his bright round eyes, his cocky strut and hair like glossy blue-black feathers. He wore the duke's blue-and-gray household livery.

John said, "I've told the serfs that I leave you here in my place until their rightful lord comes home. You'll know how to make them obey?"

The bright beady eyes gazed intently up at the duke's face. "Oui, mon duc, your wishes shall be done." He looked at the pale girl on the bed, then back into the duke's face. Then he ran to the bedside and knelt. "Votre serviteur, belle dame," he said. "I shall guard you for the duke."

NEITHER of them gave any deeper meaning to these words or guessed that Nirac had misconstrued the situation. He came of a primitive southern race where emotions were simple as they were violent. There was love and there was hate, and no nuances between. Perhaps the baby was the duke's—that would explain why the young mother never spoke of her husband in the days that followed, but spent all her time nursing and petting her baby.

She listened, though, when Nirac spoke of the duke. They often spoke French together. He was gay, and of some help to her on the manor, though the serfs resented him bitterly.

Parson's Molly always defended her mistress when she heard the others reviling her. She pointed out how the lady had shown mercy in many ways, and particularly in the matter of the Lady Nichola. She had ordered that the crazed woman be unchained and simply confined to her tower room behind a locked door. Lady Katherine herself brought up milk and bread and spoke gently to the woman who had tried to steal her baby. But the Lady Nichola never answered; she crouched now day and night in a corner of her room while floating little pieces of straw in a pan of water, nor even cared about her cat.

And no woman, Molly said, could be a better mother than the Lady Katherine, that was plain for all to see. The hours her mistress spent with the Gascon were always in the hall or courtyard in full view of everyone, and at night not only was the solar door bolted but Katherine had taken little Betsy, the dairymaid, to sleep with her and help tend the baby.

The twenty-ninth of June would be the feast day of Sts. Peter and Paul. On this day, after morning Mass, the villagers had always held high carnival with sports and games and copious drinking. This year they were uneasy about their celebration, having in mind the unfortunate consequences of their May Eve rites.

A week before the festival they deputed their reeve to approach Katherine. When Sim Tanner, the reeve, presented himself Katherine was in the hall with Nirac and Gibbon, whom she often had carried there so that he might lie by the fire and have a change of view. Nirac had been amusing himself by whittling a set of chessmen from an elder slab.

Sim cleared his throat. "Prithee, m'lady, I come to ask ye summat. I speak for all your villeins. Next Tuesday's our Church Day. Since the time of our great-gaffers and long before Kettlethorpe folk've held the day special for sport and feasting."

"Pardieu!" Nirac threw down his knife and jumped up to stand by Katherine. "'Tis all they do here, these drunken churls—feasting and sporting. Never do they think of work!" He knew how angered the duke had been by the May Eve rites, and besides, he despised the serfs and considered that anything that thwarted them advanced Katherine's interests.

"Peace, Nirac!" said Katherine sternly. She didn't like the reeve, but Gibbon said he served the manor well. In strict justice, the villeins deserved their feast day, yet there would be drunkenness and brawling. She said, "And if I refuse permission, you might defy me as you did May Eve?"

Sim's long face flushed. Before he could answer, Nirac sprang forward. "They cannot defy you, for they have me to reckon with—me, Nirac le Gascon! My sword is ready, and my dagger. I shall slice their ears and fingers ——"

"Nirac!" Katherine cried impatiently. She was used to his extravagances, but the reeve had gone chalk-white.

His voice was high and thin like a neighing horse. "And whilst you're brandishing your sword and dagger, what think you we'll be doing? We've pitchforks, and axes, and scythes—we can carve off ears and fingers too."

"Sim—Sim!" gasped Gibbon from his pallet. Nobody heard him. Katherine stood frozen, while a dangerous stillness flowed over the Gascon.

"You t'reaten me?" he said softly. "Do you forget, miserable serf, that I wear the livery of the Duke of Lancaster?"

The reeve's face convulsed. "He's not my overlord!" he shouted. "I spit upon your Duke of Lancaster!"

OUTDOOR CODE

As an American,
I will do my best to:

BE CLEAN IN MY OUTDOOR MANNERS

I will treat the outdoors as a heritage to be improved for our greater enjoyment. I will keep my trash and garbage out of America's waters, fields, woods and roadways.

BE CAREFUL WITH FIRE

I will prevent wild fire. I will build my fire in a safe place, and be sure it is out before I leave.

BE CONSIDERATE IN THE OUTDOORS

I will treat public and private property with respect. I will remember that use of the outdoors is a privilege I can lose by abuse.

BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

The instant the spittle left his mouth, the reeve was frightened. Nirac scooped the whittling knife off the table and sprang.

"Holy name of God, Nirac!" Katherine screamed. "You'll kill him! He's unarmed." Neither of them heard her. The panting bodies struggled, knocking against the stools and table. Nirac was on top, his knees on the reeve's chest, his knife hand raised. Katherine clenched her teeth and, grabbing a handful of Nirac's streaming black hair, jerked with all her might. "Halte!" she shouted. "Au nom du duc!"

Nirac's grasp loosened, he shook his head in a dazed way. "You don't want that I kill him?" he panted. "Yet you heard what he said!"

"I think you have killed him. Get up!" She yanked him off the inert reeve who lay gasping and bleeding. "Milburga, bring water and linen—someone get the priest. Hurry!"

"Bah!" said Nirac, smoothing his hair back and wiping his knife. "A few cuts—he's had no more than a good blood-letting."

Nirac was right, it appeared, for by the time Sir Robert came puffing into the hall, Sim was recovering. The reeve had not said a word nor raised his bloodshot eyes as he tottered away.

"Lord shield us, lady, but what took place here?" asked the priest, settling himself into a chair. "What has Sim Tanner done?"

"He insult me!" said Nirac. "And he insult mon seigneur le duc."

Ah, that Nirac! thought Katherine. His notions of serving her and his lord made him a dangerous nuisance.

Ajax from his kennel let out his warning bay, and they all heard the clack of horse hoofs on the drawbridge. The duke is back, Katherine thought, and a wild sweet joy explo like a golden shower in her breast, then ished. For, as she ran to the door, she hea voice in the courtyard.

"It's Hugh come home!" she cried. flung wide the door.

The summer of 1369 was one of disaster England. Young Duke Lionel, the king's ond son, was dead in Italy. He had died on wedding trip after marrying the Mila heiress, Violante, and there were some spoke of poison. The period of mourning scarcely over before people heard disquie news which affected their lives more nea War with France was declared again.

For a time these national affairs scarcely fected Kettlethorpe, but the Swynfords sha more immediate troubles with the rest of E land's rural population.

It had been a winter of vicious cold, when a late spring unlocked the deep-fro earth it brought weeks of unremitting r The swollen Trent burst the dikes as far Newton. Then the waters rushed over land, drowning and devastating.

At Kettlethorpe, the moat merged with flood waters until the building seemed to st in a vast lake. Besides the devastation of land, the flood brought another tragedy. sound of rushing waters roused the L Nichola from the mindless stupor into wh she had fallen. Somehow she loosened the b on her door, clambered up the stones to roof and flung herself into the waters below was many days before they found her bo The Lady Nichola was laid to rest beneath aisle slabs near the church altar—next Gibbon.

Gibbon had died in a manner as quiet as Lady Nichola's leave-taking had been fr zied. Katherine had mourned deeply for G bon and Hugh had too. They had made a s cial trip to the cathedral to buy Masses for soul, but Katherine had had no leisure much mourning. Besides the care of li Blanche, there was the new baby, Thom there was the manor work, and there Hugh.

On a hot afternoon in late August, Ka erine sat on a heap of straw with the babies the courtyard and listened to the tolling of church bell from across the moat. It would t for three hours in memory of yet anot death.

The good Queen Philippa had died at Wi sor. Sim, the reeve, had heard the news in L coln, where he had gone to try to buy se corn to replace the ruined crops. He brou back also a letter from Geoffrey Chauc Geoffrey wrote that there was plague in Lo don, an outbreak more virulent than any years. Geoffrey was worried about his Philip who was pregnant and much distraught o the queen's death. After the funeral Geoffr thought to bring Philippa to Katherine. himself was ordered to France, on a missi for the king.

IT had been more than three years since t sisters had met. Katherine looked down at queen's little brooch, with which today s had fastened the neck of her gown. Foi va quera, she thought, touching the motto, a wondered if the queen's faith had truly s tained her through these last years. Even Kettlethorpe, one heard of the shameless Al Perrers.

"Non, non, Blanchette!" cried Katherine, called from her abstraction by the straying her eldest toward the stables. "Come back mama!" The baby giggled naughtily, her little legs ran faster. Katherine flew across t courtyard and swooped the baby up in h arms. Blanchette was a vital, lively little thi with a mop of marigold curls and gray e like her mother's. She was continually getti into mischief and Katherine adored her, as s had from the hour of her birth.

With little Tom it was different. He had be born in September nearly a year ago. He w a stolid child who seldom smiled. He h hemp-colored hair and was in fact remarkab like his father.

Katherine sighed when she thought of Hug This morning when he rose at dawn to hu the red deer in the forest, he had been weakened that even with Ellis' help he h been able to mount his horse. This ry that Hugh had brought back from often seemed cured and yet each time d.

erine sighed again. She had been up aybreak, caring for the babies and try-help poor Hugh. She pulled Tom's lose to Blanchette and, curling around ping children, nestled into the straw.

is thus that the Chaucers found her a ur later. They had dismounted and across the drawbridge to inquire, behilippa, on seeing the manor house, had re that there was some mistake.

s can't be Kettlethorpe Manor," she er voice penetrated Katherine's dreams, girl stirred and slowly raised her head.
ovement caught Philippa's incredulous Blessed St. Mary—'tis Katherine! God's ster, do you sleep on straw like a beast, herine blinked, still thinking that these nom she had not seen for so long were her dream. Then she scrambled to her d, rushing to her sister, threw her arms her neck. Philippa returned the kiss, offrey, who knew the signs, saw what e's next words would be like, and said

, "By God's mercy, my dear—you're han ever . . . and these are the babies?"
ippa was not to be diverted. "Katherine, the way you keep your state as lady of anor?" She glanced, frowning, around ered courtyard.

herine smiled. "Kettlethorpe is small,"
d temperately, "but we did well enough his summer. We had a fearful flood and r crops washed away. Our flocks too.
is hunting in the forest, but game is hard
d. The wild things were all driven out by ters."

n, yes," said Geoffrey sadly. "We saw as me north fires, famine—but here at least no plague?"

herine glanced in sudden fear at her
s. "I've heard of none," she said, and d herself. "You—you haven't lost ——" faltered, glancing at their mourning
s.

n, no," said Philippa, "we wear this for ueen, God assoil her gentle soul."

e had the queen's Requiem Mass to-said Katherine. "You mustn't think we sorrow for her here, though we are so way."

the time Hugh came in from hunting, the cers had been settled in Lady Nichola's ower room and were in the hall awaiting er.

gh made an effort to greet his guests cor-
. He sent Cob to broach the last keg of Little Cob, the erstwhile spitboy, was now een and had been promoted to servitor.

en Hugh filled the wooden mazer, said ssail," drank and passed it to Philippa as itality demanded. "What news of the in Picardy? How goes the war?"

OFFREY shrugged. "A standstill, I believe.
noble duke makes alarums and excur-
, but that wily Valois fox will not fight.
as but to wait until the Prince of Wales nsulted the last of our Gascon allies, then hole of Aquitaine will revolt against us."
ou speak thus of the prince?" Hugh said,
ning.

My dear Hugh, I speak truth. In Aqui-they call Edward 'the Black Prince,' and only from the color of his armor. He ders and kills without mercy. One by one tranges his barons there. They're proud, e Gascons. Is it wonder that they turn to rench king?"

haw!" said Hugh. "The Gascons are y riffraff."

atherine looked at her husband and wond if he thought of Nirac.

ere had been a fearful scene with Nirac, Hugh's return two years ago. The nded reeve had lost no time in taking his ance to his lord, and he had slandered erine too. Hugh had struck Nirac a vio-blow and kicked him off the manor. Nirac gone without saying anything except to erine in French: "Adieu, madame, I obey duke—but I shall not forget your brave nt." His black eyes had glittered like a d's.

Geoffrey saw nothing special in Hugh's remark beyond the normal English contempt for foreigners, and he thought that Hugh's irritability doubtless sprang from ill health.

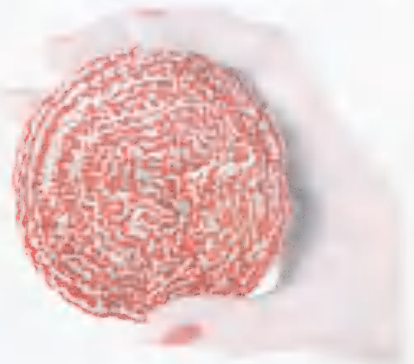
Hugh had aged much since Geoffrey had seen him last. He could not be over thirty, but a young man's vigor had seeped out of him. Poor Katherine, thought Geoffrey, as Hugh, with a muttered oath, clutched at his belly and stumbled out into the courtyard.

Geoffrey said, "Is it because of these attacks that Hugh has not gone to join the duke in war service?"

"Nay, for sometimes he is well," Katherine said slowly. "My lord duke wrote from the Savoy that Hugh must stay on our manor to—to care for it." Katherine colored and looked away from Geoffrey's alert gaze. The duke's letter had actually said, "You are ordered to remain at Kettlethorpe to give proper guardianship and care to your lady." Hugh had been hurt and angry. He had felt himself discarded. "We've heard nothing else from their Graces of Lancaster," said Katherine, "except that the duke sent that hanap for Blanchette." She pointed to a silver-gilt chalice which stood on a wall bracket below Hugh's armor.

"The Duchess Blanche is this week to arrive at Bolingbroke," said Philippa. "She, too flees from the plague."

"Is she, indeed?" A pang, half sweet, half bitter, shot through Katherine's heart. She thought of those twelve days of Christmas she had spent with the Duchess at Bolingbroke nearly three years ago.



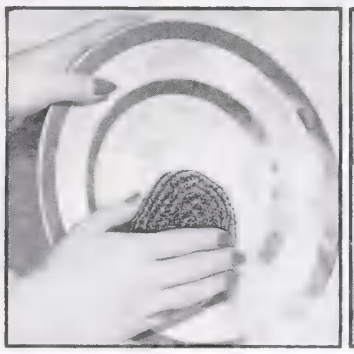
"Why don't you ride over to Bolingbroke and wait on her, Katherine?" suggested Geoffrey. "'Twould be fitting."

Hugh had come back. His eyes lifted now to his brother-in-law's face, and he frowned.

"By all means!" cried Philippa, having instantly seen the advantages. "She was fond of you. If Hugh's out of favor with the duke ——"

"Nay, he is not!" cut in Katherine sharply. "What a foolish thing to say."

Nothing washes all your dishes as fast, as easily as TUFFY®



—because only TUFFY is tough enough to scrub crusted pans, gentle enough to wash finest china and silverware

Limp dishrags, sponges, mops can't clean off sticky, gummy, crusted foods like these. That means you do the work . . . waste time and ruin fingernails.

Brushes, used on foods like these, get bristles matted, bent and filled with food scraps. Then no amount of rinsing can ever get them sweet and clean.

TUFFY whisks off glued-on gravy yet never scratches finest china or silverware!

TUFFY cleans out sticky custard. These gooey foods rinse right out of TUFFY!

TUFFY scrubs off dried-on rice in seconds, yet never holds a scrap of rice itself!

TUFFY rinses clean under the tap . . . looks so clean you can leave it on the sink!

TUFFY SCRUBS YET DOESN'T SCRATCH

never smells, never sours — because it rinses clean

THE S.O.S. CO., CHICAGO; TUFFY OF CANADA, LTD., TORONTO ■ U. S. PAT. NO. 2,601,771

"Pica didn't mean that," said Chaucer. "Everyone knows that Hugh fought most bravely in Castile. But 'twould be courteous to wait upon our most lovely lady since she's so near. Hugh would accompany Katherine."

"No," said Hugh somberly. "I want no truckling in women's bowers. I'll abide here till the duke sends. Ellis can escort Katherine, since you think it seemly that she go."

"I'd like to go," said Katherine, hesitating, "for a few days—and take Blanchette, except not until Hugh is better . . . and, too, I ——"

"Oh, peace to this babbling, Katherine!" said Philippa briskly. "You shall go next Monday before the whole of Lincolnshire knows that the duchess is at Bolingbroke and the castle's swamped with supplicants. I'll take charge here. 'Tis fortunate you had the plague and recovered. Maître Jacques, the queen's leech, says that when that happens the Black Death never strikes again."

It was the eleventh of September before Katherine set out on her journey to Bolingbroke. The wind blew in her face and she hummed as she spurred Doucette into a gallop, while the disapproving Ellis pounded along at the requisite three paces behind. "My lady, slacken!" he called finally. "There's a party up ahead!" She pulled in Doucette.

The road was blocked by a procession of carts piled high with wool sacks and drawn by oxen. Three well-dressed horsemen rode ahead of the carts and one, hearing Ellis' shouts, called a command.

"I could have ridden through the field around them," said Katherine as she edged past the carts.

"Oh, no, lady." Ellis was shocked. "Not seemly to give the road to peasants. You must remember your rank."

Aye, thought Katherine, I suppose I must. She patted her hair and replaced her blown riding hood as she came up to the horsemen.

The eldest was a merchant and obviously a man of consequence. "God's greeting, lady," he said. "We regret to have impeded your way."

Katherine glanced at the two other riders. The younger checked his horse and guided it beside Doucette.

"Are you traveling far, fair lady?" he asked. He, too, was finely dressed.

"We go to Bolingbroke," said Ellis.

"Why, we go there too!" cried the second merchant. "Best that you stay with us. There are outlaws in the forests."

"I've heard of none," said Ellis stiffly, "and I know well enough how to protect my lady."

"Wait, Ellis, we'll ride with them a little." Katherine had talked to no one outside of Kettlethorpe for so long, and Ellis was so dull a companion that she longed for novelty. "Do you also go to see the duchess, sir?" she asked.

"Aye"—he nodded—"to ask her help, though we're bound later for that cursed town of Boston, may the foul fiend snatch it!"

"And what has Boston done?" said Katherine, glancing at the third horseman, who was garbed in cleric's robes.

"We are Lincoln men! We are the De Suttons, lady!" cried the young merchant. "Do you need to ask what Boston has done?"

"Indeed, sir, forgive me, but I do not know."

"Why, they've stolen our staple!"

"Ah, to be sure," said Katherine. Hugh had mentioned that the king had moved the staple from Lincoln to Boston. No longer would all the wool and hides and tin of the county pass through Lincoln for export. She looked sympathetically at the three gloomy men. "Do you think the duchess can help you?"

The young merchant hunched his shoulders. "We can but try. The duke is our friend. We hold manors under him near Norfolk and he had often dined at our house."

Katherine considered this with interest. The De Suttons were wealthy burgesses and one of Lincoln's most prominent families. Master John, the father, had been Lord Mayor of Lincoln and now held a seat in Parliament.

Robert de Sutton was delighted with so attentive and pretty a listener. "Why do you go to Bolingbroke, lady?"

"I go to pay my loving homage," she said slowly. "Sir Hugh Swynford, my husband, is the duke's man."

"Oh, aye?" said Master Robert. "Swynford—of Coleby and Kettlethorpe? Have you much pasture? I don't seem to remember any lots of your wool."

"We seldom have surplus, and this year none at all. Most of our sheep were drowned in the flood."

"Oh, yes, the floods—a great pity."

It was scarcely past midday and the sun had been glowing fitfully behind dark-massing clouds. Now wisps and curls of mist began to float by. On the wooded upland of the Wolds the treetops reared above a bank of lemon-gray vapor.

"Yon's an uncanny light ahead," said the young cleric. "Fog looks yellow as saffron, and I ne'er saw fog at midday so far inland."

The air was thick and still, and when they began to climb they walked the horses in silence, for they could see ahead but a few feet. They mounted higher and the mist cleared, though they saw that it lay thick as tawny wool below where Bolingbroke must lie. When they began the descent, they plunged back into the fog.

There was an eerie stillness until Master John broke it. "I smell smoke," he said.

They all sniffed the thick unmoving air. Yes, there was smoke, but in the faint pungency Katherine caught a trace of and odor, a fetid sickening fume.

They plodded on in the still, yellow world. Then through the fog appeared orange glow and they heard the crackle hiss of flames and came upon a bonfire in center of the road. They could see no one small houses and an alestake showed that had entered Bolingbroke village.

"There's another fire down there," Katherine, "by the castle wall, I think." coughed, her eyes watered.

The horses snorted and, tossing their he began to trot. No other living thing move the village street. They reached the barb and saw that the great wooden drawbr was raised flat against the portcullis.

"Look!" Ellis pointed with his whip.

"God shield us," whispered Katherine. the bottom of the drawbridge was painte red cross four feet high.

"There's plague in the castle!" cried J de Sutton. "We must turn the wool c Robert, don't let them come nigh here!"

His son gave a cry and galloped down street into the fog.

"Come, Lady Katherine." Ellis snatche Doucette's bridle.

A shutter opened in the guardroom of gatehouse and a man's helmeted head sho at the window. "Now who be ye that ga and jangle out there?" the guard called. " sure ye see that we've no welcome to giv except the kiss of the Black Death."

"Blessed Virgin, what has happened?" c Katherine.

"Sixteen of us are dead—God shrive th for a priest has not! The chaplain died a-fi five nights gone; the friar after him."

Ellis grabbed her arm, and she shook it "What of the duchess and her babes?"

"I know not, mistress, for since yestere I've not quit the guardroom and I've ba the door."

"Come away, lady—come!" Again E seized Katherine's arm.

"Nay," she said. "I'm going in. I'm s from the contagion."

"You're mad, lady—Sir Hugh would me if I let you go ——"

She saw that he meant to drag her off force. Deliberately she called on anger. "H dare you touch me, knave!" With her f hand she slapped him hard across the face

Ellis gasped. His hand fell off her arm.

She said, "You need not enter the ca with me, but this you must do. Ride fast to abbey at Revesby. Bring back a monk, once! In the name of the Trinity, Ellis—g

He tautened the reins and spurred his ho

Katherine called, "Lower the bridge a let me in!"

"Not I, mistress," said the man. "I'll budge. The postern gate is open, since through there the castle varlets fled."

Katherine guided Doucette along the moat to a footbridge that led across to postern. She dismounted, tied the mare, a crossed the footbridge.

She went through the unlocked door in the bailey. On the flagstones near the well other plague fire burned. An old man in so tarnished livery threw handfuls of yellow s phur on the smoldering logs. He raised head and looked at her dully.

Katherine reached the stone staircase th led up to the duchess' apartments. She beg to mount the worn stone steps. As she round the first spiral the hush that held the castle w broken by the sudden tolling of a bell. S clung to the handrail while she counted t slow strokes. Twelve of them—a child th this time—somewhere in the castle and dim through the knell she heard a far-off wailin

In the great solar it was dim and quiet. Tw huge candles burned on either side the va square bed. The duchess lay there on wh samite pillows. Her eyes were closed, but h body twitched. A trickle of black blood ooz from the corner of her mouth.

As Katherine gazed down, shuddering, t purple lips drew back and murmured, "W ter ——" The girl poured some into a cup a the duchess swallowed. She whispere "Where's Father Anselm? Tell him come ——" Her voice trailed into incohere muttering.

TASTES SO GOOD... COSTS SO LITTLE!

WHOLESOME HOMEMADE FROSTEE

M-M-M...Smooth...So Easy to Make!

Delicious Frostee takes about 5 minutes of your time, your refrigerator does the rest. You get fresh homemade goodness every time, because you make Frostee with wholesome fresh milk. Costs only pennies a portion! Four exciting Frostee flavors—vanilla, chocolate, orange, lemon. Try 'em all and you'll serve 'em often!

COOL! LIGHT! REFRESHING!

herine knelt on the prie-dieu which stood the bed. None that vomited blood ever She prayed only that Ellis would bring nk in time. She prayed while the candles d down an inch, and the duchess shiv-nd moaned, and once cried out. Sud-Katherine's wits cleared and she saw he must go back outside the castle to the monk, since he would be a stranger.
slipped down the stairway to the bailey.
dark outside now except for the glare the plague fire. Katherine sped out gh the postern door. At first she could body outside the castle walls. Then she the whicker of a horse over by the n and ran there, calling "Ellis!"
squire and a tall Cistercian monk in had taken shelter in the church porch, g indeed been unable to find a way into stle. Katherine wasted no time on Ellis.
g the monk a murmur of gratitude, she the edge of his sleeve. Together they d back into the castle and to the duchoom.
duchess still lived. She stirred as Kath-and the white monk came to her bed, when she saw the cowled head and the ix the monk held out to her as he said, vobiscum, my daughter," she gave a long e duchess died next morning at the hour me. A little while before her passing, the Blanche's torments eased. Her wander-aze passed over the monk and rested on erine with a look of puzzled recognition.

ist have mercy on you, dear child," she bered. "Pray for me . . . Katherine." en the great room was quiet except for chanting of the monk. Lady Blanche d deeply, her fingers closed around the ix on her breast. "In manus tuas—Dom- —" she said clearly. And died.

seemed that the Black Death, having the duchess, at least slacked its greed.
e were a few more deaths throughout the
—a scullion and a dairymaid, two of the ls—but these had all been stricken before uchess and there were no new cases.
ey sealed away the Lady Blanche in a y made coffin and placed it in the private
el. Katherine brought the ducal daughters, ppa and Elizabeth, to light candles and by their mother's black velvet bier. The ren had been safe in the north tower ghout the scourge. The Holy Blessed er had watched out for them, since their could not.
therine longed for her own children, eslly when she saw little Henry, who was so to Blanchette in age. But her own babies well at Kettlethorpe. Ellis had ridden with the frightful tidings and returned days later with a message from Philippa.
ou're not to come home yet, on any ac-
, lady," Ellis reported stolidly. "They're ell and wish to stay so. Dame Philippa here's no telling but the plague might be g in your clothes. You must not return all danger from pestilence has passed."
therine nodded. "Return to Kettlethorpe ell them I shall join the funeral cortege l escort our dearest Lady Blanche to on, for this is what the king commands."

e Lady Blanche of Lancaster's funeral ge wound its solemn way down England gh the first days of November. The peo-athered everywhere by the roadside to the duchess' hearse, sable-draped and n by six black horses in silver harness.
d the hearse rode the king's youngest Thomas, a lad of fourteen. Since Lionel lead, and his other brothers were fighting ance, there had been no one else of fitting for the king to send.

THERINE had a place in the middle of the ession. She no longer saw the ducal chil-except at a distance, for they rode in a ot with their nurses behind their young e Thomas.
the last afternoon when the procession urned right through Islington there was a flourish of trumpets and a muffled roll of rs on the road ahead. The horses were d and word ran back along the line that ing had come out to meet them. They all dismounted and continued on foot to the Savoy.

Katherine could see little of what went on, and it was not until the duchess had been borne into her home chapel and the procession was broken up that she saw the king. He wore a plain silver mourning crown and beneath it his faded blue eyes were red-rimmed. Yet, not six paces behind him, taking precedence of all the lords and ladies, came Alice Perrers, her head respectfully bowed, but a faint smile on her thin red lips. Katherine watched with disgust and wondered that the courtiers seemed to take so calmly this woman's flaunting presence.

Many things shocked her that first night at the Savoy Palace. The king and his company remained for supper and Katherine from her seat at the side of the Great Hall observed the High Table with little of the wide-eyed admiration she had felt three years ago.

The supper began on a solemn-enough note. But this seemly quiet lasted only until the first cups of wine had been drained. Then Alice Perrers, who sat next to the king, leaned toward him and whispered in his ear, whereupon his melancholy mouth curved in a smile. At once the watchful minstrels changed

BEAUTY ENTIRE

By ELIZABETH COATSWORTH

Beauty was woven from beauty (Sea marshes, sea moors and the sea)
With a sun that was beauty set shining,
And a wind that was beauty set free,
And there was a finch that was beauty,
Perched on a twig, light as dew,
And the hawk that struck down out of heaven,
The hawk—that was beauty too.

to a merry tune, and a wave of ribaldry flowed unchecked along the High Table.

Katherine's head began to ache. At last she murmured an excuse and slipped out of the Great Hall into the night.

So vast was the Savoy that she could not remember her way back to the small dorter the chamberlain had assigned to her. She wandered through wrong turnings and into several dark courts. Then from a small gabled house near the state apartments she saw a tall friar emerge. "God's greetings, good brother," she said. "I regret to trouble you, but do you know the palace? I've lost my way. I'm to lodge in the Beaufort Tower, but I cannot find it."

"Ah," said the friar, "mayhap you came from Bolingbroke with the funeral train?"

Katherine bowed her head. Suddenly tears stung her eyes and her journey seemed to her both foolish and futile.

"You're weary, mistress," said the friar. "I'll guide you to the Beaufort Tower." He led her through an arch and down some steps, then up again and into a court. "Yonder's your tower," said the friar.

He had heard the choke in her voice, and wished to examine her a moment by the torchlight. Though the plague seemed to be over, it was his duty as physician to be watchful.

"You are not feverish, my sister?"

"Nay, brother, I'm well enough—in body. 'Tis my heart that's heavy. Have you heard when our lord duke will come?"

"Why, very soon! For he has landed at Plymouth. A dark and bitter thing 'twill be for him, his meeting with his poor lady, God absolve her soul."

"I think He has no need to," said Katherine, very low. "She was without sin. . . . Grand merci for your guidance, Sir Friar."

Brother William murmured "Benedicite" and walked thoughtfully back through the courtyard.

The duchess was interred four days later. Her marble tomb was placed in a chantry next to the high altar in St. Paul's Cathedral. Her funeral procession was the most magnificent ever seen in England. It surpassed even Queen Philippa's recent obsequies, but to the duke it brought no comfort.

When he returned from St. Paul's he would speak to nobody and, mounting straight to his private apartments, locked himself into the small chamber that was called "Avalon" because its tapestry portrayed the enchanted burial of King Arthur.

DURING this time there was only one person whom he would admit, Raulin d'Ypres, his Flemish body squire who brought him food which he barely touched. No one else saw him.

Each morning in the high-vaulted Presence Chamber an anxious group of men gathered to await the squire's word as to whether they would be received, and each day Raulin came back, his broad face gloomy as he gave them a denial. On Thursday after the duchess' funeral he returned to the waiting men and said, "The duke's Grace still vill not see you, my lords, though he vishes Master Mason Henry Yevele sent for."

"God's wounds!" cried the Baron Michael de la Pole. "Then he wishes to consult Yevele on the alabaster effigy of the duchess. If he can do that, he can spare us a moment! Has he quite forgot the war?"

Michael de la Pole was devoted to his duke, to whom he had taught many of the arts of war, but he did not understand this excessive grieving. He walked over to join Lord Neville of Raby.

"He," said De la Pole, frowning in the direction of the Avalon Chamber, "has not even reported to the king on our campaign in Picardy! What's our next move to be? The Prince of Wales is sore beset in Aquitaine—we must plan a new attack—yet my lord duke sits in there moping alone."

Lord Neville blew his beaked nose loudly. "Aye," he said angrily, "but 'tis not of land I wish to speak to him. 'Tis of the disposition of our ships." Neville had just been appointed Admiral of the Fleet and, as a man of fifty, it irked him to await the decisions of a man of twenty-nine, his feudal overlord.

There was a stir across the room. Both men watched the newcomers warily. These two noble young sprigs, the Earl of March and Richard Fitz Alan, heir of Arundel, were known to hold little love for the duke.

Edmund Mortimer, the Earl of March, was a weedy stripling of eighteen. Insignificant as a stableboy, a stranger might have thought him, except for his pale eyes which had a cold, steady gaze; but no one in the Presence Chamber thought him insignificant. He was the ranking earl, he owned vast possessions and he had just wed young Philippa, the only child of Duke Lionel, and thus become grandson to the king.

"I'm here," he announced, "to see my lord duke. I have a message for him."

"No doubt you do," said De la Pole, "but he's not to be disturbed."

"I come," said Lord March imperturbably, "from the king. He summons the duke to Westminster at once. He's to accompany me now. Kindly have me announced."

Raulin departed on this new errand, and the company settled to wait for his return. The little earl hunched himself in a gilded chair.

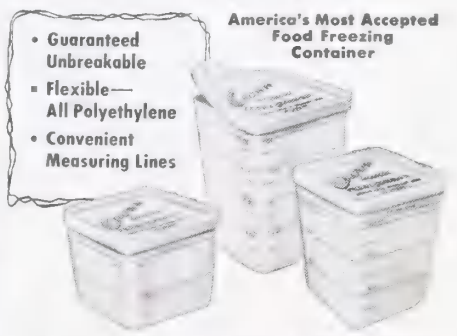
"That churlish squire takes long to return," he said to Fitz Alan. "The duke forgets my rank. This is outrageous ——" He stopped, for Raulin returned and came up to him, bowing.

The squire said without inflection, "My lord, his Grace sends his love and duty to the king and prays His Majesty to bear vit him. He cannot come now, but vill anon."

March got off the chair and drew himself as high as he could. "D'you mean to tell me it took all this time to produce this insolent message!" he shrilled.

"Well, my lord," cried De la Pole cheerfully, "you've had your answer." His own discontent with Lancaster had melted into pride.

FREEZE FOODS FASTER, EASIER BETTER!



With CROWN IMPERIAL FREEZ-TAINER

Durable and easy-to-handle Crown Imperial Freez-Tainers give you the ideal all-purpose container for refrigerator or freezer storage. Flexible cover stays airtight, aroma-tight... your foods stay fresher longer. In 3 handy sizes, 16, 25 and 32 oz. At leading stores everywhere.

- Guaranteed Unbreakable
- Flexible— All Polyethylene
- Convenient Measuring Lines

America's Most Accepted Food Freezing Container

Crown also makes the Original Freez-Tainer, Crown Mason Jar Caps, Crown Freezer and Home Aluminum Foil.

CROWN CORK & SEAL COMPANY, INC.
Specialty Division • St. Louis, Missouri

Folks Like You Show You How Much EXTRA MONEY YOU CAN MAKE! $50.00 IN 4 HOURS! Miss L. E. B., Washington

Show New Name-in-Silver Christmas Cards
It's easy! Amazing new NAME-IN-SILVER Christmas Cards sell like magic. You make $65 on 65 boxes! Extra profits in SOUTHERN BEAUTY Assortment, Gifts, others. No experience needed. Write for assortments on approval, imprint samples FREE. Your Personalized Stationery Free if you act now!
SOUTHERN GREETINGS, 478 N. Hollywood, Dept. 21M, Memphis 12, Tenn.
SEND FOR SAMPLES!

COFFEE CONNOISSEURS call for Sherman Exquisite Blend Coffee to the tune of a half-million cups a day . . . at home, in fine restaurants, clubs or railroad dining cars. This is the ultimate in coffee blending . . . so fine it bears the personal name of the Head of the House.

SHERMAN J. SEXTON
President

Sexton Quality Foods

John Sexton & Co., Sexton Square, Chicago, Ill.

The duke was afraid of nothing, not even his father's Plantagenet temper.

The earl and Fitz Alan left with what dignity they could, and De la Pole bowed to Neville. "Well, I see no use to stay here longer. I give you good day."

One by one they departed. Raulin waited until there was no one on the stairs, then sped out into the courtyard and made for the Beaufort Tower. The porter told him that Lady Swynford was not within. Her mare had been saddled and she had left some time ago.

"Did you hear nought of vere she might've gone?" pursued Raulin.

"I might of——" The porter paused.

Raulin opened his purse and held out a quarter noble. The porter said, "My Lady Swynford did ask the way to Billingsgate, summat abaht a fishery French name—Poissoner—Pechoner—she wanted to see."

Katherine had spent the last days in growing dejection. Her grief and horror had worn themselves out at last and she had stood among the hordes of mourners in St. Paul's and felt only sadness. Since then she had been planning how to get home. She had not enough money for the journey, nor would she have dared set off without escort.

THE decision to go to Billingsgate and seek Hawise had been impulsive. In three and a half years the Pessoners had changed very little. The low raftered hall smelled of fragrant smoke and fish. Hawise gawked for a moment, then a wide, happy grin spread over her big face. She cried, "'Tis Kath—m'Lady Swynford!" She rushed across the hall and, folding Katherine in her arms, kissed her heartily.

Dame Emma bustled over with a pewter platter of honey cakes and sugared ginger. "Welcome, welcome, lady."

Katherine laughed, basking in the warm, kindly atmosphere. She turned to Hawise. "Tell all! How has it been with you, this long time?"

"Aye, but first of you, sweeting," said the older girl, sobering to glance at Katherine's black gown. "'Tis worn for the duchess—nothing else, I pray?"

"Nay. We're all well at Kettlethorpe. I've two babies, Hawise!"

"And I one." Hawise ran to the court door calling, "Jackie, Jackie—come hither."

She hauled her offspring into the hall. Jackie was two years old and a true Pessoner, being fat, cheerful and sandy-haired.

"Aye, he's Jack Maudelyn's right enough," said Hawise, "and born in wedlock too."

"Is Jack still weaver's prentice?"

"No prentice now, nor weaver neither. He went for a soldier to make us a fortune in booty, we hope."

"To be sure," said Katherine, smiling. "So your man is gone, and you've come back home to wait like many another."

"Isn't the same with you, lady dear—your knight abroad too?"

"Not now," said Katherine. She told a little of what had passed with her since Hawise had waved tearful good-bys on the wedding day.

When Katherine had done, Hawise said, "Have ye no woman there wi' you save those north-country hinds?"

"Well, for a while there's Philippa."

"In truth." Hawise gave a skeptical twinkling glance, but from politeness said no more. Being intuitive as well as practical, she guessed there was some embarrassment about getting back to Kettlethorpe. She was turning the matter over in her mind when there came another rap on the door. Dame Emma hastened to open it.

Raulin d'Ypres stood upon the doorstep and asked, "Does anyone here know a Lady Swynford?"

Hawise looked at Katherine, who stood up in surprise. "I'm Lady Swynford."

The squire bowed. "Please to come vit me to the Savoy. Someone vishes to talk to you, my lady."

"Who does?" said Katherine in surprise.

The squire glanced at Hawise and Dame Emma, then back to Katherine's puzzled face. "May I speak vit you alone, my lady?"

Katherine frowned. "Come over here," she said, stepping into the empty dairy room. The squire followed.

"His Grace vants you to come to him, my lady," said Raulin very low.

She lifted her head. "The duke?"

Raulin bowed. "Lady, hasten. It is already long since I vas sent to find you."

Katherine walked back into the hall. "I must go," she said to the anxious Pessoners. "But I'll see you very soon."

Katherine and Raulin rode back to the Savoy and dismounted. Raulin said, "This vay, my lady," and led her into a dark passage. Here was a small wooden door which he unlocked. He motioned her up narrow stone steps that ended in a narrow passage and another wooden door. This door was concealed by a painted-cloth hanging. Raulin pushed it aside and they emerged into a small oblong chamber.

Behind another painted hanging they entered the darkened solar. They went through more rooms until they turned into a square tower called Grosmont. Here was the Avalon Chamber.

Raulin knocked on the carved oak door and gave his name. A voice said, "Enter!"

Katherine walked in quietly, her head lifted, her cloak clutched around her. The duke was sitting on a window seat gazing out over the river. He was clothed in plain black wool without girdle or mantle. His thick tawny hair was cut short below his ears, and he was cleanshaven. This startled her, for it made him seem younger.

"You summoned me, my lord?" She knelt, as was seemly, and taking his hand, kissed it in homage.

Her cloak loosened and her hood fell back. He touched her hair. "'Tis the color of carnelians," he said, "the gem that heals anger. Would that it might heal sorrow." He spoke as though to himself, and she raised her head, wondering. Through every fiber in her body she had felt that light touch on her hair.

His gaze slid slowly over her face. "I sent for you, Katherine, that I might thank you. Old Simon of Bolingbroke told me what you did for—for her. You shall know my gratitude."

She jumped up from her knees and pulled the cloak around her. "My lord, I want no reward—no payment!"

"Hush, Katherine. I know you're not venal. I've thought of you much these last days, how you were with her at the end—while I—on the day she died——" He broke off and, getting up, walked restlessly to the fireplace. "Katherine," he said abruptly, "I cannot rid me of my grief. Each day it worsens, and yet I must rid me of it and take up my heavy duties."

She looked at him mutely. She could find no words of comfort.

"Put off your cloak and sit down," he said, smiling faintly. "You stand there like a hart that scents the hunter. I think you need not fear me."

She flushed. "I know, my lord." She walked across the room and hung her cloak on a silver perch that projected from the wall. It was a room of beauty and luxury such as she had never imagined. Two of the plaster walls were powdered with a pattern of gold stars and tiny flowerets like forget-me-nots. The hooded fireplace was of green marble deeply carved into medallions and foliage. On the east wall hung the great Avalon tapestry in dark and mysterious greens.

"Aye, that tapestry pleases me much," John said, following her gaze. "Merlin's castle puts me in mind of one I saw in Spain, after our victory at Nájera."

"You were happy in Castile?" Katherine ventured. "You and the Prince of Wales righted the great wrong done the Castilian king."

"But, God's wounds, it didn't last!" he cried with sudden anger. "Don't you know what happened at Montiel last March? King Pedro foully murdered by his brother, who sits upon the throne he has no right to!"

"Who has right, then, since the poor king is dead?" she asked, thinking that it might be anger was better for him than brooding grief.

"The heiress is the king's daughter, the Infanta Costanza. 'Tis she who is the true Queen of Castile."

He sighed and turned from the tapestry. "Merlin had many prophecies about my house," he said listlessly. "Blanche cared nought for such things—she cared only for the things that came from Holy Writ." He flung himself down in a chair and leaned his forehead on his hand.

"My lord," said Katherine softly, "do you remember how she looked on the day of the great tournament three years ago—so golden fair and laughing when you rode up to the loge? For sure, she will look thus in heaven while she waits for you."

He raised his head. "Ah, Katherine, you know how to comfort! So few know how I long to talk of her. Instead they look away and speak of foolish things to distract me—yet here is one other that understands."

He got up and went to the table, which was littered with vellum books and official missives. He picked up a folded parchme "Listen." He read very slowly:

"I have of sorrow so great wound
That joy get I never none
Now that I see my lady bright
That I have loved with all my might Is from me dead, and is agone.

"Alas Death, what aileth thee
That thou should'st not have taken me
When thou took my lady sweet
That was so fair, so fresh, so free,
So good, that men may well say
Of all goodness she had no meet. . . .

"Right on this same, as I have said
Was wholly all my love laid
For certes she was, that sweet wife,
My suffisaunce, my lust, my life,
Mine hap, mine health and all my bless
My world's welfare and my goddess,
And I wholly hers, and everydel."

He sighed. "The maker has said it for and with true English words. The maker your brother-in-law, Katherine."

"Geoffrey!" she cried. "Is he back then, lord?"

"Nay, at Calais on a mission. He says he writing more of this poem and with my p mission will call it 'The Book of the Duche Katherine, you see new reason why I'm gra ful to you and your kin."

"It is joy to serve you, my lord." She lift her face and smiled at him.

For John it was as though a shutter h been flung open, and the noon light rushed He had never truly seen her beauty befo Why had he summoned her today? Why h he let her share in his grief now and kept h with him in this warm intimacy when a pu of gold would have amply repaid? His eye t on the pouch at her girdle. It was of paint leather blazoned with the Swynford arms. stared at the three little yellow boars' hea and said angrily, "Have you no blazon of yo own, Katherine?"

Her smile faded. She was puzzled by t sudden harshness. "My father had no blazon she said slowly. "He was knighted only ji before his death."

He heard the quiver in her voice, and anger vanished. He had indeed forgotten h lowly birth, and the consciousness of the gr gulf between them brought a subtle relief.

"But you may rightfully bear arms," he sa "Come, what shall they be?" He motion her to the table where he sat down and pick up a quill pen. "Your name was Roet, was not? Well, that means a wheel." He drew o on the parchment. "But stay—it must be Catherine wheel, of course, since it is yours He added small jagged prongs to the wheel, it always was in St. Catherine's symbol.

KATHERINE watched as he drew the shie then placed three Catherine wheels inside.

"The field shall be gules," he said, touchi the shield lightly with his pen, "the wheels for those colors suit you. Lancaster hera shall enter this in the Roll of Arms tomo row."

"Thank you, my lord," she cried, truly d lighted, as much for the interest that he h shown as for her own promotion to armig and as she leaned to look more closely at t little shield, the warm flowery scent of h body assailed him.

He shoved the parchment across the tab and jumped to his feet. "Jesu," he whispere "Jesu!" He pulled her slowly toward him a she came as one who walks through wat each step impeded, until she leaned again him and yielded him her mouth with a lo sobbing moan.

They stood thus in a mindless wine-da rapture while the last reflected light fad from the Thames outside and vesper bells ra faintly down the river. She felt him lift her his arms. She had no strength to put again his will, yet as he laid her on the ruby-velv bed her hand turned against his chest and s felt the sharp pressure of her betrothal ring.

She twisted from him wildly and flung he self off the bed. "My dearest lord, I cannot. cannot!" She sank to her knees and buried h face in her arms.

Ask Any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

WHEN a little girl stoops to tie a little boy's shoes, she's off on the wrong foot.

It isn't easy to make children understand that one parent can use words to the other he doesn't mean; it's in the same category as yelling, "Kill the umpire!"

Every mother ought to wake up one morning a week imbued with the fever to see how much she can leave undone.

Advice to parents who don't say "don't": Do!

I grew up in a family in which no company was unexpected. Mother awakened in the morning expecting company and father did his best to keep her from being disappointed.

Any woman who thinks she can read her husband like a book should be cautioned not to skip the footnotes.

When you scold a boy for getting dirty you are defying a law of nature.

Every married woman is proof that men absorb praise and flattery.

The test of being a good host is how well the departing guest likes himself.

Wanted: A house with a yard, large enough to keep husband busy but not so large wife will have to assist.

A man is middle-aged when he realizes he cannot do as much work as he once could do . . . if he'd done it.

If any person wishes to know where the fat of the land is, let him travel to some beach this month.

For girls wanting to be wives: An idea now and then does very well in conversation if you let him introduce it.

As impersonal as another man's birthday.

When there's a triangle there's usually a curve.

aid very low, "I want you, Katrine, and e you love me."
raised her head and cried with bitter-Aye, I love you—though I knew it not w." fire hissed in the silent room. John put nd on her arm. "I'll not force you, e—you shall come to me of yourself."
annot," she repeated, though she dared ok at him. "Aye, I know adultery is so thing at court, but to me 'tis sin so vile would hate myself as much as God
."
d hate me?" He spoke low and gently.
inte Marie, I could never hate you. Dear rd, don't torture me with these ques-Ah, let me go"—for his hand had ed on her arm. She gathered all her th and cried, "Have you forgot why we th in black?"
drew back sharply and went to the fire.
rce know what to think," he said, "exat I must forget you, it seems." His blue ad gone hard between the narrowed lids.
have yourself reminded me that there dies of the court will help me to forget all er of grief, and who will not think it to be desired by the Duke of Lancas-answered as steadily, "I've no doubt of your Grace. As for me, I must return to thorpe at once."

nd if I refuse permission? What would ay?"
at such a thing would ill befit a man re-one of the most chivalrous knights in tendom."
ey stared at each other and she clung to dden enmity between them as a shield. turned first. "Very well, Katherine. I arrange your escort back to Lincolnshire. shall have no cause to reproach me for titude."
e seized her cloak and was out of the door ad shut it behind her before he under-. He turned, crying "Katrine!" to the door. Then, staring at it, he sank down e window seat as she had found him.
re's a fire been lit that's not so easy to put he said aloud. He got up and, going to able, picked up Chaucer's poem. He d at it, and put the poem carefully to one After a moment he began to rip the seals e neglected official missives, his fingers ng with sharp, violent jerks.

(To be Continued)

THE FARM PROBLEM AND ME

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 14

ow some broilers along with the pullets u want to, but don't despise the homely who goes to your table or freezer before aying days are declining. We keep only superior hens more than a year from the they begin to lay. At that age, if they have properly fed—and that milk will help—are plump and tender, weigh, dressed, nd five pounds, and if roasted slowly, and ed until the last few minutes, in a heavy like pot roast) will be delicious.
fty hens should give you an average of eggs a day. More if you're lucky. But he chicks from the best growers.
glets can be bought for $10–$12 apiece.
ally a hog must be fed grain mash and milk, but from there on the milk and garden and orchard will support him.
food must be clean and moved from en to sty every day. Add grain mash for a fortnight before slaughtering. In months you will have raised a 200-pound er, of which nearly 170 pounds will be meat and bacon and the rest salt pork lard. Including original cost, purchased and slaughtering and smoking fees, it come to not more than 30 cents a pound.
a proper farm nothing is wasted. Meat s, and chicken necks and feet, are cooked canning kettles to make soup, which is frozen—lamb for Scotch broth.
But what an amount of work!" you will be ng by now. Yes—and don't touch it if you don't like it. But for the uninitiated it can be exaggerated. A cow can be milked by hand in fifteen minutes. A chicken or fowl can be defeathered and dressed for freezer or oven in the same time. I never dressed a fowl in my life until last summer, but that's what it took me! When there's a sudden rush of garden abundance or butcher jobs, the family has to make a "bee" of it, and prove that many hands do make light work, and lots of fun!

You won't get any of your food for no cost except family labor. But you'll get it 12–50 per cent cheaper than in the stores. And you'll have some to sell, at retail prices and to discriminating customers.

A farm is the only place where children are an economic asset and not a liability. Quite small children can gather eggs, feed animals, pick fruit and vegetables, and pull weeds. Nowhere do children earlier learn to take responsibility. Little boys become little men earlier; little girls, little women. Working beside their elders, they feel important. And when they sit down, "starving," at a laden dinner table, to whose bounty everyone has contributed, there is meaning in the grace they may say:

"Be present at our table, Lord,
Be here and everywhere adored,
These mercies bless and grant that we May feast in paradise with Thee."

And when a guest comes by, you'll say, "Do stay for dinner," knowing that there's always enough for more.

Now that this article is finished I would—were I on the farm—go down to the cool egg room to buff, grade and pack some 300 eggs in an hour. Work? I find nothing so restful! Nothing more calculated to take one's mind off H-bombs, Indochina, congressional committees and all the things that plague and stimulate my mind. Just solitude, quiet, peace, and the feeling of wonder and goodness of nature and life.

I'm "liquidating" the farm? I never will! But it's got to feed me, not me it. END

Even a tiny difference in freshness...

makes a big difference in flavor!

CHASE & SANBORN COMES TO YOU FRESHER THAN ANY OTHER LEADING COFFEE!

It's a fact—most coffees are fresh some of the time . . . however they're packed. But there's just one coffee you can always depend on for that important extra freshness that tastes so delightful in your cup. That's Chase & Sanborn!

You see, it's pressure packed. And only pressure packing can pack coffee fresh from the roaster, while flavor's richest. Then all flavor-stealing air is replaced by flavor-sealing vapor. Pressure surrounds each coffee grain to lock flavor in! That's why Chase & Sanborn "Dome Top" Coffee is fresher than coffee in vacuum cans or bags.

You can even prove it's fresh before you buy! The rounded top of the can tells how. You can't test coffee packed any other way! So discover what real freshness does for coffee. Try wonderful, flavorful Chase & Sanborn today!

Pressure Packed for fresher flavor!

CHASE & SANBORN COFFEES ARE SERVED BY MORE FINE HOTELS AND RESTAURANTS THROUGHOUT AMERICA THAN ANY OTHER BRAND!

STEAK AND APPLE PIE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 31

domestic and take-it-for-granted, the other party can pick up his hat and leave, and the first party can't do anything about it. Anyway, the first party knows that all the time and probably doesn't let himself get dull and domestic. . . . See what I mean?"

"Sure," Fitz said, "but we wouldn't ——"

"We think we wouldn't," Jane insisted, "but just look at our friends."

Fitz had to admit many of them had fallen into hideous sloughs.

"Why," Jane said, "they've all gone to seed mentally. They're chained to each other. They don't even talk intelligently any more!" She shuddered.

"But we could make a pact," Fitz suggested.

"Yes," she said slowly, "we could swear to watch each other, and any time one of us sees the other slipping into a rut, he could blow a whistle or scream or something."

"Sure," Fitz agreed.

"We'll be different," Jane pledged. "We'll never ask questions or tie each other down, or expect things! We'll have absolute freedom, won't we?"

"Sure," Fitz agreed again.

The landlady and grocer still had to be paid, however. A week after the wedding, Jane and Fitz found themselves getting up to an alarm clock at a quarter of seven, much the same as always, in the same rush.

However, they breakfasted together, leaving the dishes. In fact, they left all the dishes until the one who was hungrier washed a few or suggested they go out to eat.

THEY were very happy. Saturday afternoons and Sundays they did the unordinary things that delighted their unordinary souls. They did the museums, absorbing art, letting it absorb them, until Fitz's feet hurt. They went to obscure concerts or foreign-language movies. They haunted secondhand bookstores and repertory theaters. They hied their educated palates to shadowy little cafés. They read aloud to each other, always something terribly old or terribly new, so as not to diminish the pleasant sense of discovery.

Once in a while they dropped in at the homes of some of the old school friends who had settled with their mates in the environs of New York. From any such placid, well-ordered ménage with its shelves lined with book-club selections, its highball glasses decorated with nudes or polka-dot elephants, its bronzed baby shoes, Jane and Fitz would escape happily to the rarefied bliss of their own little apartment and its unframed Left Bank prints curling at the edges, its African death masks, and the delicate joys of an inadequate little red wine."

"Has it occurred to you, wench," Fitz asked one night, after such an escape, "that we might have a child?"

"We?" Jane was curled up in a large chair, from which she had had to empty three American Scholars and two of Fitz's soiled shirts to make room for herself. "Oh, heavens! One of those pink-and-white, fat little creatures?"

"Could be," Fitz said.

"Impossible," she laughed. "What would we call it?"

"I don't know. What would we call it?" he asked.

"It . . . I guess!" She giggled.

They considered the subject in silence for a while.

"You know," Jane said, "I think the time has come when one of us must blow the whistle."

He sat up straight, at that.

"Yes," she said, "it's not what we're doing. It's what we're not doing. We've fallen into a dreadful habit of coming home and spending the evening together accomplishing nothing."

"But it's only been for a few months ——" he began to protest.

"No," she said firmly. "It's a bad sign. We've got to go out, do things alone, retain our individualities. We ought to take one day, say Wednesdays, for each of us to do what he wants."

"Have you something in mind?" Fitz asked her. There was the shadow of a frown on his broad brow.

"No," she said, "not yet. But I shall have, lots of fascinating things, which I won't tell you, of course. That's the whole idea. Come to think of it, better make it Wednesdays and Fridays!"

"Well ——" Fitz said.

"You know I'm right. It'll do us both good. You've been looking sort of . . . tired, or something."

Fitz was tired. In fact, he was too tired to argue. He agreed with her.

The first Wednesday, it worked out nicely. Fitz had a lot of work on his desk at the office, which he finished in a few hours, and he then drank two Martinis, very dry, at a quiet bar and went home.

Jane came in a little later, looking radiant. "Oh, darling, I've had the most wonderful ——"

"Uh . . . uh," Fitz protested sleepily. "It's your secret. Keep it."

"But I just wanted to tell you about ——"

Fitz was already asleep.

On Friday, Fitz woke up wondering what he would do with his evening. There wasn't anything to keep him at the office tonight. He knew how the other married fellows in the office would have loved a night of freedom, and he felt awfully lucky. Now, what did he most want to do in the world that he didn't have a chance to do ordinarily?

He wondered all day. He couldn't think of a thing. That evening after supper he glanced over the theater page of the Times. Nothing especially new and tempting there.

Jane was getting ready to leave, and of course he couldn't ask her where she was going.

"I'll walk as far as the corner with you," he offered.

She allowed him to come.

"Have a good time, old girl," he said.

"Same to you," she called back gaily.

Fitz began strolling. He could always think, of course, about the many things he was too busy to think about ordinarily. However, nothing seemed to occur to him to think about.

He found himself under the marquee of a movie house. An old Betty Grable picture was playing.

"Well, just for laughs," he said, reaching in his pocket.

All through the movie he kept wishing Jane were there to make fun of it with him.

The next Wednesday he got morbid drunk, all by himself at a neighborhood bar. It was much too expensive, and he woke up with a terrible hang-over, besides.

By Friday, he was frankly unsettled. He had a vision of the whole city of New York as a vast roaring tunnel with everyone shoving to make him keep moving, and with no place for him to sit down and put his feet up. It was sort of like being lonely.

When Jane said to him that night, over the Russian réchauffé she had fixed for dinner, "Aren't we lucky to be so intelligent about marriage?" he could have beaned her one, except that she was absolutely right, of course.

He didn't answer.

"My," she said, "aren't we surly tonight?" Now, that was against the rules, a personal remark like that.

HE went out early and walked for a while, long enough to make sure Jane would be gone. He bought a gaudy paper-backed book, Seven Corpses, for a quarter at the drugstore and went home to bed.

He had worked his way through the first three of the corpses when he heard a key in the front door. It was Jane; and strangely enough, it was only nine-thirty.

He slid his book under the night stand and closed his eyes.

He heard her mutter with surprise when she discovered him already in bed. She tiptoed around quietly, and finally turned off the light.

Fitz lay silent in the dark for a long time. It was embarrassing to be caught in bed at nine-thirty. In fact, Fitz didn't know what could be more embarrassing, even a fanless fan dancer. Jane would start blowing the whistle, but good. She might even pick up her hat . . . and —— If he had to sit on a bench in the park, he'd not put his need for independence under a shadow of doubt again.

The next morning they avoided each other's eyes, but within a few days they were their old gay, bantering selves again, sniggering at the vacuum cleaner that ran at all hours in the apartment above. When they smelled pork chops or other such vulgar and identifiable odors, they congratulated themselves on their own meatless buffath, raspberry-nut sandwiches, and coffee with cardamom.

HOW WOULD YOU SAY IT?

Edited by John M. Henry

A man's real worth is probably an average between what his son thinks it is when the son is eight and when he's eighteen. MANAGE MAGAZINE, Dayton, Ohio

Men who go on being romantic for years after marriage surely catch the dickens when their wives find out about it. H. G. HUTCHESON in Augusta, Kans., Gazette

If you can't keep your head above water, a $50,000 swimming pool isn't a good buy. PRICE GIBSON, Detroit, Mich.

A machine has been invented that will unwrinkle raisins and blow up foods to as much as thirty times their true size. It must have been invented by the man who introduces public speakers. ZULA BENNINGTON GREENE in Strong City (Kansas) Chase County Leader News

A woman is essentially fair. The years she takes off her age are about equal to those she adds for another woman. THERESA CHAMPAGNE, Ames, Iowa

And if Fitz sometimes felt it was a bit of a strain to be always witty and clever and infinitely discriminating, he realized he had a very special wife and a very special marriage.

However, even the most blessedly enlightened and unconventional of households is not always immune from the onslaughts of unenlightened and conventional germs, particularly when that household lacks in dusting, scrubbing and disinfecting what it has gained in culture. Thus Fitz woke up one spring morning with a sore throat, a fever, and an ache in his bones. He moaned pitiably, turned over and went back to sleep.

Jane studied the abject body heaped over with bedclothes, phoned his employer to make the proper excuses, and then said good-by fondly.

By noon she had not heard from him, so she called. He answered the phone hoarsely. Was he all right? Should she come home? He was all right, though barely alive. No, she needn't come home.

Nevertheless, she felt worried and somehow a little guilty. After keeping an urgent appointment, she stopped at the DeLuxe Specialties Shop ("Everything for the Gourmet") and rushed home, toting two large paper bags.

The apartment was hardly recognizable. She had forgotten that the rug was that color of blue, or that the kitchen was as large as it seemed with nothing cluttering the counters.

Fitz was sitting up in bed, sucking on a lemon, reading.

"I thought the bed lamp was broken. Where'd you get the lemon? How're you feeling?"

"New bulb," Fitz said. "That's all it needed. Mrs. Higgins brought me the lemon. I'm better, thank you. I'll probably be all right with a few weeks of tender care."

"A few weeks! Mrs. Higgins!" Jane dropped her sacks in a chair, her beret on the bedside stand and her shoes on the floor.

"Ah—ah—ah!" Fitz said. "Cleanliness is next to godliness."

"Fitz!"

HE pointed at the ceiling. "Higgins. She did the vacuum cleaner."

Jane laughed. "Oh, that! What happened to the living room?"

"Oh, she brought it with her—the vacuum cleaner—when she brought me my lunch," he told her. "Rustled up a new light bulb too. Did the dishes, I think, too. At least, it sounded ——"

"Well, I like that!"

"Brought me some murder mysteries too." He pointed at a pile of dog-eared paper backed books. "She's a great detective fan, Mrs. Higgins is. Tried to talk me into television."

Jane was feeling weak in the knees. She staggered out to the kitchen with her sacks.

"Just how," she called, "did you happen to run afoul of horrible Higgins?"

"Oh, she's not so horrible," Fitz said indignantly. "Kind of pretty, roundish, lots of curls—you know. Strictly middle-aged, of course. The landlady stopped by for the rent and you know how these things get around the neighborhood."

"The neighborhood? Honestly, Fitz, you must be sicker than I thought. How quaint can you get?"

She had come to the doorway and was leaning against the frame. Fitz thought, suddenly, that she looked awfully pale, and not quite as self-assured as usual.

"Are you all right, Janie?"

"Yes," she said. "But you'd better get well yourself, and quick. It may come as a shock to you, but I've just been to the doctor's and I'm going to have to quit work pretty soon ——"

Even with a head cold, Fitz was sharp enough to figure that one. "It?"

Jane collapsed then, in tears, on the foot of the bed.

"But why are you crying, sweetheart?" Fitz asked, patting her shoulder. "We've talked about It before. I think it's ——"

"Don't . . . don't!" she sobbed out. "How can you call a sweet little, round little, soft little baby It? You're horrible!"

Fitz smiled over her head, a smile compounded of triumph and sympathy and a bit of gratitude for this help from an unexpected source.

When Jane was quite calm, she said, "I have some lovely cold vichyssoise for you, darling."

"No, no," Fitz bellowed, pounding on the counterpane. "I do not want cold vichyssoise. rod kaal, canelloni, curried tongue, iced clam bouillon, vegetable borsch or any of the rest of that junk."

"What do you want?" Jane whispered, wide-eyed.

"I want," Fitz said, settling back with a sybaritic sigh, "steak and mashed potatoes . . . and apple pie!" He grinned at her. "But I'll settle for a couple of hamburgers."

"Yes, sir," Jane said humbly, "I'll do what I can."

It was some time later, when Jane had finished the dishes and was reading one of Mrs. Higgins' mysteries out loud to him, that Fitz realized it was Wednesday night and here they were together. Jane hadn't said a word about leaving.

But she looked so newly soft and sweet sitting there in the lamplight that he had a hunch this was the way they both wanted it to be from now on, together. END

This is the easy Wesson way for barbecue sauces and salads

Pour Wesson Oil for fresh, savory barbecue sauce and save the fuss of measuring and melting solid fat. Pour delicate Wesson Oil for the fresh, homemade salad dressing you make in one minute! It's Wesson's wonderful delicacy that brings out all the subtle flavor and garden freshness of salads. It's Wesson that stays pure and delicate, even over hot barbecue fires, to protect the good flavor of all your outdoor cooking.

You can't buy dressing or sauce that could suit your taste more exactly. Those you make with light, sparkling Wesson Oil—you can season to your own liking—mild or spicy, just as you prefer!

FIESTA FRENCH DRESSING
(for salad)

¾ cup Wesson Oil
¼ cup vinegar
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon sugar
2 teaspoons paprika
¼ teaspoon black pepper
2 teaspoons French's Prepared Mustard

Combine and shake well in covered jar. Yield: 1 cup.

CRISP GREEN SALAD: Combine your favorite greens, such as romaine, watercress, leaf lettuce, head lettuce and spears of French endive; garnish with cucumber and radish slices. Toss with Fiesta French dressing.

WESSON JIFFY BARBECUE SAUCE
(for basting and serving with chicken)

½ cup Wesson Oil
¾ cup chopped onion
¾ cup ketchup
¾ cup water
⅓ cup lemon juice
3 tablespoons sugar
3 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
2 tablespoons French's Prepared Mustard
2 teaspoons salt
½ teaspoon black pepper

Cook onion till soft in hot Wesson Oil. Add remaining ingredients. Simmer 15 minutes. Enough sauce for basting and serving with 2 chickens.

FOR BARBECUING CHICKEN OUTDOORS: Brush sauce on halves of broiler chickens before and during broiling. Broil 30 to 45 minutes—12 to 14 inches from coals. Start with inside of chicken down facing coals and turn to finish with skin side down. Serve with remaining sauce.

This sauce may also be used for barbecuing indoors. Wonderful with hamburgers, frankfurters, or other favorites.

Let's have a barbecue... and for the sauce and the salad, use America's Favorite...

Wesson Oil

See "HAWKINS FALLS" NBC-TV network Monday thru Friday

Gentle as a Mother's Kiss

...yet so Fast you need a stopwatch to time its Speed!

Only Bayer Aspirin Offers Both This Proof of Gentleness and Proof of Speed

WHEN YOU'RE IN PAIN, you need relief that's gentle. And the gentleness of Bayer Aspirin has been proved by its safe use by millions of people. The fact is that no other pain reliever can match its record of safety. Even for small children, doctors prescribe gentle Bayer Aspirin.

And when you're in pain, you want relief that's fast. Bayer Aspirin gives you amazingly fast relief. Here's one reason why: When you drop a Bayer Aspirin tablet into a glass of water, it starts to disintegrate almost instantly—so fast you need a stopwatch to time its speed. The same thing happens in your stomach. It's ready to go to work with amazing speed, to make you feel better—fast.

So whenever you suffer from an ordinary headache, take Bayer Aspirin for gentle relief and fast relief. And when you buy aspirin, don't look for a bargain. The best always costs more. So to be sure you are getting the best, buy Bayer Aspirin.

Get the best—get

BAYER ASPIRIN

CARL PERUTZ

Doing for his baby is the quickest way for a man to be inducted into true fatherhood, and the whole family benefits.

Getting father "into the act"

By DR. HERMAN N. BUNDESE

President, Chicago Board of Healt

PERHAPS my readers will forgive me if I have now and then drawn attention to the progress that has been made in my time toward making childbirth and motherhood the safe and satisfying experiences they should be. First, there are the improvements in prenatal care and in medical techniques that have cut down maternal- and infant-mortality rates so materially. More recently it has been the return wherever possible to breast feeding. And finally, the psychological preparation of the mother for the joys and responsibilities alike of her new estate. These are medical milestones of which my profession has a right to be proud.

As always happens in medicine, however, for every milestone we pass, another appears on the horizon. We are just beginning to understand what a mistake it has been to overlook an essential element in the new family—the father. Recent studies have brought home the full implications of this oversight. They tell us that many of the problems mothers have with children stem from a father who hasn't been prepared properly for fatherhood.

One case that came to my attention not long ago is illustrative of quite a number. Severe feeding problems had arisen with a baby in its first weeks of life. The mother seemed unable to provide breast milk, and one formula after another was tried without success. Yet the baby was sound and normal in every respect. The doctor decided the baby must be reacting to the mother's very obvious tenseness, and the mother confessed why she was so tense. The new father displayed no interest in th baby, and was jealous besides of the at tentions the mother was necessarily pay ing it. Every loving pat she gave i widened the breach between herself an the man she loved. So the treatmen spotlight was shifted to the father' childish attitudes. When these were cor rected, the mother's tension disappeare and the baby could take and digest it food!

In other cases, a father may not re veal his feelings so promptly an dramatically. Instead a slow-burnin antagonism may develop, which is trans ferred by a chain reaction from fathe to mother to the infant or child. In mentally ill youngsters and adoles cents, we can often trace the effects o fathers who were not prepared fo fatherhood.

Fathers are by no means wholly to blame. In part, at least, we doctors aided and abetted by hospital officials have promoted the situation. The average man has a natural feeling o awe and remoteness from the whole process of gestation and childbirth. The medical world has exaggerated this feeling, undoubtedly, by the "hospital curtain" it has thrown about the new mother and baby, giving them an aura of untouchability. Few husbands escape the impression that they are excluded and unwanted during these exciting first days of their babies' lives.

And what happens next? In the average situation, father brings home a baby he has had no chance to get acquainted with, and a wife who seems to have forgotten him in her absorption

THE SUNDAY SMELL

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 44

g Sunday sickness, to get out of going. tely they envied the kids next door; rents were giving them no formal re- raining now so that when they were ey might choose for themselves.

ir Force sergeant was being seated front; often these young men came to rom the nearby base. If—when—our away from home in the armed serv- r heart contracted at what seemed to tability—will they go to church? Or d to go so much when I was a kid" be use, as it is of so many?

lieve in God the Father Almighty, f heaven and earth ——" David re- e creed from memory, scorning the Michael tried fast enough to ; John pretended but he had the side down.

y Sunday, Beth, I stand d say I believe e things I don't nd. I do believe ut it was hard to believing in ou didn't under- arder still to ex- the people next hy you seemed cing these things children.

were halfway the Gloria Patri e noticed that ad disappeared e line-up. He was he seat looking Sunday-school She pulled him feet and he d his head. A and important- black hat turned what the disturb- as. Beth felt her rise. No doubt Peabody, the of the large and ant-looking hat, ne of those who d that church or adults and Mrs. Peabody ght. Michael hit a savage rap t the leg and she Mrs. Peabody was redistributed her o that Michael t on the other side . The place she oped to reserve ve when his usher- ties were over had taken by a Mr. Irs. Nichols. The lses were rich, ss, and were said to have a white free- rug in their living room. Beth fumbled her veil, which until now she had not d was caught up over the flowers on her Mrs. Nichols could always make her feel he wore high-button shoes and were the r of too many children. She hoped Mrs. ls would not notice that Mike was feel- her sables, his face awed.

minister was beginning his morning and she tried to compose herself. For he did not hear his words, having prayers own: Dear God, I pray that Melinda have to have her tonsils out—four is so nd she is so dear to us. . . . Dave deserves romotion, God, and we just have to have money. . . . Help David pass his tenderfoot ements. . . . Help me to know what to do that comic book I think Mike swiped from ugstore yesterday. . . .

e organ was playing now and the ushers taking up the morning offering. Mike craned to see what people dropped into the collection plate as it came along their row. She let him drop in their envelope which contained more than they could afford. Mr. Nichols put in a five-dollar bill.

THE doxology. "Praise God from Whom all blessings flow ——" Gratefulness swelled inside her. She knew what blessings were. Not free-form rugs and sable scarves. She smiled with love down at Mike, who was standing on tiptoe to tell her something. "Wow!" he whispered as she inclined her ear. "Five bucks!"

The choir sang an anthem and the minister read the Scripture. She got a pencil and some paper out of her bag for John and noted that David was using his handkerchief to practice tying the knots on which the scoutmaster had refused to pass him last week. She hoped Melinda was being good in the nursery. She hoped she had turned down the heat under the chicken.

The minister had barely started on his sermon when Michael wanted to know how much longer. "Pretty soon now," she promised, and got more paper and another pencil from her bag. How divine it would be, she thought, to be able to sit calmly all through the service really listening to every word. The minister was speaking of the difficulties of the good life. As always he seemed to have prepared his sermon with her problems in mind. The easy way was never the most rewarding, nor even the happiest, he said.

I believe that, she thought, with a moment's clear flashback to her own mother sitting with a scrubbed reluctant row of offspring. What a difficult yet joyous life her mother's had been.

"Faith of our fathers ——" With sighs of relief now that the end was in sight, her children rose and Beth lost herself in the majesty of the closing hymn. She bent her head for the benediction. She felt rested, refreshed. People turned, started smiling, talking, shaking hands. Mrs. Nichols slid her sables around under her throat. "My, but your boys were good today." Beth looked at her with sudden liking. "Why, yes," she agreed, thinking back. "I believe they were." She turned. Her three sons had escaped through the side door.

On the church steps she spotted the young Air Force sergeant in his dress blues and made her way toward him. She remembered now for sure that she had turned the heat down under the chicken. She told him who she was and asked him to come home with them to dinner. It was a good dinner, right for Sunday, and for inviting a guest.

He had a homely face and a beautiful smile, with the whitest teeth she had ever seen. "I'd like to come. I noticed you in church with your kids. Took me back to the way mom had us in a row every Sunday"—he looked down at his cap and then gave her that dazzling grin—"come hell or high water."

Come hell. Come the hell of war and maybe some memory would draw her sons. They reached the car where the boys were waiting, David, Michael, John. She touched them and said their names by way of introduction. The eyes of all three were solemn with admiration. "Sir," said David, "have you ever passed the sonic barrier?"

Dave was coming now with Melinda from the church nursery. She skipped, her pony tail bobbing, a paper chain in her hands. "Marilyn tore my chain and I kicked her," she called sunnily.

They piled into the car and drove along the Sunday-different street toward home. Beth took off her hat and ran her fingers through her dark curly hair.

Dave said, "Honey, I could stop at the drugstore and pick up some ice cream."

She considered. "Well, yes, ice cream would be nice on the apple pie."

"I'll get out," said Mike. "I saved my nickel from Sunday school."

"Brother," said Dave fervently, "again. After all we said. Sometimes you wonder how much—if anything—gets through."

Beth smiled at him, conscious of something close to gladness in her heart that would not be disturbed. Maybe nothing much gets through, she thought. Maybe just the memory of the look and the sound and the smell of the day that was Sunday. END

$1.18

By REEVE SPENCER KELLEY

Speaking of money,
And we all speak of it too much,
I remember years when my wife
Baked broad-topped loaves of bread
Salt-sweet and light as ocean air.
And we had hens, a red variety,
Dignified and grave of voice,
Continually aware of their responsibility
To golden toast and glistening bacon.
And there was wood to cut,
Hard maple flaking from the ax
That cuts with one bright tooth;
An ax that loved the task of splitting squash,
Finding yellow sunlight at its core.
Evenings were a fire dancing
Along seasoned logs, a chorus
Of soft flames performing with locked arms;
A bright ballet that died to dreaming
When the clock advised the yawn.
Once a dollar and eighteen cents lay
On a broad dresser top—
In polished copper and crisp paper—
For three full weeks before it went
To buy ginger, licorice and yeast.

FROZEN
FRESH FROZEN
FRESH FROZEN
FRESH

You're the wonderful one!

. . . you never forget to remember a birthday, an anniversary, or sick folks. You are always ready to remember because each time you visit your favorite greeting card store, you select several extra cards to have at home. So convenient, isn't it? Of course, you always look for the famous Gibson name on the back. It proves you are remembering with the finest.

GIBSON

Greeting Cards

The Gibson Art Company, Cincinnati, O.
Publishers since 1850

Is there a plot against women?

Men invent fancy gadgets to bring new freedom to the home. The question is for whom?

BY PAUL JONES

THE other day we ran into a girl we know, who seemed to have smoke coming out of her ears.

"Why so steamed up?" we asked her. "And what's that you're carrying under your arm?"

"It's a toolbox," she said. "My husband gave it to me for my birthday. Here, let me show you."

"Never mind," we said. "When you've seen one toolbox, you've seen them all."

"You've never seen anything like this one. I won't unwrap it, but I can reveal that the hammer and the screw driver have gay plastic handles. I am not sure, but I think the pliers are set with rhinestones. There is also a little book telling me how to fix leaky faucets, put up kitchen shelves and make a full set of screens and storm windows for the house."

"A very practical gift," we noted approvingly. "We men are often engaged in our larger affairs, and it is a comfort to a husband to know that his wife can do small repairs and general maintenance. A toolbox is something for you to treasure."

"I do not treasure this toolbox at all," she said distinctly. "In fact, I am taking it back. I think it's all part of a big plot."

"A plot?"

"You heard me. You men are shoving off on us women a lot of things you used to have to do yourselves. This morning I was looking at the paper and I saw an advertisement for a wonderful new car-washing gadget. The illustration just showed a hand holding a long nozzle. I need hardly tell you that it was a feminine hand. Somebody is trying to con us wives into believing that washing the family car can be a thrill-packed adventure."

"Surely," we said, "you know the story of the Industrial Revolution. Why should you dream up this plot? For the last hundred and seventy-five years, men have been inventing things, with only one object in mind: to make women happy and carefree in the home."

"All that for poor little me," she said bitterly. "And now I wind up with the toolbox. The more I think about it, the more I realize that men have got rid of a lot more household chores than women have."

"COME, come," we said. "Think of automatic washers and dryers, not to mention vacuum cleaners, freezers and refrigerators."

"That's what I mean. Who used to empty the pan under the old-fashioned icebox?"

"The husband, of course, if he was any kind of a gentleman."

"You see? And who used to take care of the coal furnace? Not the wife. That heavy tramping up and down the cellar stairs, those smothered oaths heard through the floor when the fire went o were sweet music in a woman's ears. meant she had a man who was on the b

"I am tired," she went on, "of heari that we have practically nothing to compared with our grandmothers. H about you? All you have on your mi now is fiddling with a thermostat or te phoning the TV repairman.

"Actually, grandfather was an ev busier character than grandmother. put in a sixty-hour week at the plant, a at home, when he wasn't carrying scutt of coal up to the kitchen range, he w outside, splitting kindling wood. Sund mornings, after he was all dressed f church, he would go around and wi five or six clocks in the house. You g out of even that dignified duty by inver ing electric clocks.

"BESIDES all that, grandpa had t family rig to look after. He washed t carriage and greased the axles. He clean out the stable and oiled the harness a currycombed the horse, not to mentio sitting up nights with the beast when I had the heaves. You just put the car the garage, and that's it. Now you expe us to wash it with that marvelous ne gadget I was talkin about.

"I doubt if you ev know how to cure ham or a side of baco Grandfather did. H had a smokehouse the back yard that ke him out of a lot of mi chief. He was expecte to take care of th meat department, whi grandmother put up th fruits, vegetables an preserves. Sauerkrau was also his provinc He made it by th barrel, and, in his spare time, chopped u any extra cabbage and fixed a keg of pep per hash. In warm weather, he ha charge of the ice-cream departmen cracking the ice, mixing it with rock sal and turning the crank for an hour or so."

"Just a minute," we said uneasily. "Yo don't expect us to go back to thos primitive days, when everything today i so conveniently packaged?"

"Frankly, no," she said. "But I wis you'd quit pretending that modern me are as busy as ever, while modern wome have nothing to do. Either that, or ge busy and invent a bedmaking machine a self-operating table setter and an auto matic child bather.

"And kindly quit lecturing us on how bad all this leisure is for idle wives, and how we would be all the better for some of the invigorating exercise grandma got over a washtub. I have a good mind to go on a lecture tour myself, deploring the fact that all the evils of modern life stem from man's new leisure, the seven-hour day and practically nothing to do around the house. And now, excuse me, while I trade in this gay little toolbox for a shovel that George can use. It's time he dug up the garden."

END

A little girl who yearned to start in business as a baby-sitter had her twelve-year-old brother print the following card of rates:

Charges for Sitting:
Sleeping babies	25c
Crying babies	35c
Wet babies	40c
Worse than wet babies	50c

THE DREAD COMEBACK

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 39

factors, too, have given a false sense y about VD. People who used to go c for the long and costly treatments o a private doctor for a shot of peni-it will quickly cure them. Private phyre notoriously lax about reporting VD.
onnaire of 4326 Philadelphia doctors that if they had reported venereal dis-ey are supposed to, Philadelphia would wn a 60 per cent increase in syphilis per cent increase in gonorrhea.
rdinary as it may seem, many of the themselves do not know any more y have a case of syphilis or gonorrhea.
mple, a patient comes in with sympcould be VD or one of several other Some doctors simply give such a pa-assive dose of penicillin without ever tests to determine the true nature of se. The penicillin eradicates the sympnd presumably cures the malady.
it was a venereal disease or some-e, nobody will ever know.
all these private cases unreported, no can be made to trace the chain of inn each one—who gave it to the pa-whom did the patient give it to before reatment?—so the VD rate appears to ner.
estimated that more than half the peoget syphilis do not discover it in its ages," says Dr. E. Gurney Clark, prof the Columbia University Faculty of
e. Syphilis is a three-stage disease. In wo stages it is highly infectious but not
g. In the late stage it maims, cripples, drives to insanity or kills. Even if it is ed and cured then, the awful results ain.
covered gonorrhea is a special curse of
ood. In men, the disease is easily d and no longer a problem. In women, goes unrecognized with disastrous reippling them for childbearing, some-quiring complete removal of the in-x organs.
f venereal disease were being reported as ever, people might still be fooled king the rate had dropped because of curious fact. Today there are more old and children in the population than ore: Obviously, they are the age groups
't get VD. So the rate—or number of es per thousand of population—would naller, even though it had actually d among young adults.

s, in fact, to have done just that. VD most often in the 15-to-24 age group.
rate among teen-agers in New York s higher in 1950 than in 1940, despite ps in reporting. Cleveland's latest showed 401 cases of reported VD een-agers in a single year. In Ohio the s-syphilis rate among white teen-age most four times as high as the national all age groups. California's figures rly as bad. In Wilmington, North ., venereal-disease patients named, thers, twenty-one high-school students
l contacts in a three-week period.
histories tell why this is. They are case of promiscuity. When promiscuity eak loose among teen-agers, social ts have discovered that it rages beyond sometimes almost beyond imagining.
e case of the West Virginia service-ife —— ame home from Korea recently on leave, home to his sixteen-year-old had contracted a venereal disease in East. Whether he knew he still had be hard to say. Len gave it to his erie.
e end of his leave, Len departed for station in another part of the country.
otful that Valerie ever knew she had l case finders told her. They found roundabout way:
y after her husband's departure, had attended a party. As far as she cerned, it lasted for thirty-six hours.
that time she had relations with 41
boys, practically the whole male senior class of the local high school. When they began breaking out with the disease, West Virginia health authorities were called and gradually pieced together the story. "We just kept bringing her Coke and sandwiches. That's all she asked for," the boys reported. Final diagnosis showed 23 of the 41 boys were infected.

Another case was reported from San Jose, California. The Health Department there discovered that a fourteen-year-old girl was suffering from syphilis. Case finders questioned her to find out who had given her the disease. They never found out. But it wasn't because the child wouldn't tell. She gave them a list of 45 men with whom she had been intimate. So many of them were infected, it was impossible to determine who had given her the disease and who had received it from her.

EIGHT-YEAR-OLD BOY

By ROBERT P. TRISTRAM COFFIN

He runs the house with innocent eyes,
Independent, cool and wise,
Lives in his pricked-up golden ears,
And nothing of our world he hears.

He swims, for better or for worse,
A rhythmed, deep boy-universe
As graceful as a fish or otter
In the music of deep water.

In one ear and out the other
Go words of sisters or a brother,
Laws and cautions, prohibitions;
He blooms in unforeseen positions.

Standing on his sleek hard head
He talks, without a syllable said,
To multitudes of boys he rolls
Out of himself, all eight-year-olds.

Once or twice a day he rises
To where we breathe, to our surprises,
A cool small universe of love
That fits us utterly as a glove.

Four teen-age boys in Kansas City came to the attention of the Health Department there because they had developed syphilis, The Journal of the Kansas Medical Society reported. Each of the boys named the same seventeen-year-old girl as their sexual contact. Case finders located her and discovered they had a spreading source of syphilis. She supplied the names of 23 other teen-age boys—"The only ones I can remember by name." The ensuing investigation reached into two other states and involved a total of 64 sexual contacts, almost all of them minors.

"There will be more of these epidemics," said Dr. Loren W. Shaffer, president of the American Venereal Disease Association, "and if for lack of funds we must reduce our staffs, let our trained interviewers and contact tracers go, cut down on our diagnostic facilities, we shall not be in a very good position to bring these outbreaks under control before they do irreparable damage to a great many people."

It is so easy to cure venereal disease today. Before penicillin, the treatment of gonorrhea was tedious, uncomfortable and dreadfully uncertain, especially for women. The treatment of syphilis was a painful routine of one to three years' duration. Today even a single injection of penicillin, safe and comparatively painless, often can cure either disease, or both together. A series of penicillin shots will almost always cure either within ten days. The patient seldom misses a day of his ordinary routine.

This has led many Government officials, and some doctors, to adopt a "so-what" attitude. "What's the difference," they ask, "if the VD rate goes up? We can cure them so simply it isn't worth worrying about."

That overlooks the fact, however, that without the public-health efforts we exerted against VD a decade ago many people will never know they have it, and that they urgently need to do something about it.

Professor Evan W. Thomas, Consultant in Venereology to the New York State Health Department, says, "Penicillin is as useless as water against VD unless we can introduce it into the body of the person who has the disease. And we are unquestionably missing the greater proportion of early cases." If syphilis goes untreated for a year, it will do irreparable damage to the human body.

EVEN where treatment is prompt, penicillin cannot wipe out the psychological and emotional effects of VD. "No other bacteria have such a potential for undermining the family and destroying marital happiness as the organisms of syphilis and gonorrhea," says Dr. Emily H. Mudd, director of the Philadelphia Marriage Council. "The emotional scars of these diseases remain long after bodies may be restored to health, especially when young people are the victims."

Nobody argues that, with the miraculous treatment now possible, as much should be spent to control VD today as was spent in 1947. Nationally there is still a small decrease in reported cases. The question simply is whether throwing out almost 90 per cent of the controls that were functioning in 1947 will make it easier for a terror that has shown itself only too ready to recover lost ground.

A $10,000,000 Federal appropriation for VD control is the minimum recommended by the Association of State and Territorial Health Officers, the American Venereal Disease Association and the American Social Hygiene Association. These agencies look upon the $2,300,000 appropriation in the budget as "shortsighted economy."

Less than twenty years ago, nobody dared breathe the word syphilis or gonorrhea in public. So towering was the taboo that even some doctors avoided venereal patients. Under such a conspiracy of silence and ignorance the two diseases thrived until they were putting their mark on one out of every ten people, many of them innocent wives and children.

In the mid-thirties, Dr. Thomas B. Parran, then Surgeon General of the United States, set out to make America face up to this secret menace. He wrote an article that boldly discussed the subject in terms everyone could understand. The LADIES' HOME JOURNAL published that article, despite a widespread belief that the reaction of women readers would bring disaster to the magazine. Women reacted, all right, but they reacted as Parran and the JOURNAL editors believed they would. Individually and through their clubs all over the country they lined up in support of the anti-VD crusade. Congress agreed to grant the Public Health Service the first appropriation to fight VD in 1938.

Doctor Parran had said, "Syphilis can never be controlled while more than one half of the cases are not recognized for more than a year after the onset." By unrelenting effort, in 1947 the VD fighters finally achieved Parran's goal of finding more than half the cases early. They've never since been able to regain that much control over VD.

Now social hygienists are looking to the women and their organizations to take up once again the fight against VD until it can be brought back under control.

Here's what you can do:

Urge your congressmen to restore needed funds that have been taken from VD control.

Find out from your own health department whether state and local appropriations for VD control are adequate. If not, ask your state legislators and municipal authorities to correct the lack.

Write to the American Social Hygiene Association, 1790 Broadway, New York 19, New York, for information on other ways of keeping VD down.

One of the most important ways, the Association has discovered, is to educate young people against the perils of promiscuity.

The kind of complacency that has lowered defenses against VD has also taught many youngsters to be contemptuous of syphilis and gonorrhea as trifling matters not worth concern. They need to know that with treatment delayed, VD can still cripple, that a year of unrecognized syphilis can ruin their bodies, and without treatment, it can still kill. END s-s-s-t! It's

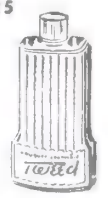
Tweed MIST



TOILET WATER CONCENTRATE BY LENTHÉRIC

Spray it on from head to toe... Clouds of fragrance where'er you go!

Exciting new way to wear fragrance... long-lasting Toilet Water Concentrate in a miraculous spray-type container sends a cloud of fragrance whooshing over you at a touch of your finger!

Adam's Rib • Dark Brilliance 2.75
Tweed • Miracle • Shanghai 2.25
Red Lilac 2.00
• • •
Regular Tweed Bouquet 1.50
prices plus tax

Lenthéric
NEW YORK PARIS LONDON

Glorify Plain Foods

with UNDERWOOD DEVILED HAM

NEW RECIPES that give heavenly zest to all sorts of low-cost, plain foods, make clever use of Underwood Deviled Ham. For just pennies you can glorify ordinary dishes with the delicious tang and extra nutrition of this superb flavor-ingredient. Try Underwood's in your own favorite recipes. It's a great trick!

WHEN SCRAMBLING EGGS, just before they are done, mix in the contents of a can of Underwood's. Poached eggs become remarkable taste-treats when you serve them on hot toast spread with Underwood's. Baked eggs? Mix Underwood's in the cream sauce!

SANDWICHES unlimited are possible with Underwood's — it combines so beautifully. Try it with your favorite jelly. Or with apple butter. Marvelous!

MACARONI-AND-CHEESE gets an extra-hearty meat flavor if you add the contents of a can of Underwood's. It also does wonders for spaghetti sauce!

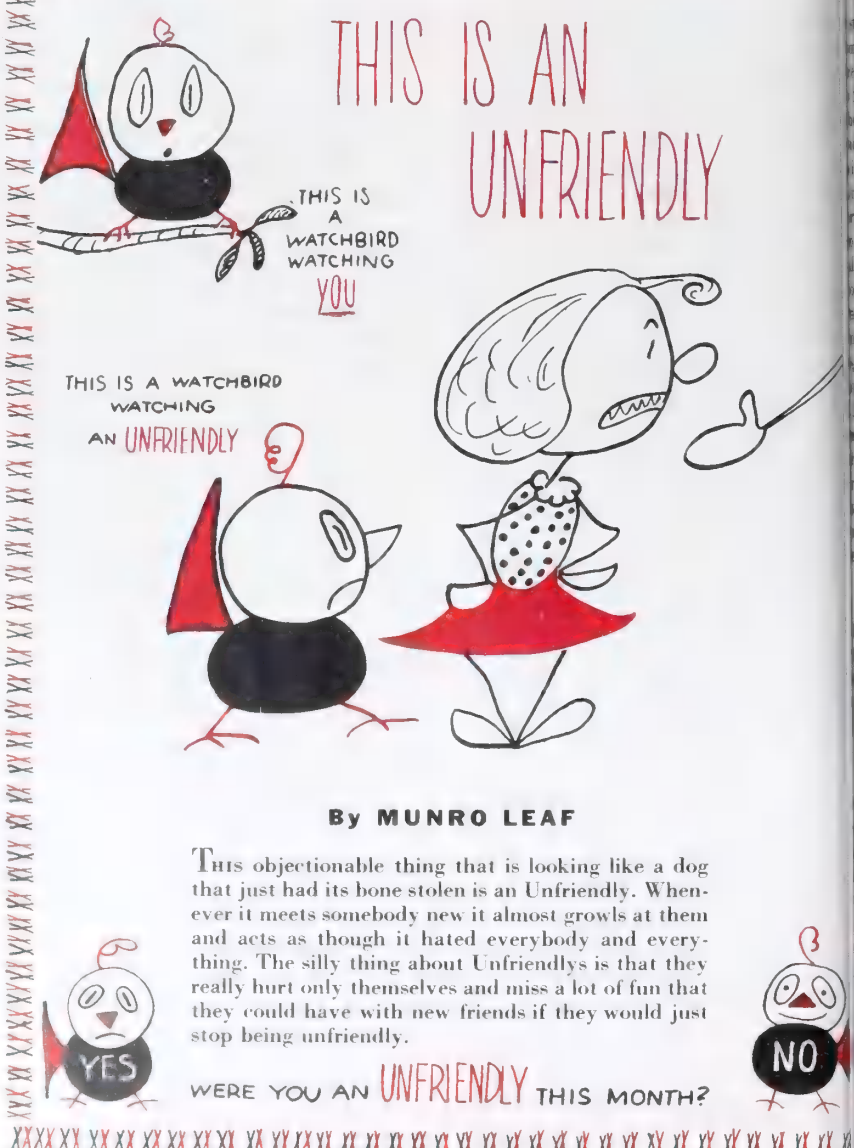
FREE RECIPE BOOKLET . . . Write Wm. Underwood Co., Watertown 72, Mass.

BUILDING INTERNATIONAL FRIENDSHIPS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 23

jealous of the first. But if there are three wives, the first knows that she is the most important and the two others can console each other.

Marnop, Som and Praderm are the three Thailanders among the forty-two foreign students enrolled this year in the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville. The university has a total enrollment of about 3700. Fayetteville has a population of around 20,000. While one expects to see some foreign students on any big-city campus, it is surprising to find so many here, deep in the heart of America. There are special reasons.



Fulbright Act funds—money owed our national treasury from the sale of war-surplus goods abroad—can be used to pay all expenses of United States citizens in many foreign countries, but it pays only for the transportation of foreign students to this country. They must have other help. This year eight foreign students at the University of Arkansas are receiving scholarships and other assistance from Arkansas communities. The total has been as high as eighteen. During the past four years, fifty students from twelve countries have been wholly or partly supported through the local foundation for the international students by Arkansas clubs, church groups and individuals. Other foreign students, many of them on government grants, come because they know they are especially welcome.

Fayetteville is Sen. J. William Fulbright's home town. He is generally credited with inspiring the formation of the foundation, even though he had nothing to do with it directly. The foundation was started in 1949 by Richard J. Hostetter, an associate professor of history, and other members of the faculty of the University of Arkansas. Doctor Hostetter first interested clubs and civic groups in supporting such a project by taking f students about the state on speaking er ments. Later, contributions were solicit letters, circulars and newspaper ads.

Anyone who gives to the foundatio comes a contributing member. Susta memberships are from $10 to $100 a memorial memberships are $100 or Five-dollar bills steadily accumulate fro sale to alumni of book ends made fro walnut banisters removed from "Old M the first building on the campus. St organizations also contribute. To have h so many, the foundation has spent amaz little. In four years, it has collected an bursed $14,500. Many gifts, including clothing, are not in cash. Fraternities, s ties and Fayetteville families donate room board. The university waives the higher of-state tuition for these "internationa dents," as the faculty prefers to call the

Many of the international students before club, school or church groups in ous communities in Arkansas with grea cess; all have the opportunity to visit h and farms. Donald T. King, Foreign St Adviser, has many letters from happy most of which say, in one way or ano "You sent us the best one!" They find it to understand that all of these select stu are the "best." After Ricardo Pasco before the De Queen Rotary Club, its dent, Ben Core, wrote: "I am sure that after when members of our Rotary Club of the Republic of Panama, they will thi Ricardo and feel closer to and more k toward that country." The wife of a ch farmer near Springdale, who had never s Japanese boy before, said after a visit one, "I would just have liked to kept h e area, a scholarship was given to an boy whose home had been n the same day that the pilot had ded in a bombing raid on the boy's n. Karl Sommer, a former German er who fought against American n troops as Hitler's shattered armies across France, was astonished by lliness he found everywhere. "Al-his is not new to me now—I've d it since my first day in America—

Old wounds heal in the fresh sun of A sas. At the suggestion of a former Air

y doesn't wear off."
ole Weill, a French Jewess, found it rget or forgive the year she spent in concentration camp. She brought a d Alsatian folk-dancing costume to Fayetteville. "See this red pettie said. "Know what it's made of? A lag!" A few months later, after she me well acquainted with a German dmitted, "I love Inge as a girl—but e her as a German!"
was embarrassed when she was into an American boy as "the French ou should have seen the reaction!
conception of morality in France me quite a bit. I found out very soon ing of the word 'parking' on the But how pleased I was when I got a rom a boy for the first time—and lso a part of the American dating nternational students appear to be ious in their thinking than many n coeds. Ingeborg von Groll, of Berlin,

, one of the first recipients of a ip, stated during the 1950 fundampaign, "For twelve years I was distrust democracy and individual Coming to Arkansas has given me opportunity to see democracy in nd to breathe an air of freedom. The e friendly, relaxed, happy and, most of speak, to think, to ask questions. I am y astounded at the measure of freedom Americans enjoy and I am puzzled by the way in which they take this freedom for granted."

Dr. John Tyler Caldwell, energetic young president of the University of Arkansas, receives letters from many boys and girls in foreign countries who have heard about the program and want to attend the university. Jeung Hi Pak, a girl in Korea, wrote to say she "awakened from dreaming every night about his institution." She had read an article in a Japanese magazine by Susumu Hara, a former foundation student, and she said, "I was touched to read the whole story about the townspeople's merciful mind. I would like to be a member of those who share the better understanding of the world."

Rosemarie Wodrig, from Bremen, Germany, who stayed at the Tri Delt house for a year, left a letter of advice to her successor. She said she was happy that another German girl was to have the same wonderful year she had had, but she warned: "There will be hours when you feel as if you are alone in the middle of perfect strangers and that nobody understands you and even wants to understand you. People will try to help you and will help you often without your even noticing it, but they don't know the kind of help you need—they don't know you or your background. They will suppose you are like them and treat you accordingly. But you are not like them, Renate, you are so different! You have gone through the war and even though you feel still very childish at home, when you compare yourself with your contemporaries here you will feel as old as Methuselah. You are in a rich country where people don't know ruins and misery. Try to live as they live, to think like they do! It may be hard for you but it is a good way to understand them and become one of them and isn't that what you came here for?"

A mature and introspective Frenchman, Bernard Foubert, is the scholarship student staying at the Sigma Nu house this year. He can talk for hours about French politics, but early in the year, lonely for Paris, he had found little in common with the fraternity brothers. An adviser suggested that he would learn to know and understand them before the year was out. "Oh, I will understand them," Bernard said, "but will they ever understand me?" Bernard is twenty-five, several years older than most of his classmates, and is resuming his studies after a stint in Morocco with the French army. A deep thinker, he finds adjustment to frivolity difficult.

Guenther Gottschalk, from Neheim, Germany, president of the International Students Club, and a brilliant graduate assistant in physics, doesn't think much of the "American dating system" either. When any of the international students speak before high-school groups in Arkansas, they are invariably asked, privately if not in public, to "say something in a foreign language" and "How do you date in your country?"

Signe Kolderup, charming and wholly modest chemistry major from Bergen, Norway, left youngsters in Van Buren, Arkansas, gasping with the information that in her country it was not uncommon for boys and girls in the late teens and early twenties to take unchaperoned weekend trips together. She explained that these might be skiing or hiking trips and that they slept outdoors or in trail shelters, but questions persisted. Finally she said, "Our parents trust us." Jose Martini, of the Republic of Panama, helped out by saying in his country a girl with an older sister was often preferred, because the older sister, rather than her mother, could serve as a chaperon—and one had to be present every time a boy even spoke to a girl.

Eighteen-year-old Brigitte Ogrinz, an alert, serene beauty with a candlelight complexion and great poise, is a scholarship student from Austria who also prefers to talk about things which seem to her more important than dating. She was disturbed, nevertheless, to hear from girls in a university dormitory that "only sorority girls can win the campus-queen contests." She is annoyed, too, by what she feels is lack of student freedom in the United States—"Why do you have to be in at a certain hour?" and "Why is a freshman such a low-life?" At the University of Salzburg, which she will attend when she returns to Austria, there are no such distinctions or restrictions.

"But," she said, "there is not university life either. Students come to study and then they hunt for a job. Employers don't hunt for you as they do in the United States."

Young Arkansans learn a great deal from their international guests. And every member of each community group that has contributed to the foundation feels, when he meets a young boy or girl of another culture, that he has reached beyond his horizon and had some slight share in building a better world. The group of international youths who meet in Mrs. O'Kelly's living room to improve their spoken English learn more than a language. In a small way, they bring into reality the dream that all men, for all their great differences and eternal variations, are brothers. Here the customs and traditions of many great nations blend. At one dinner meeting the International Students Club served Chinese sweet pork with "lice," as Susumu Hara called it, Czechoslovak salad, Swedish cookies and English tea. Afterward they sang Vive l'Amour, Are You From Dixie? and Roll Out the Barrel.

The international students will not forget their Arkansas friends, nor will they be forgotten. They know the human heart beats warmly under any shade of skin. At the Christmas party in Mrs. O'Kelly's home last year, Som Smerasuta, who was leaving the university at the end of the semester, surprised everyone by singing a solo. It was Auld Lang Syne—in Thai.

LOOK WHO'S COOKING

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 53

ore you add the last ½ teaspoon salt.
or seasoning as is seasoning. Some er folk. So taste. Have it your way.
continued: Spread the sauce over om of a shallow baking dish or 6 al scallop shells. Cover the sauce ounds shrimp, cooked and cleaned.
esh shrimps aren't caught in your ocean, lake, river or brook, there are d very nice canned and frozen ones.
medium cream sauce, using 3 table-lour, 3 tablespoons butter or mar-½ cups milk (the sauce, finished, e like heavy cream) and season with oon Worcestershire sauce, 3 table-rated Parmesan cheese, ¾ teaspoon ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Pour over the and sprinkle with buttered bread or rumbs. I prefer and use fine cracker
Bake 20 minutes in a moderate 50° F., until the sauce bubbles up and the top browns. Serve very hot— l the honor lies."

ener grows the greenery. This is what d up to introduce that flexible, manyation called a green salad. Even if all parts are as red as a fire engine, the ls back on green. What salad isn't raw zucchini and cut off the end. he zucchini on the coarse side of the

GREEN SALAD

And toss with 1 cucumber, peeled and ½ cup sliced celery, ¼ green pepper strips and 2 tomatoes, sectioned.
ugh mixed salad greens to serve 6. th French dressing, made with either r tarragon vinegar. Zucchini is used n receipts in many ways. It's like r, right raw or cooked, in the right finals. This is a refreshing, frivolous as some desserts have a way of being.

ade, very easy to eat, and easily they lie in the memory. This is one which will make you glad you came. It is

ICE CREAM IN MELON RINGS

Peel 1 large honeydew melon and cut into six 1″ rings, crosswise. Remove all the white outer portion which you can't eat, down to the part that you can eat—the part that is ripe. Remove the seeds and membrane. Fill the melon rings with scoops of vanilla ice cream and cover with sweetened red or black raspberries. For years, to my knowledge, you have been filling hollow melon rings, or commonly halves cut lengthwise, I hope, with berries or a fruit mélange. But this receipt will please you better, also the character reading the paper, his feet on the parlor sofa. Met him? Well, fruit and ice cream are his dish.

Man and superman. It takes courage, self-confidence and a flair for the art of cooking, for mere man to give over his role of breadwinner and take over the role of the chap who knows things to do after he's won the bread. What if friend wife did murmur something designed to spark the latent talent, who cares? The supper is to be had and he is to chef it. And the grill, the tools, charcoal and food being on hand, let delay be out. And let the chef, dressed to the part, serve first to his eager guests something new and, my guess, different. And he has it as cold as a politician's heart. The receipt? Read on.

RAW-VEGETABLE APPETIZER SOUP

Mix together, while your mixing arm holds out, 6 large ripe tomatoes, chopped (4½ cups), ¼ cup chopped green pepper, ¼ cup chopped sweet red pepper, 2 medium cucumbers, peeled, seeded and chopped, 1 clove garlic, mashed, 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 2 tablespoons grated carrot, 1½ tablespoons finely grated Bermuda onion, a dash of cayenne, ⅛ teaspoon Tabasco, ⅛ teaspoon orégano, 3 tablespoons French dressing, ⅛ teaspoon black pepper, and salt to taste. Tasting and adding salt, especially, makes or breaks the pattern here. Chill it like all get out. (Garnish with a sprig of water cress or serve with a bowl of crisp water cress.)

Getting ready. It has been my idea that when a man cooks he likes to go it alone. When he's presiding at the altar of gastronome you keep off and it will pay to do so.

GINGER BEEF ON FRENCH BREAD

Mix ½ cup soy sauce, ¼ cup water, 2 tablespoons sugar, ¼ cup finely chopped onion, 2 cloves garlic, crushed, and 1 tablespoon finely ground ginger root (or 2 teaspoons powdered ginger). Pour the sauce over 8 cubed steaks. (Get the best top round, very lean, no fat sticking round, about ½″ thick. Have your market man cut it into steaks and cube them. They will be somewhat thinner, but shouldn't be paper thin.) Marinate 1 to 2 hours. Drain meat, pat extra oozing with a towel, and pan-broil in a very hot, generously greased skillet 1 to 2 minutes on each side, depending on whether you like it rare or medium. Cut into halves lengthwise. Serve quick as scat on slices of heated buttered French bread. It would be well to have everything done and ready before the steaks are cooked.

Garden or can—take your pick. A word or two I'll dedicate to our man's supper. Skillet beans. We won't bother with the baked potatoes and broccoli. Just concentrate on skillet beans and so have done. You won't go wrong if you follow—as the subtle singing arrow. Here is what you need to know to do.

SKILLET BEANS

Sauté 1 pound sliced fresh or canned mushrooms, 1½ green pepper cut into thin strips, and 1 onion, sliced thin, in 3 tablespoons butter or margarine. Season with 1 clove garlic, crushed, ¾ to 1 teaspoon chili powder, according to taste, 1 teaspoon salt and ⅛ of pepper. Add 2 cans red kidney beans and simmer the mixture until it is well heated through—in fact, to a red-hot state of hot, hotter, hottest.

Hot things hot. I have lived in hotels and pensions around this land of the free and the home of the brave, getting a washbasket full of various folkways, mores and strays, and almost never have I found cold food cold or hot dishes really hot. I was just thinking of watermelon. You could have that for dessert instead of pie. If pie is too hot and busy. The melon must be as cold as a jilted maiden's left hand after the ring is again in his pocket.

But if it's pie you crave, mamma has to take a bow in the finale of this man-cooked meal. Men don't like to make pies. This is my considered opinion. If true, why should they try? There are female pie artists with big reputations all about. Get pies from the source of the best. I give you the receipt as advertised.

APPLE-APRICOT PIE

Peel, core and slice thin enough tart green apples to make 2 quarts (about 3 pounds). Add 1 to 2 tablespoons lemon juice, depending on whether the apples are tart or flat. It isn't easy to dredge up good apples until fall. But canned ones save the day if you can't get fresh apples. Mix ½ cup sugar, ½ cup dark brown sugar, 3 tablespoons flour, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, ½ teaspoon nutmeg and ¼ teaspoon salt. Mix these together and sift through the apples and arrange the fruit in an unbaked 10″ pie shell. Put 12 apricot halves in among the top layer of apples. Fresh apricots if available: if not, use canned. Sprinkle the fresh apricots with fine sugar. Sprinkle 1 teaspoon vanilla and ½ teaspoon almond over pie. Flitter little topazes of butter or margarine on top of the pie. Bake in a hot oven, 400° F., for 20 minutes. Cover with a 9″ layer-cake pan and bake 40 minutes more, or until the apples are tender. Baste once or twice during baking time with the pie juices. Serve with sugar and plain heavy cream on the side. END

An Advertisement Presented in the Public Interest by New York Life

SHOULD YOUR CHILD BE AN ACCOUNTANT?

by John L. Carey

Executive Director,
American Institute of Accountants
(As told to DONALD ROBINSON)

Firms rely so heavily on the knowledge and advice of their accountants that the Controller may have a standing invi tion to all Directors' meetings. Many top executives in America's leading firms began their careers as accounta

IF YOUR SON selects accounting as a profession, you can be sure of one very important thing. He will be welcomed into the field with open arms.

A great, unfilled demand for good accountants exists today. Many public accounting firms and industrial concerns go so far as to send scouts to college campuses all over the country in an effort to recruit promising accounting students for their staffs. They still can't find enough.

"We have an urgent need for capable young men," the head of one large firm told me recently.

It is the same story everywhere else.

And this demand for accounting talent is going to last for many years to come. I can say that with confidence.

Of all the professions, accounting is growing the fastest. In 1900 there were only 243 Certified Public Accountants in the United States. In 1940 there were 20,000. The total now is more than 50,000.

Between 1940 and 1950 the number of doctors in the United States increased 26.2 percent, the number of dentists 25.5 percent, the number of lawyers 11.1 percent. The increase in CPA's during the period was 88.9 percent.

There is good reason for this spectacular rise in accountancy. And for my prediction that it will continue.

The fact is that the more our American economy expands, the more accountants are required to make it work.

In choosing accounting as a career, your son will enter an old and honored calling. The ancient Babylonians kept accounting records in 3600 B.C.! As long ago as 1581 accounting was recognized as a specialized occupation. That year, the first College of Accounting was founded in Venice. To join this guild, a boy had to serve a six-year apprenticeship, pass an examination and present a certificate of good character signed by a magistrate.

Here in the United States, accountants were active well before the Revolution. Benjamin Franklin made use of them. In 1741 he wrote a James Parker, asking him to audit the books of Franklin & Hall, printers.

Today, accounting is the nerve center of almost all business. The modern business man relies on facts rather than hunches, and his financial facts are organized for him by accountants.

In this connection, let me make this clear. The accountant is no mere calculating machine. He has to know which are the vital figures in every business and be able to interpret what those figures mean to the success or failure of the business. His is a big responsibility.

There are now, in the main, two kinds of accountants. One is the public accountant who serves his clients for a fee on the same basis as does a lawyer or an architect. If he has met the educational and experience requirements and has passed the rigorous examination prescribed by law in every state, he is known as a Certified Public Accountant. This signifies that he has been officially accredited as a skilled accountant of independent mind whose findings can be considered authoritative.

The CPA has many jobs. He can help a client company install an accounting system which will enable it to keep adequate records of its transactions. Thereafter, he may audit these accounts periodically, giving his professional opinion as to whether they fairly reflect the company's profit or loss. And let me tell you that this requires seasoned judgment as well as technical ability. Suppose that an important expense is charged to the wrong account or to the wrong period of time. The investo rely on the company's financial statements c seriously misled.

Other major functions of the CPA include figuri the income taxes a company has to pay, analyzi cost of its operations and providing it with da forecasting future trends.

Does this all sound like dull stuff to you?

It isn't. I know of a case in which a young acco was making an audit of a lumber company. There s to be no way of verifying the amount of lumber re in the company's records. Most of this lumber wa floating down a river.

That didn't stop the accountant. He hired an ai and flew above the river, taking motion pictures logs. With the films, he was able to get an ac estimate of the board feet of lumber available fo

Because of the varied experience of CPA's, the also widely used as general business advisors. It is the most constructive phases of their work.

Only recently, I heard about a CPA who saved a ufacturer from a tragic mistake. This manufacture selling a large part of his output on the West Coast, decided to build a huge, new plant out there to s this market.

tely, he talked it over first with his CPA.

verything," the CPA said. "Let me look into on."

A prepared a detailed estimate of costs, bal- increased charges for shipping raw materials against the savings the manufacturer would he delivery of his finished products. His figures controvertibly that the manufacturer wouldn't y at all. Actually, the CPA showed, the manu- ood to lose over $1,000,000.

e saved my company's life," the manufacturer

ond big group in the accounting field consists ivate" accountants. They are accountants em- officials of individual business concerns, gov- agencies and other institutions. They may be ntrollers, chief accountants, internal auditors er titles.

vate accountant may do much the same sort of he independent CPA, but he does it for a single on. Basically, his responsibilities include laying al accounting policies for his company, super- bookkeepers who maintain the day-to-day eveloping the company budget, measuring the nce of various departments, probing costs, ax questions and, most significant, helping his to plan for the future.

he private accountant may not have the diver- of the CPA, he has the satisfaction of serving mpany team and participating in top level de- or most concerns, the controller is a key man.

en have our controller sit in at the meetings of l of Directors," the president of one of Ameri- st utilities informed me.

public and private accounting, the remunera- od and the opportunity for advancement ex-

g man who is hired by an established public g firm can look for a starting salary of $250 to onth. (The better his college record, the more it is that he'll approach the higher figure.) e years he may reasonably hope to be earning ghborhood of $6,000 a year.

taken into partnership—which is quite likely that he has the right material in him—or if he s own firm, he can expect an income of $10,000 0 a year. A few CPA's make more than $100,000

olic accountants travel extensively to reach the far- diversified organizations that require their services.

An accountant's work can be far from dull. Faced with verifying a lumber company's records, the auditor flew over the river where their logs were floating and got an accurate estimate of the lumber on hand.

In private accounting, incomes are also high. Starting wages tend to be even a little better than in public accounting, promotion is fairly rapid, and in large companies it is not uncommon for a professional accountant to work himself up to a salary of $50,000 a year, or more. And private accounting can be a stepping stone to high business office. The treasurers, financial vice presidents and often the presidents of many of America's most renowned corporations began as accountants.

Accountancy has its drawbacks, of course. I am the first to admit that. An accountant's schedule can be long and arduous. At times, he may have to put in ten, twelve or more hours a day, sometimes seven days a week.

Furthermore, many accountants have to travel a great deal. Initially, this may be attractive to a young man. Later, after he has a wife and family, he may not like it so much. Nor will his wife.

Nevertheless, every accountant I know feels that the rewards of the profession outweigh its disadvantages.

Now, let us see what kind of boys make the best accountants. And what kind of girls, since the number of women accountants has been increasing.

1. In my opinion, a boy (or a girl) who wants to be an accountant should have a keen, analytical mind. 2. Although he doesn't have to be a wizard at arithmetic, he should like figures and have a genuine respect for accuracy. 3. He should be persistent. An accountant may have to spend hours hunting down a single important fact. 4. He should be able to keep a confidence. After all, his clients will be entrusting him with their most precious secrets. 5. He should like people and be able to "sell" himself to them. 6. He should be willing and able to work hard.

To become a successful accountant, a college education is virtually a prerequisite today. Some accountants have risen from an office boy's job, but nowadays practically every public accounting firm and most private business concerns prefer men with college training. Your child should, therefore, take a college-preparatory course in high school. After that, he should enroll in one of the more than 250 colleges and universities which now teach accounting.

I naturally recommend that a young person should major in accounting, but I urge that he get a broad liberal arts education as well. In the business world, the man or woman who forges ahead is the one who can speak and write well and who has an appreciation of cultural matters, as well as financial questions. The business leader of 1954 is a well-read, well-rounded man.

For public accounting, most experts call it essential that a man also be a CPA. The examination to qualify as a CPA is the same in every state, and I must warn you that it is not easy. Many candidates fail on their first attempt, partly because they sit for it before they are properly prepared. However, they can obtain credit for the sections they pass and try the other parts again later.

If I seem enthusiastic about the accounting profession, it is the result of my own observation. I have been associated with accounting for 29 years and I have relished every minute of it. To my mind, that is what counts most. A man should enjoy his life's work.

♦ ♦ ♦

HOW TO HELP YOUR CHILD PREPARE FOR ANY CAREER

Whether your child is a toddler or in his teens, you are the keystone to whatever career he is to build. Your task is to inspire, guide and make possible. In the course of building his career many people will make contributions: teachers, researchers, specialists of many kinds.

One specialist—and his training and devotion to duty earn that title for him—is your New York Life agent. It is never too soon to enlist his aid—for he can help you to make sure that the future you plan for your child will become a reality.

Booklets available on other careers

This article on Accounting is one of a continuing series on career opportunities for young men and women. Thus far, similar articles have been prepared on Newspapering, Law, Medicine, Teaching, Aeronautical Engineering, Public Service, Farming and Architecture. Each is available in booklet form and will be sent to you on request. You'll also find additional help in our free booklet, "The Cost of Four Years at College." Just write.

nylic

NEW YORK LIFE
Insurance Company
51 Madison Ave., Dept. 9-J, New York 10, N. Y.

The New York Life Agent in Your Community is a Good Man to Know

NINTH OF A SERIES OF ADVERTISEMENTS PRESENTED TO HELP GUIDE AMERICA'S CHILDREN TO A BETTER FUTURE

THE DISAPPEARANCE OF MARY BLAKE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 33

the phone to call his wife again, then thought better of it. She'd be in bed and asleep by now. Why disturb her? He retired without making a second call.

On Monday morning, he flew back to New York and went straight to his office. Finally, at about three in the afternoon, he took a moment to call Mary again. The maid answered.

"Mrs. Blake isn't home," she said. "She was out when I arrived."

"Just give her a message that I'll be there for dinner, Leila."

But when Jim arrived for dinner, Mary was still out. He waited until eight o'clock, then ate his meal alone.

"Are you sure Mrs. Blake didn't tell you where she'd be?" he asked the girl.

"When I came today she was gone. There wasn't no note nor nothing."

Jim Blake was not particularly concerned. His wife was a radio actress with a rather varied schedule. She was obviously out doing a show or rehearsing for a future one.

At ten-thirty, he got an idea. All radio actresses belong to telephone exchanges which take their messages and keep track of their professional schedules. He called Mary's service and was told that she had no show that evening. After this, he began to worry. It was very unlike her to stay out without phoning or leaving a note. At four-thirty A.M., he could stand it no longer. He called the police and reported his wife as missing.

The disappearance of Mary Blake, three years ago, still remains in the files of the Missing Persons Bureau marked "Unsolved."

It was a most unusual case, for several reasons. First and foremost was the fact that Mary was an actress. While she was in no sense a star, she was an experienced and well-known professional. She had appeared in half a dozen Broadway plays as well as on radio. Her radio work conflicted with television rehearsals, so she had not appeared in the new medium. But her picture was in the files of every New York paper, and had frequently been printed. Also, she was the type of girl who was always noticed. Even if she hadn't been an actress, she had the figure and the beauty to attract attention. Her crowning glory was her lovely, natural blond hair, which she wore pulled back from her high forehead. Her eyes were dark. When her husband had to describe them to the police, he said they were dark blue, but several of her female friends confused the issue by swearing that Mary had brown eyes. Actually, they were hazel, a mélange of dark blue flecked with brown, and changeable like a chameleon's skin, according to the color Mary was wearing and to the eye shadow she happened to put on.

Secondly, she was, as far as anyone knew, a levelheaded, intelligent girl, who had made quite a success of her life. Her dossier disclosed that she had been born in a small town in Ohio, and had attended a university nearby for one year. Just as she was to return for her second year, her parents had been wiped out in an automobile accident. Though stunned by this tragedy, she had pulled herself together with remarkable fortitude and mapped out her future. She had no living relatives and no particular beau. She was nearly nineteen at that time, but so far had not fallen in love. There was nothing to hold her in Ohio. Consequently, she had decided to come to New York and seek a career on the stage.

At first, like any beginner in the theatrical world, she had found the going rugged. Having only a few thousand dollars, she had quickly realized that she must supplement her small capital with earnings of some sort; and unable to find Broadway employment, she did all types of odd jobs. She had worked part time in Macy's, as a hostess in Schrafft's, and as a model. But gradually, due solely to her own efforts and talent, she had found a place in the theater.

When she met Jim Blake, at the age of twenty-three, she was an established actress in small parts and beginning to break into radio. He was a young advertising executive and handled an account connected with one of the radio shows on which Mary appeared.

They fell in love at first sight, and six months after their meeting were married.

The marriage, as far as the authorities could discover, was a success. It had lasted to the day of Mary's disappearance, with all outward appearances of happiness.

After the wedding, Mary talked of giving up her career to raise a family, but as no children made an appearance, she went on with her work. Now that she had a husband and no longer needed money, jobs fell into her lap without effort. Jim was proud of his wife's success, appeared to take a great interest in it and encouraged her.

"He was remarkably generous," one of Mary's girl friends told the police. "Insisted on supporting his wife in spite of the fact that she earned plenty and they could have shared expenses. But not Jim. Her money was her affair and he never questioned what she did with it."

Jim, the police discovered, could well afford this attitude. His career, too, had progressed since the wedding. At the time of his wife's disappearance, he was a junior executive of the advertising agency and earning $25,000 a year. They lived the life of a prosperous professional couple. They kept a car, an extravagance in New York, had a nice apartment on Central Park South, entertained a good deal, frequently dined in the better restaurants.

So the police quickly eliminated the idea that Mary Blake had voluntarily left home. Wives do not normally walk out on attractive, successful husbands, unless there is another man in the picture. And after careful probing into Mary's marriage and private life, the police dismissed this idea as a motive. No evidence of any lover was ever unearthed. Mary was a loyal, faithful and happy wife.

That left only amnesia and foul play. Most amnesia cases are soon found. They quickly turn up wandering around in a daze, or they seek help themselves from the police in order to find out who they are. It was finally decided, therefore, that Mary Blake had been murdered. And evidence turned up quickly to support this theory.

Four days after her disappearance—or at least four days after the fact became known and publicized— her handbag was brought into the police station by a young nursemaid.

Her story was simple and the police were unable to break it down. She worked for a family with an apartment on Sutton Place. On the Saturday of the weekend when Mary disappeared, the girl had wheeled the baby in her charge down to the embankment along the East River's edge. She had sat down on a bench in the sun. Under the bench she had found the purse. She swore that the bag had contained no money. It was a nice pocketbook, quite new and well made, and in it were an attractive compact and matching lipstick. She had decided to keep it, as the initial M was on both items and her own name was Margaret. She had felt very guilty about this. Also in the bag was Mary's driving license, giving her name as Mrs. James Blake and her address; a charge plate from Saks Fifth Avenue; and a trade-union card from the American Federation of Radio Artists, made out to the name of Mary Hanna, which was Mrs. Blake's maiden as well as professional name. So it would have been a simple matter for the girl to have returned the purse. But as she had not she became afraid to hand it in to th when she read that its owner had disap Perhaps she would be accused of Mary Hanna's money, or even of mu her! At last, though, her conscience ha her to telling her mistress, and the wor quickly brought her to the police stati

Now the police had something to g handbag, found thirty yards from th was indication that Mary had come to end. Had she been murdered and pu the river? It seemed the most likely s for her last day was carefully reconstruc no evidence of mental depression or tendencies was uncovered.

This day—Thursday— had started any other. She had had breakfast w husband. She had kissed him good-special affection, as she knew he was that afternoon for Washington and w gone until Monday.

About ten-thirty that morning she h a telephone call from a friend name Stephens, who had suggested that the for lunch. Miss Stephens had quickl forward with her information.

"MARY was delighted," she told the "Said she wasn't doing a thing. We ar to meet at Louis and Armand's on second Street."

Numerous witnesses were eager to te the truth of that statement. Louis a mand's is a restaurant frequented by VIP's, and five big shots besides the recognized Mary and Julia there that da

"What did you talk about at lunch police asked Miss Stephens. "Think o detail, even unimportant ones."

Julia had done her best to recall the eon conversation. "We just talked sho said. "About what shows we'd been w on in radio, about who was getting wha by romancing the director, the genera level of our scripts—stuff like that. A thirty, she said she'd really have to g wanted to get to the bank before three her on the corner of Fifth Avenue an tieth Street. I had a radio rehearsal at

The police checked Mary's bank. H ance was normal—about $3500—and s no unusually large withdrawals. She w viously not the victim of some unscru blackmailer. They found that she had ca check there for $100 at ten minutes of t usual procedure for her on a Thursday noon. Of that hundred, thirty were gi the maid at five o'clock, and it was as that unless she had spent some on he home, she must have had seventy doll her when she disappeared. A possible for robbery and murder: people have killed for smaller sums. Also a careful of her jewelry showed her diamond watch, her diamond engagement ring gold clip to be missing. There was no that she had worn those things whe walked out of the house.

Mary arrived home, the maid testifi half past three. She sat down at her des did some writing. The letters were mailed. She had apparently forgotten t them when she went out that fatal nigh enclosed a check to Lord and Taylor's small bill, and the other two were to ra rectors asking for appointments to see th surely not the action of a girl contemp either suicide or disappearance.

At four she had gone into her room t
At five she had spoken to the maid, to t to go home. One remark in that conver interested the police considerably. I Mary's statement to the maid that she dinner engagement. Whom was that ap ment with? When had she made it?
could find that out," the chief detective tigating the case told Mr. Blake, "we have our murderer."

But no one ever disclosed this inform
As she had received no other phone call day, it was agreed that she must have ru

CONTINUED ON PAGE 84

BIOGRAPHY

BY CYNTHIA HARRIS

When she was young she rode a colt.
Arrogant, insulted, he flung her square Against the turf and left her there.
She watched him bolt
And got up limping and went inside
To eat fried squirrel with the rest of her kin.
Star, Star, I'll ride you again!
That was her pride.

When she was married they laughed and said, Dora can't cook! She can't make a bed!

But she sent three daughters off to college
With three shiny trunks. To her knowledge
They never climbed fig trees,
They never rode horses,
But they winked at the boys and passed their courses.
And one played piano
(All classical themes),
And one did fancywork
And dreamed long dreams,
And one danced all night to the Wang Wang Blues And walked in the moonlight without her shoes.

Later there were japonicas,
(She never quite believed
How proud the Donkelaari blazed Above bereft who grieved.)
Out in her yard
Higher than her head Burst fantastic blossoms
Blood blood red,
White, pink, variegated,
Crisp-cool to feel.

People came to see them from as far as Mobile.

When she was old she lay in bed.
(Down the street the milk wagon, clop, clop, clop.)
She watched the petals of the Alba Plena drop
White on her spread.
Miss Freddie stopped in to bring port wine, Pecans fell bouncing on the hard autumn ground,
The piano was still. The preacher came round
Thursdays at nine.

Pore Miss Dory. She can't make a bed!
She wears one pigtail at the back of her head.
But some winter nights when the wind blows thin
She pulls the covers up to her chin
And her eyes stare bright
In the dark hungry night . . .
Star, Star, I'll ride you again!

Your hair is romance...

keep it sunshine bright with White Rain

You know it's true — the most delightful beauty asset you can have is lovely hair. Hair that's bright to see, soft to touch, as fresh as a playful spring breeze — the kind of hair you have when you use the new lotion shampoo that gives you results like softest rain water. For White Rain sprinkles your hair with dancing sunlight. And with sunshine all around you — love and laughter follow after. Love and laughter . . . the essence of romance.

Use New White Rain Shampoo tonight
and tomorrow your hair will be sunshine bright!

FABULOUS LOTION SHAMPOO BY TONI

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 82

someone by accident on the way home from the bank and agreed to dine with him. A person she knew and trusted. Had this mysterious person lured Mary to the banks of the East River, robbed her, murdered her and disposed of the body in the river? The river was dragged, the tides were studied and all possible places where the body might be washed ashore were watched. This was wasted activity. No body that could possibly be that of Mary Blake was ever recovered and at last, five months after her disappearance, the police admitted defeat.

What really happened to Mary Blake, and why, is known at the moment to only one person. The reason it is being told will be left to the end of this tale. For if Mary Blake learned a lesson by what she did and went through, that lesson was not to repeat her mistakes. To live and err is human; to live and repeat one's errors is foolish; and whatever you may think of Mary Blake, she is not a fool.

For all was not idyllic in the Garden of Eden on Central Park South. The happy marriage was in itself a myth—not to Jim who, in his self-centered masculine way, did not realize it, but to Mary. Her unhappiness was deeply rooted, aroused by a strong feminine instinct that she could not control and that grew in her until it became an obsession: a psychotic state that turned her feelings of affection for Jim into a phobia against him. For he held in his hands the power to ruin her. He could make the great sacrifice of her life all go for nothing. And being Jim, he would not be afraid to use that power. He held it over her like a whip, a whip that would cut her to ribbons if she dared go against his wishes. Such a whipping she could not risk.

To begin at the beginning, we must go back to Mary's background once more. She was born and raised in a simple home. She grew up with one idea: that someday she would marry and have a family of her own. An only child, she was often lonely, with a great craving for love and affection that her parents did not satisfy. Her father worked hard all day and had little time for his daughter. Her mother was equally busy, tired and fretful with her domestic duties, and easily annoyed if her youngster demanded too much attention.

Mary was therefore driven within herself, and lavished her affection on a large family of dolls that became to her living babies, small brothers and sisters, for whom she alone was entirely responsible. As she grew older, the dolls gave way to dreams of her own future family and of the tall, dark, handsome man who was to father this mythical brood.

Perhaps that was why she was so swept away by Wayne Gilmore when she met him. He fitted her mental ideal perfectly; and furthermore, it was wartime, and Wayne was in uniform—the dashing attire of a second lieutenant. He was on his last leave and somehow it seemed almost noble to make him happy. An officer on his way to war is a romantic figure to any impressionable young girl, and Mary's upbringing and background had not prepared her for the onslaught of such a dashing figure.

FOR Wayne was quite different from any boy of her previous acquaintance. He was older—nearly twenty-eight—and from New Orleans. He had a charm about him, and a Southern line that quite bowled her over. He had come from officers' training school to stay his last leave with his buddy's family, as the time was too short to make a trip home. Peter Jenkins and his sister Alice had lived around the corner from Mary all her life. She had never given Pete a second thought. He was just Alice's older brother. But when he phoned and asked her to date his friend, and the friend turned out to be Wayne, her world turned upside down. What she had expected to be a dull double date turned into the most exciting night of her life.

They had gone dancing to the town's only ballroom, and when Wayne held her close and whispered crazy things into her ears, she felt as though she were dancing on clouds. He took her home and kissed her good night, and the thrill of that kiss kept her awake for hours afterward. On Saturday night the experience was repeated, and on Sunday night, too, though this time the night did not end in a mere kiss.

Later—when he was gone—she couldn't understand it! Why, she hardly knew him! They weren't even in love! The word had never been mentioned between them. He had told her he adored her, but almost any man, she was sure, would say something of the kind in the circumstances. How had she let it happen? He must think she was cheap and easy—a pushover. She had started out as an innocent girl on an ordinary date; she had returned to her own chaste little room a woman. A weak and silly and regretful woman. She cried herself to sleep. . . .

And then, two days later, the evening after Wayne had returned to camp, the motor accident happened and temporarily banished the episode from her mind.

Her parents went to a party in a neighboring town. Coming home, a drunken driver swerved into their car and they were killed instantly. This unnecessary tragedy left Mary not only completely stunned, but destitute.

Her father's affairs turned out to be in a most tangled state. He had been a small-town dentist and his earnings had been just enough to support his family and pay Mary's expenses at college. There was no insurance, as her father had a bad heart and had never been able to obtain any. Many people owed him money—money he had never been able to collect. Their modest home carried a heavy mortgage. She would realize at the most only a tiny amount of capital from it when—and if—she was able to sell it. All at once she was alone, and afraid—terribly, terribly afraid.

When two months had gone by, and she was just beginning to pull herself out of the daze of sorrow and grief, she realized with a new feeling of hopelessness and terror that something else was frightfully wrong.

It was a letter from Wayne that did it. It took her back again, back to that Sunday night and everything that had happened then. The mist that had been draped around her mind like a heavy shawl lifted suddenly. It couldn't be! Not on top of everything else! Frantically, she tried to count the days—counted backward—and then she knew. She'd been feeling very peculiar too. She'd put it down to shock and her nerves, but now it was obvious that wasn't the reason. She didn't have to go to a doctor. Everything pointed to the truth. But she did go, anyway, just to make sure. She chose one she didn't know—a man in a neighboring town. His beaming report—that she could expect her baby in late April or early May—made her feel weak and clammy all over.

She went home and paced her living-room floor until three in the morning. There was only one way out. She'd heard of illegal operations, but she didn't know how to go about getting one; and besides, she knew they must be terribly expensive. On top of that, all her ultrastrong maternal instincts rebelled at the idea. She wanted this baby—she'd always dreamed of having one all her own. Wayne must simply find some way to come back and marry her. She reread his letter a hundred times. It was a casual letter, very short, and contained only one sentence that gave her any hope. He said, "You made my last leave one I shall never forget."

Did that mean he loved her? That he would come back and face up to his responsibilities? At least she had to find out—had to give him the chance. The letter contained his APO address. She sat down and answered it. She wrote him a hysterical, emotional reply telling him everything that had happened, telling him she couldn't bring a child into the world without a name. It wasn't fair to the innocent infant to have to carry such a stigma through life. She even promised to divorce him afterward, if they found out they were unhappy together. She'd never ask anything of him—nothing except a name for her child. Even though she'd lost her parents, somehow she'd manage.

When she'd just about given up hope of hearing and was wondering if she had courage to kill herself, she had an unexpected visitor. He rang the doorbell casually one night like somebody delivering a parcel. The dim light of a street lamp showed her a tall, dark, middle-aged man, with a sad face that seemed strangely familiar.

"Are you Mary Hanna?" he asked.

"Yes," she said.

"I'm Wayne Gilmore's father. May I come in?"

Her heart jumped as she admitted him. She followed him into her small living room, took his hat, and sat down in a chair opposite him. For a moment neither one spoke.

He finally broke the silence. "You're very beautiful," he said at last. "Wayne always had an eye for a pretty girl."

"How is Wayne?" she managed to ask.

"Wayne is dead," he said quietly.

He ignored her shocked expression and the fact that she could find nothing to say. He went on talking, telling her that the War Department had informed them nearly three weeks ago that Wayne had been killed in the North African invasion, only ten days after he got overseas. His personal effects had been sent home and among them, unopened, had been her letter. It had apparently arrived the day after he was killed.

"The news was a great shock to Wayne's mother," he said, "but somehow, after we read your letter, she seemed to feel a little better. Is it true you're going to have Wayne's child?"

"It's a cow. What did you think it was?"

"Yes," she said. She got out Wayne's and showed it to him. She told him the story—how she'd met him through Pet kins, and everything that had happen was almost a relief to tell someone.

Mr. Gilmore studied the letter car then folded it up and put it in his pock believe you," he said at last. "Wayne talked about the Jenkins boy—what friends they were. We knew he spent h leave here. You seem to be a nice girl, relieves my mind. A man on his way t isn't too particular sometimes. Miss H I'm prepared to make you a propositio

His suggestion was very simple. He take her back to New Orleans with hi would live with them as their daughter-i They would tell their friends and neig that Wayne had married secretly, just b he left for overseas. They would pay a medical expenses. When the child was she was to turn it over to them for legal tion, and go away. He would give her cash, enough to start a new life.

"But I want my baby," she said misera

"BE reasonable, Miss Hanna," Mr. more argued. "You're young. You'll m and have other children of your own. money will give you a chance to go to York, or anyplace that appeals to you. can make a career for yourself. No one ever know of this through us. The baby grow up with the name he's entitled to— a position in the world. What chance h illegitimate child? When we die, the baby inherit everything that is rightfully his hers. This child is all Mrs. Gilmore and I to live for now." He was almost pleading.

The sorrow in his face, his anxiety, m her tremendously. After all, she had very choice. Here was a way out. And for baby—the best thing. It would never k of the stigma attached to its birth. It w grow up proud—able to hold its head among honorable people. For its sake, had to give it up. "Very well," she said at "I'll do as you ask."

Her months in New Orleans went quickly. The Gilmores had a beautiful, fashioned home with a lovely garden w Mary spent most of her time, basking in the shine. Everyone's sympathy went out to young widow. From only one person Mary feel any antagonism.

Her name was Eugenia Moore and M quickly found out that she and Wayne been practically engaged. Mary's sudden pearance on the scene had been a great sh to Eugenia, who at once felt jilted and saken. It had been dreadful to hear the r of Wayne's death. But it had been wors find out that she had been forgotten and ceived. Mary had an instinctive feeling, w those flashing brown eyes stared at her, Eugenia hated her. Hated her simply cause she had stolen the man she loved was to bear his child. But Eugenia prided self on being a Southern lady. Never, b word or gesture, did she convey what she thinking. It was only by those eyes, and the expression on that camellia-white f that she gave herself away.

But the time passed. The baby, a boy, born on a balmy day early in May and weeks later, when he was safely on a boa Mary left New Orleans forever. The Gilm gave it out that she was going to New Yor seek a career on the stage and leaving the b in their charge. For Mary had had time consider during her months of confinem and the theater had struck her finally as logical place to find work.

For she was really not trained for anythi She had, however, played the lead in freshman play at college; she liked acting a everyone at school had thought she had tale One look in her mirror convinced her that had the appearance for the stage. She must something with herself, and though she w not terribly ambitious for the theater, N York sounded like a good idea. In the big c she could lose herself, forget her past a start over. There she would surely meet so nice, possible husband with a good futu

CONTINUED ON PAGE 86

y Dial soap

otects your complexion

en under make-up

Dial clears your complexion by removing blemish-spreading bacteria that other soaps leave on your skin.

No matter how lavishly or sparingly you use cosmetics, when you wash beforehand with Dial Soap, the fresh clearness of your skin is continuously protected underneath your make-up.

For mild, fragrant Dial washes away trouble-causing bacteria that other soaps (even the finest) leave on your skin. Dial does this because it contains AT-7, known to science as Hexachlorophene. And there's nothing else as good. It clears the skin of unseen bacteria that often aggravate and spread surface blemishes.

Until Dial came along, no soap could remove these trouble-makers safely and effectively. Even after the most thorough washing with ordinary soaps thousands of bacteria are left on the skin. Then, when you put on make-up, they're free to cause trouble underneath. But daily washing with Dial removes up to 95% of these trouble-makers. And Dial's AT-7 clings to your skin, so it continually retards the growth of new bacteria.

When you first try this beauty-refreshing soap, you'd never guess it gives you such benefits. Doctors recommend it for adolescents. With Dial your skin becomes cleaner and clearer than with any other type of soap. So change to this mild, fragrant soap . . . and let Dial protect your complexion—even under make-up.

Also available in Canada

P. S. Shampoo a Diamond Sparkle into your hair with new Dial Shampoo.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 84

With the husband would come other children, as Mr. Gilmore had first suggested. Children she could keep and love and call her own. It had torn her to pieces to give up young Wayne, as they had decided to call the baby, so she must make up for him as soon as possible.

Like many girls before her, she actually came to New York in search of a husband. The stage was merely a means to that end. She would give it up as soon as she married.

When she met Jim Blake, four years later, he seemed to be the answer to that ambition. He was handsome—a blond version of Wayne. He was college-educated, very ambitious, and appeared to fall in love with her on the spot.

Mary carefully told him her background. However, she deliberately did not mention anything about Wayne, the baby or the long months in New Orleans. One could hardly expect a prospective husband to overlook it. She was sure if Jim found out about it, he would never consider marrying her.

The day she married him was the happiest of her life. It was a happiness that did not last.

They went to Sea Island, Georgia, on their honeymoon.

They drove down in Jim's car and had spent an ideal three days when Mary was confronted with an unexpected situation that turned her knees to water. For a terrifying half hour she supposed that her marriage was over—over before it had hardly begun.

Jim and she were actually sitting in the bar. All at once a soft Southern voice was saying to her, "Why, Mary Gilmore, fancy running into you here."

She looked up into the brown eyes of Eugenia Moore.

Eugenia sat down with them. She presented a handsome young man as her husband. Mary was too upset to catch or ever remember his name. Automatically, she introduced Jim and prayed inwardly that Eugenia would keep her mouth shut.

But Eugenia babbled on. Why, Mr. and Mrs. Gilmore had never said a word about Mary's marrying again. She saw them frequently. Little Wayne was four years old now—going on five—and as cute as a bug in a rug. She couldn't imagine how Mary could ever give up such a sweet child and go off to New York, but she supposed one had to think of one's own future. Obviously, Mary's had worked out very well.

She smiled at Jim. "Your wife stole my boy friend," she said gaily. "I didn't get over it for ages. Not till I met Ralph." She turned to Mary. "You've no idea," she said, "how I hated you."

"I have an idea," was all Mary could think of to say.

"Well," Eugenia said, patting her husband's hand, "it just shows you how everything turns out for the best."

At last the dreadful moments came to an end. Jim got up abruptly. "If you'll excuse us," he said, "Mary and I must dress for dinner." It was almost his first remark. Eugenia had done nearly all the talking.

He took Mary's arm, and propelled her out of the room. They walked across the driveway to what the hotel called the Apartment Annex, and up the stairs to their room. He shut the door and looked at her. "I suggest you tell me all about it," he said evenly.

Mary did. She told him everything. Even the part Eugenia didn't know, which was that she and Wayne had never really been married at all. There was no point in holding anything back now. Jim might as well know the whole awful story. "I'll give you a divorce," she concluded. "I don't expect you to forgive me. I should never have married you without telling you, but I knew if I told you I'd probably lose you and I was in love with you."

And then Jim surprised her. He took her in his arms and kissed her. "I happen to be in love with you, too," he said. "We'll forget all about it."

She could hardly believe her ears. It wasn't like Jim to be so broad-minded. He could be very narrow about some things. "I'll make it up to you," she sobbed. "I'll have other children. I'll give up my career. I just want to make you happy."

"NONSENSE," Jim said. "When the babies come—if they do—then you can give up your career. But until they do, you may as well go on with it. You made a mistake and you paid for it. We just won't talk about it ever again."

She thought Jim was marvelous—so kind and understanding. She felt so grateful to him, so in his debt, that she worked especially hard to please him. And he appeared to appreciate her efforts, to get a great kick out of her growing reputation, and freely admitted that being married to an attractive up-and-coming actress helped him in his business; made him important and envied by his colleagues.

However, no matter how much she refused to let her pay for anything sisted on supporting her and would use her money only for her own Appearances were important to the Madison Avenue. She must have a m sables and some good jewelry. Ridin back were the colors of James Blake's

But clothes and possessions meant to Mary, though for Jim's sake she p a real interest. After all, what did it Soon she would have something re portant to think about. Her family

More and more she longed for child. Little Wayne increasingly fi thoughts. What did he look like? Ho behave? Was he intelligent? Was he These unanswered questions tore her t She must have another baby, or sh never get Wayne out of her mind.

WHEN she had been married three y there was still no patter of little feet came frantic with frustration. G knows, she had become pregnant easily the first time. Why not now—when married and had everything to give

At last s sulted an Park Avenu cologist as reason for renness. Aft ful examina calmed her There was ab nothing wro her. No reas she couldn more childre

"Possibl suggested, "i husband's f few simpl would deter truth."

Mary wen and thoug over. Was so wrong with J last she got courage to r it and sugge take the te first he put with various He was too b rushed, it was bother, he simply didn't have the time. she continued to nag him, he argue God just hadn't seen fit to bless the children. That was that and be th She didn't know what she would be into. Nurses or sitters, bottles and c yowls all night long. Why, they migh have to give up their comfortable m apartment and move out to a subu idea he did not relish at all. Their wh would be turned upside down.

But finally one night the truth can They had been to a dinner at a friend couple had twins—eight months old. babies, so sweet and clean and ador their cribs, made Mary almost sick wit She talked about them all through dinn the more she talked, the more Jim dran

When they got home she brought subject of the tests again. Jim's answ to go over to their cellaret and pour another big drink.

"Put that out of your mind, Mary," finally. "I'm not going to take them."

"But why?" she pleaded. "Why you—just for me?"

"Because I already know the answ said. "You might as well know the Mary, and then maybe you'll shut up this baby business and give me some p can't have children. I've known it for ag the result of an illness when I was very y

To Mary, this revelation was a st blow—absolutely shattering. Tragic words. When she finally was able to sp was hardly a whisper. "And you marrie knowing that? How could you keep dreadful secret from me?"

Jim smiled a sardonic, almost nasty s her. "You kept a little secret from m

NEXT MONTH

How could she get a boy to like her if she had to dress like something that had fallen off the hanger? She didn't look like the movie stars, or the girls in love-story magazines. She didn't look like anyone but herself, and it was discouraging.

● Usually Morgan didn't mind too much—being poor. And she didn't have time for love. Taking care of pop and Julie and Ned filled her life—except in dreams that couldn't come true. She didn't know that love can find a girl whether she's

READY OR NOT

By MARY STOLZ

Complete in the August Journal, condensed from the novel recently published by Harper & Brothers.

Martha Logan of Swift

Betty Crocker of General Mills

Martha Logan brought the chicken....
Betty Crocker reached for the Bisquick

Bake your biscuits, oven-fry the chicken all in the same pan!

Fry chicken this new, easy way . . . in the oven . . . and leave room in the same pan to bake the biscuits right in the chicken juices! A delightful new kind of one-dish meal from your oven to your table.

1 tender-grown Swift's Premium chicken (Fresh or quick-frozen—cut up for frying)
1 cup Bisquick
2 teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
2 teaspoons paprika
¼ cup each shortening and butter

To prepare chicken, dip the pieces in a mixture of Bisquick, salt, pepper, and paprika to coat well. Melt shortening in a shallow baking dish (9x13x2") in a hot oven (425° F.). Remove baking dish from oven and place chicken skin side down in a single layer. Bake in a hot oven (425° F.) for 45 minutes. Turn chicken. And now . . .

Make Rolled Biscuit dough (directions on Bisquick package). Roll dough ½" thick; cut biscuits. Place on bottom of pan, being sure both biscuits and chicken remain in a single layer. Bake another 15 minutes or until biscuits are lightly browned and chicken is tender. Serves 4.

a? An unimportant matter like an e child you just neglected to mennk we're even, Mary."
he understood, at last, why he had road-minded. He, too, had married se pretenses. Many times during agement, she had spoken of their nily. He had never even hinted it mpossible.
you told me that slightly sordid went on, "I was actually rather re-ary. I thought, 'This girl is just the
he. Any woman who would sell her five thousand bucks won't mind if has kids.'" can you say that?" Mary gasped.
give him up for money. I gave him
e it was the best thing for him."
excuses don't interest me," he said, another sip of his drink.
usation made her furious. "I'll di-
" she screamed. "I only got married family. That's one of the purposes of von't divorce me," he said calmly.
'
en't got any grounds."
ng herself down on the couch. "I it on medical grounds alone," she 'll bet almost any court in the coun-give it to me."
e and stood over her. "I'll tell you happen if you try it—if you dare: I'll tersuit. I'll say I found out my wife legitimate child, by a man named ilmore, of New Orleans, before she
e. I'm quite a big shot, Mary. You're
. We're well known in café society.
s will make quite a thing of it. The l Press will pick up the story. We nake the front pages in New Orleans, if his family are as important socially imed. That kid of yours will be the e town."
opped crying. He was so despicably
g. So icy, calm and collected. She lenly that he meant every word of it. would suffer the most? The Gil-no had only been kind to her, and Wayne. After she had given him up through hell because of it, it would nothing. Her child would never live never be able to forget it.
ew she was beaten. She was tied to er. After a moment she raised herself ow and stared at him. "Why do you If a man loves a woman, he wants happy. You know without children erable for the rest of my days."
down beside her. "That's nonsense," You'll put it out of your mind, once d to the idea. I want you, Mary, be-'re useful to me. We're a team. I'm u're beautiful. We'll get to the top.
king a hundred thousand a year."
's all that matters to you, isn't it?"
e power that goes with it," he said.

LY she saw her husband through the psychoanalyst. Deep inside him had feeling of inadequacy. He couldn't like other men. So he must make up acquiring money and power. Someust show his superiority.
we adopt a child?" she asked tentaisn't the same thing, but it would be n not having any."
he said, and she was amazed at the in his voice. "Children are a lot of nd expense, and unless they're your tainly wouldn't be worth the effort. I do it. You never know how the kid out."
as his excuse, but Mary knew it e real reason. Because he could have is own, he'd developed a protective all children. He'd talked himself into l he was the way he was. By now that s so deep in him she knew she could oot it.
ing to bed," she said finally. "Maybe tter in the morning."
ou will," he said. He put his arms r and kissed her. "I'll make it up to give you everything else you want."
ere was nothing else she did want.
iss made her shiver, giving her a feelugnance. She had ceased to love him ent he blackmailed her into staying with him. Somehow, someway, she must get her freedom.

That night in bed she lay thinking until almost dawn, and from somewhere, out of the blackness of her despair, came the solution. She would run away, disappear, completely, forever. She would change her name, lose her identity, start over with someone else. She had made a whole new life for herself once. She could do it again.

From that moment on, she began to formulate the plans for her vanishing act. She was then only twenty-six. There was no desperate need for haste and she was smart enough to know that if she was to do something so drastic, she must do it perfectly. There must be no slip-up, no failure, no trace. She must think out every detail.

She began by being the perfect wife to Jim. She was affectionate, considerate, thoughtful. Since she gave him his own way in everything, they began to get on perfectly.

She fired her old maid and got a new one—Leila. When she was gone, Leila would remember only harmony in the house. Not arguments. She arranged that Leila would come only the first four days of the week. Jim went to Washington on business at least seven or eight times a year, and always over a weekend. She would choose, when the moment was ripe, one of those times. With luck, she might not be missed for three days, which would give her a good start.

For nearly a month she spent every spare moment in the New York Public Library, reading up on every missing-person case she could get hold of. She waded through fiction, nonfiction articles and old newspapers. It was surprising to find out that most people who disappear (generally husbands) make the same mistakes. They choose a name similar to their own, partly for convenience's sake. It is easier to remember—and luggage, jewelry or clothes stamped with initials do not have to be discarded. Mary Blake would become Marjorie brings you better flavor than ground coffee!

NEW NESCAFÉ 100% PURE COFFEE

New Jet Process Explodes Pure Coffee Into Tiny Gems of Nescafé®!

Yes, Nescafé's Jet Process brings better flavor than ground coffee—cup after cup! It's pure, choice coffee exploded into tiny gems of rich coffee goodness. Coffee so flavor-full, you'll say it's the most deliciously satisfying coffee you ever tasted! If you don't agree that this new 100% coffee Nescafé has better flavor, cup after cup, than any ground coffee, just send the unfinished jar to Nescafé, Box 428, White Plains, N. Y.—and you'll get your money back.

So Rich, You Save Up To 25¢ A Pound Over Ground Coffee!

© 1954 The Nestlé Company, Inc.

Have Fun!

don't deprive yourself of the fun of going swimming just because it's "time of the month" for you. Be smart! Be modern! Be a Tampax user! Tampax is internal sanitary protection that never "shows" under a wet or dry bathing suit.

do enjoy all the other summer advantages of Tampax. Be glad it prevents chafing. (Tampax can't even be felt, once it's in place.) Rejoice in the way it prevents odor from forming. And remember the fact that it's easy to dispose of when you're away from home. No wonder so many women find Tampax so convenient all year round—so ideal during warm summer weather.

because honestly!—Tampax can be worn by any normal woman. It's simple to insert! Get your supply this very month at any drug or notion counter. Choice of 3 absorbencies: Regular, Super, Junior. Month's supply goes into purse. Look for Tampax Vendor in restrooms throughout the United States. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

TAMPAX INCORPORATED LH1-74-0
Palmer, Mass.

Please send me the plain wrapper trial package of Tampax. I enclose 10¢ (coin or silver) to cover cost of mailing. (Not a check or stamps.)

Name .....
Address .....
City ..... State .....

Baker, or Mildred Barstow, or Maud Benton. Or they choose some name close to themselves, like their mother's or grandmother's maiden name. Detectives are very wise to these habits.

Mary decided to become something fancy—something very apart and different from her married name of Mary Blake or her maiden name of Mary Hanna. She finally selected the name Winifred Dalton. She couldn't remember any connection with either name, or ever playing any part with a similar name. The detectives might think of that possibility. She gave herself a middle name too. Constance! A name she normally hated.

Then she began to make her financial arrangements. In order to get far enough away and be able to last long enough to become established in a new community, a considerable sum would be necessary. Few runaways, under the stress that makes them run away, go seriously into that subject. Mary gave it profound attention.

She decided that a nest egg of $4000 would be necessary. Until she had that much she would not make a move.

To acquire the money, in her case, would be simple, provided she did not rush things. She already had that much in her own checking account. But if she drew it out suddenly and then disappeared, it would be quite apparent that her disappearance was intentional. It would be much more peculiar if she left with what looked like no money at all, or at least with very little.

She opened a new bank account under the name of Winifred Dalton. She chose for this purpose a large, very busy savings bank. And she wore, when making a deposit, a close-fitting turban that did not reveal one strand of blond hair, and a pair of horn-rimmed glasses she normally wore only at movies. She always went to this bank at eleven in the morning and to one particular teller. During the many months that she made gradual deposits in this account, he got to know her face, and she found out when he went to lunch. On the day she would withdraw her money and disappear, she would choose that time.

By cutting down on lunches and matinees, by washing her own hair and doing her own nails, by buying inexpensive clothes instead of expensive ones, she managed to save forty to fifty dollars a week, without any noticeable dent in her Mary Blake bank account. She worked especially hard at her career (an effort that pleased Jim very much) and made more money than usual. A certain percentage of every radio check went into what Mary had begun to think of as her "going-away fund."

Quite soon after she started to make her plans, she dropped in at a theatrical wigmaker's and tried on a dark brown wig made in a very different style from her own hairdo. It was short with bangs on the Claudette Colbert type. The bangs covering her high forehead altered the shape of her face and changed her entire personality. Even she herself was astonished at the difference. The dark hair went naturally with her dark eyes, and all that she needed to make it seem perfectly genuine was a more brunet shade of make-up. Dark pancake, a Rachel powder and a dark-red lipstick.

She told the wigmaker she was thinking of playing a brunet role for a week in summer stock—a reason that made perfect sense to his mind. When he asked her name for his files, she gave a fictitious name—Miss Ursula James. There would be no record of Mary Blake, or Winifred Dalton, trying on any wig. She didn't bother to buy it. But she knew now what she intended to do.

She then went down to the Pennsylvania Station and rented a permanent locker. She paid for it for three years in advance, and it was not necessary to give any name in order to get it. She kept the key hidden under some sweaters in her bottom bureau drawer.

She bought a large, inexpensive suitcase and a matching overnight case to put in the rented locker. Both were monogrammed with the initials W.C.D. Gradually she packed these cases, buying her new things at Macy's, paying cash, and taking them direct to the locker.

The clothes she picked out for Winifred Dalton were utterly different from Mary Blake's glamorous wardrobe. As Mary Blake, she had always dressed to be noticed, for being conspicuous is part of an actress' stock in trade. But Winifred Dalton was dressed to fade into the crowd. A simple black gabardine business suit, a dark plain wool coat, a hat like a million others, low-heeled sensible shoes, a large handbag with plenty of zipper compartments to hold a big bank roll.

At last Mary felt "Winifred" had everything she needed. In the overnight case was even the dark make-up, and a bottle of dark hair dye and scissors. Mary had no intention of risking the memory of some beauty operator. She would do the job herself.

Winifred was now an embryo. She would emerge from the egg when her bank account was also ready to give birth. In the meantime, this Galatea she had created was gradually acquiring a background in Mary's mind.

She was to be an orphan from New Orleans. Mary certainly had an acquaintance with that city. Her voice would be Southern. To an actress, the trick of acquiring a new intonation is a simple matter. Mary had a remarkably good ear for accents. Winifred was going to San Francisco to be married to a man named Sam Hopkins, a traveling salesman she had met when she worked as a hostess in a restaurant in her home town. But the mythical Sam was going to let her down, marry another girl and go away to Chicago. Embarrassed at the idea of returning to the city where she had friends, Winifred would settle down to live in San Francisco.

IRISH PROVERBS

He is scant of news that speaks ill of his mother.

Never put your hand out further than you can draw it back again.

It's a lonesome washing that there's not a man's shirt in.

God never shuts one door but He opens another.

That was to be Winifred's past. Mary hoped that Winifred's future would take care of itself. That some nice new man would turn up to console her for her heartbreaking experience.

She chose the day she disappeared on the spur of the moment. She didn't actually make up her mind until she went in to rest that Thursday afternoon. It suddenly occurred to her that the opportunity had arrived. Thank goodness there was still time to phone the savings bank that she would be withdrawing her funds the following day.

The savings account had reached $4000 the previous week. She had another $70 in her purse after the maid was paid. Jim was away until Monday, and after Leila left she, too, would be gone until Monday. If anyone called over the weekend, Jim included, he or she would just think she was out. It was spring and good flying weather. She had the next day, Friday, to withdraw her money from the bank and buy her plane tickets.

Yes, she had better seize the moment. It might never come again so perfectly. The week before she had passed her thirtieth birthday. If she was to have her family, she couldn't delay many more years.

She lay on her bed trembling with excitement. When one plans a thing for so long, it is almost unbearable to have the fatal moment arrive.

But when she called Leila into her room at five, and told her to go home, she was quite calm. The statement to the maid that she had a dinner engagement—a remark which struck the police as such a vital clue—was merely a fabricated excuse to get rid of the girl sooner than usual, as she generally stayed in the apartment until after dinner.

When she had gone, Mary rose quickly, and dressed in one of her more startling outfits. She took her largest and newest handbag with the key to the station locker and Winifred Dalton's bankbook. She left the letters she had written previously in the afternoon del on the desk. That would be sure to be

When she left the house, her remar doorman that she wasn't going far an walk was intentional. Later, he would ber it.

She walked two blocks and took a to Penn Station. She removed the s from the locker and went into the room. She took the bags into the lavat behind closed doors quickly chan clothes. Outside at the dressing table on the dark make-up and the turban her hair. She was now Winifred D quiet-looking, subdued brunette. Mary glamorous things were packed away

She turned the key in at the locker d went to a telephone. She called the C dore Hotel and reserved a room in th of Wanda Dawson. There would be n of Winifred Dalton at any New Yor

She chose the Commodore for two She was not likely to meet anyone sh there, and it was across the street fr 42nd Street airlines terminal.

She left the station at the regular entrance, took a cab to the hotel, reg giving a Miami address, and went dir her room.

She called room service and had her sent upstairs. She left the door off th and when the waiter arrived went bathroom before telling him to come told him through the door to leave th she would serve herself. When he retu hour later for the dishes, she had left t price of the meal and tip on the table again in the bathroom.

"I'm getting ready for bed," she ca to him. "Just take it away." The waite saw her.

After he had gone, she got down to business. She cut her hair off in the styl wig she had tried on, washed it and dark brown. It was a pretty good job. streaked, but no more so than many parlors might have left it.

She dried it thoroughly with a tow dampened it slightly and set it with pins. She then repacked the suitcase, Mary Blake's things down in the bott

At two in the morning, she quietly hotel. She carried in a pocket only change purse containing her hotel key key to the suitcase in which she had loc $70 and the bankbook. But under Wi loose wool coat she carried Mary Blake handbag, with the contents the nursema discovered. She walked east on 42nd Str up First Avenue to the fifties. There she over to the river. At that hour of the ni place was deserted. She disposed of th under the bench. Then she walked bac hotel, went up to her room and retired

The next morning, she didn't leave th until nearly noon. She had her breakfa Automat among the early lunchers. noticed the plainly dressed brunette w horn-rimmed glasses. Then she went t fred's bank. A glance at the window teller she normally went to told her he to lunch. That window was closed. Sh to another, where there was a man she seen before. She withdrew Winifred D money and closed her account. She wa to Europe, she told the teller. She to money in $50 bills. It made quite a w there was room in Winifred's purse to all.

Her next stop was the airlines te where she bought a ticket on the four- plane for Chicago on TWA. She staye room until it was time to leave, check with the room clerk, carried her bags the street, and in ten minutes was in the sine on her way to the airport. Again s her name as Wanda Dawson. And as Dawson she registered that evening o'clock at the Palmer House in Chica

Through the hotel porter, she bo reservation for the following morning United Airlines plane as far as Salt Lak Utah. When she got to Salt Lake, she changed transportation. She took a San Francisco.

It was a distance of 766 miles. The rived in the city of the Golden Gate six o'clock. She went direct to a on Market Street.

owing morning, Winifred scanned ancisco want ads. Many people de- nt a room to a quiet, self-respecting man. She marked eight possible s, took a taxi and made the rounds. d one near Buena Vista Park. The onged to a schoolteacher and his ous to make a bit of money on the ent was reasonable, the room clean nt. She would also get her break- moved in on that night before Jim, ew York, had informed the police ost wife. She searched the California efully during the next few days and one small paragraph about her dis- e. She had to buy the New York read the full story.

no point in going into details about first few months in San Francisco. be imagined. She led the normal life nger in a new city. She found a job of her first week there. It was in a on Post Street and she became as- stess. Her workday began at noon until ten-thirty in the evening.

d's new life did not really begin until een in San Francisco for over two Carter McKenzie came to dine at ant. He was alone. She showed him and quite by chance talked to him seconds. After that he came in After five weeks, he suggested idly that he would like to take her n her work was over.

inifred was looking for a husband, ed the invitation. Carter, she quickly was a widower, with one child, a of nine. He was in the shipping busi- while it was obvious to her that he er set the world on fire, he was a antial man who earned a reasonable

d him. He was attractive in a rugged, way, simple and unimaginative. He been out of the state of California o desire to explore distant fields. questioned him carefully on that tate has got everything a person t," Carter stated definitely. "Why d when you've got mountains, a sea isticated city to boot?"

you like to go to Europe?" Winnie no," he said. "Everything's a mess anyway. America's good enough for very relieved. The danger of future ons was removed. For Winifred d no birth certificate and therefore obtain a passport. She could never United States.

been dating Carter for three months ad a terrible jolt. She came into the at lunchtime to take up her work. A ing at a table by the window caught on. She realized with a shock that old friend, Julia Stephens. She went the manager and told him she was uld have to go home. It wasn't a lie. solutely faint. Thank heaven, Julia o busy eating she hadn't looked up! had, she might not have recognized r dark hair. But Julia knew her aw- It was a terribly close shave. What a be doing in San Francisco? She paper and solved that question for e was featured in a play that was next night Well, she'd be getting n quickly, so the danger was over, the moment.

ame around to her house that eve- sually picked her up at the restau- u look fine," he said. "They told ere ill and I was worried."

right now," she said. "I had a bit of day. I saw someone I once knew— very fond of."

" he asked.

o for a ride," she suggested. "I'll tell car."

him, when they had parked the car r the ocean, about Sam Hopkins, he had been jilted. She pretended it he had seen in the restaurant. It was so easy for her to lie now that she hardly had to think about it.

"I can't see how any guy could have walked out on you," was Carter's comment. "He must have been blind." He leaned over and kissed her tenderly. "Winifred, will you marry me?"

At last! Everything she had planned for was accomplished. Here was a new man whom she liked, in love with her. Here was security, a home, a new life—and in the future the children she wanted so desperately. "Of course I will," she said. She put her head down on his shoulder and sobbed. It was such a relief to be in love again. To not be alone.

They planned to be married in four weeks. There was no sense in having a long engagement. Then one Sunday Carter picked her up and told her he had a surprise for her. "I've brought my kid home from boarding school for the weekend," he said. "I thought you ought to meet before the wedding."

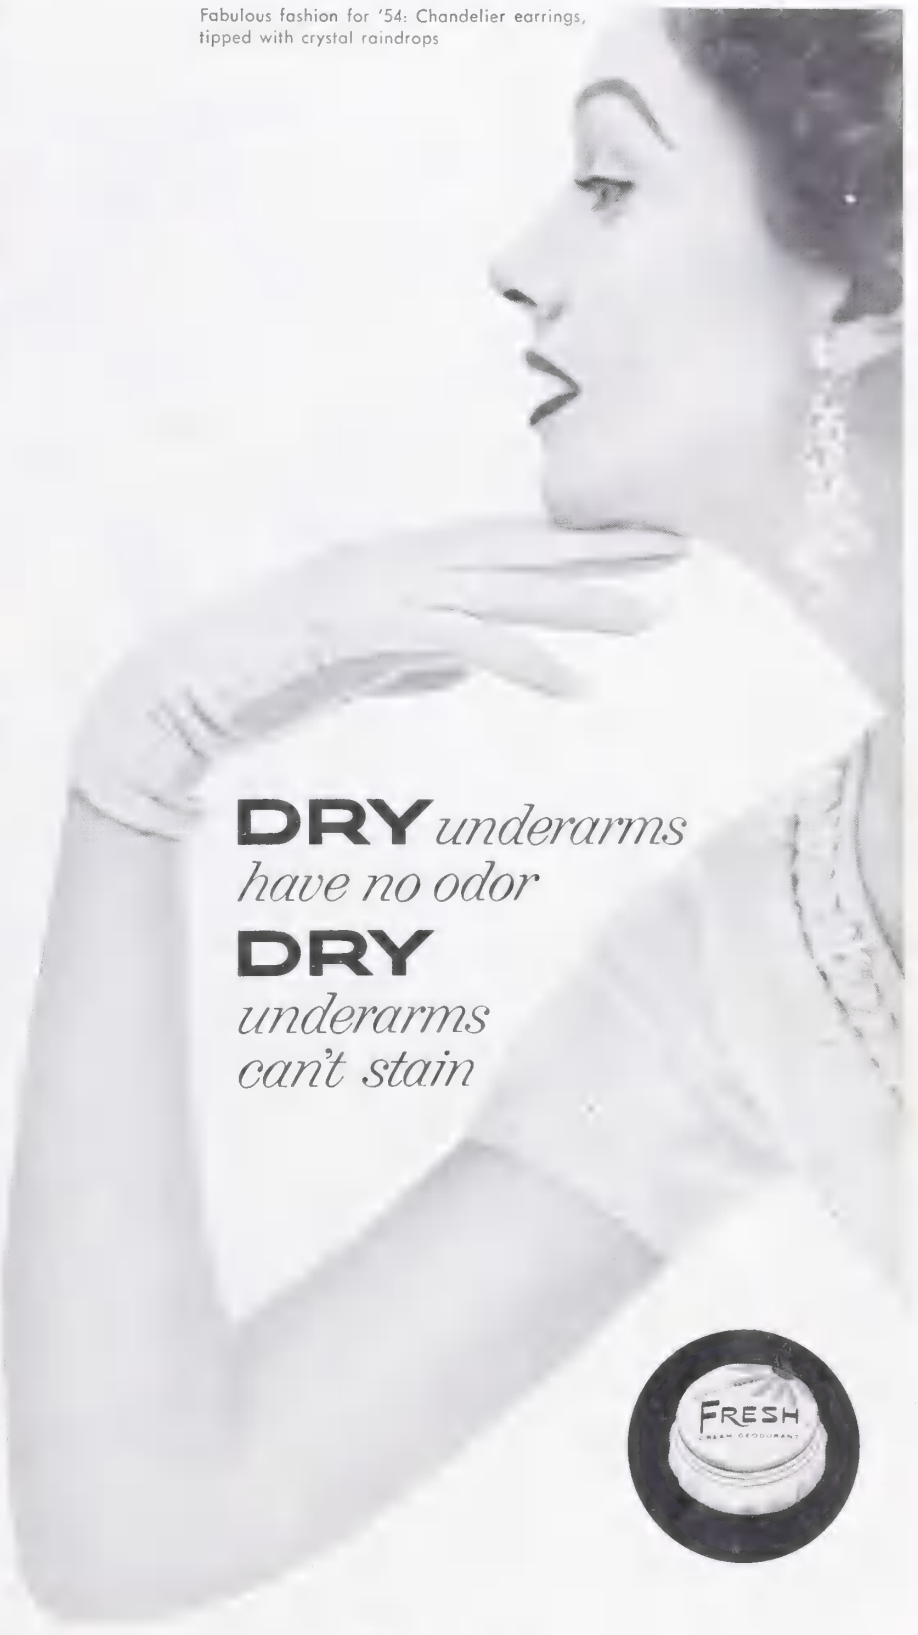
He took her back to his home in Piedmont, overlooking the bay. Her home. Her heart went out immediately to the small nine-year-old boy. Why, Wayne—her Wayne—would be just that age. Carter, Jr., would make up for Wayne. They got along like a house afire.

It was after dinner that the bubble burst. They were sitting on the terrace. The child came up to her suddenly and put his arms around her. "I'm glad you're going to be my new mother," he said. "You're beautiful. I'll be the proudest kid in school."

And she knew all at once that she couldn't go through with it. She must have been sick, terribly, terribly, mentally sick. What could she have been thinking of? Why, she was about to commit bigamy and she had never given it a thought. Suppose, someday, it all came out—as the past had come out with Jim. She was doing the same thing over again, making the same terrible mistake. Marrying once more with hidden secrets—secrets that might rise up and hit her in the face. It wasn't fair to the boy or to his father. She looked in Carter's direction. He was smoking a pipe, at peace with the world. Could she risk the destruction that might come to him if she thought only of herself? Her close brush with Julia Stephens just a few weeks ago should have warned her. She couldn't escape from the past and from what she was. It would always catch up.

"Take me home," she said wearily to Carter. She couldn't tell him yet. She would have to think of a way to let him down lightly.

He bought her the morning tabloid on the way back. She got into bed and started to read it automatically. It kept her from thinking—from trying to solve an unsolvable problem. And then, suddenly, she saw it. A tiny item in a gossip column syndicated from New York—an item that gave her hope.



Perhaps there was a God after all. And because she had decided to do the right thing, He had pointed a way out. The item read, "James Blake, Executive Vice-President of the Connings Advertising Agency, and Audrey Fenworth, the daughter of Arnold B. Fenworth, of 625 Park Avenue, would be married tomorrow if it weren't for an unsurmountable obstacle. Three years ago Mr. Blake's wife, the actress Mary Hanna, unaccountably disappeared and has never been seen again. Until she is declared legally dead four years from now, there can be no wedding bells for the attractive couple. Miss Fenworth inherited a million dollars on her twenty-first birthday from her maternal grandmother, the late Mrs. Edgar Randolph."

Jim in love—in love with an attractive girl with a million dollars! How like him! He would never give her up! Now, if she went back, Jim might be delighted. A quiet divorce could be arranged. Her disappearance could be explained as a simple case of amnesia. He would have his money and power, and she could have . . . Carter. If Carter could accept the past!

So that is why I have written my story. Tomorrow I will give it to Carter to read. I have written it all down—left nothing out, as I might be tempted to do if I were telling it to him. If he marries me, there will be no secrets between us. The disappearance of Mary Blake will be removed from the files marked "Unsolved."

END

Fabulous fashion for '54: Chandelier earrings, tipped with crystal raindrops

DRY underarms have no odor
DRY underarms can't stain

only FRESH has this "Moisture-Shield" formula to keep underarms DRY!

For sure protection, and for long-lasting protection, you can trust gentle, new Fresh Cream Deodorant.

Fresh has a special "Moisture-Shield" formula. Tests in a leading university laboratory show that new Fresh has up to 180% greater astringent action than other leading cream deodorants. It's this astringent action that keeps your underarms dry.

- Trust your loveliest clothes to Fresh.
- It's fluffier! Never sticky or gritty.
- Fresh is guaranteed not to lose its effectiveness for you—or your money back.
- Be lovely to love always—use gentle, effective Fresh Cream Deodorant every day.

Fresh is also manufactured and distributed in Canada. Fresh is a registered trademark of The Pharma-Craft Corporation

Copyright 1954 by The Seven-Up Company

enjoy a

7-Up "Float"

7-Up and Pistachio Ice Cream!
A wonderful flavor surprise!

7-Up and Chocolate Ripple Ice Cream!
Wait 'til you chocolate lovers taste this!

7-Up and Strawberry Ice Cream! The pink of perfection! Wouldn't you like one right now?

Forecast: bright and smiley faces
When you serve this double treat.
Take Seven-Up...your favorite ice cream...
And there's a team that's hard to beat!

Nothing so good was ever so quick 7-Up "Float." Put two scoops of ic (or sherbet) in a tall glass. Tilt the g pour chilled 7-Up gently down th

"Fresh up" with 7-Up!

Seven-Up is the All-Family Drink . . . so pure, so good, so wholesome that folks of all ages may enjoy it. You like it . . . it likes you! Get a family supply of 24 bottles. Buy 7-Up by the case. Or get the handy 7-Up Family Pack. Easy-lift center handle, easy to store. Buy 7-Up wherever you see those bright 7-Up signs.

TIME OF OUR LIVES

ANSEL ADAMS

"Every minute in Yosemite was worth every minute of waiting." Yosemite, land of beauty, meant dreams come true for the Williamses.

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

"For a vacation with kids, camping is it. We want all the family on all our future vacations."

DICKIE, five, and his sister Leslie, seven, had never been on a vacation before. Their mother and dad had gone away once in nine years of marriage, and then hurried back to their Venice, California, home after three days because of being lonesome for their year-old daughter. Little did Dick and Geegee Williams realize then that their next vacation would be a full six years away—six years filled with important job and financial decisions, an attack of polio, the only big fights of their marriage, and plenty of growing up. Or that their first

BY JAN WEYL ■ PHOTOGRAPHS BY MARGERY LEWIS

Campers choose from available sites, have room for tent, table, camp chairs, outdoor fireplace.

"I'm pe-petrified!" Geegee whispered as bear ate bacon, jam, cookies in middle of night. Campers learn: hang food high in tree, bang pan loudly if bear starts up tree.

"Ideal vacation for mother: wash the dishes, fold the pajamas into the sleeping bags—and close the tent flap. Even when you're working, it's more like playing house."

"How else could you get so much vacation for so little money?"

family vacation, when it did come, would be so wholeheartedly satisfying. Dick and Geegee put it this way: "Maybe something you've waited for a long time is always better. One thing is sure. We never could have enjoyed the vacation as much as we did without all that went before, even the problems. All those adjustments we had to make are really paying off now."

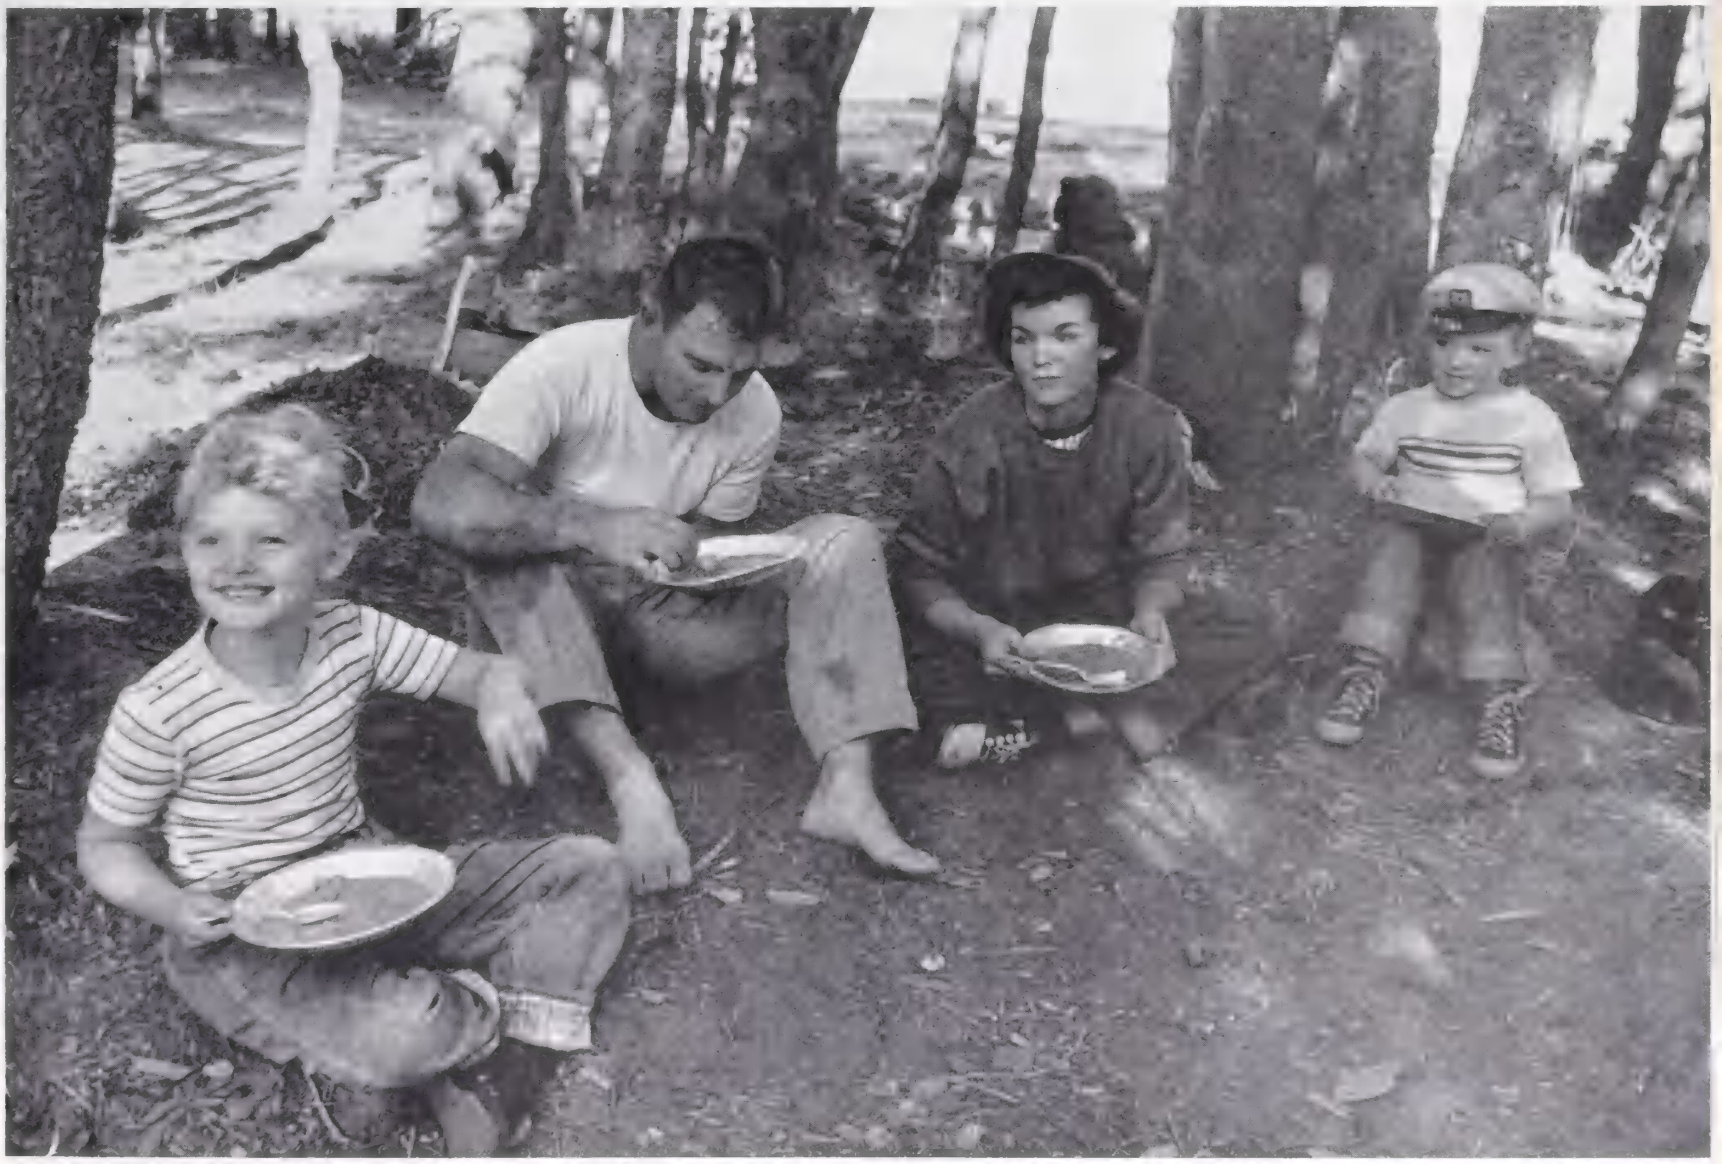
One of the problems had been how they could afford to take a vacation, and to take the children with them. Dick is a fireman. He earns $4740 a year, out of which he's paying for a house he built himself, a baby-blue convertible his wife "had to have," and trying to save ahead so his children can go to college. Vacations, in his budget, just don't exist, unless they're inexpensive.

So he and Geegee started on the day-long drive to Yosemite, for a two-week stay, keeping their fingers crossed. Leslie spent the day's trip singing popular songs—and asking CONTINUED ON PAGE 94

Leslie's job: bringing water from park faucets or mountain streams for dishes, laundry—and minnows.

Campers gather own wood, may buy food, clothing, even laundry service, rent equipment from utensils to cribs, but "It's cheapest to bring your own!"

Campers may rent tent, stove, icebox, other equipment at low rates all over California.



"We just want Dickie to be a real boy. Leslie's different. She's a girl and she has to be perfect. Maybe we ask too much."

Gas stove was good for breakfasts, heating water, but not as fast or as much fun as real campfire cooking. Park provides open fireplaces, rigid rules for campers' safety.

Dickie changes clothes on beach in "perfect four-year-old modesty." Gravel-voiced, all boy, he loved swimming, climbing on rocks best.

Steaks and chops grilled over open flames, potatoes baked in hot coals: "Absolutely delicious. We all cleaned our plates—and asked for more."

"Everything that you do, your kids can do too."

Williamses camped out one night at 8200′, temperature went down to 26°. Geegee retreated to car, leaving Dickie in warm sleeping bag with his dad (below). Leslie slept fine: "Our best camper."

Young
NOW AMERICA LIVES

"There's a special feeling of being by yourselves in the High Sierras—and views you only see in pictures. You can't believe it's real."

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 92

her mom and dad "what is this" and "what is that" questions. Dickie had his hand out the window, then his head, finally even a foot—until his dad caught a glimpse of him in the rear-view mirror.

And exactly nine hours and eight sandwiches after they left home, the Williamses' car pulled into the heart of Yosemite Valley. Dick and Geegee admit they were concentrating so hard on finding a good spot to make their camp that they completely missed the famous scenery all about them—"Startlingly magnificent when we went back to look a second time."

For Yosemite Valley, thought by many to be the most beautiful of our national parks, is a narrow seven-mile canyon of green meadows and towering evergreens carved out of sheer granite in the last two million years by glaciers and the Merced River—a tiny portion of the CONTINUED ON PAGE 119

Needed for sleeping outdoors: flannel pajamas and sweat shirts, hats, socks, plenty of extra blankets for even best sleeping bags, but "you get up feeling like a million."

CHARISSE co-starring in "BRIGADOON" An MGM production IN CINEMASCOPE IN COLOR

ne most Delicate complexions in Hollywood, like Cyd Charisse's, are cared for with Lux Toilet Soap

If there's one thing more attractive than a beautiful girl, it's a beautiful girl who dances like a dream. Cyd Charisse is such a girl.

Cyd first went up on her toes when she was 8. At 14, Cyd was touring with the Ballet Russe. Now she's in movies. From the string of adjectives critics use to describe her dancing, we select . . . sleek, seductive, exciting.

When it comes to Cyd's complexion—then delicate is the word. Feather-soft, and kept that way with gentle Lux Toilet Soap. Like 9 out of 10 stars, Cyd thinks of Lux as her soap.

Lever Brothers guarantee that everything you've just read about Lux here is true. What's more, we guarantee you'll feel just as Cyd does about Lux or we'll refund what you paid for it.

(Lux brings you screen stars every week on Lux Radio Theatre and Lux Video Theatre.)

NEW!

Doctor's deodorant discovery safely*

STOPS ODOR 24 HOURS A DAY!

New Mum with M-3 won't irritate normal skin or damage fabrics

Proved in underarm comparison tests made by a doctor. Deodorant without M-3, tested under one arm, stopped perspiration odor only a few hours. New Mum with M-3, tested under other arm, stopped odor a full 24 hours.

1. *Exclusive deodorant based originally on doctor's discovery, now contains long-lasting M-3 (Hexachlorophene).

2. Stops odor all day long because invisible M-3 clings to your skin—keeps on destroying odor bacteria a full 24 hours.

3. Non-irritating to normal skin. Use it daily. Only leading deodorant containing no strong chemical astringents—will not block pores.

4. Won't rot or discolor fabrics—certified by American Institute of Laundering.

5. Delicate new fragrance. Creamier texture—new Mum won't dry out in the jar.

6. Gentle, safe, dependable—ideal for sanitary napkins, too. Get new Mum today.

NEW MUM®

cream deodorant with long-lasting M-3

(HEXACHLOROPHENE)

® PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

GERTRUDE LAWRENCE AS "MRS. A"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 29

July 4, 1940, to announce our marriage. The wedding had taken place at a quarter past midnight—a concession to Gertrude's wish to start her life as Mrs. A coincident with her birthday, which was the Fourth. I put through the call to Groton, Massachusetts, at an hour when I knew mother would have finished her breakfast and before any of the Boston papers would have the news and their reporters might descend on her for comments.

My sister Barbara answered the telephone. While I heard her calling, "Mother, Richard wants to speak to you," I thought I could hear, far off, the Groton town band striking up for the Independence Day parade. I pictured Main Street with its arching elms and opposing lines of sedate white-painted houses. It was a boast of my mother's that no new house had been built on the street for more than one hundred years. When she left Boston after my father's death to live in Groton, she made no attempt to conceal her pleasure in exchanging Beacon Hill, "which is not what it used to be," for a village which so far had succeeded in ignoring the advent of the twentieth century.

As I amused myself with these fancies I heard approaching footsteps, then a little preliminary cough as mother prepared herself for the ordeal of a long-distance call. Under the tutelage of my father, no Aldrich ever made a long-distance call or sent a telegram except in matters of life or death.

Her voice, slightly flattened by reason of her increasing deafness, inquired anxiously, "Yes, Richard. What is it?"

Taking care to speak distinctly, I said I wanted her to know that I had been married that morning (no need to mention the hour, which would have shocked her) to Gertrude Lawrence.

There was no reply.

I raised my voice. "Do you hear me, mother?" I repeated. "I have just been married to Gertrude Lawrence."

"Certainly I hear you, Richard," mother's voice came sharply. "But, who is Gertrude Lawrence?"

Not only who, but what, Gertrude Lawrence was mother eventually was to learn, and I believe to appreciate more fully than anyone but myself.

THERE were two things which Gertrude could never forgive: my glass of cold milk at breakfast and the fact that I had not seen her in all the early roles she had played in America.

It was never any use trying to make her understand that when she first starred in Charlot's Revue, I was still an undergraduate at Harvard. When she played in Oh, Kay! I was intent on becoming a banker to the satisfaction of my family, my fiancée and her parents. All these kept telling me it was time I put away my undergraduate interest in the theater, which they spoke of as a dangerous virus I had picked up in Professor Baker's English 47, and settled down to pursuits more in keeping with Aldrich and Joy traditions. Only in this way could I hope to regain the caste I had lost with my relations by coming to New York to earn my living.

No Aldrich of our branch of the prolific family had ever turned his back on New England. The Joys, however—although mother was reluctant to admit it—had done their share of wandering. Two of her paternal uncles had been disinherited in the 1830's for refusing to starve on stony Massachusetts acres and heading west instead: one to become a railroad tycoon, the other a founding father of Detroit.

This aversion to seeing any member of the family sink roots into alien soil had been increased when mother's adored only, and younger, brother, James Joy, having gone to Yale after the ways of Joys for many generations (the Aldriches traditionally went to Harvard), bolted to Plainfield, New Jersey, where he became active in the publication of Methodist literature and ultimately editor of The Christian Advocate. In mother's eyes, Uncle Jim's career constituted a double defection—of Massachusetts and of Congregationalism.

My residence in New York was therefore not looked upon kindly by my family. This residence did not, however, qualify me as an experienced theatrical first-nighter. Even after I had been in New York for several years and had married a New York girl, Helen Beals, my knowledge of Broadway in the heyday of the twenties was that of an interested layman. My choice of shows was, in part, limited by what was available at the cut-rate ticket agency in the basement of Gray's drugstore. The hits in which Gertrude starred were never listed there.

Thus Gertrude Lawrence remained a name in lights on a theater marquee until after my marriage to Helen Beals, when we went with the Earl and Countess of Lincoln to see Gertrude Lawrence and Noel Coward in Private Lives. I remember I liked the play very much.

Later that evening, my sister Barbara dropped in during her ten-thirty walk with her dog. As we discussed Private Lives, Barbara observed, "I wonder what Gertrude Lawrence is like. Really, I mean. Off the stage."

"Human," I said, "like the rest of us. And probably dull when she hasn't clever lines to speak."

My sister exclaimed indignantly, "I can't believe it!"

"She's a celebrity," I protested. count as much in London as they do

"There's one thing I'll say for yo bara observed. "You may have a wea the theater, but not for actresses."

"No," I said. "I'm safe on that sco

The weakness, for which my mothe Professor Baker ("President Lowe really approved of him, and I do der"), did not improve as the depres a gloom over banking. Compared stagnation downtown, Broadway more and more enticing.

Like a timid but persevering bath gan to dabble in the waters I ha wished to swim in. I began in 1930 duce plays with Kenneth Macgo Joseph Jerner Reed.

ONE of many pleasant things c with being a producer is the necessity abroad to look for plays which migh ably be brought to New York. I was don on this errand in May, 1933. On I dropped around to Wyndham's T see Nigel Bruce backstage after the ance. The play was Roland Pertwe Inconstancy. Gertrude Lawrence was in it with Nigel and Leslie Banks.

very EASY TO MAKE

The last dress for summer, the first dress for fall

By NORA O'LEARY
Pattern Editor of the Journal

A chemise dress in faded blue denim with a yoke of the same fabric embroidered with red cherries and piped in red cord sash. Vogue "Very Easy to Make" Design 8352, 12 to 18.

© VOGUE

Pale pink linen, slim as a reed. The dolman sleeve has button detail, the neckline a shaped band. Belt buttons on sides. Vogue "Very Easy to Make" Design No. 8378, 12 to 20.

A year-round dress of beige wool jersey which zips up the back. Soft pleats over hips, white trim at neck and sleeves. Vogue "Very Easy to Make" Design No. 8383, 12 to 20.

DERUJINSKI

OTHER VIEWS AND PRICES ON PAGE 101. Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) These patterns will be sent third-class mail. If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5 cents additional for each pattern ordered.

n's on Shaftesbury Avenue is sepa-its neighbor, The New Theatre, by aved alley with the noble name of 's Court. Sir Gerald du Maurier
g at the New Theatre. I admired and expressed a wish to meet him.
me across the court to Sir Gerald's om.
l and I left the New Theatre the of the Wyndham directly opposite l a woman stepped out. She had on ess. Light shimmered on her fair warm white shoulders and on the ner arms. She stood poised on the st the background of grimy brick ead tilted as she spoke to a tall man nd her. Then she turned, caught and smiled radiantly.
Nigel, darling," exclaimed the voice
red as Amanda's.
ntroduced me. She bowed, said quick and gay, flashed us another was swept away by her escort, a whose title, whispered in my ear by me back to my boyhood reading of
h. She was gone. I heard the quick of her heels on the stones of the m out of the warm darkness came y laugh.
years later, when London was un-by the venomous V-2 bombs, I was nt commander, quartered as a pay-in the home of the Marchioness of ry in South Audley Street, Mayfair. dst of a party given by my titled a gentleman wandered through my which had to double as a corridor.
tly, almost possessively, he asked were so many pictures of Gertrude around the room.
them there," I said quietly. "She's u're the American who married Gere said. Then an expression of wistful rie replaced the belligerence. "I was marry her once," he said. Though the years and made grave by his responsibilities, he became at this recognizable to me as the young earl atiently had swept Gertrude away in St. Martin's Court and who—aco Nigel and prevalent London goslaid his coronet at her feet.

ur meeting in London I did not miss in any of her plays in New York, al-never met her again either backstage of the parties. The season she starred Crother's Susan and God was the marriage ended in divorce. Helen man who made her happier than I able to do and I devoted all my atproducing in New York, directing mer Festival at Central City, Cold managing the Cape Playhouse at Massachusetts.

my summers at Dennis I was joined nother, who condescended to leave or a few weeks on the Cape provided d not be required to enter into or ntenance to what went on at the
e. A devoted supporter of symphony, a line at the theater, as she drew it to rom her world drinking, card play-dal and divorce.
ding of my marriage by court decree ly distressed her. Less, however, for orce might mean of hurt to me than it revealed of the breakdown of famon and standards. I was the third of children to go through the divorce e repeated several times, almost fear-don't know what your father would ght I knew. Or close enough. As a y I heard him rival the gloomy elo-f Jeremiah on the subject of my older

's elopement with an artist-musician, equent career in Europe as a painter eturn to Boston with two children, a exhibition-worthy canvases and the rce among my father's descendants.
long before Barbara, four years than Joy and ten years my senior, road to Reno.
ing from Nevada to Groton, Bar-been met at the front door by my
A small but regally imposing woman, she effectively blocked the way. "You may come in, Barbara, because this is your home," she said. "But I cannot permit you to bring that suitcase into my house. When you borrowed it from me you did not say you intended taking it to Reno. Unpack it on the back porch and then put it in the shed. I could never bring myself to use it again."

It was tacitly agreed that my divorce, like my connection with the theater, was not a topic for conversation even within the family circle. My mother succeeded for a number of years in keeping Groton in ignorance of the fact that I had ceased to be a banker—and therefore, by Groton standards, respectable—and had become a producer, and beyond the pale.

When I taxed her with distortion of the truth she defended herself indignantly: "No one ever asked me point-blank if you were in the theater; therefore I told no lies. I never mentioned your occupation unless I was compelled to do so. Then I invariably spoke of your 'business.' If people chose to think this was something to do with banks, there was no need for me to inform them otherwise."

It was our policy at the Playhouse to bring there the greatest stars available for one week's engagement, on the theory that the summer people would willingly pay Broadway prices for the best that Broadway had to offer.

I was making plans for the 1939 season, congratulating myself on having secured Jane Cowl, Ethel Barrymore, Ina Claire, Walter Hampden and Edward Everett Horton among others, when playwright Samson Raphaelson called upon me at my office in New York.

Rafe asked how we were fixed for a supporting resident company that summer. His wife, Dorshka, wanted to try a season of summer stock. She was a friend of Murial Williams, whose husband, Francis Hart, was our press agent and my oldest friend.

Every day is just like every other day of the month for women who have discovered Meds®—the safer, softer tampon. In Junior, Regular, Super absorbencies.

Before committing myself on Dorshka, I asked Rafe how his new play was coming along. John Golden had acquired it as a vehicle for Gertrude Lawrence. Rafe said that Skylark was then in rehearsal on the road: but, he conceded, it needed more work to be ready for Broadway in the fall. Although I was ready to engage Dorshka anyway, my New England instinct toward a good trade prompted me to put forth the suggestion that Rafe persuade Miss Lawrence to star in Skylark at the Cape Playhouse the third week in August.

At the time—April—it seemed a perfect arrangement by which everyone benefited. The deal was made. I saw our season, which already bade fair to be very good, mounting to a brilliant and successful climax. This mood of exaltation lasted until July. Then deflation set in under a barrage of commands and demands issued by John Golden's office as "from Miss Lawrence."

What the Golden office requested for Miss Lawrence's two weeks' stay at the Cape was a cottage by the lake, sufficiently near the Playhouse for convenience but distant enough for complete privacy. Besides generous accommodations for herself and for guests she might wish to invite, the star would need rooms for a personal maid and a secretary, garage space for her town car, and healthful and safe playgrounds for Mac, her West Highland terrier. I was instructed to place an order with a florist to keep the vases in Miss Lawrence's cottage filled with fresh flowers, preferably lilies, her favorites. And whoever I deputized as commissary officer should be at pains to see that Miss Lawrence's refrigerator was well stocked with a list of delicacies that ranged from asparagus, avocados and caviar through melons, pâté de foie gras, quail, rainbow trout, sweetbreads, Veuve Cliquot and vichyssoise.

Nothing in my previous experience with stars had prepared me for anything like this. Jane Cowl had exhibited no such delusions of grandeur. The previous season Miss Ethel Barrymore had arrived by bus—and in the middle of the night before we expected her and were prepared to give the First Lady of the American Theater a gala welcome. If a couple of stay-ups had not noticed her strolling unconcernedly about the grounds, Miss Barrymore might have had to pitch her own tent on the grass for that night. Something, she said offhandedly, she would not have minded at all.

What, I thought darkly, did Gertrude Lawrence think a summer theater was? And who did she think she was? I could tell her in less than ten words: a spoiled, pampered actress with a prima-donna complex. Much of my rage was directed against myself for allowing my memory of a slim white-clad figure bringing a moment of magic to a sordid stage alley to outweigh the tales I had heard of Miss Lawrence's taste for the settings and properties of a royal existence.

I recounted these demands indignantly to Radie Harris, a newspaper columnist and friend of Gertrude.

"Oh, that's not Gee's doing," Radie informed me. "She adores caviar, it's true. But most of that chi-chi is Golden's idea of building up her star value. Since Susan and God, John thinks nothing's too good for his Golden Girl."

I said that if Miss Lawrence expected a lot of kowtowing she was in for a considerable jolt. The Cape was not Mayfair.

"You're the one due for a jolt if you think she's like that," said Radie. "Wait till you see her at the station."

"What station? I'm not going to meet her."

"You must meet her at the train," Radie counseled. "She'll expect it."

"And she'll expect a strip of red carpet from Yarmouth to her cottage, I suppose. No, sir, that's not in the contract. And if Lawrence stages any tantrums—as I hear she can if she doesn't get everything she wants when she wants it—she can take the next train back. Contract or no contract!"

Radie cooled me off. "Look, you started the summer-theater star system. You want stars, you'll have to treat them as stars."

"On the stage; not off."

I doubted I would recognize Miss Lawrence without footlights between us, but finally I allowed myself to be persuaded to head the welcoming committee, which included Fran Hart, Radie Harris and the Raphaelsons.

It rained the night she came. Slanting curtains of rain and salt-tasting mist were blown across the bogs. The foghorn at Truro Lighthouse kept up its periodic wail. It was one of the nights when you have to like the Cape very much not to add your despairing howl to the foghorn's and depart at top speed.

The train drew to a stop and people began tumbling out of it, hurrying for shelter from the storm. I watched a trim young colored woman carrying a jewel case in one hand and what was patently a make-up case in the other descend, followed by another woman holding a supercilious white terrier. Piece after piece of handsome luggage grew into a sizable hillock on the platform. We advanced to the car steps regardless of the pelting rain. Then, with a timing I mentally applauded, a slim, golden-haired figure appeared at the top of the car steps.

She stood poised, a little above me, darkness surrounding her, the lamplight on her eager face. She caught sight of the Raphaelsons. "Darlings!" she cried, and tripped down the steps to their embraces. At Radie's call I emerged from behind the baggage to be presented for the second time to Miss Lawrence.

On the drive to the cottage she sat beside me, composed and deliciously fragrant. We two were alone, following the car's headlights through the dripping countryside. "That first dark rainy night," was how she spoke of it afterward. It had rained in London, too, the first time I saw her. And it rained the night we were married. "I love rain," Gertrude said then. "It's a lucky omen. Rain brought us together. Remember?"

That night, fumbling for conversation as she was so quiet, I apologized for the weather. "But the glass is rising," I added. "It will clear by morning."

"Glorious! I shall lie for hours on the beach in the sun, alone. I'll pack a lunch. I adore picnics, don't you?"

"No," I said flatly. "I don't."

It occurred to me afterward that if she had been graciously opening a gate through which I might slip to join her on her beach in the sun alone, I had slammed it rudely in her face.

This thought drove home the increasingly disturbing realization that I lacked by nature and training a happy facility in human relations which more and more seemed to me not only valuable but indispensable in the art of living. It was easy to blame this lack on my Puritan heritage and on a strict Puritan upbringing. Though it had never occurred to me to doubt that affection existed between my parents, and between them and their children, I never witnessed any exhibition of this. I was inoculated early with the idea that demonstrative language, gift giving—except books and a five-dollar gold piece at Christmas and on birthdays—or kisses, save at solemn moments, and then always on the forehead or cheek, were distinctly bad taste. They were the sort of thing the foreigners employed in father's factory at Watertown might indulge in. We, of the Simon-pure Massachusetts strain, were expected to have more restraint in the matter of physical manifestations of affection. I have no recollection of mother and me exchanging kisses until the very last years of her life—after we had both succumbed to Gertrude's warming influence. Father's few and laconic communications to me were invariably signed bluntly, "Yours truly, Father."

But that night, chafing under the bonds of my own repressions, I deplored my New England heritage. The greater my urge to be charming and gallant, the heavier my silence lay as a pall on conversation.

Gertrude let my rudeness lie Presently I heard her humming a herself. A happy tune, I was ple serve. She broke it off to ask, "I if I let down the window?"

This was a harbinger of the fu next decade, Gertrude was always ing windows, both literally and fig

"You weren't very friendly," me some four months later.

"I was terrified."

"All six feet four of you? W you watched me when you though know it? All through that first we were rehearsing, at odd times I w glimpse of you somewhere—in th or in the commissary. You never near my cottage. And you would l me with that Massachusetts look picious. And yet rather wistful rabbit peering through a hedge."

"You fascinated me."

"You didn't show it. You ma that you didn't like me. Finally I a 'What's the matter with Richard has never once asked me to have him, or dropped around for a dr said it was because you were born o Rock. 'Born there?' I said. 'He Rock.' "

At the time this conversation in New York, my friendship witl though begun so inauspiciously tha gust night, had progressed to the p found myself waiting impatiently ing before leaving for the office i that she might telephone me, a formed a habit of doing several tin
She usually woke early no matter h had gone to bed. And she always alert and full of ideas. She could stand why so many people object roused for a chat before they had their first cup of coffee. I told her believed it was my habit of early made her become interested in me friend, later as a husband.

"It was one of your assets," sh and smiled widely.

Her early call might be because to discuss with me the news fro which she had just heard from H radio. It was the first winter of th winter of what the commentators ning to call the "phony war." Inte Gertrude was acutely concerned turn of events: "Richard, is Fra trusted? As England's ally, I mean

Always pressing upon her was a of responsibility and anxiety for he Pamela, then leaving her teens, whisked home from her Swiss boarc immediately after the declaration c was finding the adjustment to life in difficult. Gertrude was insistent tha on with her studies.

She talked to me frequently ab who showed the usual teen-ager's to find herself with any definiteness something which Gertrude could stand. She had known exactly what and was in no doubt of her abilit since she was six.

Her childhood had been utterly from Pam's. Hers had been a r tumble affair. She had emerged fro the steady philosophy expressed by ney carnival operator which she ofte
"What you lose in the swings, yo the roundabouts." The only advan accorded her was free lessons at M Conti's dramatics school. In contrast been sent to Brearley in New York dean in England and to exclusive schools on the Continent. In all the tions the fact that she was Gertr rence's daughter gave her immediat

"Pam was born on the night of worst air raid in the First World W trude told me early in our friendsh in the chorus of Tabs. My husba needed the money desperately so much longer than I should have. Th
I was about to quit, my big chance
Lillie fell off a horse and broke her c
I was her understudy and got her p

A plastic circlet slips through a casing at the waist, with ample overlap in the back. The halter also clips on and is made by folding a square yard in half. The fabric, 1″ black-and-white check with giant sequins forming design on white squares.

The same clip-on skirt in beige cotton with bands of peasant embroidery and colored rickrack. The blouse, also trimmed with rickrack, is Vogue Design No. 7934, 12 to 20.

The clips are wonderful for easy-to-make aprons from cotton scarves or bandannas. Skirt clip, 69 cents; apron clip, 59 cents; halter or bib clip, 39 cents. Many dime stores carry these plastic circlets; if yours does not, we'll tell you where to buy.

ed myself into Bea's costume and t the baby wouldn't come until I l that I was good.
nade it to the nursing home one a performance. Later, as I lay there the drone of the Zeppelins and the e bombs, I said that I'd work to ughter everything I had never had.
d her to be happy. I still do."

es I wondered exactly how it came I had become this sort of family ould only surmise it was because hat Gertrude wanted most at that y in our friendship, in one of her nts of self-revelation, she wrote to course of that winter, "You have ny life a joy that was strangely lack-t a callous, unloving woman. I have ny of life's weaker people leaning on metimes I can't quite see the justice en have been in love with her. They ht romance and gaiety into her life, her own abundant fount of these drawn in even larger amounts. But em, as far as I could learn, had ever he one thing she had lacked all her stability. Call it security. Gertrude ment called it friendship. I had my for it: love. But the time had not n she wanted to call it that.

back to those weeks at the Cape, I dispute her accusation of stand-at least for the first ten days of her ennis. Actually, the standoffishness ounded of longing, acute shyness, rance of how to establish contact ature of Gertrude's will-o'-the-wisp and the normal masculine fear of fool of oneself. It might have tri-as it threatened to do, and thereby he course of several lives, if Gertrude ken the matter into her own hands.
rning her secretary appeared at my a note, penciled on two envelopes:

A.: Tonight I have two young friends er to play piano for us after the show.
have two pianos in the private room at ant after the play tonight? And would and be my "beau" for the party?
Love, GEE.

o piano players were talented ama-Howard twins, who had played for and Bea Lillie at private parties in t was a gay, youthful sort of party rude in sky-blue pajamas singing all the guests asked for. She was a far he imperious leading lady I had been ect. Before it was over I had asked e supper with me at the commissary ing night.
her back to the cottage after that sked if she had been to Scargo Lake.
ime afterward she told me, "The nded Scandinavian. I thought you ing on a travelogue. When you said
d like to show it to me by moonlight
'How ducky! By the time he gets it, I'll be too old to see!' Then, to ment, you drove off with me."

he expedition to the lake which ad-Playhouse grounds, we explored the noonlight almost every night of Ger-
y. She was quickly responsive to nat-
y. To the eerie emptiness of the crangs; the wind-wrought dunes, their glittering under the moon; and the rim little villages. These things apongly to something in her which may an inheritance from her Danish foretold me about how she had gone to to try to find her father's people.
ame was Arthur Klasen. That's my , really. Gertrude Alexandra Dag-ence Klasen—if you care to remem-if she had found her relations.

. They turned out to be solid worke who still couldn't understand how produced a vagabond singer like my s proud of her Danish blood. "I'm Klasens—a worker." She spread her in the moonlight, and I was as surprised as others have been. Gertrude's hands were not the slim, tapering sort one might have assumed she possessed. They were strong, long and capable. "They're working hands," she said proudly. "There's very little I can't do with them. Or that I haven't done. If something were to stop my acting tomorrow it would be horrible, I'd much rather die—but I wouldn't starve. Not as long as I had the use of my hands."

On the last Sunday of her stay she gave a lunch at Latham's Inn at Brewster. When I arrived I found Gertrude much exercised because she had just heard that my mother and sister were guests there. Why hadn't I told her? Why hadn't she met them? Was it too late to ask them to join the luncheon party?

I told her Barbara was there to recover from an operation. She and my mother had been to see a matinee of Skylark—a momentous occasion for mother, whose experience of the theater at that time was limited to a performance of The Old Homestead to which father had taken her on the report that the drama held a great moral lesson. But Barbara still tired easily. She kept to her room. My mother, though in good health and very active, felt she should stay with her daughter.

Gertrude said that she understood perfectly. But it seemed too bad for the rest of us to be having fun while my mother and sister were out of it. She'd like to do something for them. How would it be if she sent them a bottle of champagne?

I didn't like to say that champagne at Sunday lunch was something my mother would not have understood. I doubt if she had ever seen a bottle. I am sure she had never tasted it. The Joys were rigidly "dry." Mother had never forgiven Mr. Shattuck, the leading grocer in Groton, whose people had been grocers on the same site and had had the family trade for three or four generations, because after repeal he had opened a package store. Regretfully she took away her trade and gave it to a paris often this...

The difference between this...

and this...

venu whose tenure in Groton was not more than seventy years.

"No champagne," I said firmly. "Mother doesn't like it."

"What does she like?"

"Ice cream." This, I figured, was entirely safe.

"I'll see that some goes up to her," Gertrude said and disappeared kitchenward.

Once behind the swinging doors, she called for "Lots of ice cream, please. And a large spoon. And maraschino cherries. And somebody please chop some nuts."

Gertrude happily stirred the cherries and nuts into the vanilla ice cream, added a liberal amount of whipped cream and then poured on brandy with a generous hand. The coupé was divided into two portions, heaped on fancy plates, given a top dressing of cherries, nuts and cream and then taken upstairs, "with Miss Lawrence's compliments."

Mrs. Latham carried up the tray herself. Its elegance seemed to demand this degree of respect. My mother opened the door. The message from Miss Lawrence was overlooked in her excited admiration of the confection. She simply took it for granted that the inn had provided her and Barbara with this pleasant Sunday treat and she thanked Mrs. Latham graciously.

My sister had heard the message and her nose had told her that the flavor which mother declared delicious and unusual was nothing less than the best cognac. While mother praised the thoughtfulness and culinary skill of the inn's new management, and planned a letter to Aunt Alice on the subject, they finished their coupé. Only then did Barbara enlighten mother first as to the source of the gift—the actress who was starring at her son's theater that week—and then as to that delicious, refreshing flavor. "It's brandy, the finest brandy."

"I don't know which made her maddest," Barbara told me later. "Having accepted a gift from an actress, or having been duped into tasting liquor, or having enjoyed both sins as much as she did. Of course she was furious at me for letting her eat the ice cream when I knew what was in it. But most of all, she blames you for bringing that actress to the Cape and to the inn where she is staying. I told her actresses were part of your business now. 'He doesn't have to sit at meals with them,' she snapped. 'Your father didn't eat in restaurants with the workers in his factory.'"

"I hope you told her," I said, "that this is something else for which she can blame Mr. Roosevelt."

"I didn't have to," Barbara said. "She said it before I could."

DURING that winter in New York I got into the habit of dropping in at Gertrude's apartment about five-thirty in the afternoon. I would have a drink while she ate her simple but substantial dinner—chops or steak, green vegetables, potatoes, a salad, fruit. "You can't do good work on an empty stomach," she would say. "I've had to do it, and I know."

At six, her chauffeur would be at the door with the Rolls to drive her to the theater. Sometimes I would drive down with her and take her to the stage door. No one was ever permitted in her dressing room before or during the play. "The theater is a place for work," she would say. "After the show is the time to have fun." And yet, as Moss Hart wrote about her, no one he ever knew had her ability to make the hard grind of rehearsing and putting a show together fun.

She had, too, an equal capacity for getting her own way and whatever she wanted both in the theater and at home. She never made a scene to achieve this or went into a tantrum or became imperious and overbearing. She never had to. All those who served her, though they were well paid for their services, performed these with a devotion and loyalty that no amount of money could buy. They were quite shamelessly her court. Keeping Gertrude happy was their primary concern.

There was Dorothy, the English girl who had been her maid for many years and through innumerable ups and downs on both the Atlantic.

Corinne Turner, a nurse who o ally went on tour with Gertrude after her health, was another in t coterie. Turner would commandeer with a kitchenette where she would simple, wholesome meals. After sever of this healthful regime Gertrude wo training to indulge in her favorite a with sauce hollandaise, beef tartare o thermidor. But she never let Turn about these debauches because she k feelings would be hurt.

IN the theater there was Carrie, her many years, whom Gertrude consider out peer until Hazel was engaged as assistant during the long run of Lad Dark, with its many changes of costum faithful Carrie retired, Hazel took stay for the rest of Gertrude's life.

All these conspired to give Gertru she wanted—the feeling of being look with love.

Heading the conspiracy in the the Jack Potter, Gertrude's manager when went on tour. Jack had been introd Gertrude, in London, by the Prince o Loving the theater, and serving it gl understood Gertrude completely. Thi standing extended to the many tim Hazel would waylay him backstage information: "Miss Lawrence is lones her husband tonight. You take her ou per and make her laugh." Keeping G happy on tour was not the smallest c jobs as company n

Blessed are they who have nothing to say, and cannot be persuaded to say it.

—JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL

Whenever she there was an est ritual connected w departure in whic one of the court own part. They as at her house and her to the statio had a particular luggage assigned to a responsibility. Hazel was custodia make-up box. Dorothy had the overn and picnic basket. Turner's attentio devoted to Mackie and his luggage. T odd other pieces, including a case fill the blue silk sheets and special fine with which Dorothy would make up h in the stateroom aboard the train, w chauffeur's affair.

With Jack Potter as chief dragom caravan would get away to an early sta trude insisted on this. She always affirm no one who knew anything about t would get to the station less than forty before the train's scheduled departure. always there herself as early as this, a her entourage about her would sit p reading a book or working a puzzle u train was called.

The ties of friendship which united G and the Holtzmann family in New Yor when Noel Coward brought her to Holtzmann, who was his lawyer. Fan her brother David undertook to untan trude's badly scrambled affairs on bo of the Atlantic. Since Gertrude's legal, sional and personal affairs were inex intertwined, her relationship with the manns grew inevitably close. To keep G out of trouble it was necessary to exerc trol of her expenditures.

A budget was set up; all bills were c and paid through their office. Gertrude readily to this arrangement which remo worry from her. Only when she succun one of her recurrent bouts of extravaga became what Noel characterized as "i generous" did the restrictions on her e tures gall her. Then, with the same aban a dipsomaniac going on a drinking sp would deliberately charge at all the sho ing clothes, jewels, furniture for hers others. At such times she would caution or Turner or whoever else might know wild extravagance, "Don't tell Miss Fa Mr. David." Sometimes she was not ab ing to reinforce this plea and draw the the conspiracy against her legal advise gift from her wardrobe or jewel box.

eemed to occur to her that the purld be checked by the credit man-the Holtzmann office. When this anny would be stern. She gave no e would remind Gertrude of her aful experiences in bankruptcy.
tter of fact, as the years went by,
trude remained warmly generous, lly acquired a better idea of the oney and showed more discretion it. At Christmas she would say to give each other something for the e year when I asked her to go with er's to choose something she would eply was, "Do you know what I for Christmas, darling? An electric hine."
chine was sent to our house at ery summer when Gertrude went to r her holiday she took pride in run-w curtains for Star Cottage and for ouse, as well as some cotton frocks including one to be worn at the always gave on my birthday in married Gertrude I found that bey and David a solid platoon of zmanns was arrayed; all were de-ertrude. She was like an adopted at big family. After our marriage nt me to Fanny's parents, Henry sa Holtzmann, for their parental clover-shaped glass curio cabinet g room, its shelves crowded with an of objects, caught Gertrude's

the family museum; we started it ere married," Mrs. Holtzmann ex-pening the cabinet, she picked up a "Crumbs from our wedding cake," red softly—"a long, long time ago."
a yellowed bit of lace from her eil, the first tooth of each of their nd grandchildren, baby shoes, and other mementos of a long, happy tzmann turned to Gertrude. "The ugh at mamma for treasuring these.

entiment went out with the horse
. But what would life be without
"

e caught my arm. "Oh, Richard, erful! We must start a museum of 'll look around for a cabinet." But ad a chance, for next day the curio as delivered to us as a wedding ith a note from Mrs. Holtzmann:
send you happy things to rememmily museum" was installed in a s corner of the living room, and mmediately placed in it the bride from our wedding cake. It is still

One member of Gertrude's household viewed our increasing intimacy with unconcealed distrust. This was Mackie. Gertrude often said thoughtfully that dogs were notable judges of character. A dog could always tell about a person. Remarks like these increased my sensitiveness to Mackie's obvious low opinion of me. The sturdy white rough-coated terrier, like every pet Gertrude ever had, was absorbedly and possessively in love with her. He was fond of Dorothy and he tolerated Pam. The other members of Gertrude's inner circle he patronized or ignored. Me, he unqualifiedly despised.

"I don't believe you like dogs," Gertrude accused me one day when I accompanied her and Mackie on a brisk walk through the more remote regions of Central Park. Mackie's physician had prescribed more exercise in the fresh air and Gertrude had accepted the prescription as equally good for her. And for me.

I replied hastily that I did like dogs, though my experience of them was not extensive. "I don't believe Mackie likes me," I countered.

"Well, you aren't very gracious," she said. "You haven't thrown a single stick for him all afternoon. Don't you think Mackie has feelings too?"

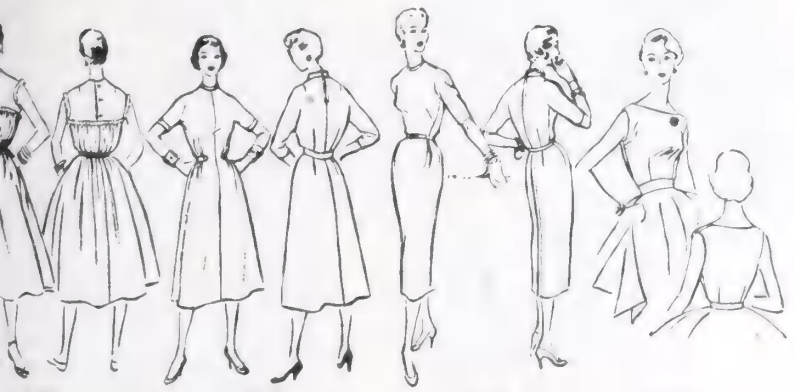
"I really know more about cats," I said quickly. I produced several anecdotes connected with Archimedes, the huge tiger cat of alley antecedents which was the only pet tolerated by my parents during my boyhood. Needless to say, father gave him his name.

Two days later a pet shop delivered to me a pair of Siamese cats. The card attached to their velvet-lined basket read: "To Richard—from Gertrude." On the reverse was written the names she had given them—David and Wally. They were beautiful, exotic, disdainful creatures; aloof and enigmatic, they assumed possession of my hearthrug and of the apartment.

Barbara, who has always been enthusiastically attached to animals of any sort, and her husband, Harrison Hobart, looked at David and Wally with lifted eyebrows. My sister gave her unsought opinion: "You must be in love with Gertrude Lawrence. It would do you good, Richie, to be in love with someone like her," Barbara went on. "In fact, the improvement has begun. There's not quite so much of the dried salt cod about you."

I retorted that merely because she wrote stories was no proof of her ability to psychoanalyze me.

"It would interest me to know if Gertrude Lawrence is in love with you," she persisted. "I wonder what she sees in you. You're not clever or amusing or outstanding in any way. She's at the top of her profession, an outstanding success and making a lot of money. What have you—or any man, for that matter—to offer her, except ——"



ER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATTERNS ON PAGES 96 & 98

gue Design No. 8352. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 18, 30 to 36. 60c.

gue Design No. 8378. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 60c.

gue Design No. 8383. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.

gue Design No. 7934. "Very Easy to Make" blouse: 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 40c.

8352 8378 8383 7931

CLOROX® makes linens more than white... it makes them sanitary, too!

Clorox-clean cottons and linens are cleaner two ways: in appearance, for Clorox removes dinginess, stains, even scorch and mildew . . . and in hygienic cleanliness, too, for no other home laundering product equals Clorox in germ-killing efficiency!

And, especially important with youngsters' laundry, Clorox deodorizes . . . leaves sleepers, underclothes, crib sheets fresh smelling whether dried indoors or out. Also, thanks to an exclusive, patented formula, Clorox is free from caustic, extra gentle. And being a liquid, it contains no gritty particles to damage wash and washer.

Keep a bottle of CLOROX in your kitchen to brighten and disinfect your sink!

Yes, besides removing stains from porcelain, enamel, tile and linoleum surfaces, Clorox also deodorizes and disinfects . . . provides a type of non-poisonous disinfection recommended by hundreds of public health departments. See the Clorox label for many more work-saving and housecleaning hints.

© 1954, Clorox Chemical Co.

When it's CLOROX-clean . . . it's SAFER for family health!

I asked her what was the exception.

"You're a nice person, Richie," my sister mused. "You're what our generation, unfortunately, feels embarrassed to call . . . 'good.'"

"That's very sweet but equally ridiculous," I replied. "I'm certainly no better than the next man, no matter what my sister says."

Barbara continued, "It's true. I've always known it, but it's only in late years I've realized that integrity of character—goodness—is better to live with than cleverness or shrewdness or a genius for making money. There aren't too many nice people in the world either. When you find one, you feel like holding him close. Maybe that's what Gertrude Lawrence sees in you," she said. "I hope so."

"Why?" I asked.

"Because if she does, and if that is what she wants, you will make each other terribly happy. I'd like you to be happy."

When my sister and her husband left she did something extraordinary. She put her arms around me and kissed me.

"Good luck, Richie," she whispered.

MID-MARCH that year brought a turn of unexpected balmy spring weather. Suddenly New York looked frowsy and down at heels. I was unfeignedly glad of some family business which necessitated my going to Groton to talk over matters with my mother. I had a longing for the little white villages wreathed in the smoke of burning winter-rubbish heaps, for the red barns where men would be getting plows ready, for the ruddy gold of willows in the river meadows.

I wanted spring, as spring is only in New England.

When I told Gertrude I was going and would be away for several days, she was frankly and rather pathetically envious. She would give anything, she said, to get out into the real country for even a single day.

"When you get back we'll go off for a long day in the car," she planned. "Someday when I haven't a matinee or an appointment I can't break. We'll take the picnic basket, and we'll find some lovely place where we can walk in the real woods the way you used to do at Northfield."

"Northfield?" I said, surprised.

"I don't believe you realize how often you talk about it," she said. "Your house, Sunny Shadow, and the chalet with the text carved on it like the old, old house in Chester, and the hill you used to climb so you could see all the colored mountains."

"The Green Mountains and the White Mountains aren't all the ranges you see from Northfield," I informed her. "South are the Berkshires. And on very clear days, off in the northwest there's a line of blue people say is the Adirondacks."

"You see," she pointed out. "You remember every little thing. The part about Northfield is the part of your little boyhood that you like best."

There was a great deal of truth in what Gertrude said, though I had not suspected her of discovering it. I realized that she knew me better, had fathomed deeper the reserves of my nature than I thought possible of one as volatile, as buoyant as she. It struck me that our conversation was habitually either very gay, inconsequential, innocently childlike, or concerned factually with the war, the state of the world or the larger aspects of the theater. It was seldom concerned with personalities, and never with gossip. Gertrude disliked both as sincerely as I did. She never encouraged those around her to indulge in them. Her theater maid was expected to report to her any illness or trouble that befell a member of the company or one of the stage crew, in which event she immediately took generous and practical action. But no scandal was whispered in her dressing room.

She had spoken to me occasionally of her own childhood. Always lightly and with a total want of self-pity which was characteristic and which, unconsciously, added greatly to her gallantry. In a few striking phrases she made me see Kennington Oval, in Clapham, with its dreary, shabby-genteel houses, the wandering organ grinder and little Gertie Lawrence leading all the other children of the neighborhood in a dance after him; Dad, her stepfather, with his ginger-colored mustache, his bowler cocked jauntily, and his deprecating manner when there was no money to pay the rent. I felt that I knew her mother, who had been named Alice after a royal princess. Mother had come down in the world from her status as the daughter of a master builder with a brother employed in some way about the royal stables. Very much the lady was mother when they were in funds. And when they were not, clinging to her wilting feather boa as a symbol of gentility.

Gertrude's own father, "too fond of his glass," had separated from her mother and faded out of her life when she was very young. For years she saw nothing of him, until at the age of thirteen she ran away from home. Then Arthur, summoned one night to the stage door of the music hall where he was appearing as star of a minstrel show, was startled to hear the firm announcement: "I'm Gertie, and I've come to stay."

What she meant, of course, was that she had come to him to help her find a place in the theater. For several years she toured and lived with him and Rose, the warmhearted show girl who loved him, slaved for him, shielded him when he was drinking and supported him when the managers fired him. At Rose's urging, she struck out on her own. When she was lucky she found a job in the chorus of some musical show touring the provinces; when she wasn't, she lived on short rations in the Theatrical Girls' Boardinghouse. So it had gone until she found her first chance in one of André Charlot's revues.

How different all this was from the ordered stability which surrounded me from my birth!

My parents were both middle-aged when I was born. My father was fifty-two; my mother, ten years younger. The staid pattern of their lives had been established for many years. It is recorded vividly in mother's photograph albums.

We are all there: mother in a well-boned basque and a stiff sailor hat, with a croquet mallet, on the lawn of Grandmother Joy's house in Groton; father in a frock coat, a Bible under his arm, about to depart for his Sunday-afternoon Bible-study class. My sister Joy, who was fifteen when I was born, is there riding a bicycle, in a stiffly starched Gibson-girl shirtwaist. And Barbara, with other members of the Wellesley hockey team. It is somewhat embarrassing to recognize myself in the scrawny small boy in ludicrously floppy, striped bathing drawers and shirt looking apprehensively at the sea.

Our homes are there too—Great-grandfather Joy's house on Groton's Main Street and his ultimate resting place in Groton's cemetery, surrounded by forebears and descendants, and protected from lesser breeds by a handsome white-painted wrought-iron fence of which mother was exceedingly proud. No other family in the cemetery had such an ornament. She always spoke condescendingly of my father's family who were buried in Upton—"A manufacturing town with no historical associations. And in an unfenced, open plot."

The first home I remember was a bow-windowed mansard-roofed house on Gardner Street in Boston. My father had three older brothers, all married and living in Back Bay and Brookline, with Uncle Samuel Nelson Aldrich, as head of the family, exercising patriarchal authority from his large Beacon Street house.

Every Sunday afternoon, except in summer when the various Aldriches scattered to their country homes, Uncle Sam's brothers, their wives and progeny paid a ceremonial call on the head of the tribe. While our elders conversed, we children sat quietly as we could on the somewhat scratchy horsehair-covered furniture, and looked at one another disparagingly. As the youngest of the younger generation, younger even than many of Uncle Sam's grandchildren, I came in for the largest amount of disparagement.

After Uncle Sam died the chieftainship passed to my father. The relations began coming to our house on Sunday afternoons. This was a little easier on me because I could make a pretext of getting a drink of water and duck from the pantry up the back stairs to my own room and to the book I would have previously concealed beneath my pillow.

The topics considered suitable for Sunday conversation were rigorously limited. Nothing worldly, except investments—in bonds, naturally; not in common stocks—was mentionable. As no Sunday papers were permitted in our home, there was no up-to-the-minute discussion of current events, except the sermons at various churches attended by the family.

We were all Congregationalists and, as such, militantly opposed to Unitarians. My father was exceedingly bitter in his antagonism. I believe when his sister-in-law, my Aunt Alice, became engaged to Richard Arms, later a master at the famous Deerfield Academy, but a Unitarian, father was so shocked that at first he asserted he would not attend the wedding. Family influence was brought to bear on Doctor Arms, but he stanchly replied that much as he loved Aunt Alice, he could not bring himself to avow what he did not truly believe. If it became a matter of forsaking her or his religious tenets, Aunt Alice would come off second.

This unflinching loyalty to a matter of conscience could not fail to impress all Aunt Alice's relations. Even my father conceded that this proved Richard Arms to be a man of sound principle, albeit misguided.

Actually, father's aversion to Unitarianism could be broken down into one part defense of what he considered the orthodox pe two parts in dignation at the inroad faith had made in the Congregatio Entire congregations, exercising th religious autonomy, had embraced tarian doctrine. What was still m givable in father's eyes, they had them the titled deeds of their mee and other church property. As a bu he considered this a piratical pra sight of Groton's beautiful histo originally a Congregational mee now turned to Unitarian use, while ished Congregationalists worshi smaller, plainer building less well pl village, never failed to infuriate hi

In spite of his prejudice, my fathe was sincere and deep. As fervently lieved in the Commonwealth of Ma and the sanctity of private enterpr lieved in the efficacy of prayer and th of Divine Grace. Through his adm Dwight L. Moody, he was until h strong supporter of the missions by the evangelist in the slums of cities.

For many years he and my moth attend the Bible conferences which every summer at East Northfield, setts. So fond did my parents becon gatherings, and of Northfield itself rented the Swiss chalet which be father's Boston friend, the Rev. Her as a summer home. My earliest me Northfield are of this steep-roofed house with the text carved on th gable: "God's Providence is M itance." I was still a schoolboy wh bought land on Rustic Ridge and bu house which he named, not inapp
"Sunny Shadow." This became through summer vacations which in length as father withdrew more from direct participation in his bu of us loved it; I, particularly.

To me, and to Fran Hart, who each summer, the great charm of was the untrammeled freedom we We were free to roam at will in the explore old Indian trails. I used book—preferably one of Henty's tales that I had already read many to Garnet Rock and lie there flat on ach, living once more the hero's pausing, at the turn of a page, to l from my height onto the roofs and the village, and across to the Ver
New Hampshire hills.

PERMEATING this simple outdoor ex which a boy had time to think thoughts and dream his own dream interruption, was the life of Northf
All summer long the successive co filled the village with Bible worker
dents, and the missionaries on furlo posts in distant lands. Many wer panied by their wives and children spoke as familiarly of Bangkok and Soochow and Dakar, as I of Bost
mon. Some of the missionaries wer Christians" and would appear at th ences in the dress of their countryme lime green, peach and primrose ye long straight Chinese robes of viole cock-blue silk, moved through the clerical black, pepper-and-salt and w when the faithful gathered for pra ings, sermons or for the sedate afte ceptions.

My parents had a special fondne foreign missionaries. When father Sunny Shadow he made the architec a large dining room and front por were to enable him to bring as many missionaries and conferees home t dinner whenever he felt moved to pitality.

As an industrialist, father not ur was interested in the production cos verts. One reason he liked having the aries at our house was that this gav opportunity to take soundings of th from a practical cost-accounting would get out his pocket notebool down their replies to such pertinent as: "How much did it cost to ope school and preaching station last ye

"She said, 'Be a dear and ask him to wait.'"

w converts did you make? What n of these do you figure will stick, many will be backsliders? How do res compare with last year's report?"
l total up the figures and study them it was always a moot matter with her it was a sound investment pracntribute to the missions in Moslem where converts were few, and consexpensive to produce, or to turn this ion over to the work in China where s were gained in large numbers and ess a head.

Rodgers and Hammerstein were at The King and I, which Gertrude had hem to be made into a musical for her, my mother, then nearing ninety, a Margaret Landon's book, Anna and of Siam, from which the play was be-. My mother replied that, greatly as ed Mrs. Landon's book, to her mind ow the standard of Anna Leonowens' y, The English Governess at the Sia-rt, a first edition of which had been on s for more than sixty years. She added vas sending this to Gertrude with her l if Gertrude and I would come up to she would be happy to tell us some Siam and of Mrs. Anna which she told by missionaries from Bangkok, known the latter. That copy of The Governess was one of Gertrude's most l possessions.
nter of Northfield was the auditorium eetings were held daily. Children encouraged to attend the sermons.
daily outdoor sunset services on op belonged to us.
ervices on Round Top were prently musical. None of my musical s equals that of hearing and joining y's great hymn:

e were ninety and nine that safely lay e shelter of the fold, ne was out on the hills away,
ff from the gates of gold ——"

ne other hymn, sung under momen-cumstances, has ever moved me so This was at a special V-E Day service, minster Abbey, when the voices of s of American sailors and soldiers e abbey choir in The Battle Hymn of ublic.
rough acquaintance with the hymns enerations of Northfield conferees ng gives one access to the source so many song hits of our time have wn.

UDE had a way of singing softly and usly as she went about the house; ppy bumbling bee. One day when my vas visiting us, the song was When the es Pitter Patter. Mother listened a frowning at what she thought were e's unwarranted liberties with the Then she went to the piano and erome Kern's hit as Ira D. Sankey y wrote it.
re," she demanded of Gertrude, "did n that Northfield hymn?"
hfield?" Gertrude said. Her eyes, g meaningfully, sought and held mine.
other explained at some length about ld, adding a trifle wistfully, "I wish t all go there again. Richard and you am sure some of Richard's happiest s are of Northfield."
ow they are," my wife said with un-conviction. "If it hadn't been for ld, I don't know if Richard and I ver have married." She dropped her be audible only to me. The laughter in spread to her lips. "We know, don't hard, that without Northfield, and means to us, there have been times r marriage would have gone on the

Gertrude played Amanda in Noel
's Private Lives, it was Alec Wollhimsical notion to call her by the f her successive roles. But from then ess triumphed over whimsey, and to Aleck" she was forever "Amanda."

In the minds of many others, too, she became permanently associated with that impulsive, infuriating, hot-tempered but enchanting heroine.

In Private Lives, Amanda and her husband adopt the word "sollocks" as a private signal. No matter how furious a quarrel is raging, both are honor-bound to respect a truce of two silent minutes when this code word is spoken by either. Gertrude and I might well have borrowed "sollocks" from Noel's play, if an experience we shared before our marriage had not provided us a magic formula of our own—a word which, when spoken pointedly by one of us, would remind us that our love was strong enough to quench an occasional domestic flash fire.

Our word was "Northfield."

When we married, a good many people expressed the gratuitous opinion that the marriage wouldn't last. According to them everything was against it. Our backgrounds, inheritances, upbringing—above all, our temperaments—were opposed and discordant. Neither of us had a reputation for patience. The optimists gave our marriage two years; the pessimists counted its chances for survival in months.

That it would last for life, becoming more precious and richly rewarding year by year, is something that no one at the time—not even Gertrude and I—could have accurately foretold; success in marriage not being something you can contract for in advance, even with the noblest intentions in the world. It is an achievement accomplished not all at once, in a month, or a year; but little by little, day by day. It represents a triumph of countless small engagements. It was Samuel Johnson, I believe, who said that "a man needs to keep his friendships in constant repair." The same might be said, with more telling truth, about a marriage.

Gertrude and I had our differences, of course; and our quarrels. Occasionally these

Let them have another, Mother, they're pure NABISCO cookies!

Seems as if everybody loves the way we put so much extra-creamy filling in OREO CREME SANDWICH. Because folks are eating 'em up! Have you tried these chocolate-y cookies lately? They're wholesome—like all NABISCO cookies.

You'll bite into plenty of crunchy pecan bits—lots of good, sweet chocolate in CHOCOLATE CHIP PECAN COOKIES. And they taste so extra delicious, because all our ingredients are the very finest quality, as pure as you could find!

We've put an exciting new filling in our new SWISS CREME SANDWICH. It's lemon-flavored, and there's lots of it in these crisp, daintier sandwich cookies. We put more shortening in, too, for the richer taste you'll love.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

- Keeps moisture in skin
- Prevents "leathery" dryness
- Promotes lovelier tan

Here is a new sun-beauty formula that lets you tan gloriously—without sun-dried leathery skin!

Skin treatment and tanning cream in one!

New Sun Fluff actually keeps precious moisture in your skin under blazing sun or drying wind. It softens, penetrates, smoothes . . . gives you a more beautiful tan—silky textured, dewy fresh!

Lasts longer on skin

Sun Fluff contains a special cling ingredient that makes it stay on your skin longer. It doesn't rub off so quickly, gives you longer protection.

Guard against dry skin this summer. Use Sun Fluff for a far lovelier tan.

Pressurized container holds more—up to six times as many applications. Easy to apply. No messy spillage . . . Sun Fluff can't stain. Break-proof too.

"Flaky" arms and legs caused by dried-out, "dead" skin give your tan a gray look. Use Sun Fluff to keep skin soft, moist, supple.

were heated, even violent. In the early years of our marriage Gertrude occasionally went into a hysterical outburst which invariably ended in a burst of tears. While her rage was at its height she might hurl at me whatever came first to her hand. My temper, though slower than hers, is like my father's; like him, I am apt to shout. Another disturbing difference between Gertrude's temper and mine was that whereas I have a tendency to sullenness and to brood over what irks me, Gertrude was incapable of harboring a grudge. She got all the anger out of her system in one fine pyrotechnic burst which would leave her exhausted. But after a rest, she would be relaxed, calm, tolerant and angelically forgiving.

As this is a true account of our life together, I may not pass over or deny these individual characteristics or what they did to shape our marriage, however much I might wish to do so. For they were a vital part of our husband-and-wife relationship; tests which we had to meet together, and for which we had to find our own solutions. It seems to me an achievement worth putting into words that we did heal all our major differences and became able to laugh at the minor ones to the point where—as happened to me six months after Gertrude's death—I stared incredulously at the old family friend who called to my mind one quarrel which very nearly wrecked our marital venture.

Our ears and our eyes are besieged by stories of marriages which fail. My story with Gertrude is essentially one of a marriage which was made to work. It was successful and enduring, not by chance or sheer good luck but because the two principals sincerely believed in the value of marriage as an institution; yes, as a sacrament. Both of us realized from the start that nothing of real and permanent worth is ever attained without the expenditure of effort and constant care. Each of us was prepared to give our marriage as much—if not more—attention as we gave to our individual careers. Without mounting a rostrum, I would say that unless a man and a woman feel as we did, they had better not marry.

Several times commentators, lacking real news, manufactured it out of thin air by broadcasting the announcement that Gertrude and I were on the verge of separation. Of course there was separation! There was separation when I joined the Navy, separation when Gertrude toured the country in hit shows, and separation when she entertained British troops in Normandy and American troops in the South Pacific. Someday the columnists may learn the real facts of life: two adults may enjoy an enduring love—even when they are not holding hands under the table at the Stork Club.

AT FIRST these reports annoyed us; later we laughed at them. Through it all we kept inviolate our own top-secret code word—"Northfield." As Gertrude told my mother, "Northfield" kept our marriage on course, no matter the wind or the weather.

Our discovery of Northfield dated from that March, when the first springlike days made me glad of the excuse to drive up to Groton.

Saturday afternoon found me in Boston discussing scripts and stars with Fran Hart, the publicity director of the Cape Playhouse and still my most dependable friend. Unexpectedly, Fran asked what the family had done with Sunny Shadow.

I said we had sold it.

"Too bad," was his comment. "It would be great to see it again. You know, I've tried to explain Northfield to Murial. But one has to see the place to understand it. I really ought to take her there someday."

"Like tomorrow?" I suggested. Though I spoke laconically, his words had aroused within me memories which were both strong and deep.

Fran agreed readily. Forthwith, we arranged to drive over on the next day, stay overnight at the Northfield Hotel and return to Boston on Monday. When Fran left, I saw that it was five-thirty—a good time to call Gertrude. She would be in her dressing room, resting between the matinee and evening shows. I told her of my plans for Sun[day] the Harts.

"How wonderful!" she exclaimed, [h]singing through two hundred miles "Oh, how I envy you—getting out real country. That's what I ought to [do] for a day. Of course it would be alm[ost] days if I stayed till Monday evening know, I could take the midnight Couldn't I?"

"Sleeper? To where?"

"Darling, to Boston! And then we [can] leave in the morning. That is"—[he] dropped, becoming suddenly wistful—want me."

THERE was only one answer to that tried not to give it grudgingly. I could nothing more delightful than to have trude's unexpected company in San Fr[an]New York, London, Paris or Rango Northfield and Gertrude, as I knew h[er] presented a shattering discordance.

"Ten o'clock tomorrow at the Ritz ton, Richard," she said. "I'll be ready ready to go."

For a full minute after she hung [up] with the receiver in my hand, and a p[ic]tion of disaster in my mind.

By morning I had reconciled myself possibility of having a successful and sa[fe] trip, when Fran called to tell me that had developed flu overnight. He would to stay in town to take care of her. "[Or] later in the spring," he proposed.

"Later may be fine for you," I sa[id] what am I going to do about Gertrude rence? She's at the Ritz right now, all up with the visions of spring in the wo[ods]

As usual, Fran stood stanchly by agreed to go with me to the Ritz to plain the change of plans to Gertrude. final words were disturbing. He remin[ded] that the Northfield Hotel always cl[osed] register on Sunday. I had forgotte[n] Northfield still observed a Puritan S[un]This very lapse of memory only revi[ved] uneasiness about the trip. There were things that I had grown away from, an[d] not easy to return.

Fran met me at the Ritz promptly He brought with him the suggestion th[at] failed to dissuade Gertrude from g[oing] Northfield, I should contrive to delay parture from Boston and dawdle al[ong] route. "That way you will arrive in No after sunset. The Sabbath will be ov[er] won't be so bad!"

"With Gertrude on my arm just in spend the night at the hotel? You've fo too much, Fran. You and Murial wou made it all right. But Richard Aldr Gertrude Lawrence traveling alone what the columnists would make of it one reported seeing us. And someone It would be my luck."

Fran ruefully agreed that this was tingency to be avoided at any cost. "W ter go up and see what we can do to p her to abandon the whole idea," he sa

The moment Gertrude opened the her sitting room, I knew that I could appoint her. Though she had arrive that morning after a night on a train, h looked as if it were her permanent With bowls of flowers, a scattering o and magazines, and a few framed photo without which she never went anywh had imparted her radiant charm to the sonal hotel suite. She herself was dres sea-green gown whose train swept the caught a glimpse of gold slippers a tinkle of bells on her toes.

Her first words came as a jolt: " thrilled about going to Northfield. Mackie!"

I hadn't counted on Mackie. The No Hotel did not welcome pets. Sudden seemed to offer the way out that I h about despaired of finding. I inte Fran's account of Murial's illness to an that Mackie's presence put the trip ou question for everyone. "I'm sorry, Ger ought to have told you that the hote rule against dogs."

For a moment I thought it was g work. Then Gertrude shook her head. old Mackie, he's going to lose his c ll leave him with you, Fran. But heart on seeing Northfield. Rich-d about it so much and I want to e ground and walk in the woods.

will be wild violets."
ran an agonized glance. Loyally y rescue.
e to have Mac," he told Ger-l be good company for Murial n bed."
an't stay with Murial," Gertrude Not if she has flu. Dogs are ter-ible to infections. Mackie particu-second my hopes rose again, only she said decisively:

I have to go along with Richard u can explain to the hotel people.
asn't your father one of the foundthfield? And didn't you always summers there? Surely, they will ception for an Aldrich."

rs later, Gertrude, Mackie and ieces of assorted luggage were y car. Fran waved us off. His grin the moorings of a lifelong friend-ny earlier misgivings, I was happy with Gertrude. A speeding car has eming like a private world. With seemed like the best of all possible

lds. However, we were not spin-h some remote and timeless galaxy Route No. 2 in the Commonwealth usetts. Each mile brought me closer which, I realized with increasing resented to me something different other place I had ever known.
id that something inside of me antly shrivel if Gertrude should lingly characterize Northfield as

March dusk was settling in the t Valley when we drove along t under the bare arching elms and e hotel, a long rambling structure scarcely changed since the days I d freely around it, cadging cookies en.
e jumped out and stretched herself.
we take the chill out of our bones?"

I said, "The hotel is dry."
meant is tea," she said cheerfully.
think of anything better than a big ot of tea in front of a huge log by was quiet except for a happy the radiators. We walked across to on desk, where Ralph Forsaith, the , looked up at me. Though it was a y years since my last visit, Ralph, een a fixture there for fifty years.

gnizance to the passage of time.
g, Richard," he said. "Looks like orm coming up."
me.
the register and said that the lady—Gertrude at my side, smiling and air with a most unevangelical per-uld like the pleasantest room he had
I would like a room in the annex.
owned. "You won't be comfortable nex in this weather. And there's oom here. It isn't as if the confer-on."
e view from the annex," I answered

sed a dangerous twinkle in Ger-and I felt myself reddening. Before eak, the door of the large parlor d a tide of clerical black flowed into It was led by a portly, balding man new—my father's old friend and grim to the Holy Land. Doctor
The sight of him brought back vivor which had stimulated many a during my early years.
nday he had visited us in Brookline
, bringing Billy Sunday with him.
gelist, in his florid and persuasive laced a hand of benediction upon while saying to my father, "Mr.
trust that you are going to give this lad to the Lord."
call is given," father replied sole will be dedicated."

Instantly I saw myself a small, naked and shivering Isaac, bound to a pile of blazing fagots. My father, in Abraham's flowing garments, took a long knife out of his Boston bag and brandished it, while Doctor Webster, Jehovahlike, supervised the sacrifice from a nearby cloud bank. From that moment on I had felt uneasy whenever I was in Doctor Webster's presence.

It was at least twenty years since he had seen me, but he bore down on me with both hands outstretched cordially. "Richard, my boy! How good to see you! And here in Northfield!" His richly sonorous voice embraced me and Gertrude, on whom his eyes rested with interest.

"This is Miss Lawrence," I said briskly. And to Gertrude, "Doctor Webster was a friend of my father's."

Doctor Webster moved to take her hand. Suddenly his expression turned to one of alarm. He stepped back swiftly.

SONNET TO AN ADOPTED CHILD

By JEAN SAUNDERS

When I have to tell you,
brown-eyed child,
How you were born of passion not designed To give you life—and never really mine Except by legal process duly filed—
Then will it matter more that there were years
Of cradled warmth and all the mother ways
To keep you clean and safe, and shape your days
With cooky-flavored comfort for your tears?
Will knowing that I could not love you more
If you were mine help you to see That heart to heart you do belong to me
As dear as any child I ever bore?
When your brown eyes first notice mine are blue,
Will a lifetime's love be heritage for you?

"Mackie!" Gertrude cried sharply. She bent and picked up her pet. "Behave, angel." Then she turned, beaming reassurance on Doctor Webster. "Don't mind Mackie. He never bites anyone. At least, only those with evil in their souls."

Gordon Moody, the hotel manager, who had come out of his office to inspect the new arrivals, announced, "We don't allow dogs in the hotel. You should know that, Richard."

Gertrude lifted wide beseeching eyes, but they were wasted on Gordon. He turned and went into his office with the finality of a turtle withdrawing into its shell. Gertrude looked at me, indicating that this was my cue.

Before I could enter a plea for Mackie, Ralph beckoned to the bellboy carrying our bags. "All right, Bob. Take care of this animal."

Gertrude spoke in a voice vibrant with feeling. "Oh, please don't take Mackie away, Mr. Forsaith. His feelings get hurt so easily. If he stays over in Richard's room he can't bother anyone. You said no one was in the annex in this weather."

Ralph wavered noticeably. Gertrude smiled, and he was lost. "Well, I guess that'll be all right," he muttered, though with a dubious glance toward the manager's office. "So long as he stays there, Miss—er, Miss . . ."

"Gertrude Lawrence," Gertrude supplied. The name, however, meant nothing to Ralph. Gertrude turned happily to me. "Darling, Mackie can sleep with you. It will be a wonderful chance for you and him to become really good friends. And that way he won't be lonely."

As I have said, I am not a man to quarrel with the inevitable. The inevitable had arrived.

"And now do order tea, darling," she urged. "I'm famished."

Doctor Webster and his colleagues had entered the dining room on the left of the lobby. The low murmur of a short grace was followed by the scrape of chairs and the cheery rattle of dishes. I looked at the clock. It was almost six.

"No tea," I told Gertrude briskly. "There isn't time. The dining room closes for supper at the stroke of seven."

"Supper?" She stared at me incredulously. "Supper, now? But it's teatime."

"It's never teatime in Northfield, Massachusetts," I informed her.

To my surprise and relief she accepted this meekly. "Very well, darling. In that case I'll dash up and change and meet you here in twenty minutes."

Before I could add that in Northfield, Massachusetts, no one changed for Sunday-night supper, she had thrust the unwilling Mackie into my arms, and entered the waiting elevator. The doors shut irrevocably behind her.

Bob, relieved of the problem of the terrier, set about making a lazy-man's load of the six pieces of luggage and tottered away with them. Ralph's eye went from the bags to me. "Staying with us quite a while, Richard, are you," he stated. I muttered noncommittally. The thought occurred to me that it might seem quite a while by morning.

As I introduced Mackie to our room in the annex, left my one small suitcase and came back to the lobby to check on the fire which I had ordered, my uneasiness mounted. Gertrude was changing, to what? In New York, I had been proud to see her in the lovely—and often dazzling—creations which were appropriate to supper at the Colony or the Pavillon. Suppose she dressed like that for supper with the elders? I remembered the sea-green tea gown in which she welcomed Fran and me that very morning and which must be in one of those bags. In it she had appeared spring incarnate. But now the vernal feeling had changed to a Lenten chilliness. I shivered, and sent up a fervent prayer that she would not come down in her gold, belled slippers.

I should have known her better. When she met me—prompt to the minute, as she invariably was—she was wearing a starkly plain high-necked, black, Hattie Carnegie frock whose sleeves covered her arms to the wrists. Her only decoration was a simple string of pearls.

I breathed more freely. I was to learn that Gertrude's instinctive fine taste and her respect for the sensitiveness of others always kept her in harmony with her environment. As it turned out, such uneasiness as I was to experience that evening was to be caused by her desire and her ability to get into her environment only too well.

We sat down in the dignified, well-appointed, if austere, dining room, to an excellent but plain Sunday-night supper of cold cuts, fried potatoes country style, coleslaw and custard pudding. We were the only guests. The reverend gentlemen had been shepherded by Doctor Webster into one of the small parlors whence came voices that indicated a service of prayer was going on.

GERTRUDE glanced meaningfully in that direction and observed, "I thought you said the conferences were held in the summer."

I explained that we seemed to have run into a meeting to plan the summer season. "Twice a day, this coming summer, there will be conferences and prayer meetings, with reports, hymn singing and sermons. It all takes planning, scheduling, budgeting."

"Like your summer theater."

"Exactly, even down to the special attractions and stars. One of the great ironies of my life is that father brought us to Northfield so that we would live a religious life in the summer, far removed from such sinful pastimes as the theater; yet it was here at the prayer meet-

No other deodorant now asks women to Shave First!

Actual skin tests prove YODORA SO "KIND" TO SENSITIVE SKIN
we can make this bold statement

FIRST . . . shave under arms. (For faultless grooming — ask your druggist for Yodora shaving booklet.)

THEN . . . apply Yodora immediately with complete confidence*

We guarantee Yodora soothing to apply after shaving . . . gives day-long protection . . . won't harm finest fabrics, or your money back.

*If you suffer from skin irritations due to allergies or functional disorders, see your doctor.

A McKesson Product

ACCEPTED COMMITTEE ON COSMETICS AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

YODORA

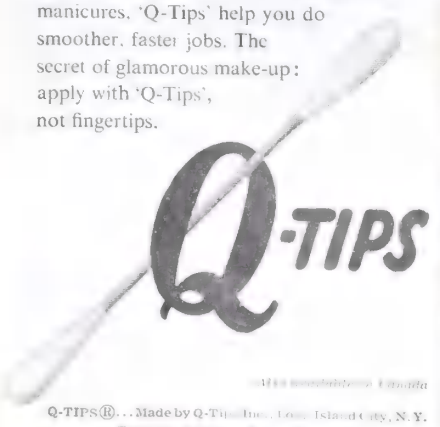
your really soothing cream deodorant

"Any pal of Q-Tips® is a pal of mine!"

It's only natural for a new mother to feel she is "all thumbs." But using 'Q-Tips' soon changes that. They are shaped and balanced precisely to give you the skill and confidence you need. Confidence is virtually a built-in 'Q-Tips' feature.

More doctors and mothers have used 'Q-Tips'

... more babies have been cared for by 'Q-Tips'



... than all other cotton swabs combined!

- sterilized by the best hospital method
- swabs can't loosen or leave lint
- "silkenized" super-refined cotton
- trusted over a quarter of a century

THE SMART WOMAN'S GROOMING AID!

For everything from hair touch-ups to manicures, 'Q-Tips' help you do smoother, faster jobs. The secret of glamorous make-up: apply with 'Q-Tips', not fingertips.

Q-TIPS®...Made by Q-Tips Inc., Long Island City, N.Y. Toronto, Canada • Paris, France

ings that I first developed the love and instinct for the dramatic. It was more exciting than going to the movies every day."

"I never had any religious training," Gertrude said. "Except what I got from granny. She was my mother's mother and I loved her more than anyone else in the world. Strict Church of England, she was. She used to take me along with her at evensong. But, poor dear, she was so deaf she couldn't hear the sermon. We'd come home and she'd have me repeat it, word for word. I'd do it, too—with all the proper clerical intonations and gestures. She loved it, and so did I."

I said I could well believe it.

"I've often wondered, Richard," she went on more thoughtfully, "what it is that I have always seemed to miss in my life. Sometimes I think it's a longing to believe in something. Or someone. I'm not an atheist, of course; but though I believe in God, I'm so terribly independent I'm afraid I don't leave him much to do for me."

I regarded her wonderingly. Gertrude had never spoken to me before about religion. Was this a true and intimate revelation of how deeply she felt and thought about it? If so, I was flattered. But a nagging doubt persisted. Was her speech merely fashioned to match her dress and environment? At that moment, I admit, I did not have the breadth of understanding to judge.

When we finished supper, we went to the parlor where a fire had been lighted. The blaze gave forth a heart-warming, cheerful glow. I had hoped for an evening of relaxed privacy, but no sooner were Gertrude and I installed than Doctor Webster's head appeared at the door.

"Ah, a fire!" His bulky, black-broadclothed body followed the head into the room. "And you are here, Richard," he said. "And Miss Dorrance."

"Lawrence."

"Ah, yes. Lawrence."

"Won't you join us?" Gertrude said. "Richard and I are having such an interesting talk. About religion."

The doctor came in and settled himself. As an eminent religious leader, he considered himself an ex officio participant in any conversation on this topic. He began to talk about religion and the world crisis. Soon the other guests drifted in to sit by our fire and listen respectfully.

Doctor Webster had just delivered a bitter denouncement of war—even in a righteous cause—on the grounds that war destroyed men's faith in God when Gertrude's clear voice cut in decisively:

"I cannot agree with you, doctor. As I said in a sermon I gave recently, 'The people are turning to God as their Saviour, as men have always turned to God when beset by trouble, war or violence.'"

The words, and her delivery of them, instantly focused everyone's attention on her. I felt a premonitory pricking under my collar. My throat went dry. The good people in the room seemed to be impressed. They nodded to one another. Doctor Webster cleared his throat, but Gertrude canceled his flights of oratory.

"THE world," she announced, "is full of bitterly unhappy people. They run around trying to fill up the awful emptiness with parties and sports and love affairs." I winced. "They don't know, poor things, that what they want is God."

"True, true," Doctor Webster concurred. "Sister, let us pray to our heavenly Father that we may be permitted to find Him."

Gertrude turned to look him squarely in the eye. She lifted her hand in a gesture which was disturbingly reminiscent.

"I don't think God is out there to pray to," she said thrillingly. "I think He's here. In us. And I don't believe He helps us till we dig, and dig, and DIG to get the rottenness out of ourselves."

Again she made a gesture and then I remembered. Too vividly for comfort. Her voice—Gertrude's—was that of Susan, the heroine of Rachel Crothers' play, Susan and God. The lines were from the play's memorable last scene. The entire performance, down to the last nuance, was one which she had played to packed houses all across the country a thousand times.

I did not know then, nor do I know now, whether Gertrude was consciously putting on an act, or whether she was instinctively swept up in a familiar characterization. Undoubtedly these oft-repeated lines had found a permanent lodging in her subconscious, just as surely as the prayers and hymns which I had said hundreds of times as a boy had found their way into mine. But whatever the cause, nothing was more certain than that she would soon get into deeper and more dangerous theological waters. If the ministers should discover the truth they would certainly believe they and their most cherished beliefs were being ridiculed by an actress. Their humiliation would inevitably be mine.

Clearly, the moment for drastic, decisive action had arrived. I stood up quickly and announced with a loud brusqueness which caused Doctor Webster to blink, "If you will all excuse me, I'll say good night. I'm going to my room. In the annex." The last words were almost a shout.

Bewilderment clouded Gertrude's face. "So soon, Richard? But why, darling?"

"Perhaps you had better go up to your room, too, Miss Lawrence," I prompted. "We must make an early start tomorrow."

COMPACT

Women of the Stone Age probably used juices to stain their faces and enhance their charms. Many refinements were made during later ages, but as recently as the Gay Nineties practically all aids to beauty were applied at home.

Made bold by hard-won freedom in political and economic spheres, fashionable ladies began to carry powder, rouge and small mirrors in their handbags. Several manufacturers seem to have had an inspiration almost simultaneously, and began mass production of little boxes with a mirror in the lid, compartments for rouge and powder. These newfangled contraptions were boldly advertised as "compact beauty cases for milady."

Almost at once the descriptive adjective came to be used as a slang term for the case, and the compact became standard equipment.

WEBB B. GARRISON

She showed no sign of complying. I took her by the elbow and propelled her, with no dignity, toward the door. As we crossed the lobby to the elevator the manager called out, "Snow's falling. Looks as if it's getting colder."

"It definitely is," Gertrude snapped. Her eyes were the blue of Arctic ice. "Good night, Richard. And give my love to Mackie."

As soon as I got into bed, Mackie began his efforts to get out, accompanied with a pitiful whining squeal. To muffle the noise I pulled the covers over my head, only to have my feet exposed to the shivery night air. I realized that there were not enough blankets for this night which was becoming frostier by the moment.

Mackie's squeals had now prolonged themselves into a doleful howl. I was thankful that he and I had the annex to ourselves. Still my outlook for a peaceful night was dim. Then I remembered a photograph which Gertrude had shown me, of Mackie snuggled in her arms in bed, taken in her luxurious London flat. I whistled and patted the bed beside me invitingly. Mackie stopped howling and regarded me dubiously, but made no move to accept the invitation. I thrust an arm out of the bedclothes, seized his collar and lifted him in beside me.

"Faute de mieux, old man," I muttered. "Suppose we try keeping each other warm."

At dawn, I arose with a cold coming on. Aside from the longing to be warm again, and the fear that this was a lovely impossibility, my thoughts were dominated by a whelming desire—to make sure tha and the ministers did not meet. So the kitchen, where I persuaded the co breakfast up to Miss Lawrence's roo ury which, in Northfield, usually only for guests who are very ill.

As I passed through the dinin noticed Doctor Webster and h deeply involved in a hearty Northfi fast. I tried to slip by unobtrus Doctor Webster looked up.

"Good morning, Richard," he "We've just been talking about M rence. She has a most convincing would imagine that when she is in she holds her audience."

"Yes," I agreed. "She does hold a very well."

"Ah, you've heard her, Richard?"

"Many times." (What else could

"Good! Good!"

I tried to get away, but Docto held my arm.

"She's British, Richard?"

I nodded.

"ALL the better. It's a long time s had a British evangelist here. Rem throngs who came to listen to Camp gan! Now, do you think we can get summer conference?"

The walls were closing in on me can't speak for her, Doctor Webs don't you write her?" I said in de "That would be best."

Doctor Webster pulled out a men pad and carefully spelled out the na the address is?" he queried.

I was about to supply this when, t ror, Mackie suddenly and illegally coming out of one of the parlors. I sight of Doctor Webster. Growl acingly, he made for that gentlemar cuffs. I collared him as he passed. more ado, I rushed him out the fr into the whirling snowstorm. There, was safe from Doctor Webster's For the first time I harbored a friend for Gertrude's "angel."

"And now," I said reprovingly as drove away from the hotel an hour c "you have led that good man to be you're some sort of Aimee Semple son."

Gertrude lifted her head haughtil plied indignantly, "I said nothing th true."

"Really?" I said with heavy "What about that alleged sermon?"

"What alleged sermon? For your tion, I preached that sermon at Dr Reisner's Broadway Tabernacle in N And to a full house, I might add."

"When was that?" I asked skeptic

"Not long ago. Just before Susan closed."

I said nastily that I supposed it w licity stunt.

The suggestion infuriated Gertru because you spent your summers h needn't think you've cornered the m religion."

"Even if it was true," I said gr "you had no right to make Doctor and his committee think you were so and holy."

"Did you wish me to appear unho demanded with increased hauteur.

"There was no need for you to la into what is their province."

"I was just trying to talk about a s interest to them. I wanted to be w friendly. Some people like to be w friendly. Or didn't you know?"

Her remark snapped like a whip a face, which was already tingling f frosty weather.

As I searched for a fitting reply, we the foot of a steep hill. I stopped the pointed up the icy grade. "There's house up on the mountainside," I "The car can't make it in this snow. drive on now and see the Swiss chal the lake."

Gertrude, sizing me up from head said quietly, but with a determinatio

, "The car may not be able to make will." She swung wide the door and it into the snow. "Come along,

f arguing with her—which, instinc- knew would lead to more serious —or seizing her bodily and driving er—which, I was equally sure, would inordinately and give her a feeling h—I had no choice but to follow. I Mackie.

Gertrude objected instantly. "It's too im. Let him stay in the car. Are you Richard?" She plunged ahead he unbroken snow.

ys, she was dressed for the occasion. t have been going skiing or bob- t St. Moritz. I was equipped to cross Avenue with the traffic lights in my ue, my feet were somewhat protected rs, but under my Homburg my ears he mercy of each gust that whistled he pines. As for my coat, my tailor r recommended it to me for moun- bing.

de did not deign to look back to see as faring. It was just as well. As I stumbled, slipped and fell my way ll, I was far from presenting the kind ance a man wishes to make before any even one with whom he is quarreling. which had been hovering since I ow gripped me. I sneezed violently. led out my handkerchief, some half- lines of poetry fluttered through my

. . a banner with the strange device, Ex-

Mrs. Richard Dana, a daughter of ow's, had given my mother the book ich I had memorized the poem. All s were at hand and the last stanza a prophecy of my imminent fate:

raveler, by the faithful hound,
f-buried in the snow was found . . .

y we reached Rustic Ridge, where Shadow stood blanketed by snow. But e had not completed her impish per-this is the place you carved your on a tree when you were eight?" she coolly.

itted it was.

show it to me!"

that I was not at all sure I could find After so many years, and in the snow. ourse you can," she challenged.

ng around a wooded mountaintop in a snowstorm, trying to locate some ini- ved on a tree three decades earlier, is easiest thing in the world. Nor is it my idea of fun. Willingly would I have pushed the persevering Miss Lawrence face downward into a snowdrift. Except that she would have enjoyed this far too much. It was plain she was all out to defeat me, but this I stubbornly refused to allow her to do. Not if we two spent the rest of the winter on Rustic Ridge squinting up at bare trunks trying to find the letters R.S.A. carved on one of them. Shivering, sneezing, miserably aware of the snow water in my shoes and the oncreeping chill which might well be the advance of pneumonia, I went from tree to tree under Gertrude's mocking gaze.

"There it is," I pointed.

"Where?"

I waggled a finger at a scar some twelve feet or so above the ground.

"My!" she observed. "For eight, weren't you the tall little man?"

Now it was my turn for hauteur. I said acidly, "If you knew anything about Nature, you would know that as a tree grows higher it carries its scars along with it."

We trudged down the hill in grim, angry silence, broken only by a series of convulsive sneezes which Gertrude ignored.

When we had rejoined Mackie in his snug warmth I said stiffly, "We've seen Sunny Shadow. Now where would you like to go? To the Swiss chalet? The auditorium? The seminary?"

"Really, Richard, we mustn't overdo this sentimental journey, must we?"

If I had known her better I would have been warned by the haughtiness of her tone and the way she clipped her words that she was now very angry. At such moments her back would stiffen, her head would come up inches, giving her a deceptive appearance of height. But, blind to storm signals, I persisted along my own way.

"I don't know about you," I said sarcastically, "but that's what I came to Northfield for—to view the landmarks."

"Very well, then," Gertrude snapped. "There's one more landmark I would like to see. At once."

"And that is ——"

"The railroad station. Fully equipped with a fast train to New York."

I put her on a through train at Greenfield. Such good-bys as we said were grimly mechanical. Without waiting for the train to pull out, I headed back to Groton and the warmth of my mother's house which was comfortably undisturbed by the theatrical temperament. I felt that I had had as much of that as I could stand for a very long time. Perhaps forever.

(To be Continued)

TELL ME DOCTOR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21

understand that, Doctor. I think that induced me to seek expert advice. I'm g to be married next autumn. The way w, I know it would never do to inflict n any man. He'd see me at the end of month as a nervous, complaining neu- don't want to start my married life y—indeed I don't!"

won't need to. I am glad you have nsible enough to seek relief. This is a y serious problem. A great economic urs every month, particularly in these en so many women are employed out- ir homes. Women struggling under handicap as yours find it impossible to rate properly on their duties. The re- st be the loss of a tremendous number hours."

interesting to hear you say that," the said. "Why is it that doctors are just around to recognizing monthly dis- as important?"

not so much that they are just recog- t. It is rather that they are coming bet- nderstand the problem. What can be help you? I'll outline the treatment First, during the premenstrual phase cycle you will receive medication which ke your kidneys function more actively, r to preclude the waterlogging of tis- We shall also see that most of the salt you would ordinarily take is removed from your diet. Then we shall endeavor to restore a proper balance to the ovarian hormones by giving you supplementary ones. The diet will be carefully regulated, in general being one of high-protein, low-sugar-and-salt components. I am confident that you can be greatly helped. Not the smallest factor should be the knowledge that help is at hand, that you may confidently look forward to being happy, healthy and hearty again, probably adding a few pounds of weight that will be permanent, marrying that young man of yours to live happily forever after."

"It sounds like a fairy story. That's how they all end."

"It's a good way. Now, young lady, I am going to have you made ready for an examination."

"An examination! I thought it was simply going to be diet and medicine."

"That is probably true. At the same time we must make certain there is no anatomical condition which might be a contributory factor. Your problem appears to be premenstrual tension entirely, but it is necessary to exhaust all the methods of diagnosis at our disposal before forming a hard-and-fast opinion."

"Whatever you say, Doctor."

Another article in this series by Doctor Safford will appear next month.

New Colgate Dental Cream with GARDOL*

Works instantly to stop Bad Breath!

One brushing with New Colgate Dental Cream leaves your mouth cleaner, fresher for 12 hours or more—helps keep you socially acceptable. Tests show Colgate Dental Cream stops bad breath instantly in 7 out of 10 cases that originate in the mouth.

CLEANS YOUR BREATH...

Works constantly to stop Tooth Decay!

One brushing with New Colgate Dental Cream guards against tooth decay for 12 hours or more. Night and morning brushings guard your teeth all day—all night. In this way, Colgate's Gardol works around the clock to stop the action of decay-causing enzymes. In full-year clinical tests, X rays showed far fewer cavities for the hundreds of people in the group using Colgate Dental Cream with Gardol. In fact, no new cavities whatever for 4 out of 5.

while it GUARDS YOUR TEETH!

GARDOL...
Colgate's miracle ingredient makes it doubly effective!

HOW GARDOL WORKS:

Every time you brush your teeth with New Colgate Dental Cream, Gardol binds itself to your teeth . . . remains active for 12 hours or more. That's why Gardol, Colgate's long-lasting anti-enzyme ingredient, gives the surest protection against tooth decay ever offered by any toothpaste—leaves your mouth cleaner, fresher for 12 hours or more!

Gardol's protection won't rinse off or wear off all day. Thus, morning and night brushings with New Colgate's with Gardol give continuous protection around the clock.

*COLGATE'S TRADE-MARK FOR SODIUM N-LAUROYL SARCOSINATE

ONLY COLGATE'S GIVES YOU FULL GARDOL PROTECTION AGAINST TOOTH DECAY!

3 Cranberry Partners for Barbecued Chicken

1 Favorite Cranberry Relish

(With a wonderful "I'll-have-some-more" flavor).

Mix together:

1 pound can Ocean Spray Cranberry Sauce (Jellied or Whole)
½ cup drained, crushed pineapple (8 oz. can)
2 tablespoons finely chopped orange rind
2 tablespoons chopped walnuts
2 tablespoons sweet pickle relish

Place in refrigerator an hour or more for flavors to blend. Makes 1 pint.

2 Spicy Cranberry Relish

(With a special tang that's extra good with barbecued chicken).

Mix together:

1 pound can Ocean Spray Cranberry Sauce (Jellied or Whole)
½ cup drained, crushed pineapple
¼ teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon mace or nutmeg
¼ teaspoon powdered mustard

Place in refrigerator an hour or more for flavors to blend. Makes 1 pint.

3 Cranberry-Orange Relish

(Be sure to make enough. Everyone loves this one.)

Put through food chopper 1 orange (rind and pulp). Blend with 1 pound can Ocean Spray Jellied or Whole Cranberry Sauce.

Place in refrigerator an hour or more for flavors to blend. Makes 1 pint.

Time Saver: While you're at it, make several batches of Cranberry Relish. Freeze for later use.

Good Idea! To turn any of these relishes into a salad, fold into partially jelled raspberry gelatin made with 1 package raspberry gelatin and 1½ cups hot water.

Perfect Partner for Chicken!

A quality product . . . Carries Good Housekeeping and Parents' Magazine Seals.

free
Barbecue Book

"How to Put on a Chicken-Cranberry Barbecue" Family Size or Large Crowd. Directions for making fire, cooking chicken, what to serve.

Write: Ocean Spray
Dept. L754
Hanson, Mass.

OLD SOUTHERN SUMMER KITCHEN

By DOROTHY LEHMAN SUMERAU

HOW strong is your sense of smell? Mine was able to carry me back yesterday, by virtue of a delicious odor emanating from a small, modern, blue-and-white laboratory of a kitchen, to the old "summer kitchen" of my childhood.

A whiff of buttery spices and it was as though a magic wand had been waved over me. I could see and hear old Aunt Sara, the dusky magician of my youth. Ample of bosom, tall and straight, she wore on her head a blue-and-white bandanna knotted above her forehead. A blue-and-white-checked apron, the hem just missing the floor, was tied around her huge waist and protected her neat calico wrapper.

Again I could hear Aunt Sara sing with the booming emphasis that always fascinated me. Her best performance was a spiritual I have never heard since, the meaning as mysterious to me today as then:

"One for Paul, one for Silas,
One to make my heart rejoice!
Don't yo' hear my lambs acryin'?
O, good shepherd, feed my sheep!"

My brothers and sisters and I were Aunt Sara's admiring audience. Perhaps she'd be making apple dumplings for supper. She mixed and patted the lump of dough, then, putting it on the breadboard, she took the rolling pin to it with rhythmic movements in perfect time to her song: "One for Paul" (roll), "one for Silas, One" (whack) "to make my heart rejoice" (plop). No gods of ancient fable ever dined on ambrosia half so delicious as Aunt Sara's apple dumpling. This is her recipe faithfully preserved by mother:

AUNT SARA'S BAKED APPLE DUMPLINGS

Peel, core and slice 3 tart apples. Sift 2 cups flour with 3 teaspoons baking powder and ½ teaspoon salt. Cut in ½ cup shortening. Add ⅔ cup milk. Stir together with a fork to make a soft dough. Roll out thin on floured board. Cut dough into six 5″ squares. Make up a mixture of ¼ cup sugar, ¼ teaspoon cinnamon, ⅛ teaspoon nutmeg. Fill each square with the finely sliced tart apples. Sprinkle the sugar mixture over the apples, and then dot each square with a lump of butter the size of a small pecan (about ½ teaspoon). edges of dough with a litt Bring the points to the cent together. Put the dumpling 10″ baking dish. Heat a m cup water, ½ cup sugar, 2 butter and a few grains o over the dumplings (savin ¼ cup for basting during Bake in moderately hot ov about 45 minutes till nice basting occasionally with Serves 6. Serve hot with

Hot Lemon-Nutmeg Sauce sugar and 2 tablespoons corn gradually 2 cups boiling wa constantly. Boil 5 minutes, s Remove from heat, and a spoons butter, 3 tablespoons ½ teaspoon nutmeg and a pi

A crisp, golden-brown app swimming in this nectar, an cold milk, is and often was and perfect supper.

The old summer kitchen step down, at the end of a v passage connected with the house. Moving out into it f cooking usually came the day closed, and Aunt Sara let eve us capable of carrying someth the wonderful process.

The kitchen's two window the door gave out upon an app whose rich yellow and red frui contrast with the purple gems damson trees flanking the orc The floor of the kitchen wa hand-hewn pine boards sc creamy whiteness.

From strong hooks in the cei cured sides of meat and several hanging. Against the wall ac the great wood range stood a table, gleaming, clean. On rack were knives of various sizes, sh ing, ready for use. Corner sh the coffee mill, the clattery waffle iron and the corn-pone a far corner of the room sto spinning wheel, purely for orna sure, for I never saw it used.

The great cooking range was replete with warming oven fo and ham as they were fried. Th four lids of varying sizes. On th

the heating part of the range ngular hot-water container of s, its cover level with the range en was black and cavernous.
k along one side of the wall sted the pots and pans—big ones, some heavy and black, ng with a rosy coppery luster.
room bunches of herbs were rom nails in the walls. There , sage, sweet basil, dill—and odors, as the leaves dried,
l gave off a delightful aroma.
a was, in a manner of speak-arch among her people. All easygoing summer they came s she rested, rocking in her e doorway of the kitchen.
m was old Uncle Isaac, who how Clem, his son, went town with his hand bell and wagon full of vegetables,
the rhythm of the bell:

es are comin',
ather roun',
sweet and juicy,
ll de town.
Yellow sweetnin' 'taters!"

, so boasted Uncle Isaac, t was different. We felt happy saac let us share his pride.
hed with never-decreasing Lizzie, who walked with a lanced on her head with ap-the large woven basket hold-fresh and bright in their sea-ils, wild azaleas, gardenias, ragged robins, and zinnias ls, as she called them.
chen, too, came the fish ped-e basket on each arm and one —his strident cry of "Fraish ater trout; heah they is, I got ding him from afar.
could equal Aunt Sara's

BAKED SHAD

fishman clean a 3-pound repare it for stuffing, remov-kbone. Season fish with salt . Stuff with following mix-3 cups dry bread in 2 cups queeze out dry. Add ¼ cup ed onion sautéed in 1 table-n drippings; 3 tablespoons melted butter, ½ teaspoon sage and 2 tablespoons minced parsley, 2 teaspoons salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Heat well, remove from heat and add 1 well-beaten egg. When fish is plump with filling, tie around with string and place in baking pan holding a cup of water to which ½ teaspoon salt has been added. Bake 50 minutes or 20 minutes per pound in a moderate oven, 350° F. Baste occasionally with the pan juices.

Serve with sauce made from 2 hard-cooked egg yolks mashed to a smooth paste and blended with 2 tablespoons salad oil and 2 tablespoons vinegar. Season with ½ teaspoon dry mustard, ⅛ teaspoon pepper and ½ teaspoon salt.

Damson-picking day was a time we children awaited eagerly. One morning very early, when the small purple plums had reached the exact state of perfection, according to Aunt Sara's reckoning, eleven-year-old Willie, one of Aunt Sara's numerous kinfolk, would appear at the kitchen door. Aunt Sara would look him up and down and say, "Is yo' hands clean?" Whereupon Willie would produce his two dusky-rose palms, roll his shining blackberry eyes innocently in our direction and wait.

"Hm! Heah is yo' bucket. Now mind whar you puts yo' weight in dem trees. Dey aint oaks, remembah."

When the damsons were picked (don't they grow any more?) and Aunt Sara was working her mysterious rites with them in the preserving kettle—a black iron bucket-like vessel lined with white porcelain—Willie was allowed to stay and swing us.

The swing, with a board for a seat, was made of two stout long ropes carefully secured to a limb of the great black-heart-cherry tree standing within sight of the kitchen. Willie would punctuate his pushes with rhythmic singing, the somber significance of his words blissfully lost on him and us. With well-marked emphasis he would chant doefully:

"Old Mars' Ruff, didn't have money enough,
He got hisself lost in the Bar-bar-ee—
An' when he die, he close his eye,
An' dat was de end of old Mars' Ruff."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 110

Now . . . perfect starch

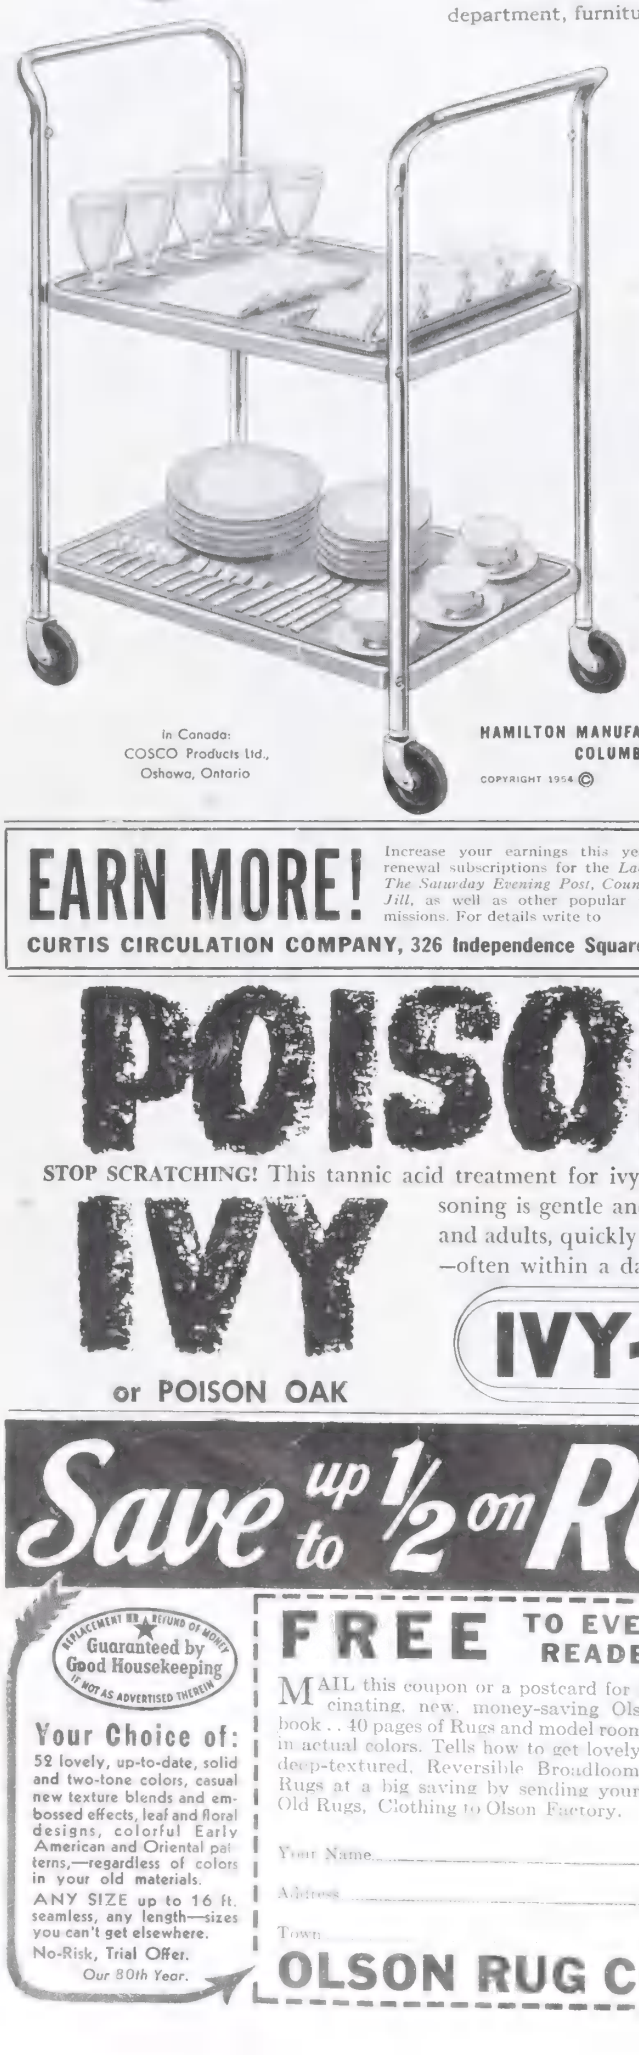
INSTANTLY

for only a penny a quart!

Produced by Corn Products Refining Co.

SAVE MONEY Instant NIAGARA goes 4 to 5 times farther than costly bottled starch

Your iron glides easily, there are no hard lumps to stick to it. Every particle of Instant Niagara has been perfectly precooked . . . can't leave unsightly white streaks or spots, even on dark cottons. You get perfectly lovely results.



So easy to look your best when you starch with Instant Niagara. No stove work at all . . . no cooking, boiling, straining. Niagara, an entirely new kind of laundry starch, dissolves instantly and stays dissolved in cold water. What a work-saver!

NEW! COSCO® TRAY CART!

with the top that doubles as a serving tray!

■ Dandy for parties, handy for countless household tasks! Five-ply COSCOAT wood-grain finish in blonde, gray or green. Chromium or smart black enamel on legs and handles. Rolls and turns at a finger's touch on 3″ casters. 29½″ high, 16½″ x 23½″. At department, furniture, hardware stores. Get yours now—and be sure it's Cosco. Accept no substitutes!

Model 8-W Tray Cart, $14.95*

*$15.95 Colorado and west.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or Refund of Money — If Not As Advertised Therein

In Canada: COSCO Products Ltd., Oshawa, Ontario

HAMILTON MANUFACTURING CORPORATION
COLUMBUS, INDIANA

COPYRIGHT 1954 ©

EARN MORE!

Increase your earnings this year by forwarding new and renewal subscriptions for the Ladies' Home Journal, Holiday, The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, and Jack and Jill, as well as other popular publications. Generous commissions. For details write to CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 326 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

POISON IVY or POISON OAK

STOP SCRATCHING! This tannic acid treatment for ivy, oak or sumac poisoning is gentle and SAFE for children and adults, quickly dries up the blisters —often within a day. At druggists, 69¢

IVY-DRY

Save up to ½ on RUGS

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or Refund of Money — If Not As Advertised Therein

Your Choice of:

52 lovely, up-to-date, solid and two-tone colors, casual new texture blends and embossed effects, leaf and floral designs, colorful Early American and Oriental patterns,—regardless of colors in your old materials.

ANY SIZE up to 16 ft. seamless, any length—sizes you can't get elsewhere.

No-Risk, Trial Offer.

Our 80th Year.

FREE TO EVERY READER

MAIL this coupon or a postcard for fascinating, new, money-saving Olson book . . 40 pages of Rugs and model rooms in actual colors. Tells how to get lovely, deep-textured, Reversible Broadloom Rugs at a big saving by sending your Old Rugs, Clothing to Olson Factory.

In Full Color

Your Name .....

Address .....

Town ..... State .....

OLSON RUG CO. Dept. E-19 Chicago 41, Ill.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 109

Then he'd switch to:

"Oh, de man was atryin' for to hide his face,
De rock cried out 'No hidin' place,
No hidin' place down heah.'
Oh, dey's no hidin' place down heah,
Oh dey's no hidin' place down heah,
O sinner man turn yo' boat aside,
You can't go to heaben agin de tide,
No hidin' place down heah."

Some time later Aunt Sara would call from the kitchen doorway, "De skimmin's is ready, yo'all." She meant that the damson preserves were boiling and she was skimming off the delicious, thick, tart-sweet substance that rose to the top of the kettle.

The swinging came to an immediate halt and we children with Willie stood at the kitchen door, mouths watering. Aunt Sara would hand out a saucer of the cooling sirup for each of us, including Willie. There was a spoon for each. And bread.

Sometimes, if we had been obedient, staying "out from under Aunt Sara's feet," she would give us hot rice bread, or sativa, as she called it. As far as I know it was one of Aunt Sara's own concoctions, but so delicious mother sometimes asked that it be served when guests were expected for breakfast or lunch.

AUNT SARA'S RICE BREAD OR SATIVA

Cook 1 cup rice in boiling salted water until very tender. Drain. When cold, stir to a smooth paste with a fork or wooden spoon. Moisten 3 tablespoons flour with ¼ cup cold water and add to rice, stirring it in well. Beat 2 eggs until light and mix into the rice. Season with 1½ teaspoons salt. Pour into a greased 8″-square shallow baking pan and bake in a moderately hot oven, 375° F., about 1¼ hours till brown. Cut into squares, hot and spread with butter. Serve Another treat was Aunt Sara's spo which mother liked for lunch with ch salad.

AUNT SARA'S SPOON BRI

Stir 1 cup corn meal into 1½ cu water. Add ¾ teaspoon salt. Mix v Add 1 tablespoon melted shortenin well beaten, 1 cup milk and 1 t baking powder. Blend thoroughly; a 1½-quart baking dish (7″ in dia 3″ deep). Bake in a moderately 375° F., 35–45 minutes. Serves 6.

To father, Aunt Sara's hominy t the most satisfying of all her breads

AUNT SARA'S HOMINY BR

Slowly stir ½ cup hominy grits into boiling water. Add ½ teaspoon sa and cook slowly 20–25 minutes, sti quently. While the grits are hot, ad spoons butter and stir in 4 well-bea Add gradually 1 pint milk. Last, a corn meal and 2 teaspoons salt. Stir batter should be of the consistency custard. Pour into a 2-quart grease dish and bake 50 minutes in a (400° F.) It will emerge crisp and top, soft and delicious inside. "Won the word for this with a fish supper.

To be sure, Aunt Sara's recipes c turned out successfully in the modern kitchen. But only a whiff of spices a blended together, and I am filled talgia and longing.

"Backward, turn backward, O Time flight, Make me a child again ——"

RED CARPET FOR MAMIE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 41

Eisenhowers picnicked on bologna and liverwurst in the solemn library.

Eisenhower was, of course, still General of the Army. He had explained to the trustees that, if he were needed, his first duty was to the service—"I shall be in the Army as long as I am aboveground!" For this reason the Government allowed him two military aides, Lieut. Col. Craige Cannon and Maj. Robert Schulz, as well as Sergeants Moany and Dry. They were none too many, for during Eisenhower's term as President of Columbia he did almost as much work for the Army as for the university.

In fact, Ike never did get a chance to settle down to his job at Columbia. First there was the pressure of politics, which had begun back at Fort Myer. This consisted of intimations from both Republicans and Democrats that Ike could have the presidential nomination in 1948 by saying one word—yes.

Mamie, who had long since recovered from any notion that she wanted to be First Lady, viewed these overtures with apprehension. She knew that Ike did not want to be President, and would accept only if he was convinced that it was his duty thus to serve America. Mamie was scared that some of the silver-tongued politicians would be convincing.

Eisenhower's statement that he "could not accept nomination for any political office" finally took him out of politics—for good and all, Mamie hoped. He played no part in the campaign, though he did accept an invitation to lunch with Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, the Republican candidate, and give him the benefit of his advice about the military situation of the United States. This was strictly nonpolitical.

That fall Ike and Mamie registered for the first time, and voted for Tom Dewey.

Though Eisenhower had been acting as President of Columbia since June, he was not officially installed until October 12, 1948. The Eisenhowers held a huge reception the night before in the rotunda of Low Memorial Library. Standing beside Ike in the receiving line, Mamie shook hands with over a t people. It was her first experience of l ceiving, and before it was through he felt so numb that she wondered if the drop off.

There were more than 10,000 peop on folding chairs in the great court of bia the following day. From her sea John in the front row, Mamie watc stately academic procession wind, two up the aisle to their seats on the platfo gaily colored hoods on their black go claimed their degrees and the great sities they represented.

Craning her neck, Mamie saw Ike alone at the tail of the procession, look solemn in his black scholastic robe. H when he at last mounted the platfo took his place in a carved, thronelik the inextinguishable Eisenhower gri out, and Mamie noted that Ike's board had somehow achieved the ra of an overseas cap.

Then came the speeches, the pres of the golden key of office, and Eisen moving address. When it was over, I ceded by the medieval mace bearer slowly down the steps, followed by t procession. As the new President of C reached the foot of the long flight c 10,000 people rose in unrehearsed h

Half crying, Mamie stood in the fro watching Ike come slowly nearer. S he did the most incredible thing a could do. He slipped out of line, leav procession in confusion. Mamie felt l around her, his lips on her cheek. He wh "Don't you ever stand up because Mamie!" Then he skipped back into li throwing the dignity of his position him like a cloak, paced slowly on.

It must be recorded that Columbia least successful of Eisenhower's assign and that Mamie did not have her cus easy time winning friends there. Then many reasons for Ike's difficulties— that he did not have time. Crises in the kept jerking him back to Washington; speeches, to which he felt he n order to make his views on as as widely known as possible, over the country.

r's cherished plan for the unifiarmed services in one Department had been made into law but not terservice jealousy had sabotaged rly the rivalry between the Navy Force. This had been patched up, tled. Late in 1949, the Chief perations, Adm. Louis Denfeld, re the quarrel wide open by his ony before a Congressional come was only one man in America confidence of the angry admirals, igent airmen and the anxious sident Truman telephoned Eisensked him to act as mediator. True nise, Ike started for Washington absence from Columbia the next ent the next two months in a bedroom at the Hotel Statler in , trying to hold her husband tole he tried to keep the military nt of the United States from com-Never had Mamie seen Ike so up-ower saw the safety of America by a foolish quarrel between the ho were sworn to defend her.

nd, reason prevailed. The armed re brought to an agreement. It was st victory Ike ever won—Von was never so bad. Mamie had a n her hands.
Snyder diagnosed his illness as itis brought on by overwork and haustion. He ordered Ike to take ths' absolute rest, and to give up This part of the cure was almost the disease to the chain-smoking fact, a year or so later when somehim if he was ever going to take g again, he said, "I don't know
, but I'll darn well never give it up nhowers went to a cottage at the National Golf Club in Georgia. mie helped to cure her husband's nsion by presenting him with a set s and a blank canvas. Like Winston Ike found complete and wonderful distraction in painting—he could lose himself for hours. Mamie encouraged him by praising his work extravagantly. In truth, it was remarkably good, with something in it of the primitive starkness of the itinerant portrait painters of eighteenth-century America.

By May, 1950, the Eisenhowers were back at Columbia. Ike, completely restored, plunged into his work with tremendous vigor. In June, the Korean war began. Again Washington called for help, and Ike began commuting between jobs.

Despite all this, it was a fairly peaceful summer, enlivened by a trip to Denver, and a return visit from the Douds. Mamie was terribly worried about Pooh-Bah, who was failing visibly.

Both Mamie and Ike had always wanted to own a home. Now they bought a good-sized farm at Gettysburg—remembering how happy they had been there. The old brick house had been right between the armies on those terrible July days of 1863, but had come through unscathed. Mamie had a wonderful time planning how to fix it up. She looked forward to the day when Ike would retire, and they could live there in peace.

In the autumn, they again had the illusion of being settled at Columbia. However, Mamie kept her fingers crossed. A lot of politicians came calling—Senator Lodge, and bluff Senator Duff of Pennsylvania, Roy Roberts of the Kansas City Star, Governor Dewey and many more. That meant the presidential pressure was being turned on again.

As it turned out, Eisenhower did not have to make up his mind just then about the presidency or anything else. It was made up for him by world events that abruptly changed the course of his life, and started Mamie moving again.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization, which came into effect in 1949, was designed to defend Western Europe from the threat of communist imperialism. A Supreme Commander must be appointed for the joint forces of the twelve member nations. Again it seemed that Eisenhower was the indispensable man; the only one everybody trusted. In December, 1950, President Truman offered him the job. This time Mamie was not consulted—it was a clear call of duty. Ike accepted, though reluctantly.

As soon as word came from Washington, Mamie began to pack. There was an immense amount to be done. The Eisenhowers' personal possessions must be separated from the Columbia furnishings and sent to storage—or so Mamie felt.

General Eisenhower assumed command of the NATO forces in January, 1951. Being somewhat superstitious about names, he called it SHAPE (Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers in Europe), which echoed the sound of his lucky wartime headquarters, SHAEF. After setting up an organization, he flew home to fetch Mamie.

Early in February the Eisenhowers left for France by ship—Mamie still would not fly. With them went their faithful official family, General and Mrs. Snyder, Rose, and Sergeants Dry and Moany. Bob Schulz, now a lieutenant colonel, had gone on ahead.

The Eisenhowers went straight to Versailles. Ike had picked out a pleasant modern apartment at the Hôtel Trianon, where he had lived during the final phase of his great campaign. Mamie liked his choice, though the French were prudently economical with the heat. When Mamie plugged in an American electric heater it blew out every fuse in the place. The leftist French press, which was gunning for Eisenhower, made a great to-do about the incident; Mamie had burned her fingers, so to speak, on a heater that wouldn't work.

Though Mamie liked the apartment, she was not allowed to keep it, since it was not large enough for the entertaining the Supreme Commander must do. So she went house hunting, and again fell afoul of the French newspapers.

For their official residence, the French government offered the Eisenhowers a huge villa formerly owned by society-minded Lady Mendl, whose avocation was interior decorating. When Mamie saw the house it looked like a Rouben Mamoulianish dream of high life in the International Set. You might, perhaps, reside in its ornate grandeurs, but you could not possibly live there. She turned it down.

Whereupon the whole French press jumped on her. Who did this American general's wife think she was, refusing the generous offer of the French government? Who was she to set herself up as an arbiter of good taste and criticize the artistic judgment of a people famous for their flair? Her refusal, it seemed, was a personal insult to the entire French nation. (Lady Mendl had been an American.)

What Mamie was looking for was someplace where she could make a home for Ike. The last thing she had intended was to insult anybody. The thought that she had tarnished Ike's popularity and made his task more difficult made her so unhappy that she cried all over the front page of Le Matin.

Then she got good and mad. All her married life she had lived in other people's houses, but at least she had been allowed to do what she could with them.

AT this point the harassed French officials suggested that she look at the Villa St. Pierre at Marnes la Coquette, ten miles west of Paris and only a few minutes' drive from the miniature Pentagon the French government was building in the national forest of Marly to house SHAPE. To their profuse relief, Mamie said it was perfect.

The Villa St. Pierre was a charming country house set on a small knoll with lawns sloping down to a little artificial lake. It had simple, classic Regency lines, and though it seemed small, the interior was quite spacious, with long French windows overlooking turf that stayed green all winter. Mamie knew that she and Ike could be happy there, but first she had to furnish it livably. There was a little difficulty about that.

The French government was as courteously anxious to please as Columbia's trustees had been. It put the precious antiques from a national museum at Mamie's disposal. It also sent a staff of eight famous Parisian decorators down to help her.

Mamie proposed to use the lovely old pieces from the museum to furnish her new home in the classic style consonant with its architecture. The decorators saw in it a wonderful display case for their wares, and an Never Underestimate the Power of a Woman!

"My feet are murdering me!"

Aching feet can put lines in your face!

When tired, aching feet make your face look tense and drawn, those pain-lines may soon become old-looking wrinkles—there to stay!

At the first sign of foot-fatigue, rub your feet with Absorbine Jr.

Quickly, gently, Absorbine Jr. soothes and cools. It makes your feet feel better, you feel better . . . and your face shows it! Get Absorbine Jr. wherever drugs are sold.

W. F. Young, Inc., Springfield, Mass.

Absorbine Jr.

SELL Christmas Cards FOR 3¢ EACH

PRINTED WITH SENDER'S NAME

Make $65.00 CASH on only 50 orders by Amazing Double-up Plan. Sell Personal Christmas Cards printed with Sender's Name for just about 3¢ each. No experience needed. 28 CARDS FREE! All different styles. Designs include Religious, Humorous, Artistic, and Business. Also special box assortment sent on approval. Big season now. Send no money. Samples Free! Send name on postcard.
GENERAL CARD CO., 1300 W. Jackson, Dept. 40-I, Chicago 7, Ill.

UNWANTED HAIR?
IT'S OFF because IT'S OUT

Quick as a wink, superfluous hair eliminated. Completely removes all hair from FACE, arms and legs. Checks future growth. Leaves the skin petal-smooth.

ZiP EPILATOR ®

Like magic, Milady's skin becomes adorable. For the finest down or the heaviest growth. Seems miraculous, but our 39 years experience proves it is the scientifically correct way. Odorless. Safe. Harmless. Simple to apply. Superior to ordinary hair removers. For 15 years ZiP Epilator was $5.00. NOW ONLY $1.10. Same superior formula, same size. Good stores or by mail $1.10 or C.O.D. No Fed. tax. Above guaranteed, money-back.
JORDEAU INC. Box G-11 SOUTH ORANGE, N.J.

Corns . . . Sore Toes, Tender Spots?

SUPER-FAST RELIEF!

Super-Soft Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads not only give you fast, nerve-deep relief . . . stop corns before they can start . . . remove corns one of the quickest ways known to medical science—but also ease new or tight shoes! No other method does all these things. So, insist on Dr. Scholl's!

Super-Soft Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads

Which do you prefer?

Pretty percales or sturdy muslins?

Exciting colors?

Quick, effortless bed-making?

Unique, daintily packaged gift sets?

Oversize, double, twin, single, crib?

The one perfect answer to all is Pequot sheets and pillowcases! Percales and muslins, seven lovely colors, flat or fitted sheets, pair packaged gift sets, sizes to fit any bed, crib to Hollywood!

"All about Sheets" and "Easy Sewing Magic with Sheets" are valuable, informative booklets every woman should have. Send 10¢ for each booklet to cover mailing to Dept. L-4—

PEQUOT MILLS
Salem, Mass.

"The Nation Sleeps on PEQUOT SHEETS" especially designed to wear when it's early fall on the calendar . . .

summer on the thermometer

Span-Season Shoes
by Tweedies®
ALLURING FOOTWEAR

Comet

Tweedie Footwear Corporation • Jefferson City, Missouri

opportunity to show what they could do in the line of modern decoration. The resulting clash was sharpened by the fact that all eight knew only a few English words among them, and Mamie's French was rudimentary.

In the end, the battle of Marnes la Coquette was just about a draw. Mamie succeeded in keeping the main effect simple and traditional, but she lost several skirmishes. When she was not looking the decorators installed modernistic, office-type lighting fixtures in the dining room. All the pictures belonged to the modern school of art, which she hated. Overcompensating, perhaps, in her pleasant yellow-and-green bedroom, Mamie hung a landscape her husband had copied in oils from an English calendar.

Despite the trials and errors, Mamie loved the Villa St. Pierre. Reminiscing about it, she spoke nostalgically of the view from her bedroom window. "It was so serene. The lawns and fields had so many shades of green; there were stately old trees. I could see the lovely little pond with its Japanese bridge. I loved that bridge. Something was always going on—a cat would walk over it, birds perched on the railings, a fish would jump in the pond."

She had a putting green made for Ike, and the pond stocked with trout. When unexpected guests came for dinner, she would send Moany out to catch some fish, and would direct his efforts from her window: "Better catch a couple more. We don't want to seem skimpy."

The great worlds of diplomacy, war and politics poured through the Villa St. Pierre. Mamie gave many stately parties for them with the exquisite food and vintage wines they all loved. But even in Europe she managed to alleviate protocol with a sense of humor.

When the Eisenhowers dined alone or with fellow Americans, Ike got the kind of food he liked—roast beef, onions and home-baked beans. In summer there was corn on the cob, which Mamie succeeded in growing in the unsuitable climate of France by planting it against a wall with a southern exposure.

Mamie needed the happiness and serenity of this pleasant house; for she came to it after a blow that she had dreaded throughout the past few years. While she was still at the Hôtel Trianon, Mrs. Doud came over to visit her. Shortly after her arrival came the news that their beloved Pooh-Bah had died of a heart attack in Denver.

Mrs. Doud determined to fly home immediately, and Mamie's sorrow for her father and anxiety for Mamma Doud overcame her fear of flying. The Supreme Commander's Air Force Constellation was put at their disposal. In it Mamie and her mother flew directly to Denver. A stormy Atlantic crossing was hardly a soothing voyage for a beginner, but Mamie felt that it was the right thing to do—and so she did it. Her one concession to nervousness was to say to the general's pilot, Lt. Col. William G. Draper, "Please fly nice and low."

From that time on Mamie has flown nearly everywhere with Ike. In the summer of 1951, she went with him on official visits to many of the NATO countries, including Sweden, Norway, Denmark, England and Holland. On a trip to Luxembourg they stayed with Perle Mesta. In Holland Mamie found a fellow canasta enthusiast in Queen Juliana.

In the course of these travels Mamie became quite casually accustomed to staying with kings and queens and amusing prime ministers with dinner-table chitchat. She also got used to flying, and, in fact, became so fond of General Eisenhower's luxurious Constellation, that she suggested naming it The Columbine, after the state flower of Colorado.

THOUGH Mamie had been sure that Ike's appointment to SHAPE had laid that business of the presidency permanently to rest, she soon learned that it was only in abeyance. By July, 1951, the politicians began dropping in at

Marnes la Coquette for significant lit with Ike.

Mamie, who was beginning to lea politics, knew that all these men wer Ike to run for the Republican nomina was, they said, the only man strong en give the Republican Party progressiv ship and assure victory in the next
This time there would be no silve present of the nomination. Ike would fight for it against the tremendous power of Sen. Robert A. Taft, of O one denied Taft's integrity and abil many Republicans believed he did n sufficient popularity to defeat the Dem

Throughout the rainy autumn o Mamie watched Ike worry about what right thing to do. On the one hand, h SHAPE, though well begun, was o completed. On the other, the electio Administration hostile to American pa tion in European affairs might wr whole edifice of international co-opera times Mamie yearned over her troub band with an almost maternal desire t him. But, true to her principles, she make no move to sway his decision.

IN the end, Ike chose the harder cou January 7, 1952, he announced, in effe he was a candi the Republica nation for Pres
the United Stat

Mamie's de tion to stay in th ground worke enough until Ik home to fight Republican n
tion and the pres
Then she found help him she on the front much as possib more publici got — good pub
the better for h

Mamie's baptism of fire came on 1952, when Ike went back to Abilene the preconvention campaign with the litical speech he had ever made—he fused to say a word until his formal ment from the Army in Washington before. For Mamie that first day w worst—and in some ways the best.

The train pulled up alongside a p specially built at the spot where the hower back lot abutted on the tracks Union Pacific. Holding tight to Ike' Mamie stepped out of the air-conditio into the sticky heat of a thunderstormy day, and a roar of sound that you f could lean on. There were quick greet old friends on the platform, and hasty ductions to smiling weather-beaten me looked like farmers because they mostl

The first ceremony was laying the stone of the museum to be built by the hower Foundation adjoining the house Ike grew up. As Mamie walked besi along a boardwalk between smiling, f faces, she suddenly realized that some cheers were for her. Her nervousness peared in a glow of friendliness.

When they mounted the dais, there w other wild ovation. This was not the oc of the real speech, which would com Ike talked very simply about his boyho the fine things his father and moth stood for. Mamie could tell that he w mendously moved. He kept looking familiar yard with verbena and swee blooming, and red roses climbing up th porch. Then Ike knelt down to put the under the cornerstone with a silver
When he stood up Mamie saw that h were full of tears. So, of course, she cri

After that they went through the small streets, jammed with folk from all ov state, to the Sunflower Hotel, where the of two tiny rooms was soon packed people come to greet Ike. That was Mamie learned that the phrase "smok room" was no mere figure of speech.

The opening-gun speech was set fo o'clock at the baseball park. It came cl sfire. As they drove out, thunder-red above them, and the western m-purple shot with lightning gold.

minutes before the zero hour the e in the full fury of lashing rain, the ear-splitting crack of lightning se.
s no shelter, and no chance of post-Forty million people or more in s and territories of the Union were heir radios and television sets wait-Ike. He could not disappoint them.
wed hat Ike stepped onto the plat-d with sodden bunting, and began out down the elements.
her hat and dress a watery wreck, nched teeth, so intent on Ike's per-that she hardly noticed her own was amazing how many people ear him: women in mud-splattered ery; men with their trousers rolled nees. Ike had rolled his trousers up ice was clear and firm between the static. When a thunderbolt drowned e went back and said it again. Part e his rain-blurred spectacles failed he talked from memory, or sponsaid what came to mind.
ch was magnificent on the field, but od over the air waves. The wonder as made at all.

ilene they went to Denver, where ng was at least half for Mamie. As by the corner of Colfax Street on to the Douds', she saw a sheet, held en broomsticks, on which was

FAYETTE STREET GANG
says
WELCOME MAMIE!

wer headquarters were set up in the d Brown Palace Hotel, which looked ge chocolate flatiron. It was built central well ten stories high from the the roof, with balconies running t every floor. The headquarters was arren of rooms on the mezzanine.
senhowers also had the large Presi-ite on the top floor, though they pt at home on Lafayette Street—had time to sleep at all.
mie's amazement, all the politicians ates, newspaper people and influenurs seemed to want to meet her as
e. Mostly she received them in the r-filled drawing room of the suite.
pened to be at home when a fresh arrived, Arthur Vandenberg would ry call, and Mamie would dress and to the Brown like a fireman going ass pole.
er times people would come to Street, and Mamie would sit on the et and talk to them—she liked that She did not talk about politics at all.
ing she knew enough, she stuck to ory of letting Ike run the office. So hatted about things in general or r visitors pictures of her grandchilre were three of them now: David, nn and the new baby, Susan, whom "Susy Q."
nes Ike went off on speechmaking time for the Republican Convention g close and the fight for the nominad hot. Senator Taft had many more pledged to him than Ike could count ted sure of winning. A lot of people enhower camp were pretty despondie did not worry. Her solution for all the world was to elect Ike President, lt sure that the people would do it.
he time came to leave for the Con-Chicago, Mamie had developed a ralgic headache—it felt like a tooth-r temple. Ordinarily she would have er bed, but she had no time for such General Snyder filled her full of d other painkillers to keep her going.
enhower Special made a triumphal Every place it stopped crowds were nd Mamie always managed to get ve and smile as happily as though were not ready to crack. In Chicago to the Blackstone Hotel. Then the eally came on.

As the delegates poured into the city, it seemed as if every one of them wanted to meet Eisenhower whether he intended to vote for him or not. After they saw Ike, they wanted to meet Mamie too. They came through the suite in droves all day and most of the night. Somehow Mamie seemed to be able to make them feel like old friends in five minutes. Whenever anybody started to talk about the business at hand, she always said, "I don't understand politics." But after watching delegation after delegation go solemn and tight-lipped into Mamie's room and come out laughing in evident delight, a newspaperman told her, "You're the best politician of the lot."

Came the morning of the first vote on the candidates. Eisenhower headquarters were a wild confusion of men either shouting loudly or whispering in corners. Mamie was flat on her back with the worst headache yet. It was eased a bit by General Snyder's ministrations, but she had a feeling of floating in unreality.

When the Convention was called to order things quieted down in Eisenhower's suite. The general, Mrs. Doud and a few close friends sat in the parlor watching it on television. Mamie lay in bed with the radio on, while Snyder kept track of the votes on a tally sheet. "Alabama, fourteen votes," came the chairman's resonant voice; and the echo from the floor, "Alabama votes for Taft ——"

As the states voted in alphabetical order, Taft piled up a big early lead. Then Governor Dewey brought in a thundering 92 votes out of New York's total of 96, and Ike forged ahead. Mamie lost track of the counting, but Snyder kept telling her the totals. Lesser candidates like Gov. Earl Warren, of California, and Harold Stassen, of Minnesota, were picking up a few votes. It became evident that Ike would not get the 604 votes needed for a clear majority on the first ballot. As the final vote, that of the Virgin Islands, was counted, Snyder said, "Ike's got five hundred and ninety-five votes, nine short of a majority."

"Does that mean we're beaten?" Mamie asked.

"No. Taft has only five hundred. It's good. Wait a minute ——"

Out of the confused jumble of sound from the convention floor a voice was calling. The chairman's bellow cut through the babel: "Does Minnesota wish to change its vote?" (Minnesota had cast 19 votes for Stassen.)

"Yes," came the far-off voice. "Minnesota votes for Eisenhower."

"That does it!" said General Snyder.

Then it seemed lots of states wanted to change their votes; the stampede to Eisenhower was on.

Ike came quickly into the room and sat down on Mamie's bed. With a protective instinct she said vaguely, "Honey, everything's going to be all right!"

Ike's grin flashed for a second. "I know," he said. Then he took her hand and sat there thinking hard. Suddenly he stood up decisively and said, "I'm going right across the street to see Senator Taft."

That was so like him, Mamie thought, to go straight to the defeated candidate instead of waiting, as protocol demanded, for Taft to come to him. He would begin healing the wounds right away, so that the Republicans could fight the election as a united party. But Mamie also knew that it was not just a political move—Ike was not that subtle. It was his instinctive generosity toward a valiant though vanquished opponent.

THAT night Mamie went with Ike to the Convention for his acceptance speech. Guarded by Secret Service men, who took over when Eisenhower was nominated, they drove through the cheering crowds to the convention hall. The place was riotous. Secret Service men, friends and strangers formed a flying wedge around them and fought through the tight-packed tumultuous throng. It took nearly ten minutes to reach the comparative security of the platform.

And what of Mamie's terror of crowds? How did she survive? "Survive, heck! I loved it!" Her headache had vanished and she stood radiant in the dazzling television lights, laughing and waving, while such cheers as she had never heard before beat against them until sound seemed to defeat itself and the uproar became an elemental condition of life. When it stopped, at last, the silence was almost earsplitting.

Of course Mamie cried a little as Ike solemnly and humbly accepted the nomination. Then she was laughing again, calling out to friends, as the flying wedge formed up to carry them out to the car. It had been an incredible day.

THEY all flew back to Denver for ten days' rest. Ike went fishing in the mountains, and Mamie went to bed and pretty much stayed there. Meanwhile the Democrats had their day in Chicago and nominated Adlai Stevenson. According to Ike, they had picked their best man. It was going to be a hard fight.

As soon as Ike got back from his fishing trip, they all plunged into the work of organizing the campaign. Mamie stayed with Ike at the hotel now—there was no time to go to the Douds' except on Sundays. They both got up at six every morning, and were hard at work before eight. The amount of mail Mamie got amazed her—about three hundred letters a day. She answered them all.

Almost all the letters were friendly, but quite a few of them from women urged Mamie to do away with her bangs. When anybody mentioned the bangs to her in person, she had a way of sweeping them back, showing that her hairline was almost an inch higher than the average. "You've got to cover it somehow," she would say, "and, besides, Ike likes my bangs." That settled that.

A neighbor was explaining to her small daughter the details of the illness of our dog, and several times mentioned the dog doctor. The child listened wanderingly, and when the mother had finished, asked, "What sort of dog was the dog doctor?"

People who thought that Ike would jitter and Mamie wilt under the pressure of politics could not have been more mistaken. They both thrived on it. General Snyder summed it up by saying, "Ike's bitten the bullet. He's in it heart and soul, and actually enjoying it."

Snyder's diagnosis was also true of Mamie. She even learned to handle things by herself. For example, when Ike was off speechmaking, the vice-presidential nominee, Sen. Richard M. Nixon, came to Denver. It was up to Mamie to entertain him. Her first move was to telephone Colorado's genial, cowboy-booted governor, Dan Thornton: "I'm giving a party for the Nixons, please help me out by playing host."

"Of course," said Governor Dan.

"Do you think he'll like a party in our back yard?"

"He's sure to."

It was a fine party, with barbecued steak, corn roasted in the embers, and watermelon. Thornton had been one of Eisenhower's strongest supporters; he became Mamie's ardent fan. "I was working sixteen hours a day and really beaten down," he said. "Then I'd see Mamie and come away refreshed. It was a new day."

Another time when Mamie went it alone was much later, at a meeting of Republican Women in St. Louis. Somehow arrangements had gone awry; there was no one to introduce her, no one even in charge. As two hundred leaderless women pushed around her, Mamie took command. In a clear, authoritative voice that surprised herself, she shouted, "Form in line! If you form in line, I'll be glad to shake hands with all of you." The restoration of order that followed seemed miraculous to her.

Such action would have been unthinkable for Mamie a year, or even two months, before.

There was one bad day in Denver that had nothing to do with politics. That was when John flew in on his way to Korea. Late in the evening Mamie went out to the air base where they had set aside a room in which she could be with her son for a few precious minutes. She had been a good soldier's wife, but her fortitude was not quite equal to saying good-by to John. She broke down like a million other mothers. When she came out her face was swollen and tear-streaked in the merciless glare of the photographers' flash bulbs which pursued her even there.

But she was more determined than ever that Ike must be President. With supreme confidence she told herself, "He'll either win that darn war or stop it somehow."

Early in September Eisenhower headquarters were moved to the Commodore Hotel in New York, while Ike and Mamie went to live at 60 Morningside Drive. It was both familiar and

NOW!

2 delightful forms of the TALC in America's beloved fragrance

April Showers

1. The long-loved talc . . . silky-soft, luxuriously smoothing and soothing... with the fragrance that's fresh as a garden in the rain. Ask for April Showers REGULAR Talc. 39¢

2. New! Deodorant Form
An exciting, "two-purpose" version of this famous, fragrant talc. Wonderful ingredients have been added for all-over body deodorant protection. Ask for April Showers DEODORANT Talc. 50¢

ANNOUNCING... THE NEW...

April Showers

LIQUID CREAM deodorant

You'll want to discover this new anti-perspirant in creamy liquid form. Its smooth, creamy texture is so kind to your skin . . . pleasant to use and refreshingly scented! 79¢

Prices plus tax

by CHERAMY PERFUMER

BUY-LINES
by Nancy Sasser

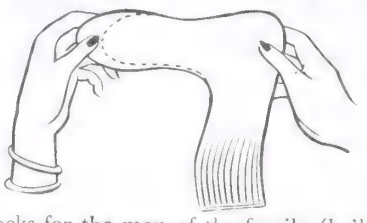
AN ADVERTISING COLUMN

IMITATION IS THE HIGHEST FORM OF FLATTERY . . . so naturally I'm pleased as punch to discover so many people smoking my cigarette . . . new King-Size, Filter Tip VICEROYS! But it doesn't surprise me at all . . . because regardless of what other brands claim, my own experience proves that VICEROY'S double-filtering action really does double my smoking pleasure. And I'm sure it will yours . . . for VICEROY'S new "miracle" filter filters the smoke through 20,000 tiny filter traps . . . and in addition, there's VICEROY'S extra length of choice, costly tobaccos. Result? You get a smooth, easy draw and the rich, full taste of fine tobacco . . . every delightful puff of the way! You'll like the way VICEROY'S neat filter tip keeps tobacco bits out of your mouth . . . and the way it feels so cool to your lips. But judge for yourself . . . by trying a pack of new King-Size, Filter Tip VICEROYS. You'll agree they double your smoking pleasure . . . yet cost only a penny or two more than cigarettes without filters.

THE SASSERS ARE SUMMERING in the country and we're enjoying every moment . . . rain or shine! That's because we brought along our favorite entertainment . . . famous PARKER GAMES! And our neighbors love them just as much as we do . . . are dropping in every day to join our family fun. There's a PARKER GAME to delight everyone of every age, too . . . but we grown-ups are particularly partial to "Keyword", which I consider the best crossword board game ever devised! However, "Monopoly" and "Clue" are equally popular . . . while the small-fry never tire of "Sorry" and "Pegity". And I'm positive you'll be as enthusiastic about PARKER GAMES as we are . . . so get several different ones for your family to play at home and when you go away. They also make grand gifts . . . and perfect party prizes. And get this:

BOOKLET called "How to Have Family Fun and Popular Parties with Parker Games" . . . because it's packed with entertaining ideas plus suggestions for special party themes and refreshments to make you the most popular hostess in town. It's yours for only 10c . . . see OFFER #1 in box.

I LIKE TO SAVE MONEY . . . do you? Then you should make frozen suckers at home the way I do . . . because homemade suckers cost only about 1½c each made with "JUNKET" BRAND SHERBET MIX as compared to the price I imagine you pay for suckers every day. And you can make them easily . . . if you send for this:



SPECIAL OFFER . . . a brand-new, flexible plastic mold with 8 sanitary wooden sticks. The mold has four sections to make four suckers at a time . . . and you know they're wholesome since you make them yourself! It's really a 59c value . . . but I've persuaded the makers to let me OFFER it to you for just 25c and a "JUNKET" SHERBET MIX box top. This marvelous mold isn't sold in stores . . . you must check OFFER #2 in box to get yours! Do it today . . . save money right away!

"JUNKET" SHERBET MIX makes the most delicious sherbet you ever tasted, too . . . in your choice of four fabulous fruit flavors . . . Orange, Lemon, Raspberry and new Lime! So get them all . . . and "feature" cooling sherbet for dessert these hot days!

YOU'D LOOK PRETTIER AND YOUNGER if your hair had shimmering color and sparkling lights . . . so let me urge you again to use MARCHAND'S Rinse! It really makes a glorious difference . . . leaves dull hair glowing and blends gray streaks right in. Which color should you use? That's entirely up to you . . . for whether you're a blonde, brunette or red head one of MARCHAND'S 12 safe, Government-approved colors (with special shades for beautiful white hair!) will be ideal for you. All are nature-matched and a joy to use, too . . . take only a few minutes after your regular shampoo and wash out easily! And with MARCHAND'S there's no dyed look . . . no tell-tale stain around your hair line, either. But besides giving your hair exciting color, MARCHAND'S Rinse also removes soap film . . . keeps your hair silky-soft and a perfect angel to manage. And you can afford to use it after every shampoo . . . because it costs only 25c for 6 Rinses or 10c for 2. At all Drug and Variety Stores.

EXCITING NEW THINGS are happening in Du Pont NYLON these days . . . but the most exciting of all, I think, is a new stretchable sock that eliminates the size problem! And the reason is this . . . these new socks expand so far and so evenly that with a minimum of sizes (1 to 3) every man, woman and child can be fitted with sized-to-order comfort. What's more, these expandable NYLON socks literally g-r-o-w with your youngsters' feet . . . which means there's no more guessing (and no more tiresome exchanging!) of those socks you buy (and receive!) for gifts. And like all NYLON socks they're easy-washing, quick-drying . . . and wonderfully long-wearing. So get some of these new stretchable NYLON socks for the man of the family (he'll bless your heart!) . . . as well as for yourself and the youngsters. You'll find them at your Favorite Store . . . in many lovely colors and a variety of knits!

Write Nancy Sasser, Dept. P-3, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y. for:

☐ OFFER #1 . . . PARKER'S BOOKLET "How to Have Family Fun and Popular Parties with Parker Games" . . . please enclose 10c.

☐ OFFER #2 . . . "JUNKET" Frozen Sucker Mold . . . please enclose 25c and "JUNKET" SHERBET MIX boxtop.

strange to be in the big house again, at home but not really home. At any rate, she did not have time to settle in before she was off on the campaign train.

The first trip of the Eisenhower Special was scheduled to run through twelve Western and Southern states, while Ike made eight major speeches and seventy-seven whistle-stop talks—actually there were many more. Mamie frankly dreaded the trip, but like everything else that had worried her about this strange adventure, it turned out to be quite wonderful. Speaking in retrospect, she says, "The campaign train was wearing, but so rewarding that I would not give up the memory of it for anything. The wonderful faces we saw all over the country, so happy and contented. It was inspiring because, you see, we had been away so long from people who looked happy."

Even a peripatetic train has a routine; and Mamie soon got into the swing of it. Up early in the morning; breakfast with wives of the local politicos while the men talked politics; then a stop at some city, and the motorcade through the roaring streets, with Mamie sitting on a couple of cushions in the back of a convertible, waving and yelling "Hi!" to shouts of "Hi, Mamie." Then the speech; a short reception, the rush back to the train; a whistle stop with Ike talking seriously from the rear platform, and finally saying, "Now I want you to meet Mamie," and beckoning her to come out. Mamie would kid with the crowd and lean over to sign autographs. Then the train would pull out, and they'd do it all over again half an hour later. The pattern varied from state to state and day to day, but in the main that is how it went.

One stop that was not even a whistle became famous throughout the nation. Just at dawn the train pulled up beside a shedlike station in the sparse pine woods of North Carolina. Two or three hundred people who had risen in the dead of night in the hope of a glimpse of them crowded around the car.

Ike, in his dressing gown, came into Mamie's stateroom: "Come on, honey! Let's say hello to them!"

"Like this?" asked Mamie.

"Sure! You're pretty as a picture."

So in her robe, with her hair in curlers, Mamie went to the car door and stood with Ike laughing with the friendly people. A reporter who was in the crowd told her that he heard one woman say, "She's going to get him elected." It made Mamie very proud.

Incidentally, the picture that was taken then appeared in virtually every newspaper, and undoubtedly brought in a lot of votes. By that picture also hangs a tale. There were three press-association photographers on the train, representing AP, UP and INS. Only one of them had taken the trouble to get up for that dawn stop, and he got the picture of a lifetime. A little later, while Mamie was having breakfast, Jim Hagerty came in and explained the situation. "The other two boys are in bad trouble," he said. "They're apt to get fired."

"We can fix that," Mamie said. "I'll put my hair up in curlers again, and we'll restage it."

IN October the Eisenhowers took the train again up through New England. The Yankees seemed just as hotly enthusiastic as the Western people and the Southerners. But the politicians told Mamie that it was far from a sure thing. The public-opinion polls gave Eisenhower a slight lead, but the polls had been known to err in favor of the Republicans. Ike was radiantly confident. Mamie proudly watched him getting better at his new job every day.

The final days were a sort of blur. The huge rally in Madison Square Garden, and Election Eve in Boston's Garden with a rally followed by the television-radio broadcast when the Eisenhowers and Nixons appeared together informally. Ike said the last word just at midnight in an impromptu speech.

As they went down to the waiting car Mamie said, "That was a beautiful speech, Ike."

Ike smiled his pleasure. "Was it, truly?" he asked. And then, vaguely, "What did I say?"

Election Day was surprisingly peaceful. The train got to New York just as daylight began to filter through the city haze. Mamie and Ike, who had three hours of sleep, drove straight to the polling pl voted at 7:38 A.M.—the straight R ticket. Then they went to 60 Morning long lazy day. Mamie mostly slept painted a little. They had the peacef that everything had been done could do.

About six that evening they went sun porch on the roof, where the tele stood. Mamma Doud was there, a Barbara and the children. A few friends came in, among them the Sn the Nevinses. Art Nevins was rather because his brother Allen had dec Stevenson. Ike laughed it off: "A ma vote the way he feels is right."

BY eight o'clock the returns were p Mamie could hardly believe th sounded so good. The wise ones grains of salt: "Too early to tell a But the news got better. The soldier going to Ike two to one. By 8:30 Co had gone for Eisenhower. He wa almost everywhere. Even the solid S cracking—Eisenhower led in Virgin to 34,000; he was leading in Florida

As the farm states of the Midwes the trend was confirmed. Mamie sa eyes shining. Though she had alwa that Ike was wonderful, it was thrill the whole country putting their con him.

By 10 P.M., when they started fo Headquarters, they knew that Ike In the roaring rooms at the Hotel Co the next two hours went by in bedl Adlai Stevenson made a graceful sp ceding Eisenhower's victory. At 2 A. walked with her husband into the pa room of the Commodore, and the bl television lights, for Ike's quietly hu tory speech. "Let us unite for the be of America for our children and o children. . . . We cannot now do a ahead of us except as a united peo

As they rode homeward throug Park, with the motorcycle escort around them, Ike and Mamie were silent and solemn as if they had were both thinking of their respe ahead in their own way. Eisenhowe inspired and oppressed by the awful bility of the American people's con him, and the question of how he c them best. Mamie, sharply perso point of view, thought only of how best help Ike.

To most Americans the preside symbolized by a flag, or an eagle clawful of lightning, or any other of pings. Just as the dome of the Cap trade-mark of democracy, the Wh stands for the Chief Executive. Its b dignity fit the prestige of the office, b at all forbidding. Indeed, its column suggests the hospitality that sinc times has been a cherished national its very name implies the simplicity expected of its occupant despite the wields.

Mamie Eisenhower shared the nat ing of respect and affection for House. She knew that while she live would become part of its tradition. son with her fondness for informa both shattering and humorous to herself as a symbol. She did not least like a bald eagle or even the England; but since it seemed that h would be slightly akin to both, she to act the part in the finest tradit White House. At the same time she ferociously determined to make it herself and Ike.

The first step was a personally tour of the house by Mrs. Truma wasted very little time on the state the ground floor. She knew them w and, besides, there was nothing sh about them, since they were under tion of the Fine Arts Commission. she did cast a sharp eye over the electrified kitchen with a view to venience and economy; for she w aware that several Presidents had

l running this place and she did not let Ike do that.

the second floor that interested ost. Here she could exercise her omemaking, although with tourists rough the lower floors every week- 0 A.M. to noon she would feel a little on nest-building in the New York rary.

r less than half an hour, Mamie had thing planned out as she mentally rniture around. There were not ugh closets, so she decided to make nan's small southwest-corner bed- a dressing room, taking the larger m next door to sleep in. The outsize l, which she had had made to order rs One, would fit against the west one of Ike's landscapes over it. In rner there was room for the won- desk with a complete bed that ut of it, which she had inherited ndma Carlson.

l have a large connecting room for ng room; and their sitting room the closed-off end of the broad cor- ran the full length of the house.

decided to have her bedroom painted she liked best, light green—there ainters on the payroll who could do great expense. Since her bed was te shade of pink, the rest of the had to be in accord. As she went he other rooms, Mamie kept her eye nk pieces she could borrow for her The draperies in Margaret Truman's the north side matched exactly; she e them and save the Government se of getting new draperies. She oom directly across the hall for Mrs. o would be here a good deal, she

Decorating the President's Oval Study would be up to Ike, with a few tactful suggestions, of course. Mamie, a confirmed porch sitter, liked the balcony outside it that President Truman had built, despite the row about it. Later she and Ike were often grateful to escape from the air-conditioned sterility of their rooms, and sit there enjoying the grass-sweet evening breeze from the river.

Farther along the hall was the Lincoln Room, where the Emancipation Proclamation had been signed. Though his extra-long, carved bed was there now, Mamie knew that President Lincoln had used it as his office, and had slept in the room she was planning for her own. With a dutiful historical gasp she passed on—the Lincoln Room was a case of "best not to touch."

In the Rose Suite, traditional quarters of visiting royalty, the huge four-poster bed was very high off the floor. Mamie made a mental note to have some sort of steps built for it—if the petite Queen of England ever came visiting she would never make the grade.

On the third floor, Mamie was mainly interested in accommodations for her grandchildren. There was a suite of rooms where they could put in a kitchenette to prepare the children's food. The playroom was pretty small, but she guessed it would do. . . .

As Mamie came out on the portico with Mrs. Truman the photographers rushed up. A reporter looked at the beautiful fur coat Ike had given her when he sold Crusade. "What's that coat made of?" he asked.

Mamie knew the reference was to Nixon's campaign phrase about "a good Republican cloth coat." She grinned and said airily, "Mink, of course."

Talking her new quarters over with Mike, who now lived on Klingle Street out Connecticut Avenue way, Mamie was enthusiastic. The spacious rooms, with their graceful classic furniture and sunshine pouring through the windows, gave one a sense of serenity which was as agreeable as it was unexpected. Despite the responsibilities that weighed upon its occupants, she felt that the White House was a happy place.

According to inflexible tradition, the Trumans must move out of the White House and the Eisenhowers move in between speeches on Inauguration Day. In all her many moves Mamie had never faced one that was quite like this. To take everything out of 60 Morningside and move into a place two hundred miles away in about twenty-four hours was a problem in logistics that might have baffled even Ike. It took extremely careful planning and split-second timing. She spent the next six weeks—mostly sitting up in bed with a heavy cold—organizing the arrangements. They worked as well as the plans for D day.

When she was not working on her moving day, Mamie was assembling a First Lady's wardrobe. She bought some very expensive dresses, among them a gray dressmaker suit from Hattie Carnegie to wear at the inauguration ceremonies. She made that eminent couturière redesign the skirt so it was very full. Her sparkling pink bouffant-skirted ball gown was from Nettie Rosenstein via Neiman-Marcus; there were daytime and evening dresses by Mollie Parnis; and a couple of dozen Sally Victor hats, all small and close-fitting.

In addition, there were many inexpensive dresses which Mamie had picked up in her travels. She loves a bargain and does not care where a dress comes from as long as it suits her. Once from a roaring motorcade in the campaign, she saw a dress in a shopwindow for $39.95 that she knew was just what she needed. She made a careful mental note of the store; wrote back and ordered it. Like all Army wives, Mamie had been a mail-order addict. Now that she could no longer go shopping without a great hullabaloo, she reverted to her former habit.

The Eisenhowers spent the night before the inaugural in the suite at the Statler which they had occupied for a few hours the day Ike came home from the war. Mamie woke up early and looked anxiously out the window. It was Eisenhower weather, all right, with rosy sunlight tinting the buildings and air as soft as April. She ordered a pot of coffee and some toast. Then she dressed for the special service at the National Presbyterian Church, putting on the gray suit and a small white hat that was a present from a Virginia lady she had never met. There were thirty-four members of the Eisenhower and Doud families at the church: Mrs. Doud, John and Barbara, of course; all of Ike's brothers and their wives; Mike and her husband; the Joel Carlsons; cousins from all over the country.

Back at the Statler, Mamie changed her hat to a gray, close-fitting Sally Victor and freshened her make-up. It was nearly time to pick up the Trumans when Ike, in shirt sleeves, came barging through the connecting door: "Say, Mamie, do you think it would be all right if I say a prayer?"

"A prayer?" Mamie asked.

"At the ceremony. Before my speech."

Mamie smiled fondly at his earnestness. "It's always a good thing to say a prayer," she answered softly.

It was then that Ike called a secretary and, standing beside Mamie's dressing table, dictated the moving prayer that was his first official utterance as President of the United States.

WASHINGTON was like a country fair that day. Everyone wore a smile and even the delays caused by the jostling crowds could not make them cross. Mamie rode down Pennsylvania Avenue between the massed tiers of cheering people with Mrs. Truman and Margaret. When she came out on the platform built on the Capitol steps, the great square in front of her was filled with gaily dressed people as far as she could see.

The simple, beautiful ceremony in which the enormous power of the presidency was transferred from one man to another took so brief a time that Mamie hardly realized when it was over and her husband was President.

WHAT WOULD YOU?

BY MARION LINEAWEAVER

"What would you?" I've been thinking bout this ever since Mr. and Mrs. Gould old me about a test which appeared in the HJ and contained approximately the same uestions.

There's no way of scoring, but the thing so revealing of character that scoring isn't ecessary. Sometimes it's quite disillusion- g, especially when asked to a man you hink is attractive and dashing, and it turns u he'd rather be a robin, a well-loved dog, nd would rather see the view from his own ont porch and eat roast beef, peas and ice ream.—M.L.

"What would you taste?
pices, or guavas, or almond paste?"

Apples, pulled from a branch bent low
By the drenching light
Of a harvest moon,
Cool to handle as globes of snow,
Warm to bite as the core of noon."

"What would you see?
tars, or pearls, or a blossoming tree?"

"The countercurrent under the green Turbulent swell
Of the Thracian Bosphorus,
Rippling the deep-down submarine
Meadows of shell,
Alight with phosphorus."

"If you could fly—
A lark? A swallow, skimming the sky?"

"A Canada goose from the polar icecap, Flying back
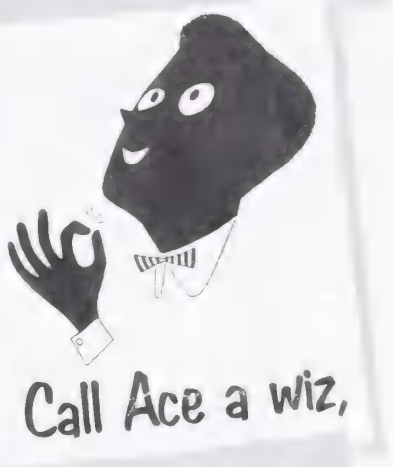
To the midnight sun,
Over the glaciers that heave and snap,
With the loud crack
Of a sullen gun."

"The animal kind:
A silver fox? Or a golden hind?"



"A beast, black as the blackest pitch
With topaz eyes
And ivory claws;
The camouflage of a new-made witch
Is jungle guise
And a panther's jaws."

"How would you look?
Like a princess out of a fairy book?"

"Like a Yankee clipper's figurehead, Carved to lean
In the shape of desire,
Breasting foam like a feather bed
Made for a queen
To set afire."

"What of hell, and heaven above?"
"The kiss of Death in the arms of Love."

— and first choice for the youngsters, too. Many a parent, brought up on Ace Hard Rubber Combs, knows they just can't scratch scalp or tear hair because every edge and end is polished satiny-smooth. Moderately priced . . . individually packaged. Sizes for all the family — at home or away.

American Hard Rubber Co., N.Y.13.

ACE® HARD RUBBER COMBS

SMOOTHER • STRONGER • LAST MUCH LONGER

The President's first act was as surprising as it was characteristic. As soon as he had spoken the last solemn words of the Oath of Office, Ike strode quickly over to Mamie and kissed her.

After that there were a few moments of happy confusion. Mamie was laughing and crying at the same time, as the smiling dignitaries offered congratulations. Then the new President walked to the rostrum, and in the utter silence of the great reverent crowd spoke the humble prayer he had written that morning in Mamie's dressing room.

Every previous President had driven back from the Capitol to the White House with his Vice-President. Right here Ike broke another precedent. Mamie rode beside him in the open car while the Nixons followed in another. The solemnity of the inaugural ceremony was gone. Ike was grinning his broadest, and Mamie sparkling with happiness. As they reached the stands in front of the White House, Ike shouted and pointed to his old friends sitting there. Mamie smiled and kissed her hand in greeting.

The Eisenhowers went directly to their place in the President's box. There they perched on stoollike, high chairs to review the great parade. It was a long ordeal, five hours long, but Mamie would not have missed a moment of it. For that parade was America at its wonderful, homely best; not grim or grand like the massed troops solemnly stalking by the rulers of less favored nations, but alive with the color, vitality and, above all, the good humor that are our especial national characteristics. Even the cowboy who asked permission to rope the President and then faile attempt added a congruous note in all the world would a man such awful power as Ike does tomfoolery? Somehow it seemed despite our vast responsibilities a ble armaments, exemplified in the cannon lumbering through the ga we still kept our national sense o

It was 7:02 P.M. and full night walked with Ike up to the great co tico of her new home. John Ma served every President since Will Taft, swung the door wide for there in his straight, slender figur how touching dignity, something of "Tall and Stately Jack" of lon

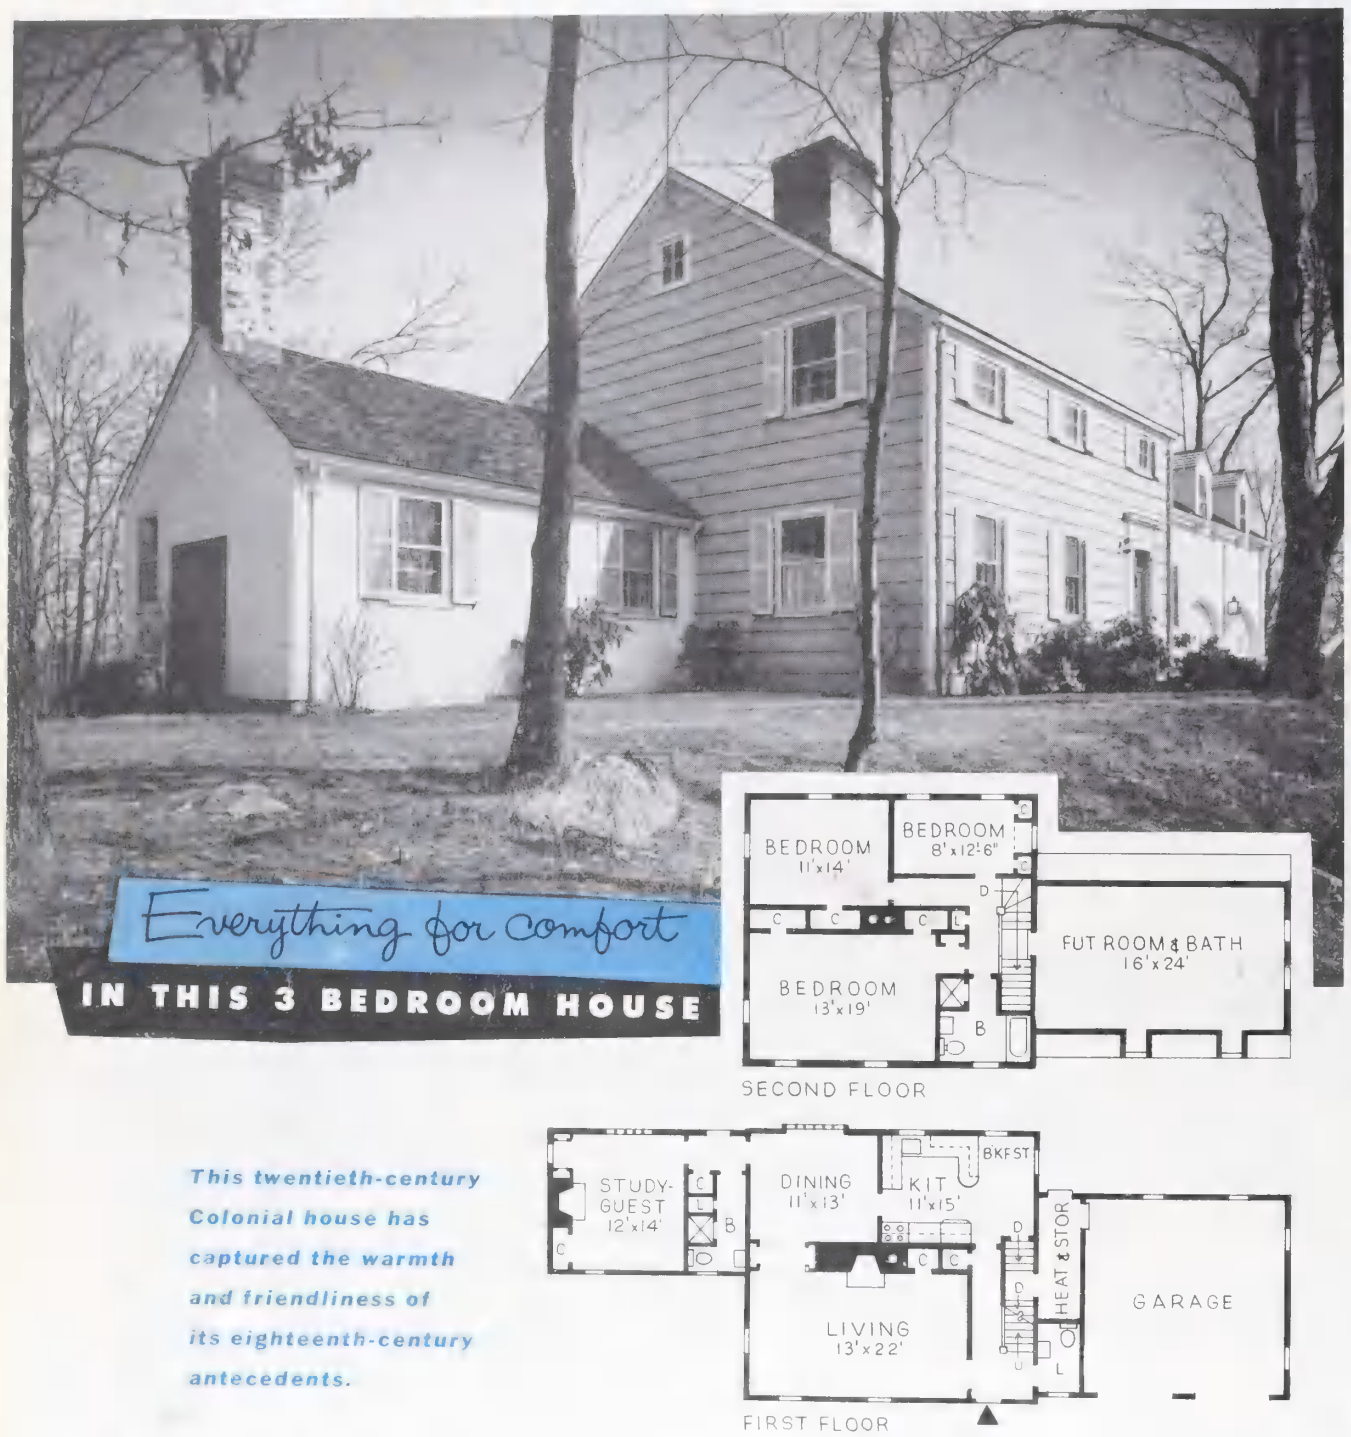
"Good evening, Mr. President ning, Mrs. Eisenhower," he said.

Smiling happily, Mamie crossed of the White House, holding ti husband's arm.

Since Mamie is still in the Whit definitive picture of her as First be attempted. However, her man different occasion, from the d maraderie of her way with the D mighty sideswipe with which sh bottle of champagne on the stubb Nautilus, shows that she has take her stride.

She needed only one day to rest rigors of the inaugural and its twi day the house was full of family, ited with her folks. She let John sleep in the royal grandeurs of th the first night, just for the fun of

On the second day, Mamie set routine and took the reins of into her strong, slender hands. S better trained than most Presiden the executive side of her job, for many houses staffed by Governm ees, as is the White House.



Of course the Eisenhowers b own personal staff, including Bo military aide, Bill Draper as Air F Mary Jane McCaffree as Mam and social secretary, assisted by A To look after the Eisenhowers' co were Rose Wood and Sergeant M wife Delores.

That second day half began when, before dawn, Sergeant M softly at the door to wake the Pr slipped quietly out of bed. At eigh in with Mamie's usual meage Then Chief Usher Howell G. Cr to check appointments, follow Mabel C. Walker to talk over th not true that Mamie just approve She says that she actually orders whether it is supper for two, wh President Ike may have served in TV set, or a state dinner. She ev food for Ike's stag luncheons and she knows very well the kind c men like to eat.

In fact, Mamie runs two hous Eisenhowers' own, which include ily and personal guests, and is pa President; and the state establ official entertainment, chargeable ernment. While Mamie never sk shrewdly economical as Pooh-Ba to be; and as careful with Gover as with her own.

After the ordering was done, McCaffree came in with the mo hundreds of letters. While she Mrs. McCaffree, Mamie stays in serve her strength—besides, lying an old Denver custom. If there a or appointments to interrupt them times keep hard at it until late a Mamie tries to give everyone w satisfactory answer. Just as in D she piled Creepy full of dirty little a soft touch for children. Their l ways answered and sometimes a to the White House is included.

There are also hundreds of b curious presents to be acknowled all the way from a small rag doll bangs—which she loved—to a w ice. Perhaps the present which

PHOTOGRAPH BY RUDOLPH E. LEPPERT, JR.

This twentieth-century Colonial house has captured the warmth and friendliness of its eighteenth-century antecedents.

By CAROL L. MERCADO

Here's a house that does everything for comfort a small house can do. The main house is self-sufficient from cellar to rooftop; the study is a luxurious addition.

One secret to successful traditional design is to make the chimneys large enough. Here it is done correctly. This house teaches another lesson helpful to any style, old or new, and that is a change of pace in color and materials. Buff shingles cover the central portion; wings are flush siding, pure white. The entryway is detailed with just the right restraint. A handsome living-room fireplace has its wood bin handily built into the chimney wall. The passage between living and dining rooms is flanked with open shelves; paneled cupboards below store linens and silver. Off the dining room is the study, with its own cozy hearth. An ideal family room, it accommodates overnight guests too. Informal meals are served in the breakfast room, out of cooking traffic. One kitchen entry leads to storeroom and garage, another opens to foyer. The large area above the garage will be a future playroom, or another bedroom and bath.

Designed by H. Lawrence Coggins, of Greenwich, Connecticut, this house is located at Windmill Farm, Armonk, New York.

mpler pa nstakingly stitched with
's Inau ural Prayer.
on most days the letter answering by official engagements or recepwhere up to a couple of thousand nie's record for handshaking al-that set by energetic Mrs. Frank-evelt—Mamie knows that it is a help Ike.
ing there may be one of the state n Mamie and Ike sitting side by rved chairs at the huge glittering nety to a hundred distinguished r best clothes and party manners.
that these affairs are pretty glacial ning she can do.
, though, Mamie has broken
e open. There was the time when Allan Shivers of Texas and Dan Colorado came in from playing at the Burning Tree Club. While ting with the President in the sit-Mamie came in dressed for a for-Then, while the President dressed, on showing them over the White ng up in the children's rooms on or.

tour, she escorted them down the
ay. As Governor Dan describes it, around the turn, and found the led with people in white ties, tails wns, their jewels and decorations the crystal chandeliers. "There says Governor Dan, "in sport ants and cowboy boots, all dirty from our game. We actually ase out a back way,' suggested u don't,' said Mamie. She put an l each of us and marched us into oom, saying, 'Folks, I want you to o Western governors.'"

t Mamie practically owned Texas do. Governor Shivers summed it ng, "There cannot be a situation rst Lady can't handle."
Dan said, "She reminds me of son."

ucky evenings when they do not rk at their job, the Eisenhowers supper on trays and, perhaps, in-their old friends in for a movie or ne. Quite often they end up singing
e plays the electric organ that Mrs. her for a birthday present. The e of Mamie's chief recreations in House; she practices almost daily captured her youthful touch. Ike sing—off key.
ally Mamie gets Ruth Butcher, er, Mrs. Snyder, Ann Nevins or r old friends to come in the afterame of Bolivia, which is to canasta ct is to bridge whist.
at the pressures are greater, Mamie ne does not find the business of ng so very different from the way d ever since Ike came home from e has her public life and her private ver the twain shall meet if she can mptom of this is the way she jeal-ds the privacy of her sacred second one who gets up there is a real e family. From her lair in the East Wing, Mary Jane McCaffree guards ivacy like a well-bred tigress.
ad a lot of fun fixing up the farm rg for their eventual retirement.
iasm for decorating houses partly frustration at never having one of nd partly because she knows she od job. The vacation cottage at the ational Golf Club afforded another her talent. Naturally the interior ed around Mamie's favorite shades d pink.
trip to Denver last summer the s were almost able to go back in come anonymity. Once again Ma-he Red Carpet and entertained her ile Ike roamed the lower slopes of s catching outsize trout, and came ill a steak in the back yard.
Washington, Mamie, slipping into House routine of two lives, found it agreeably familiar. She even enjoyed the public occasions, feeling the sense of accomplishment of a thing worth doing done well. Besides, she still likes meeting people. Her private life was as happy as could be, with her grandchildren frequent visitors, and her friends dropping in.

One day Mike came by with a box of bits of black court plaster cut in the shapes of hearts and crescents and stars.

"I found these beauty spots when I was rummaging through your old dressing table," she told Mamie. "Remember how you used always to wear them when you were the belle of Denver?"

"Sure," said Mamie. "They were real becoming."

She took one from the box and stuck it just below her left cheekbone. "Pretty snazzy," she said, admiring herself in the mirror on her dressing table. "Golly, I'd like to wear this to the state dinner tonight!" Her eyes sparkled as she toyed with the idea. "I suppose it wouldn't be dignified," she decided reluctantly, "but it sure would start a fad."

That was Mamie of Lafayette Street, who could laugh at anything, including herself, but who always could do what she had to do for Ike. The glittering bigwigs who stand waiting in the stately rooms on the lower floor see her playing her part to the hilt. The Marine Corps band blares out Hail to the Chief, in splendid diapason. The President and Mrs. Eisenhower walk slowly down the great stairway. She is dressed in as exquisite a creation as the imagination of woman—or man—can devise. The sheen of glamour is on her; and the dignity of her great position too.

But her friends like best to think of her as she receives them when they drop in on her of a morning, sitting bolt upright in her vast pink bed, wearing a dainty pink negligee and a pink satin bow in her hair, her blue eyes sparkling with the fun of it all, in the room where Lincoln slept.

END

Your Youngstown Kitchen Dealer says:

"Now you, too, can own a dream kitchen... under F.H.A. terms, no money down, as little as $2.25* a week."

"And we'll actually build you an exact scale 3D model in advance!"

Let us show you how you can start enjoying a glamorous new Diana-style Youngstown Kitchen now. Yes — for as little as $2.25 a week.

This new, streamlined Youngstown Kitchens way, you start with a Diana ensemble sink, actually custom-planned to your own individual needs. Then, from a wealth of advanced new base and wall cabinets, you plan the rest of your kitchen. And when you're done, you find you have more kitchen features than ever before in any given space.

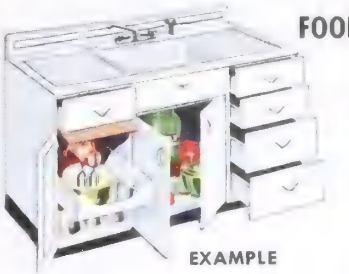
Whether your home is old or new, a Youngstown Kitchen will make the kitchen its brightest, most glamorous room. Let us show you how, with the Min-A-Kitchen. Come in.

YOUR YOUNGSTOWN KITCHEN DEALER

Expert, Free Kitchen Planning—Using the Min-A-Kitchen, your Youngstown Kitchen dealer will help you plan a Youngstown Kitchen in exact scale. He'll also help you choose the financing plan best for you.

STEEL Youngstown Kitchens

MULLINS MANUFACTURING CORPORATION • WARREN, OHIO
World's Largest Makers of Steel Kitchens



This Youngstown Kitchen "has everything." Storage space aplenty; loads of work surface; 42-inch Diana ensemble sink with drainboard left. Cost per week, only $6.34
*F.H.A. terms. Plus installation.

NOW'S THE TIME TO BUY YOUR CABINET SINK!

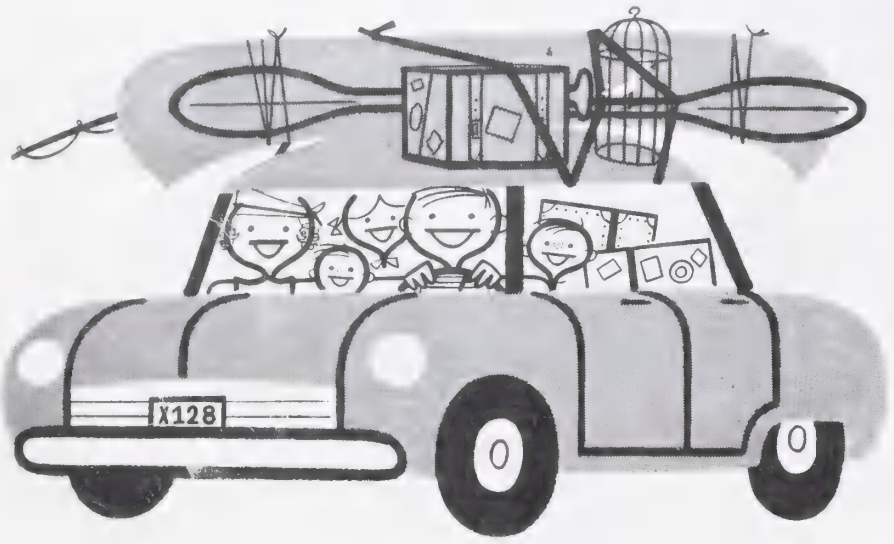
AND GET THIS YOUNGSTOWN KITCHENS FOOD WASTE DISPOSER for only $29.95* EXTRA

Banish Garbage Forever

EXAMPLE
This 54" DeLuxe Youngstown Kitchens Cabinet Sink, with Disposer . . ONLY $1.73 A WEEK

. . . when you buy: 48", 54", or 66" DeLuxe model Youngstown Kitchens Cabinet Sinks; 24", 36", 42" twin-bowl, 42" with drainboard, or 42" with deep bowl Diana ensemble sinks; or 27" or 48" Jet-Tower Dishwasher. Offer expires Sept. 30, 1954.

Regular $91.50 ($99.50 West and South) (Prices slightly higher in Canada.)



Youngstown Kitchens, Mullins Manufacturing Corporation
Dept. L-754, Warren, Ohio
Please send newest kitchen-planning decoration ideas.
I enclose 10c to cover cost of mailing. (No stamps, please.) I plan to build a house ☐
I plan to buy a house ☐ I plan to modernize ☐

NAME (Please print)
ADDRESS
CITY ZONE
COUNTY STATE

FOR NAME OF YOUR NEAREST DEALER, consult the yellow pages of your telephone directory under "Kitchen Equipment—Household," or "Kitchen Cabinets," or call Western Union, Operator 25.

©1954 Mullins Manufacturing Corporation

Vacation Bound?

Telephone ahead

for a more pleasant trip

Wherever you go this summer, let Long Distance add pleasure and peace of mind to your vacation.

Planning to travel? You'll want to telephone ahead for reservations. It's no fun hunting for rooms in a strange town when you're tired and hungry.

Making a side trip to visit friends? It's a good idea to telephone first and make sure they're home.

Expecting a business matter to come up while you're gone? A Long Distance call will keep you posted.

Some of the family staying home? You can keep in regular touch with them by telephone.

There are many ways Long Distance can add fun, subtract worry from your vacation. The service is fast and convenient. And the cost is low—much lower than most people think.

Long Distance Rates Are Low

Here are some examples:

New York to Atlantic City....	40¢
Cleveland to Buffalo	55¢
New Orleans to Houston	80¢
St. Louis to Hot Springs, Ark..	80¢
Boston to Los Angeles.....	$2.00

These are Station-to-Station rates for the first 3 minutes, after 6 o'clock every night and all day Sunday. They do not include the new, lower federal excise tax.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

Call by Number. It's Faster.

Diary of Domesticit

By GLADYS TABER

Kontiki and Jonquil wait for an afternoon ride.

HOT, still days come now, with heat simmering over the fields, crackling in the long corn rows. The Farmers' Almanac says quietly, "Hot, sultry, bit of a drought, but let's not pout or shout." This should settle me on the pronunciation of that word "drought" anyway. I would prefer to rhyme it with "south."

This is the one time of the year when it is fun to get up early. There is a freshness about the world then, like a freshwater pearl, and the air is sweet with the smell of dew on growing things. It is fun to go through the bean rows on the way to the pond for a dip, and see the long, slim, waxy pods heavy on the vines, and the delicate bean blossoms open. On the way back from the pond, we can pick a panful of beans for supper, and think how noble a bean is if picked when young, young, young. The time to pick a bean is when it is just becoming a bean, feather-slim and delicate.

We do most of our cooking in the evening, these hot days, and it is a kind of game to fill the refrigerator with the basis of the meals for a houseful of guests. Then we can add that one indispensable hot dish and have an easy time.

We rely heavily on all the wonderful new plastic-coated paper plates and cups and the plastic and plastic-coated mats to go with them. They are now so lovely to look at. We have a pattern that is gay and yet cool-looking, the plates do not leak when you put a sauce in them and the cups do hold hot coffee safely. The mats wipe clean with one swish. And all that washing and cleaning up is done with.

A great summer aid is the liquidizer. I make Swedish meat ring with its help, easy and so good. First comes the envelope of unflavored gelatin softened in that ¼ cup cold water, then it is heated over a slow heat until thoroughly dissolved. Next I cut ½ pound liverwurst into small chunks, add ½ medium-sized green pepper, cut fine, 1 slice onion, diced, 1½ cups tomato juice, 2 tablespoons lemon juice, ½ teaspoon salt, 2 teaspoons sugar, ½ teaspoon dry mustard; this all goes in the blender and mixes at high speed until thoroughly blended. Into an oiled quart ring mold to chill several hours. I garnish with olives—and often add 6 stuffed olives to the mix while blending for an extra touch. This serves 4 handson nice summer change from the hamburgers and franks. Goo Italian bread—the slices spre garlic butter and a sprinkle of san. A crisp salad adds a last t

There are many versions of rabbit, but an easy one for a su the terrace is made by melting spoon butter or margarine, then 1 teaspoon flour, stirring well, cup milk. When smooth, I add grated Cheddar cheese, ½ teasp mustard, 1 teaspoon Worces sauce. I stir over low heat—I use the chafing dish—and whe smooth and bubbling, I serve crisp hot toast slices. The chafi is so easy to carry to the Quiet or the cool spot under the appl and in case there should rise a air, we can put a screen of alu foil against the wind to keep th going.

It is amazing how fast an Irish grows. At four months Holly tip scales at 36 pounds. She did t too. Our scales are up the steepes in the world and Holly did no how to go up and down. We have couraged it, because I like to th upstairs is free of dust and chew of this and that. So we enlisted to lug her up; she dangled, all le his arms, looking over his shou great amazement. A queer new she decided, licking him effusively George had to get weighed, an lift her up again and get weighe her. After which we subtracted all getting different answers until it on paper, for arithmetic is so we traffic with as little as possib

The cockers weigh all the wa Linda's petite 16 to 18 pounds big boy Teddy, around 27. I am the modern cocker is getting to b dog; I like a small, compact do to gather up, practical to trave For a big dog, you can alway a springer spaniel. Or, of cour Irish!

I never like to hear dog people ing their own breed is the only isn't true and it isn't good sens breeds differ as people differ and should fit the particular family he is going to own. Whatever the b is well to know the parentage can get an unstable, nervous dog f you don't use good judgment. I ly surprised at the way people g with less care than they would summer slip covers!

t of church on Sunday, I looked
e. Esther Forbes, in her delightful ow on the Road, calls the New rch spires icicles in the sky, and y description. It's strange how a eans inspiration to us and a flat not. A church without an old-ire wouldn't be a church to me.
is a fine thing to go to church st of all, it gives one a chance to n one's own life for an hour or so ce with a thoughtful atmosphere.
ms and daily responsibilities and suddenly reduce themselves to a on. It is good to take a long look iet place.
t is good to gather with people all erious hour of worship. People rties, gather for political battles, aff meetings, for committee bat-w blessed to gather to spend an g about God!
cular Sunday our earnest young preached about that brief ministry of the carpenter's Son. When he spoke of the miracles, I fell to thinking that the greatest miracle in all the history of man is that all over the world people still are trying to "pick up their nets and follow Him" just as the rough fishermen on Galilee did. It made me realize that in spite of these troubled times, nobody can ever permanently get rid of God. This was a comforting thought just as I decided we were going to blow ourselves and everybody else up just experimenting with the hydrogen bomb, for it does seem that men cannot help developing death with all their might. And yet—and yet who counts the little people who turn regularly to that Jewish carpenter and say, "Lord, I believe!"

In the meadow at dusk now the fireflies carry their luminous little lanterns, starring the violet evening. How magical they are, such plain little bugs in the daytime and such faery folk at night! They are like some people who seem awkward and homely but carry hidden a secret loveliness which, when we see it, lightens everything within reach!

There is a lovely lingering time in midsummer evenings. We walk slowly in the porcelain air, like people in a dream. The dogs lie quietly on the dew-cool grass and the grass takes on that wondrous color when green fades into the color of night. George is milking across the way and the lights glow from his old red barn.

Even the exuberant Holly stretches out her shining coppery self and gives a long, deep sigh. She has had a hard day, chasing and hauling things and pulling towels from the wash line. She feels the young have so much to learn and it is all confusing.

The quality of the enfolding night somehow reminds me of that exquisite poem of De la Mare's:

"Is there anybody there?" said the Traveller, Knocking on the moonlit door;
And his horse in the silence champed the grasses,
Of the forest's ferny floor.

I am sorry this is not an age of poetry, for poetry sings to the heart in a special music which prose cannot really accomplish. We all need it, as we need fine music. With these, "in spite of all, some shape of beauty moves away the pall from our dark spirits," as Keats says.

The night is sweet with the sound of the cicadas, the truest song of summer's heart. I always think they sing just to express the excitement of summer, and when I wake and hear them in the night, I am grateful.

Summer's lease hath all too short a date!

TIME OF OUR LIVES

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 94

which is roughly the size of Rhode located in the heart of the High hin the valley are facilities for any the expensive and luxurious otel; medium-priced cabins and seven free public campgrounds ers like the Williamses bring their ent, may stay as long as fifteen or depending on the time of the year) garbage-disposal facilities and ons provided by the Government. incoming campers drive from ound to another until they find an ot which appeals to them. The who hoped for a site on the river, ow say he was pulling his trailer ours. They waited, ended up with area for the kids on the sand— cross the river and right up three t of gray granite wall."
ll see how much you really know ing," Geegee said, grinning at nildren were already down at the g up camp was Dick's show. He eran camper after many fishing Sierras as a boy. Geegee was a vice—although not for long.
he thing about camping," she said "You sure find out everything— ybody can do it."
mses had brought a trailer tent, rented from a fellow fireman. oked like a canvas-covered sand- l, springs and mattresses folded ide, on legs, to make single beds nd Leslie, leaving plenty of space floor for Dick and Geegee's dou- bag. The canvas was large enough e works completely—a tent on s more practical, they felt, than a at $7 a week where the children been sleeping on the ground, and 7.50 a week than a fully equipped would have cost them $35 a week. the rented gasoline stove ($3.50), d much the same as a gas range though considerably slower be- altitude. Next to it, a portable , also rented ($2)—large enough eggs, butter and a few other sup- , who had packed cooking equip- nned goods in four wooden boxes, em now, set the boxes upright to s, and reorganized everything— ting equipment on the shelves, s on an old card table. For eating, e of several wooden picnic tables the National Park Service.
at night was early: canned pork ruit and coffee. Dickie and Leslie sleeping bags by 8, their parents their first night sleeping out in air of the Sierras.

Dick had a special job before bed each night: packing all the perishables and sweets in the icebox and an old duffel bag, and stringing both of these high on a rope between two trees—precaution against the bears, seldom seen in the daytime, but known to prowl the camps at night, searching for food. Feeding of bears and deer in Yosemite is strictly forbidden. As a further hindrance to bears, the garbage pails are emptied after dinner.

However, Dick didn't get his food high enough. And Geegee heard, about 2 A.M., a loud crash as their food came hurtling down. The bear ripped open the duffel bag, ate with a loud satisfied sound, then did a great war dance about the icebox as he tried to claw it open.

"Dick," Geegee whispered, "the bear's out there. Wake up."

Dick grunted and stuck his head out.

"Don't go out there," Geegee said, pulling him back. "Stay with me. I'm pe-petrified!"

"She didn't know I couldn't walk," Dick said later.

They lay there watching the bear when suddenly out of the black came a camper, beating on a dishpan with a heavy wooden spoon.

"Where's that bear, where's that bear," he chanted. And the bear departed—fast. For "infallibles" in chasing away bears are bright lights and loud noises—if you have the courage. Bears are reputed to be more afraid of humans than otherwise, although most humans react like Geegee—"pe-petrified!"

Insight was cast into the tastes of this particular bear in the morning. He had enjoyed two pounds of bacon, a jar of blackberry jam, some cheese and two boxes of chocolate-chip cookies—and had broken sixteen eggs.

But by 7:15 Dick—who does not cook at home—had pancakes, bacon and coffee going strong. "M'm-m," he said. "That's camping—a great big breakfast and lots of time to lie down afterward." Geegee, who often has only coffee for breakfast at home, put away a big pancake—and the children did even better. Geegee had two dishpans of water heating on the stove, ready to wash and rinse the dishes as soon as the meal was over, while Dick shoveled out the pit of the campfire, raked a pile of pine needles (good for starting fires), and borrowed firewood from a neighbor until he had time to look in the woods for his own. He strung up a piece of rope for a clothesline, swept out the tent—and stretched out on the ground under a shady tree, his day's chores done.

"You can't beat this for living," he said dreamily.

Already one big thing which appealed to Geegee about camping was housekeeping—the lack of it. "Ideal," she said. "Just wash the dishes, fold the pajamas into the sleeping bags, and close the flap on the tent. Even when you're working, it seems more like playing house." Geegee, with a husband who "just has a fit if everything isn't always cleaned and polished," does lots of housekeeping at home—vacuums and dusts their two-bedroom house every day, polishes the chrome on sink and range three times a day, and even vacuums their convertible (including the top) once a week. "So it's a vacation for me all the way."

"Daddy," Leslie called out, "let's go somewhere!" And a little boy's gravel voice joined her: "I want to see things!" Within minutes everyone was in the car and off for the first stop: Happy Isles Rapids, where the river swirls through a bed of rocks and boulders, making a perfect place for children to jump and climb. Dickie and Leslie were off across the stream in a flash with their dad a slow third; Geegee settled down on a big rock and lay looking up at the mountains and trees.

Dickie got his foot caught. "Hey, daddy," he shouted, "come move this boulder over for me." For Dickie and Leslie this was the high spot of the trip. Every day they asked to go back to "the place with the rocks."

The next few days were busy ones. They climbed a half mile almost straight uphill to get a closer look at Vernal Falls, one of Yosemite's famous waterfalls; drove forty miles to see the giant redwoods, with Dickie exclaiming excitedly, "How can this be, daddy?" as they drove right through the trunk of Wawona Tunnel Tree; climaxed it all with

NEXT MONTH

Like standing on your head in an electric mixer. . . .

Dot Canner was circled by crying babies: telephone rings from bingo-bound friends; a freezer, ironer, piano and extra TV set she couldn't say "no" to; and bills for $1000 a year more than her husband earned. In Beechhurst, L.I., New York, a case of jitters closed in on ——

THE SCRAMBLED HOUSEWIFE

By HILDEGARDE DOLSON

HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES
in the August JOURNAL

IF YOU SUFFER PAIN of HEADACHE NEURITIS NEURALGIA get FAST RELIEF WITH ANACIN

The way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend

Here's Why . . .

Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, Anacin contains not just one but a combination of medically proved active ingredients. No other product gives faster, longer-lasting relief from pain of headache, neuralgia, neuritis than Anacin tablets. Buy Anacin® today!

INGROWN NAIL Hurting You? Immediate Relief!

A few drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to be cut and thus prevents further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

BEWARE-Insect Bites!

MAY CAUSE INFECTION AS WELL AS TORMENT.

Neglected bites from non-poisonous insects may cause dangerous infection. OIL-O-SOL soothes, comforts, cools, eases pain.

MOSSO'S OIL-O-SOL AT YOUR DRUGGIST

Worry of FALSE TEETH Slipping or Irritating?

Don't be embarrassed by loose false teeth slipping, dropping or wobbling when you eat, talk or laugh. Just sprinkle a little FASTEETH on your plates. This pleasant powder gives a remarkable sense of added comfort and security by holding plates more firmly. No gummy, gooey, pasty taste or feeling. It's alkaline (non-acid). Get FASTEETH at any drug counter.

CORNS also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 35¢, 60¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y. removed by MOSCO

$60.00 FOR A LITTLE SPARE TIME

With New Christmas Card Line

Exclusive new "Petite Gold Rush" Assortment pays you 75c on each $1.25 box. Make $60.00 on 80 boxes easily. Only Cardinal has gorgeous 26-Card $1 box, new idea $1 Gift Wraps & Curl Ribbons By-the-Yard, 6 exclusive BIG-PROFIT Name-Imprinted lines low as 40 for $1. Over 250 new fast sellers. Extra Cash Bonus; Money-Back Guarantee assures up to 15c more profit per box. Surprise "Choose-Your-Own FREE BOXES" Offer, $2 in Gifts offered FREE for prompt action! Send for samples now.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

FREE SAMPLES Personalized Christmas Cards 40 FOR $1 UP

MAIL COUPON

Cardinal Craftsmen Dept. 37-K
1400 State Avenue, Cincinnati 14, Ohio
Send money-making kit of 8 boxes on approval and surprise Free Offers.
Name .....
Address .....
City ..... State .....

a trip to Glacier Point, and the most striking view they had seen yet: a gigantic panorama of peaks, domes, ridges, valleys and waterfalls extending all about them. They could see the tiny green finger of the valley floor 3250 feet below—and even their own campsite.

"I could even see my blue bathing suit hanging on the line," Leslie said authoritatively, although this is a statement subject to doubt in certain parental circles.

"Kids," Dick said. "I love them and I could kill them. We spend lots of time with our kids—playing games, fishing, helping with their projects—but we also yell at them more than anyone in our neighborhood. When we tell them to do something we expect them to do it right away. It's not fair, I guess. They're only kids. And we want them to be perfect."

Away from home in big Yosemite, the Williams family swung into its easy team pattern. Sight-seeing, top order of the day, was always followed by a break for peanut-butter sandwiches, a short nap, and a swim for Dick and the children. Geegee, interested in outdoor cooking, discovered to her delight how really simple it is. She broiled steak and chops on a grill over the open flame; rubbed potatoes with butter, enclosed them in aluminum foil and baked them in the coals of the fire; and, as her boldest experiment, wrapped individual portions of lamb stew in aluminum foil and cooked these in the coals. The results: "Absolutely delicious. You get a flavor cooking this way you just don't get at home. Maybe the outdoor life helps too. Anyway, we all cleaned our plates—and came back for more."

Shopping in the valley is as simple as at home. There are four general stores where almost anything is available, from fresh fruit and vegetables to blue jeans and dress-up summer skirts. Ice is on sale, wood for campfires. It is also possible to rent equipment: cooking utensils, towels, tents, even a child's crib. A truck carrying milk, eggs and bread visits each campsite twice a day. And a laundrecar, complete with washers, dryers and ironing boards, is available seven days a week.

TWO WEEKS AT YOSEMITE COST THE WILLIAMS FAMILY $174.82

Dick kept a note of all expenses:

Rental of icebox		$ 2.00
Rental of trailer tent		35.00
Rental of sleeping bags		8.00
Rental of gasoline stove		3.50
Rental of two-burner gasoline lantern		3.00
Rental of bar hitch for trailer		8.00
Five gallons of gasoline for stove		1.75
Gasoline for car		21.00
Entrance fee to Yosemite		2.00
Double mattress (rented at Yosemite)		5.00
Ice		6.00
Worms, flies and eggs for fishing		2.01
Recreation		10.45
Food		61.11
a. Food from home eaten	$32.82
b. Food bought at Yosemite	26.56
c. Food stolen by bear	1.73
Total expenses		$174.82

"Pretty civilized camping," Geegee said, "but a big help when you go with children."

The Williamses' plan for the next day had been to drive high into the Sierras, and sleep out along the shores of Lake Tenaya, 8200 feet above sea level. Geegee wondered if they should go—"There might be bears up there too"—but Dick laughed her out of it, and by ten they were ready to start off, complete with sleeping bags, extra blankets and sweaters, a few cooking and eating utensils, and food enough for five meals—all canned.

"This menu," Geegee said, "is planned around the bear. There's nothing he'd like."

Reaching Lake Tenaya from the valley includes driving 22 miles along the wagon road built during the Gold Rush days—a steep, rocky road that leads to a labyrinth of trails for hiking, pack trips on horseback—and the most rugged camping out. Once Dick helped a fellow turn his trailer around manually because he could not make the grade; another time they were stalled twenty minutes while two cars tried to maneuver past each other. But they didn't regret the trip when they saw Lake Tenaya: a clear mountain lake with beach and green foliage along three sides and a magnificent mountain of white granite extending high above the fourth side—"The kind of place you see only in pictures," Geegee said. "You can't believe it's real."

CAMPSITES along the lake are designated by the rangers, but there are fewer sites, fewer people—and much more privacy than down in the valley. Dick and Geegee pulled into a spot only a few feet from the water, with a good outdoor fireplace ready and waiting. They decided to let the children sleep in the car, where it would be warmer, but they had to find a flat spot for their own sleeping bag—and then Dick had to make it soft, relatively speaking. This involved removing anything lumpy, like pine cones and twigs, then taking out tufts of grass with his ax. Finally he broke up the ground with a shovel—"The springs of your bed," he said to Geegee.

Making a bed under these circumstances is simple—first the tarpaulin, next a blanket (or air-filled mattresses, which the Williamses wished they had brought), and finally more blankets. After Dick and his five-year-old helper had brought firewood down from the hills, and Leslie had carried water up from the lake, the camp was proclaimed "ready." And everyone wanted supper.

Cooking even canned goods over a campfire was much faster—and more fun—than using the gasoline stove. Geegee found after supper that she'd forgotten to bring a dishpan, invented a method of her own—scraping the dishes clean with sand, and burying the remains, then rinsing the dishes in the lake—and felt like a veteran camper. After Dickie and Leslie had gone safely to sleep in the car, Dick and Geegee sat close to their own campfire looking at the glow of other campfires about the lake, a warm feeling enveloping them both.

Sleeping out at Lake Tenaya was a sad aftermath. They all wore flannel pajamas and sweat shirts and had an extra blanket over their sleeping bags, but that wasn't enough. The temperature went all the way down to 26°, which is doubly cold when you're sleeping right on the ground. Dickie woke up twice, finally fell asleep in his parents' sleeping bag.

The morning campfire had never looked so good. As they sat huddled around it, watching the sun rise over the misty lake, the coffee perking over the fire, their spirits began to pick up. "Cold or no cold," Geegee said, "if you came up here prepared for it, Lake Tenaya would be perfect."

Back down in the valley again, the vacation went fast—days filled with stream fishing in the rocky parts of the river (although the fish refused to bite), floating downstream on borrowed air mattresses, swimming and hikes and the minor disappointment of finding that burro rides, as Dickie tearfully discovered, "were only for nine and over." Evenings were busy too. A big event was staying up late to see the famous Firefall—a mass of glowing coals pushed over the cliff at Glacier Point each night down a thousand feet in a stream of living fire. There were campfire programs run by the rangers with musical recordings, slides and lectures on plant and animal life within the park. Some vacationers hiked to Camp Curry for livelier entertainment—skits, charades, community singing, and square and round dancing in the open pavilion. Dick and Geegee, who had planned to be on the go every night, discovered that they much preferred sitting quietly by their own evening fire.

"Honey girl," Dick said, taking Geegee's hand, "we sure are lucky."

"I know. And when you think it all began at that funny party back in 1942 ——"

Dick stifled his laughter so the children wouldn't wake up. The funny party was given by a friend, and was, by Dick's standards at the time, pretty slow-moving. To liven it up, he organized a kissing game, but found himself partnerless until he discovered a shy, brown-eyed redhead hiding out in the garage. She was Geegee (short for Virginia), who was having no part of such arbitrary pairing off. Dick slung her over his shoulder, took her back to the crowd, and they began going steady almost at once. When he gave her a diamond a year and a half later, both families were highly pleased, but marriage was something else again. Dick's dad, Arlo—a tanned, vigorous man whose name goes back to a great-great-grandmother who was a full-blooded Indian—

HOW THE WILLIAMS FAMILY SPENDS ITS MONEY EACH MONTH

Dick's annual income has been $4740; this month he will be raised to $5004. Taken out of his salary each month before he receives it are:

Income tax	$30.00
Pension	23.70
Fire association	3.00
Life insurance	5.00
Savings	20.00
Total	$81.70

Out of the remainder, the family pays monthly expenses:

Food	$118.00
Clothing	15.00
Payments on house	40.00
Property tax	6.10
Utilities	12.00
Insurance	15.66
Medical and dental	4.15
Recreation	10.00
Church and charity	8.50
Car payments and insurance	65.00
Car maintenance	11.00
Dry cleaning, shoe repair	5.00
Magazines, newspapers	2.80
Total	$313.21

opposed the idea, and Arlo is a forceful man. Dick was in the Navy then, "too young for responsibilities of a wife and children." The first time the young sailor and the redhead tried to elope, Arlo took the car keys. The second time, he took their bus tickets. The third time, Dick and Geegee took a train to Yuma, Arizona, and were married in a "two minutes, two dollars, please" ceremony on December 7, 1944, in the last few hours of Dick's leave. Geegee spent a few days with him in San Francisco, then went back to her old job riveting gas tanks for C-54's and waiting for his return from the Pacific. When Arlo found out about the marriage he was friendly but reserved until Leslie, his first grandchild, was born, when he capitulated completely.

But the problems were far from over. When he left the Navy, Dick had a hard time finding his niche. For a while he studied at U.S.C. and worked as lifeguard, caddie, and part-time salesman in his father's store, while he, Geegee and the baby all lived with Dick's parents. Geegee wanted a home of her own. Dick didn't—or at any rate, not until they had another child and he had more time to look around for work he really wanted to do.

"Those first quarrels of ours," Geegee remembers, "just seemed they could never be solved. Dick felt too young for responsibility, and I wanted to settle down. And then, amazingly, everything worked out."

Dick started on a new undertaking with his dad—building a two-bedroom house on a small lot he and Geegee had bought with their $1750 savings. The original object was to sell the house for a profit which would be Dick and Geegee's nest egg toward a bigger and better place. Arlo had been a successful contractor before the depression, and was anxious to get back into the business. Dick was a complete novice: "Dad told me what to do and where to do it, and I just did it"—digging the foundation, pouring the cement, doing all the carpentry work. Geegee, pregnant[...] helped him. "And by the time we f[...] wanted it for ourselves. All the w[...] together really made it seem like [...]

They moved in five years ago [...] vision set, a table, two chairs and j[...] beds to go around. ("If only," Gee[...] guiltily, "we had the eight hundred[...] blew on horse racing, dinners and d[...] a trip to Mexico at the end of all tha[...] we could have furnished the hous[...] moved in.") As it was, furnishing [...] years. "We were saving slowly, life [...] along so peaceably, then came o[...] scare of all time." Leslie was strick[...] rare case of both spinal and bulbar[...] rushed to a hospital and an iron lu[...] who is a remarkably calm mother, [...] pletely to pieces then. "I lived in th[...] from eight to eight every day for [...] and could see Leslie for only six [...] periods a day to cheer her along a[...] we were there." Dick, too, found i[...] ing experience, "But our baby wa[...] She came home after only six week[...] good food, sleep, and exercise for h[...] back to normal almost at once." [...] cially, the illness cost almost nothi[...] the National Foundation for Infan[...] sis footed all bills for the primary [...] received. "I don't know what we'd [...] without them." Dick shook his h[...] weren't financially able to take ca[...] illness." He and Geegee have been [...] donating $52 a year to the March [...] ever since.

"Thinking it all over, our probl[...] really an easy one," Geegee decid[...] lief. "Whatever you decide to do ab[...] is fine with me." For Dick's job, [...] fireman, has been a matter of conc[...] much to Dick as to his father and fr[...] feel he ought to take a selling job [...] income and faster advancement. D[...] all sure they're right. Since the day [...] his fireman exams with a high 98, [...] he's enjoyed his job. With 24 hours [...] off, three days off after three shifts [...] gives him time enough to do ho[...] chores around the house and yard[...] with the family on all-day outings. [...] his salary is due to be raised this [...] $5004, and by studying nights, he c[...] tually become a captain. "Leavin[...] would be a tough decision to ma[...] don't know. But we can figure a[...] when we get back home," Dick bro[...] talk around the dying fire.

Geegee rubbed her eyes sleepily. "[...] lieve our vacation's almost over."

NEITHER could Dickie or Leslie be[...] day the family packed up. Everybo[...] luctant to go. But the camping trip [...] a great success from all points of [...] the bank balance showed a decided [...] as he always does, kept an itemi[...] everything he spent, from a penny [...] of gum to $25.75 worth of gasoline, [...] his expenses after two weeks in Y[...] $174.82—just $25 less than he had a[...] Geegee, by bringing a huge supply [...] meats, vegetables and fruits fro[...] figures she cut their food expenses [...] cent, while Dick, by renting equip[...] a friend rather than one of ma[...] agencies in Los Angeles, saved anot[...] cent. They had spent an additional [...] new clothes, but found they spen[...] their time in blue jeans and snea[...] could have avoided most of this ex[...]

"Just think," Dick said, pilotin[...] healthy cargo of four along the r[...] "if we owned all the equipment—an[...] start now buying one thing at a time [...] would have cost only transportation [...] incidentals, not much more than it [...] live at home for two weeks. How [...] you ever get so much vacation fo[...] money?"

From the back seat, Dickie pipe[...] excited inspiration: "Dad, why don' [...] a vacation every single year!" Lesli[...] up, waiting for the answer.

Dick turned to Geegee. "Sold!" [...] said, and the car picked up speed [...] pine-edged highway leading home [...] future and whatever it held.

JOURNAL

AUGUST
1954 • 35c

JY 20 54
EAST ... BR. BR.
BURLINGAME PUBLIC
LIB.

"The most beautiful and dangerous woman for a wife"

GERTRUDE LAWRENCE AS MRS. A

...d. Richard Aldrich. Part 2

DR. SPOCK TALKS WITH MOTHERS

I LEARNED NOT TO BE AFRAID OF ...GE

Complete—READY OR NOT—By Mary Stolz

SCRAM...D HOUSEWIFE

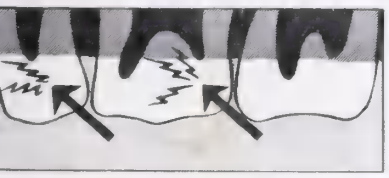
How Young America Lives

New, better way to reduce decay after eating sweets

ALL-NEW IPANA with WD-9 blocks tooth-decay acids for hours.*
Always brush after eating . . . the way your dentist recommends.

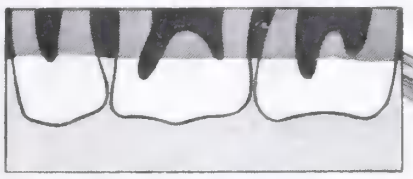
ou, like most people, eat sweets—or if your ren do—here's good news! After eating sweets, can do a better job of preventing cavities . . . new Ipana Tooth Paste. Here's why:

any foods team up with mouth bacteria and enzymes to form tooth-decay acids. But WD-9 in Ipana blocks formation of these acids for rs—because it is an active anti-enzyme and eria destroyer.



For best results, use new Ipana regularly after eating (the way most dentists recommend) BEFORE decay acids can do their damage. In a 2-year clinical test with hundreds who ate their normal amount of sweets, brushing this way prevented new cavities for most people.

So remember, while no dentifrice can stop all cavities—you can protect teeth from sweet foods better by brushing this way with new Ipana.



Your whole family will love Ipana's new minty flavor. Men, women and children definitely preferred it in taste tests. And new Ipana makes your mouth so clean that one brushing can stop most unpleasant mouth odor all day.

s prove that WD-9 in new Ipana blocks acid formation for hours

FTER EATING — Dangerous decay cids form on the teeth, attack the namel.

AFTER BRUSHING — Ipana's WD-9 blocks acid formation for hours, helps prevent cavities.

Product of Bristol-Myers

y all-new IPANA®! New taste, new cleaning, new anti-decay WD-9

A Cool Salad Supper

so fresh—it deserves your own fresh-made Wesson dressing

Your 1-Minute Wesson dressing is freshest of all

What happier accompaniment for salad flavors than the light, light dressing you make with light, delicate Wesson Oil. No bought dressing ever had this homemade goodness, this just-made freshness.

You make your Wesson French dressing in one minute. It suits your family best, because you season it to please them. It keeps your salads always tempting, because you can vary it in seconds with ketchup or chopped egg or onion. It costs less than bought dressings. You save on every salad.

In all the world, no other salad oil is made with the same delicacy and lightness of Wesson. None so fresh as Wesson—so sure to bring forth freshest salad flavors.

AMERICA'S FAVORITE for Salads, Frying, Chiffon Cakes, Stir-N-Roll Pie Crust and Biscuits

Wesson Oil

HELP YOURSELF SUPPER SALAD

Like a holiday from cooking tonight? Serve luscious supper salad tray with your own Wesson dressing. Let your family help themselves

—tomato quarters
—shrimp garnished with water cress
—paper-thin slices of radishes and unpeeled cucumber, crisped in ice water
—Julienne strips of ham and cheese
—hard-cooked egg slices and cooked green beans marinated in Wesson 1-Minute Dre

Serve with Wesson 1-Minute French Dressin this easy Thousand Island variation: To 1 Wesson 1-Minute Dressing, add ⅓ cup ketc 1 tablespoon horseradish. Fold in ⅔ cup h cream, whipped.

WESSON 1-MINUTE FRENCH DRESS

2 teaspoons salt	½ teaspoon pap
1 teaspoon sugar	½ cup vinegar
½ teaspoon pepper	1½ cups Wesson

1 teaspoon prepared mustard

Combine and shake well in covered jar. Shake before serving. Store on pantry shelf. Makes 2

Journal

Contents

August 1954

VOL. LXXI No. 8

Novel Condensation Complete in This Issue

26 READY OR NOT, Mary Stolz

Stories

28 ONCE IN LOVE WITH AMY!, Arnold B. Horwitt
34 KATHERINE (Third part of six), Anya Seton
46 THE CLEARING, Jesse Stuart

Special Features

11 I'VE STOPPED THROWING SOME OF MY WEIGHT AROUND, Dorothy Thompson
23 TELL ME DOCTOR, Henry B. Safford, M.D.
30 GERTRUDE LAWRENCE AS MRS. A (Second part of five), Richard Stoddard Aldrich
36 I LEARNED NOT TO BE AFRAID OF MARRIAGE . . .
38 GETTING WELL IS FUN
45 DR. SPOCK TALKS WITH MOTHERS, Benjamin Spock, M.D.
93 HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES: THE SCRAMBLED HOUSEWIFE, Hildegarde Dolson
102 WHEN CHILDREN MISBEHAVE, Leslie B. Hohman, M.D.

General Features

4 OUR READERS WRITE US
6 UNDER-COVER STUFF, Bernardine Kielty
8 THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE, Harlan Miller
16 MAKING MARRIAGE WORK, Clifford R. Adams
18 KEEP IT COOL (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Ruth Imler
20 DIARY OF DOMESTICITY, Gladys Taber
25 FIFTY YEARS AGO • JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN
78 THIS IS A FIDDLE-FUDDLER, Munro Leaf
83 ASK ANY WOMAN, Marcelene Cox

Fashion and Beauty

40 "MY FIRST IDEA FOR FALL," Wilhela Cushman
42 THE JOURNAL'S GEM OF A WARDROBE, Nora O'Leary
44 BACK TO SCHOOL, Nora O'Leary
118 BEAUTY PRESCRIPTIONS FILLED BY JOURNAL GIRLS, Dawn Crowell Norman

Food and Homemaking

48 THE MORE THE MERRIER, Ann Batchelder
50 LINE A DAY, Ann Batchelder
98 INTERESTING AND INEXPENSIVE, Dorothy Canner
100 HOW NOT TO STAY BROKE, Margaret Davidson

Architecture and Interior Decoration

32 PORCH REVIVAL, H. T. Williams
70 A SMALL HOUSE THAT LIVES BIG, Carol L. Mercado

Poems

58 A POEM CAME ON, Robert P. Tristram Coffin
65 NO ROOM, William D. Barney
80 ROLL CALL IN EDEN, Vonna Hicks Adrian
86 BEGGAR'S CHOICE, Thompson Young
90 RACE, Millicent Ward Whitt
104 FOR AS MUCH AS, Oliver St. John Gogarty
110 SONG FOR A MARRIAGE, May Sarton
116 LIKE A WORN PATH, David Ridgley
122 STEAM-ENGINE WHISTLE, Minnie Hite Moody

Cover Photograph by Mead-Maddick

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect.

Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1954 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S., U. S. Possessions and Canada—1 Yr., $3.50; 2 Yrs., $6; 3 Yrs., $8.50; 5 Yrs., $11. Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America (except the Guianas)—1 Yr., $4. All other countries—1 Yr., $7. Remit by Money Order or Draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

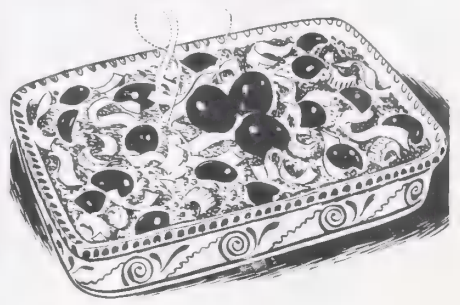
The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Vice-President and Director of Research; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday

Journalities

...it," MARY STOLZ asked, "that ...r how I start, I always end up ...ng about young people?" Before we could say "Who else is there?" she answered her own question. "To children and young people, almost nothing is insignificant. What they feel, they feel completely. I have a sort of awe for that intensity of emotion." Her novel, Ready or Not, ... deals with a family in which ... is emerging from a child. The ...s own family consists of her ...l, Stan, a public-health engi... ...d their eleven-year-old son, ... had a younger and even love... ... to of her, but Bill insisted that ... this latest one. He said, "It's ...e mom looked mature."

...ing JESSE STUART writes has ... a part of his great one—as you ... in his simple tale, The Clearing, ...5. He lives with his wife and daughter on a farm in W-Hollow, Greenup County, Kentucky, where he was born. He speaks for himself: "Thoughts come into my head and a short story is created therein. Poems and novels are written the same way. I never outline a book except on an envelope. ...written hundreds of short sto... ...d hundreds of poems (yes, well ...housand published). I feel that ...ite forty books in my lifetime ... to make each one a master... ...'ll get one or two that will live. ... what I want more than any... ...to write a book, a story, a ...hat will live."

...we saw Sub-Deb Editor RUTH ...s August copy titled, Keep it ...age 18, we took a careful look ...if it didn't apply to the "ma... ...s well as the young girls to whom her page is dedicated. Sure enough, her first picture caption reads, "When you're sizzling on the inside, you're playing a losing game!" That goes for everybody. It's just a peppy way of saying what savants and philosophers have been saying for cen... ...nd it shouldn't be wasted, like ...on only the young. And what's ...ent boys from reading the Sub... ...ge, we asked, and learning all ...ge-old open secrets? "Noth... ...uth admitted. "Lots of boys ...s of girls, including this one, ...ore of them did."



HOW TO MAKE

Hacienda Hamburger

main course eating that sings with California flavor

THIS is "somethin' special"! What makes it so is the goodness of California Ripe Olives. Their bright, sunny flavor makes thrifty hamburger taste so good—a half-pound will serve four people.

Here's how:

¾ cup ripe olives
2 tablespoons oil
½ pound hamburger
¾ cup chopped onion
1 cup sliced celery
1½ teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon black pepper
1 No. 2 can tomatoes
2 cups wide noodles
1 cup diced American cheese

Cut olives into small pieces. Heat oil, add meat and cook about 5 minutes, stirring frequently. Stir in onion and celery and cook about 5 minutes longer. Add salt, pepper, tomatoes, olives, uncooked noodles and cheese. Cover tightly and cook until mixture is boiling. Remove cover and stir lightly but thoroughly. Cover and cook slowly about 20 minutes, until noodles are cooked. Serves 4.

For your best friends—set out your best welcome—that's whole Ripe Olives, of course—in a handy "welcome bowl" or tempting appetizer tray.

Free Ripe Olive Recipe Booklet

For dozens of exciting ways to add this California flavor to everyday cooking, send for "Elegant but Easy Recipes with California Ripe Olives." Write to the Olive Advisory Board, Dept. D-48, 24 California St., San Francisco 11, Calif.

ripe olives*

make meals that sing with California flavor

*Ripe or green-ripe . . . whole, pitted, chopped or sliced!

A JELL-O Salad makes the meal!

A JELL-O Salad makes the meal!

A JELL-O Salad makes the meal!

A JELL-O Salad makes the meal!

A JELL-O Salad makes the meal!

A JELL-O Salad makes the meal!

LIME CHEESE SALAD

Dissolve 1 package Lime Jell-O in 1 cup hot water. Add ¾ cup cold water, 2 tablespoons vinegar, and 1 teaspoon grated onion. Pour ½ cup mixture into 1-quart ring mold. Chill until firm. Chill remaining Jell-O until slightly thickened. Then fold in 1 cup cottage cheese, and 1 tablespoon mayonnaise; blend. Pour onto firm Jell-O. Chill until firm. Unmold. Garnish with salad greens. Fill center with seafood salad. Makes 6 servings.

JELL-O IS A REGISTERED TRADE MARK OF GENERAL FOODS CORP.

Our readers write us

Journals Lead Long Lives

Blair, Nebraska

Dear Editors: Every few days I still receive a letter from a new friend who has just recently read I Lost 160 Pounds.

This really amazes me, because that issue was on the newsstands over twenty-three months ago. Maybe I am stealing some of MacArthur's thunder, but I've come to the conclusion: "Old JOURNALS never die, they just get passed along."

Maybe some of my reader friends would like to know that I am still "a very happy ex-fat lady." Sincerely,

HELEN FRALEY

Love Letter to Gladys

Lee's Summit, Missouri

Dear Gladys Taber: I would give almost anything if I were blessed to be among the few who are privileged to send "a love letter to the world," which is the way I think of your "Diary." How much good you can do—and do!

God love you! Yours,

MARION EGAN

Petersons Revisited

Akron, Ohio

Dear Editors: This year, all three little Petersons went to school. Larry entered kindergarten, Frank was a first-grader and Winkie was in third grade. It's hard to believe!

Winkie is a very good-sized child now, tall enough so she doesn't look chubby. And Frank is getting to be a very nice little boy. We talked to a speech specialist over a year ago about his stuttering, and he told us to keep hands off as far as trying to correct it went—we did and he has improved wonderfully. He is still clever with those little hands—colors neatly and is creative with blocks—and he also seems to be rather musical. Larry is a big boy too. He's heavier than Frank but about half an inch shorter—still cute as a bug's ear. He has a pretty quick temper—and he and Winkie are so much alike that they clash frequently and occasionally quite violently.

I've grown more philosophical about everything in general. Lots of things still irritate me and I find new problems have replaced the old ones, but all in all I think I can say that the Peterson family is now as normal and has just as much fun as any other family.

With my very best wishes to those people on the JOURNAL staff whom we remember so pleasantly,

ALGY PETERSON

SHERMAN O. SCHUMACHER

Petersons now pals.

▶ Let JOURNAL readers whose hair will stand on end at the antics and vicissitudes of this month's Scrambled Housewife's family (page 93) take heart from this progress report from Algy ("Help Wanted") Peterson, whose child problems were the H.A.L. sensation of July, 1951. Kids do grow older; parents do learn better; life can be fun again. ED.

Bargain Hunters, Bew

New Yo

Dear Editors: When we travel i eign country, next to sight-seeing our greatest pleasures is visiting th ous shops and bazaars. We are p larly tempted by the products on the United States levies duties t they are so much cheaper in their country. However, if you are not t ing by boat, and therefore cannot the packages with you, I would s that you look into the matter of w your purchases will still be barga the time they arrive in your home You may find that their price ha than doubled.

Recently a friend of mine picke few ceramics, ash trays, lamps, n and various other trinkets in Spa which he paid $37.25. When th crate of merchandise arrived in New he found that he owed an additional for such expenses as Spanish expor toms, insurance, ocean freight, doci age, customs entry in the U.S., shi service charge, cartage, etc., etc.

However, if you are returning cruise boat, or can carry the mater the boat yourself, there is no charge 250 pounds (25 cu. ft.) and you ca money. Sincerely

CORINNA CUNL

American Success Story

"To Bruce and Beatrice Blac Gould, Friendly Editors and fri This is the place where I first saw in the world. Jesse Stuart."

▶ Homestead cabin recently burn forest fire. For a new short class famous author Stuart, see The Cleo page 46.

Diabetes Keeps Them Healthy

Chicago, Il

Dear Ladies' Home Journal: On hardly pick up a magazine without ing something about polio or cancer there is so little the person or his fa can do about it. With diabetes it's d ent. A whole family can be violentl happy for years and years! Or you "live happily ever after."

We have a severe case of diabet our family. We'd rather not say wh it because we feel that it is nobody's b ness, but I think that diabetes helps us healthy. My husband is thirty-s years old, very handsome and succe in business. I'm just a couple of y younger, but still get a few wh when wearing a bathing suit. Our da ter is eleven and son eight, and a he ier pair of kids would be hard to fi

We are a happy, active fa Spurred on by your magazine, we just finishing building ourselves a derful modern home. I think the r larity of diet demanded by diabetes one of the things that kept us al healthy through the ordeal of buil and living in a house at the same t

I think your magazine could help on the human side of this problem. are so happy and others who coul easily be happy have lives that are f with tragedy. Sincerely,

MRS. R. JACOB

FRENCHWISE DEVILED EGGS

Combine 2 tbs. French's Prepared Mustard, 1 tbs. each sugar, light cream, vinegar and ½ tsp. salt. Beat until light and fluffy. Cut 8 hard cooked eggs in half lengthwise. Remove yolks; mash with fork. Add enough of the mustard mixture to make a smooth paste. Refill egg whites. Garnish with French's Paprika.

A cool, easy-going supper for relaxed summer entertaining does something wonderful for Cold Cuts!

FRENCH'S MUSTARD

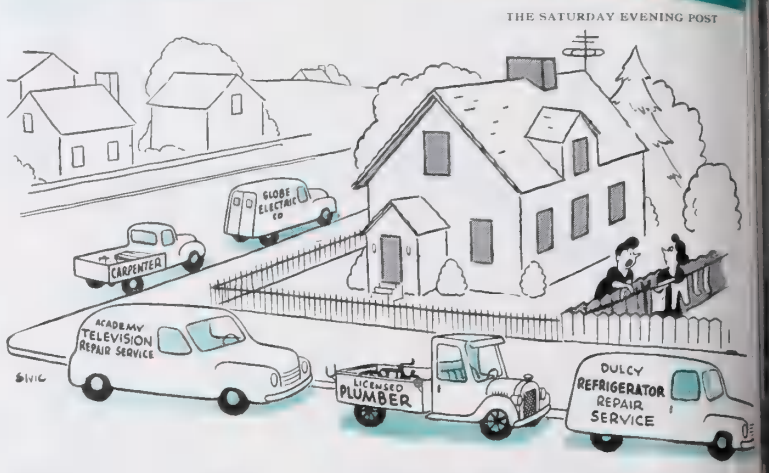
- ✓ FRENCH'S pure yellow Mustard blends better because it's creamier . . . smoother.
- ✓ FRENCH'S rich mustard goodness does not fade out in cooking.
- ✓ Get a jar tomorrow and see what a wonderful flavor difference FRENCH'S makes!

FREE! NEW RECIPE LEAFLET "10 Ways to Dress-up Cold Cuts!"

The R. T. French Co.
1973 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N.Y.

*Name*_____



*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

"Ever have one of those days when everything seems to go wrong?"

IN August the birds are nowhere to be seen. They have paled and faded into the background. There is no song in the bushes. The rivers are at their lowest and the whole world is hushed. With the full moon it is said that the chickadees become moonstruck.

It's a time to catch up on things on the farm. Pastures are going into a dormant stage and grazing is short.

THE OLD COUNTRY STORE, by Gerald Carson, is what brought on this rural mood. When I picked up this book I intended just to saunter in and out again—to taste the wares. But I couldn't put it down, I couldn't get out of that store!

This is the story of the "general store" from 1790 to 1921, and one of the liveliest passages of our social history. The Yankee peddler had his roots in Europe, also the city merchant and the shopkeeper, says Mr. Carson. But the general store was an American original. It grew up to meet the needs of a new continent. It was what made a neighborhood and gave it its central nervous system and conscience. It put fun into life. . . . You smell that country store: Puerto Rican molasses, pickled mackerel, dried codfish—at a safe distance from the barrel of kerosene oil. You see it—ribbons, braids, gimps, bins of shoes, congress gaiters, palm-leaf fans, parasols, stove polish, cuspidors, piepans. You meet the traveling salesman, the drummer, the commercial. You see the candidates at election time "thick as blackbirds" around the store. . . . It is the good wholesome amusing Americana that preceded Technicolor.

•

THE POETRY OF DYLAN THOMAS, by Elder Olson, is an appreciation of the man and an analysis of his poetry. "What was remarkable about the poetry of Dylan Thomas was that it had its effect even before it was understood, and sometimes even when it was misunderstood." Here was a poet with an unmatched sense of the sound of language and the swing of rhythm. What the literary texture of his verse is, is what author Olson now essays to tell us. (He has written this book as a tribute to Dylan Thomas, and all royalties will go to the poet's family.)

•

A long jump from modern poetry, but here are a few practical books:

From the U. S. Government Printing Office, Division of Public Documents, Washington, D.C., you can get C· AND REPAIR OF THE HOUSE (50 cer FAMILY FARE (25 cents), INFANT C· (20 cents).

If you are tired of the same old co book and want to tangle with the exc take a look at SULTAN'S PLEASURE. Robin Howe and Pauline Espir—t Turkish food, which, for this eater least, has fond memories of last su mer's incredibly delicious desserts.

THE SECRETARY'S HANDBOOK, S. A. Taintor and K. H. Monro, guide to tricky words easily misspel the correct use of pronouns, punctuati directions for proper address and sa tation, samples of orders, and so on. don't think that we couldn't all use it!

THE ALL-AMERICAN SOCK BO by Melitta Guthrie and Joseph Springer, is about as far as we will from Dylan Thomas—a 50-cent pa phlet with full directions and patterns knitting socks. (Plays, Inc., 8 Arling St., Boston 16, Mass.)

•

THEY NEVER TALK BACK, by Her Trefflich, is a book about animals the man who runs a super pet shop New York. He will get you a ba hippopotamus or a pink elephant o good-natured camel. He can do the possible in the way of animals. But he had his mishaps. Some years ago a hu dred monkeys got through a skylight his shop and made for Wall Street o the rooftops. Just this year the rufo necked hornbill, Rufus, got away a eluded all catchers for days. With bea eye he regarded them from aerial cloth lines, water towers and gargoyles.

"Your parents talk back," says M Trefflich. "Your brothers and sisters relatives—your boss, your employe Your wife disagrees with everything your children take it up from there. animals can't speak any language their own. They never talk back."

•

THIRTY YEARS, by John Marquan is a book to own, not to borrow. It is selection of Marquand's work during t past thirty years, mostly short stories and good stories—but also essays, abo Boston, Newburyport, school, colleg Army. They are smooth and urbane, b deceivingly so, for the emotion that li not far below the surface runs a stro tide.

EM

Toothsome Test of Freshness!

Here's a double demonstration with a moral. Mom is tasting salad greens tucked away days ago in an "envelope" of Reynolds Wrap...and stored in the refrigerator. How fresh they keep in that pure aluminum foil! And Sis is at her favorite treat...cookies kept crackling crisp in a wonderful gleaming package. Full-flavored, delicious!

Mom and Sis are really demonstrating the same means to supreme freshness...Reynolds Wrap Aluminum Packaging. It's the most advanced protection known to science! All the famous-brand cookies you see here are quality-protected in Reynolds Wrap Aluminum Packaging...as you may have known, from their special sparkle on the market shelves.

Now there's something beyond that gleam of aluminum to guide you in your shopping. On more and more packaged products you'll find the Reynolds Wrap Aluminum Packaging Seal denoting protected quality!

Reynolds Metals Company,
General Sales Office, Louisville 1, Ky.

Nursing... the career with a future.

SEE "MISTER PEEPERS," Starring Wally Cox, Sundays NBC-TV Network.

The only cotton swabs that give your baby all these benefits

- Sparkling-white Red Cross Cotton
- Splinter-free sticks, polished smooth
- No loose wisps or fuzz; won't twist or slip
- Doctor-recommended size
- 100% sterile, guaranteed by Johnson & Johnson

New JOHNSON'S COTTON BUDS

There's a Man in the House

by Harlan Miller

"Hey, mom! Dad just cut himself shaving!"

I'm convinced this land has too many bachelors and spinsters. The best solution is a candid, undisguised marriage promoter in every church; preferably a wide-awake psychologist. . . . How he could reduce the baleful impact of loneliness and self-pity!

If a woman wants to confuse a man, she need merely refer to the color "beige" or "mauve." I'll bet $1.25 not one man in ten knows "beige" is light gray with brownish tinge, or that "mauve" is pale bluish purple. (By tomorrow I'll have forgotten too.)

At lunch one day I asked some French newcomers to our town what they missed most in America. "The promenoir!" they agreed: a place where everybody strolls at a certain hour to see and be seen. . . . But in America who strolls?

My wife is convinced I'm a difficult character because I prefer meat loaf cold and broiled chicken warm. . . . In self-defense all I can say is that man is merely a bundle of foibles.

On a recent condensed air trip to Europe (seven countries, nineteen days) I visited Blarney Castle in Ireland at noon on Saturday, and enjoyed Sunday breakfast (9:30 A.M.) with my Lady Love next day at home in our own garden in the American hinterland. On the homeward trip, no dillydallying!

I'm retreating into pessimism about our blighted lawn, which in spots begins to look baldish and dandruffy. . . . I'm even thinking of shopping for dandelion or watergrass seed, to fill up the sparse patches. From a certain angle ——

We now have rocks from some sixty countries in our rock garden, and shells from a dozen ocean beaches in our garden paths. . . . That is, we did have, until our neighborhood's cherubs began in turn to collect shells in our garden.

I'm caught in the middle again: My dream girl wants a new washing machine with dryer, while our youngest insists we need far worse a color TV set. . . . In a situation like that, husbandly procrastination ceases to be a fault and becomes a supreme virtue.

We're slightly behind schedule o vow to eat 100 meals outdoors i garden this year—the unsprayed quitoes seem to have the upper hand And my outdoor zeal is abated time a wasp or a hornet tries to pu bit of marmalade into my mouth.

The bridge players have disco a young matron in our town was interviewed by Professor sey. . . . To their shocked surp she's one of the town's best-beh and least frisky young mot with two unstatistical cherubs.

Our Finnish friends invited us sauna—steam bath in the nude, lowed by an icy plunge into the of Finland. . . . Such candor is fr ship's ultimate test. (Especially your in-laws.)

I was alarmed to learn in im erished Ireland that young rom is in a decline. Many men wai forty to marry women of thirty. That's no way for a broth of a bo treat his mavourneen!

Downtown at the big round lunch table my neighbor complains tha has to play the roles of husband, fat grandchild, son-in-law, grandfat father-in-law, son and brother, no mention glamour boy. "They don't pect that even of Alec Guinness," complains.

"When a man comes home tells his wife," says Betty Comf drying her hair in the back-y sunshine, "how the Pan-Ameri stewardess above mid-ocean ser tray lunches for sixty passengers forty-five minutes, what he re means is that she was an ethe creature of pure delight, made uncommon clay."

. . . When your youngest dema politely, "Dad, any more chores for to do?"—

. . . Or your daughter asks you w you really think of her latest boy friend

. . . And Junior turns down a bi because he says he has to study—

. . . While your Princess of Sh Delight insinuates little bouquets on y dresser, desk, medicine cabinet o bedside table—

. . . Then your complexes fade aw and you say, "Maybe I really am a markable fellow!"

Quilted comfort in Du Pont Nylon cloud-light...care-free...cosy

A feeling of dream comfort, of luxury leisure is yours in lingerie like this. They're Du Pont nylon through and through . . . these new quilted robes in prints or solid pastels. Warm with a minimum of weight—they're washable in the same easy way as your other nylon lingerie. Because they're nylon-quilted, drying takes less time . . . ironing is unnecessary because they hang dry wrinkle-free. Look in your favorite stores for robes in new quilted nylon. Nylon is one of Du Pont's modern-living fibers.

DU PONT
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING . . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY

xciting new things are happening in Du Pont NYLON

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

THERE ARE THREE BRECK SHAMPOO FOR THREE DIFFERENT HAIR CONDITION

The hair of a little child is soft and naturally beautiful. A Breck Shampoo will help bring the natural beauty of your hair. There are Three Breck Shampoos. One Breck Shampoo for dry hair. Another Breck Shampoo is for oily hair. A third Breck Shampoo is for normal hair. The next time you buy a shampoo select the Breck Shampoo for your individual hair condition. You will enjoy using a Breck Shampoo because it is mild and gentle in action and not drying to the hair. A Breck Shampoo leaves your hair soft, fragrant and beautiful.

The Three Breck Shampoos are available at Beauty Shops, Drug Stores, Department Stores and wherever cosmetics are sold.

JOHN H. BRECK, INC. · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3, MASSACHUSETTS
NEW YORK · CHICAGO · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA, CANADA

Executive Editor, Mary Bass

Managing Editor: Laura Lou Brookman

Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Barbara Benson, Glenn Matthew White, Donald Stuart, Ruth Imler, Tina S. Fredericks, Helen Everitt, Peter Briggs

Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd, Ruth Mills Teague

Editorial Associates: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Elizabeth Goetsch, Nancy Crawford, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland, Rosemary Jones, Nelle Keys Perry, Adrina Kayaian

Assistant Editors: Victoria Harris, Alice Kastberg, Virginia Price, Marion Wilson, Dorothy Anne Robinson, Jean Todd Freeman, Elizabeth McFarland, Eileen Sharpe, Albert Serwazi, Dolores Knapp

Editorial Assistants: Lee Stowell Cullen, Patricia Martin, Aileen Dowd, June Schwartz, Gretchen Wehler, Babette Brimberg, Joyce Posson, Nancy Terry, Flora Casparian, Betty Jo Ramsey, Constance Holland, Helen Schofield Lukacs, Alberte Wright, Chessy Rayner, Simone Smith, Betty Coe Spicer, Carol Mercado

"Village and Landscape," by Eugène Boudin (1824–98). Brooklyn Museum.

I've stopped throwing some of my weight around

DOROTHY THOMPSON

Last Christmas my daughter-in-law gave me a beautiful imported cardigan which, with a pretty skirt, could be worn for dress-up occasions. Delighted, I tried it on. It was too small. She was astonished and said naïvely, "I got exactly the same one for my mother [in France], and she wrote me it fits perfectly. It's a forty. They had nothing larger."

Now my daughter-in-law's maman is a quite handsome woman, but I would have sworn that she is broader than I! Thus do we deceive ourselves. I hadn't stepped on a scale for months—no doubt from an unconscious desire not to know the facts. But the next morning I stood on the bathroom scales. They registered 174. Then I determined to stop this imperialist expansion. Enough was enough.

I knew what I ought to weigh, for my height and years, because I remembered what my weight had been during the years when I looked and felt my best. I ought to weigh between 140 and 145. I ought to wear a Size 18.

I had had a routine checkup in the fall and had proved totally uninteresting to the doctors at the clinic. Blood pressure excellent; blood and hemoglobin count perfect; heart strong; basal metabolism a little sluggish but normal. Excellent life-insurance risk. In short, I was under no compulsion of health to lose weight. No, my disgust with myself was purely aesthetic. I didn't like the way I looked. And I loved that cardigan. It was really the cardigan that did it.

I had a lovely New Year's Eve, ate a beautiful dinner from soup to nuts, and drank a couple of highballs before going to bed. On January 1, 1954, I changed my way of eating and drinking. It was not a "New Year's resolution." It just seemed a good time to begin. And by May fifteenth, I weighed exactly 143 pounds. I felt fine. I could do more work than most women without exhaustion. I was certain that another checkup would establish exactly what the last one did. But I wore a Size 18—slightly taken in!

Meanwhile, and by chance, I had read a lot of articles about dieting. They all advised you to consult your doctor and follow his advice. I did not consult my doctor, because I knew my health was good, and I knew the cause and cure of overweight. I did give a cursory reading to a book on calories that I bought at a drugstore, but quickly abandoned the idea of totting up daily how many calories were in an orange, or a piece of bread, or four square inches of lean meat.

I like good food. And the thought of measuring every inch and spoonful promised to ruin every meal, not only for me but also for my family.

Besides, I have read those diets for a week or a month which doctors put out. They are, I think, designed to spoil all pleasure in eating. The latest view of the profession is that overweight is due to psychiatric causes; overweight persons are so because of "basic insecurity." Well, maybe. But I can think of other reasons too.

Fortunately, I have no allergies to any kind of food—or, as far as I know, to anything else. Breakfast for me is some fruit juice and lots of coffee and nothing whatever besides. Lunch is something on a tray beside my worktable, which I eat without knowing what I am eating. But dinner has always been a festival, eaten in relaxation—no "situations, conditions and reactions," as my husband calls the theme of my journalistic work. Soup, meat or fish, vegetables, salad and dessert. And always a glass or two of claret or white wine.

In four and a half months I lost thirty pounds in thorough enjoyment of every dinner—and a guest might have come to any of them, and often did.

I simply cut out carbohydrates—starches and sugars, except the sugar in fruits—radically reduced fats, but did not entirely exclude them, and eliminated all cocktails and highballs. But I did not give up that glass or two of wine, to which I had become accustomed, and which I firmly believe is good for one's health and digestion.

I have consumed a great deal of consommé (or bouillon), mostly from the supermarket, but not in the form of soup, just as it comes from the can. I have never eaten vegetables simply boiled in salted water. But there has been no butter in them either.

Vegetables should be cooked in a minimum of water, covered, if they are not to lose their flavor. If instead of water and butter one uses bouillon, the result is delicious. It is the best way to braise endive and celery; any vegetable so cooked is improved rather than handicapped, except peas. And when we had peas, they were cooked in the French manner, with small white onions or scallions cut up, and a few lettuce leaves. My portion was served first, and fresh butter added to the rest.

I ate all soups except such as are made with fats, floury thickening or cream. These are soups on a stock basis—beef, veal or chicken. Onion; mushroom (no calories in mushrooms); vegetable (but without potatoes); chicken soup thickened with yolk of egg—there are a dozen soups made from stock with every bit of fat CONTINUED ON PAGE 14

NO greasy fingers...
No "shiny" look!

This is the make-up who

Pond's Angel Face smooths on like velvet—stays! Its skin-softening vaporized beauty oil give it "magnetic" attraction!

ponge—
masky coating

NO spilly powder—
No "pressed powder" dryness ecial flattery can't be copied!

It now leads any other make-up 2 to 1

- Compare it to the greasy foundations that just will turn shiny and oily-looking on your skin . . .
- Compare it to cake make-ups, with their messy sponges and "masky," cakey dryness . . .
- Compare it to ordinary face powders—either loose or "pressed"—with their chalky, powdery look . . .
- Millions of women have done just this—they've compared Pond's Angel Face with every kind of make-up on the market. The result—today more women use Pond's Angel Face, surveys show, than use the next two complexion make-ups put together.

Only $1*

"Magnetic" attraction—

the secret of Angel Face's incredible smoothness and "cling"

One of the blessings of Angel Face women love most is that, although it is a completely non-greasy, all-in-one make-up, it never "cakes" or looks powdery. Never streaks.

And it is never drying to the skin.

Here is the secret: Angel Face is permeated through and through with vaporized beauty oils which have a specific affinity with natural skin softeners—a "magnetic" attraction that makes Angel Face actually seem to become one with your skin!

It is "magnetic" attraction that makes Angel Face go on with such incredible smoothness and "cling"—with such amazingly clear, delicate color. And it's "magnetic" attraction that gives Angel Face by Pond's its unique, "soft-as-velvet" look that no other complexion make-up has ever been able to duplicate.

If you haven't yet discovered the magic of Angel Face—if you've been frightened off by your troubles with other make-ups, or thought you just weren't "the make-up type"—do get yourself a Pond's Angel Face now. Right away, you'll see why it's today's most outstanding face flatterer—by far!

—And you'll love its charming Mirror Case

Tuck an Angel Face "Mirror Case" in your handbag—in 5 seconds smooth on this wonderful powder and foundation in-one! You'll be proud to use this slim, ivory-and-golden compact—anywhere! Complete with full-view mirror, velour puff, choice of 8 luscious Angel Face shades. See the dramatic new dark shade "Gypsy Angel." The Angel Face "Mirror Case" is only $1*

Pond's Angel Face

This is the "extra" Angel Face that many Angel Face lovers like to keep on their dressing tables, for home use. Dainty blue-and-gold box with plump, velour puff. 2 sizes—89¢, 59¢*

*plus tax

Ask Mary Gordon of TWA

about these exciting new TRAVEL GUIDES

Read TWA's wonderful new pocket-size Travel Guides and feel like an experienced traveler even if you have never been abroad. They are packed with money-saving tips on where to stay, what to see, what to do. They are a bargain at 20¢ each . . . or all 6 for $1.00.

HOW MUCH TO TIP? Each Travel Guide has a short course on when to tip, whom to tip, how much to tip.

FOREIGN MONEY? Each Guide gives the rate of exchange for foreign currencies. Helps you plan your spending.

WHERE TO STAY? TWA's Guides list the "best bets" for each country, makes it easy to find the right hotel.

WHERE TO EAT? Gourmets and budgeteers have supplied TWA with suggestions on where to eat, what to eat.

HOW TO SHOP? TWA's Guides list the best buys, best shopping areas and specialties of each country.

FREE! If you mail the coupon below promptly, TWA will send you a full-color map of the principal city in each country for which you order a Guide. Do mail your coupon today . . . offer expires August 20. And remember when you need special help in solving travel problems, write travel-wise Mary Gordon of TWA.

FILL OUT AND MAIL

Trans World Airlines, Travel Tips Dept. J-8
Box 1460, Grand Central Station, New York 17, N. Y.

Enclosed is 20¢ in coin for each Travel Guide checked below, to cover the cost of handling and postage, or $1.00 for the complete set of six.

Name _____ (PLEASE PRINT)

Address _____

City _____ State _____

☐ ALL SIX ☐ FRANCE ☐ ITALY ☐ GREAT BRITAIN ☐ SPAIN ☐ SWITZERLAND ☐ PORTUGAL

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 11

removed, and no cream or starchy thickenings added.

The doctors' menus recommended lean meat, broiled or roasted. That reduces the meat menu to steaks or chops or prime cuts. And if anyone knows how to broil or roast a chicken fit to eat without butter or fat of any kind, I'd like to hear about it. When we had it, I ate it anyhow. But boiled chicken, rather rare in this country, is simply delicious. It should go into boiling water—not too much—in which a good-sized bouquet—onion, celery tops, parsley, split carrot—has been put. Eaten with a horse-radish sauce made of the soup and thickened with the yolk of an egg, or eaten, in the European manner, with the soup out of a bowl, it is a grand dish. Then there is boiled—or, rather, simmered—beef, which I infinitely prefer to steak.

Stews are difficult because the recipes require a certain amount of fat in which originally to brown the meat and glaze the onions which are their all-but-universal base. But they can also be made by originally browning and glazing in a small amount of strong brown stock. If the rest of the family want the sauce thickened, have some served for you before the thickening is added.

I started on the theory that I must eat salad without oil. But not being a rabbit, I abandoned it. I figured a teaspoonful of olive oil could be balanced off against the dry toast the menus recommended but that I did not eat, the breakfast egg I did not want. And everybody for reasons of health needs some fats.

Dessert was a problem. I had fresh or stewed dietetic fruit—the compotes that are for sale without sugar. Fortunately, I do not really care much for sweets. I do like cheese, and the cheeses I particularly like are all fattening.

An optimist is a girl who mistakes a bulge for a curve. —RING LARDNER

Oddly enough, I found that it was those hardly noticed lunches which were giving me the most carbohydrates. Sandwiches! Bread, butter, and meat or cheese. The quick lunch seems always to be a sandwich. But that, too, was easily solved. I ate yoghurt, or cottage cheese with grated carrot or grated apple, on lettuce leaves for which the cheese itself served as adequate dressing, and/or a slice of cold meat and a pickle.

I've always preferred coffee black, but I like it sweet. That simply meant substituting saccharin for sugar.

One reason people become fat, and a reason that has nothing to do with "psychosomatic" causes, is that the weight-reducing foods which provide fully adequate nourishment are expensive. These are the proteins.

The housewife who must feed a family on a limited budget—and that is most of the housewives in the United States—cannot afford to give them "plentiful" lean meat of the better cuts, plentiful green vegetables—which, frozen or fresh, are not cheap—and fresh fruits. Children, furthermore, require carbohydrates, and their mothers feed them potatoes, macaroni and cheese, bread and butter or margarine, pies, cake, cookies. Also, the average housewife simply has not the time to cook separate meals for herself or her husband and the rest of the family.

THE critics of overweight persons imply that they are gluttonous. This is sometimes so, but often it is not. They eat what their economic condition compels them to eat, or they are indifferent to food, and eat, as I eat my lunches, with their minds on something else. But eating is also a matter of habit. For hundreds of thousands of people, meat-and-potatoes are practically one word. They just don't feel they have had a meal if bread and potatoes are left out. I found that after a month of dieting I had lost my taste for certain foods and cultivated a taste for others.

The amount of food one eats is also largely habit. I made it a rule to eat only as much food at any dinner course as my plate would comfortably accommodate, and never to take a second serving. For two days I was hungry. After that I wanted no more.

The same is true of drinking. One o things that I absolutely cut out was liqu not for any moral reason, but because ured that if I was going to reduce my i radically, I'd have to eat my calories an drink them. My husband, who is an works under the same roof where I d writing, but on another floor, and we se see each other after breakfast until workday is over. Then we meet for a fe freshing and relaxing cocktails before di Neither of us is a "drinker." But we that cocktail hour together, when our fri too, would often drop in. And, after di we usually sat with glasses of Scotch water or soda beside us.

I FOUND that it was the glass rather tha contents that mattered. I could relax o glass of tomato juice or soda water qu well. And, to speak honestly, I not only weight by cutting out those cocktails highballs, but I felt very much better.

The cocktail party, of course, is the ba persons on a diet. In the first place, it is to get through a couple of hours, m spent standing and engaged in desultory versation or snatches of conversation, tinually interrupted, without being fort And, secondly, everything served at a c tail party is persona non grata to the di potato chips, nuts, sandwiches, sausages canapés—butter, mayonnaise, bread. If must go to a cocktail party, it is bett stick to one long drink and abjure the f

The principle controlling weight is simple. Food fuels the body. People tak weight for only one reason: their intak food-fuel is greater the amount burned expended energy. S people burn up carb drates swiftly and do so burn up fats. They slim on potatoes or m roni and expand on b or other fats, or vice v Jack Sprat and his wi he who could eat no fat and she who c eat no lean—may both have been slim. nursery rhyme doesn't tell us. But if radically reduce both carbohydrates fats and don't lose weight, it will be rem able.

Everybody's body—and hence figu changes as he or she grows older. There glandular and hormone changes. S women, as they grow older, become "thi a rail." Most tend to expand. The form hard to check. The latter, as I have lear is easy.

But for everybody, at any age, there body weight at which he looks and feel best. The women who injure their health dieting do so because they set themse exaggerated objectives. Your mirror, the you feel and the comments of candid fri are the best test of when to call a halt. W people say, "How wonderfully you have proved your figure, but you look awf tired," you had better take a look at your and if they are right, eat some mashed tatoes. I know a woman who once weig 185 pounds. She was the prettiest fat wo I ever saw, with a complexion like rose snow. She is 5′8″ tall and has reduced her to a Size 14. She now looks like a wall corpse. As far as I know her health is g but her looks are gone. If she had settled a perfect 38 she would still be a handso woman.

When you get to a reasonable size—sonable for your height, frame and yea stop. But weigh yourself once a week (oftener), and if you have gained a poun two, take it off again. That's easy and ca done quickly. Losing thirty pounds is e too, but it takes time. Seven or eight pou a month is all one ought to lose.

At 143 I am not a Hollywood model, b think I look better than I did last Christm My friends say so. I feel a lot better, at rate.

So do try to enjoy yourself and enjoy y food while you are dieting. And if you're don't let yourself be depressed into believ you're a psychiatric case. Personally, I th that's tummy rot.

Cool summer breezes from Hawaii serve DOLE each day a different way!

Many DOLE varieties! Many sizes to suit your needs! Slices, chunks, tidbits, crushed, spears, juice. All delicious as is, for quick, cool meal-making. All wonderful with other foods to perk up summer appetites. All brighter, tenderer, tastier because all DOLE is Hawaiian Pineapple. Good for you. Thrifty. Enjoy it every day all summer long.

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS, Ph.D
Pennsylvania State University, Department of Psychology

Making marriage work

If your grown children aren't grateful for your help, there may be a very good reason.

The Parents' Rights

"WHY can't young couples today stand on their own feet? When our children married, my husband and I thought our responsibilities were about over. Instead, the load gets heavier all the time.

"Our daughter Alice was married five years ago, and has three children; John married a year later and has two. Each baby has meant a loan of several hundred dollars for medical expenses. My husband helps out with twenty-five or fifty dollars for every house or insurance payment or extra expense. He makes a good income, but we barely break even.

"Even our time isn't our own. I baby-sit two or three evenings every week, and any day Alice or my daughter-in-law wants to go out for a few minutes—or hours—she leaves the children with me. When either couple goes away for a weekend or summer vacation, my husband and I take over.

"We love them all dearly, and we don't mind helping out. But for thirty years we worked to give them the best of everything—a carefree childhood without work or worry, a lovely home and expensive college education. Our wedding gifts were a thousand dollars apiece, plus bonds toward a down payment on their homes. We spared no expense to get them started. Shouldn't they recognize our rights now?"

Perhaps, but it is not surprising that they don't. Many parents are finding that their married children are still dependents. Self-reliance is not conferred with a marriage certificate or a college diploma. Nor is this a modern situation. In older days, farmer fathers often gave sons a piece of land, a cow and a team. Many sons are now set up in business by successful fathers, as a matter of course, or given jobs in the firm.

It may be too late to cure the situation you object to, but it can almost certainly be remedied. Since the essence of the difficulty is that the children don't recognize it, it is up to the parents to adopt corrective action. Their children's happiness and security are at stake as well as their own.

Here are some steps to consider. Though they must be adapted to suit the circumstances, the underlying principles are certain to apply.

Review the facts. Make a written record of the parents' gifts and services to the couples and of any services the children have rendered the parents, from the time of the wedding onward. (Earlier events, however important in causing the problem, are too remote to consider now.) Since money is a touchy subject, financial records should be as accurate and detailed as possible. Estimate time involved in baby-sitting and other services. The record should be sufficiently objective that, if the children ever saw it, they would accept it as true.

Compute the "net." It is easy to exaggerate the favors you grant, and to underestimate those you accept. Perhaps you remember your baby-sitting and forget your son's help with mowing the lawn, or other services. Your children and in-laws may not be imposing as much as you thought. In any case, the factual record will help you decide.

Be businesslike in financial dealings. Perhaps Alice has received $2000 in outright gifts, but John has had $3000 in "loans." Both may feel aggrieved. Try to even the score, by regarding both amounts either as loans or as gifts. Make up the discrepancy by a cash settlement now or by note so that it will be equalized in later property distribution. Explain the present situation and in the future inform both when either receives a loan or substantial gift. Tell them the maximum total either can expect from you within a year, and do not exceed the limit.

Explain your position. Naturally you can't specify just how much time you will give to personal services like baby-sitting. But if you treat them as adults, your children should understand your point of view. Assure them of your willingness to help, but at your convenience, not theirs. Avoid general commitments for the future, and deal with each demand or request as it arises.

Above all, be firm. Once you have decided on a plan, stand your ground. In a real emergency, temporary concessions may be warranted. But under normal circumstances, to give in will simply mean a return to the old pattern.

Drastic steps may be necessary to break your habit of indulgence, and the children's of dependence. Some mothers, knowing their weakness, take a full-time job for a few months to avoid baby-sitting, or coddling. If you can afford it, a long vacation may be a convenient and pleasant way of breaking the cycle. If all else fails, you may want to consider moving to another neighborhood.

It won't be easy. But you owe it to your children and their families not to make parasites of them. The problem no doubt originated long ago; but whatever the background, take steps now to rectify what never should have happened.

Giving Them a Start

AS their mother's letter says, Alice and John have enjoyed many material advantages. Certainly a college education, substantial wedding presents and the prospect of home ownership are desirable in themselves. Yet they seem to have amounted to a handicap, rather than a good start.

For Alice and John learned to accept privileges as their right, and their parents' duty, without obligation on their part. Parents today are giving their growing children more financial benefits than ever before in our history. In itself, this is not wrong, but natural and desirable. Yet it is vital to remember that privileges should be accompanied by corresponding responsibilities.

Because many parents neglected this principle when their children were small, an increasing proportion of young people today attain adult status without attaining an adult sense of responsibility.

Overindulgence is more a matter of how favors are granted than of how many or how much. Indulgence of growing children is often a form of self-indulgence, reflecting some subtle insecurity in the parent. A mother who doubts herself may similarly doubt her child's capacity to face his own problems. Or lacking confidence in her worth, she gives in to the child for fear of losing his affection. Some well-to-do parents, niggardly with their time and attention, ease their sense of guilt by lavish spending.

Parents whose incomes are limited are automatically deterred from overindulging their children financially. But parents who can afford to gratify their children's material wants should make doubly sure that they do not overindulge or overprotect in other respects. No normal parent likes to deny his child unnecessarily, and it is always painful for a parent to let a child suffer. But it is unrealistic to try to protect them from all discomfort, even from the consequences of their misdeeds or mistakes. The overprotected child is likely to become an ineffectual adult.

Examine your motives and your methods in dealing with your children while they are young. No professional training, nor cultural advantages, nor money gifts can transform a spoiled child into a responsible and competent adult.

Do You Agree?

Doesn't a religious difference in marriage often cause conflict?

It may when mates are unreasonable. But greater unhappiness occurs when neither spouse is religious than when they differ.

Are You a Restless Wife?

After the first few years of marriage, some wives feel frustrated by restrictions and a lack of challenge. Is this your attitude? Be absolutely honest in answering these questions yes or no.

Are You:

1. Restless, and dissatisfied with life?
2. Bored by your household routine?
3. Envious of the freedom men have?
4. Very fond of lively exciting parties?
5. Uncertain of your love for your husband?
6. Thinking more about tomorrow than today?
7. Reluctant or hesitant about making decisions?

Do you often feel that:

8. You are lonely and misunderstood?
9. Your husband is too settled?
10. You have more men than women friends?
11. Most marriages are not very happy?
12. You may have married too soon?
13. Life is passing you by?
14. You may have married the wrong man?

With four or fewer "yes" answers, you seem no more restless than the average wife. The higher your "yes" score, the more serious your maladjustment. If your score is five or more, you are neither very happy in your marriage nor in most of your close relationships. Though your husband may be partly responsible, your trouble is probably within yourself. Unless you can take a greater interest in your marriage and in your husband, you should seek professional help. To delay action is to court disaster.

Have a Pepsi—

the modern, the light refreshment

NICEST thing about the beaches these days is that the people there seem to feel as good as they look—and they look wonderful!

Full of life, trim of shape, they owe their slender waists and graceful figures mostly to their modern, wholesome diet habits.

They shun the over-rich, the over-heavy. Their taste today is for food and drink that's lighter and less filling.

That's why Pepsi-Cola is more popular today than ever. It's kept in step with modern fashion, changing tastes. Today's Pepsi is light, dry (not too sweet), reduced in calories.

You'll find Pepsi-Cola everywhere, in the familiar economy bottle that serves two people, and in the smaller, single-drink size.

How long since you've had a Pepsi-Cola? It's the modern, the light refreshment. It refreshes without filling. Have a Pepsi.

PEPSI-COLA

Pepsi-Cola

refreshes without filling

Keep it COOL

SUB-DEB

edited by

Ruth Imler

TANA HOBAN

If you're sizzling on the inside, you're playing a losing game!

LOVE-FORTY

This is your fourth date with Jim. You like him better than any boy you've ever known. You thought he felt the same way about you, until now—at the tennis court. He knows you have to be home by five-thirty and it's five—and he's still showing Doris his backhand, although he said he'd be just a minute. Has he forgotten he promised you a lemonade at the clubhouse before you left? Then he walks up to you—grinning, not at all apologetic. You're furious with him, so do you:

1. Give him the silent treatment?

2. Suggest that Doris is practically going steady with Bill?

3. Vow that the next time a boy makes a fool of you, you just won't be around when he comes back?

Obviously (we hope!) you wouldn't swat out blindly against the boy (Solution 1) or the other girl (Solution 2) or yourself (Solution 3) to win points in a match with jealousy. A cool girl, in this case, could stretch one date to two by holding Jim to the promise of a lemonade tomorrow. She might even impress him with her thoughtful analysis of Doris' backhand problems. She certainly wouldn't let Jim know she wants to be his stop watch. (Boys, to a man, dislike a display of possessiveness.)

Jealousy, which comes from that feeling of being entitled to the every thought and attention of an individual because you give him all your thoughts and attentions, can prompt you to foolish behavior. But it can also tip you off that:

. . . it may be time to decide more clearly what you want to be. If you really admire the behavior of the person you're "jealous" of, you can develop those same qualities in yourself. But if you wouldn't feel at home as such a person, you can develop your best points—and attract the boys, the people and the activities that are inevitably drawn to those qualities.

BOYS, RULES AND TEARS

"Meet me at the drug store on Pine Street," he said, "around eight." Because you've been hoping and hoping he'd ask you for a date, because he's tall and good-looking and two years older than you are, because he does live three miles on the other side of town and doesn't have a car, you agree. But your parents don't—they've never met him. You point out that you've been dating boys for over a year and just know he's nice; you try to explain the distance problem. They still say no. So do you:

1. Run up to your room and cry?

2. Shout "mean" and threaten to keep the date anyway?

3. Explain the situation to the boy and invite him to dinner first—with your parents' permission?

If a girl who prides herself on her ability to judge a boy's character feels that her parents don't trust her judgment, she may foolishly lash out against them. Tears and threats, though, merely help to convince her parents that daughter is still quite immature. By creating an opportunity for her parents to know the boy (the dinner invitation) she is acting more maturely. Besides, most parents, in such a case, are not challenging her judgment so much as they are trying to impress upon the boy that their daughter is to be treated as their greatest treasure.

Rebelliousness, that often blind defiance of the well-intentioned advice of adults, can be the beginning of endless, painful misunderstandings. Or it can tip you off that:

. . . a genuinely rebellious spirit takes pride in studying all the pros and cons, is always searching for the truest and best way to prove a point. The real test of an individual's independence is the ability to accept another's point of view when it is sounder than yours, or when asserting your independence will hurt someone and make him worry without cause.

THE ETERNAL TRIANGLE

Anne is your best friend. At least you think she is your best friend. But when you phone to ask her about the movies—you two have always gone together on Friday nights—and she says she can't go with you because she has a date, you begin to wonder. You're furious with her because she didn't tell you sooner, so do you:

1. Tell her she's "boy crazy"?

2. Ask her if her date could get a friend for you?

3. Decide to go to the movies with someone else or to stay home and read a book?

Solutions 2 and 3, separately or together, are excellent—unless you already spend too much time at home reading books! But only a very un-understanding girl would call her best friend "boy crazy," for if she thought for a minute she'd realize that Anne may have put off telling her about the date because she was afraid of the hurt feelings bound to arise. Some girls date earlier than others for the same mysterious reasons that of two girls of the same age one can look years younger or older than the other. But when the two girls are best friends, it's especially difficult to squelch the envy one may feel.

Envy, that resentful feeling at the good luck or fortune of another, can bring its owner even greater misfortune in the shape of spite and meanness. Or it can tip you off that:

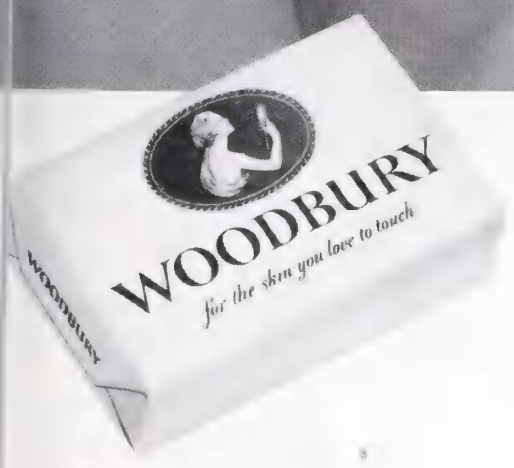
. . . if you want something (like dating) you may have to stop waiting for it to come to you. You may have to start doing things which invite it: join school or church groups. Just going to a movie with another girl will invite more of the same. Working with boys on a piece of scenery or sharing choir practice or throwing a party may promote new friendships but, more important, it will speed your growing up. Stretching toward new activities shapes and lengthens your personality till you are as big as your dreams.

A SOUVENIR OF THE DANCE

Your school P.T.A. sponsors an Open House Dance in the gym every Thursday after ninth period. Only steadies go as couples—the boys arrive in gangs and the girls in threes or fours—but by the end of the afternoon almost everyone is paired off. You hate the idea of going without a date, but Alice talks you into going with her. You dance twice and then no one asks you to dance again. Alice is still dancing. You walk to the drinking fountain, take a long, slow drink, then leisurely walk back to the dance floor. And still no one asks you. You're embarrassed and angry with yourself for getting into such a predicament in the first place, so do you:

1. Sneak home?

2. Join a group of girls and hang around until the dance ends?



3. Ask another girl to tell Alice you have a headache and are going home?

Every girl can remember moments of panic when she wasn't a triumphant social success. Running away from a tough problem won't prevent it from happening again (Solution 1); joining forces with equally unhappy girls may make it even more difficult for a boy to seek you out (Solution 2); and feigning illness (Solution 3) or indifference will only give you a reputation for the same! What can a girl do?

Frustration, that feeling of being trapped and helpless in a situation not of your own choosing, can carry over into situations where you are free to act, or it can:

. . . give you the determination to get a lift from working on something you know you can get (make a squaw skirt, learn the Moonlight Sonata by heart, and so on) while you work hard toward getting the "practically impossible" thing you want. First step on the road to achievement? Become your best possible self, then give time a chance to do its share.

You've never had such beauty care...

Now your face can have both soap-and-water freshness and face-cream smoothness, too. New Woodbury Soap is enriched with seven face cream oils and emollients. They are intended to help replace natural oils you ordinarily wash away. You've never used a soap that would do so much to make your complexion lovely. And you've never had a head-to-toe beauty treatment as luxurious as a Woodbury bath. Its rich, mild lather leaves your skin velvet-soft. The lingering fragrance leaves it delicately perfumed. Start using New Woodbury Soap today "for the skin you love to touch"!

New Woodbury Soap is enriched with 7 face cream oils

Now-make every washday "touch-button" simple!

At a touch—cleanest washing!
And economical, too. Hot water stays hot, load after load, in Surgomatic's heat-retaining tub, to give you cleanest washes ever!

At a touch—perfect timing!
Wash even touchy man-made fabrics with Surgomatic Timer.

At a touch—swift draining!
Push a button. That's all. Out goes water, suds, dirt in a hurry.

T.W.C. 1954

All-new Whirlpool Surgomatic

The washer with "touch-button" controls

Just once, see this new work-saver breeze through a hefty 10-pound wash, and you'll want it, too! Even delicate fabrics are Surgomatically timed to perfection. Over-size Aquamatic Extractor squee-eezes out water evenly, thoroughly. High-speed draining, too. Retractable cord. Dozens of time-and-work-saving boons. And remember—it's a Whirlpool! See the Surgomatic at your dealer's.

WHIRLPOOL CORPORATION
St. Joseph, Michigan

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED HEREIN

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

Marcia and Especially Me after a hard romp.

I WONDER why August always seems to come so soon! I have hardly got used to the idea that it is summer when one day I wake up in the morning and feel that curious deep, still, dreamy quality in the air. I say to myself, amazed, "Why, it is August!" The heat of the day is different now; there is a prescience of coolness in late afternoon; at night the white mist brims the meadows, a sad sweet air breathes over the house.

Naturally it is sad, for the end of anything is sad, no matter what may be coming next. Hellos are so much nicer than good-bys. I have always liked them better; so did my mother. She made such a thing of greeting when I came home from school for vacations, but when it was time to pack and catch the old Northwestern train, she was suddenly very brisk and busy about a number of things, and hardly said good-by at all.

When something troubled me—as it often did—she always thought of some fine thing ahead that we could look forward to. Once she stood looking out the window of our house on the riverbank watching the mill lights across the river, and said she wished her life would only reflect the light as the river reflected the lights of the mills. I always thought it did.

How she would have loved the new things that make a vacation weekend easy—after the cottage is closed and the town trek accomplished. I never take these miracles for granted because I always think how mamma would have loved them.

When we rode away from our cottage, I always looked back, mamma never did. She set her face resolutely to the busy days ahead and mentally made lists. So many parties to give to the new students. So many friends to entertain. People in trouble to help.

I am always amused at the way we New Englanders are proud of our weather. When we get a January blizzard, we feel it is the biggest blizzard ever; and in August, the heat is much hotter than any heat anywhere else. All our thermometers play a game, no two get the same answer and it makes for good talk when we gather at the store. "Right by the barn door it was a hundred," says one. "Ninety-eight I made it," says another. "Over a hundred when I went to the hayfield," say George. Our weather is always dra matic, and always personal. I myself ar always in a conflict. Shall I look ever half hour to see what's happening, o shall I not find out at all?

The blessings of the hot still days ar manifold. The rosy ripening globes o the tomatoes, the amber silk on th sweet corn, the lucent emerald peppers the heavenly hot smell of hay.

And the visiting, for nobody wants t start a project except Jill, who is alway doing over a recalcitrant drop-leaf tabl on the hottest day. But she is glad enough to stop to go to Steve and Olive's for supper on the terrace by the water cress brook; and when Olive makes he green-tomato pie, the day ends in glory

This calls for 3 cups sliced green to matoes, 1 ½ cups sugar, 3 tablespoons flour, ¼ teaspoon salt, 3 tablespoons lemon juice, 4 teaspoons grated lemon rind, 1 recipe plain pastry and 3 tablespoons butter or margarine. You combine tomatoes, sugar, flour, salt, lemon juice, grated rind, and pour into a pastry-lined pie plate, dot with butter or margarine, add top crust, bake for 10 minutes in very hot oven—450° F.—then at 350° F.—moderate—for 30 minutes, or until the tomatoes are tender. Serve with a wedge of mild cheese and plenty of black coffee. Delicious.

Now the gladioli are at their best; and surely if there were no other flower at all, we should be rich, having the glads. The snowy whites with a touch of violet in the heart are like a song heard by moonlight, and the dusky coppery ones are breath-taking. Then the purples and shell pinks—well, making a choice is impossible. Whatever the color, they deserve to be properly arranged, not just stuck in a tall vase all the same length and with the buds pointing up. It is easy to cut the stems varying lengths and make a mass arrangement with the deep color at the base or a spreading fan-shaped bouquet in a flat silver bowl. And by taking off the hard shell of the top buds, the blossoms are released so they can unfold and add to the brilliance.

This is the season to be careful that all dogs have plenty of cool fresh water. I am naturally a rather mild woman,

CONTINUED ON PAGE 106

Now beds almost make themselves with CANNON FITTED SHEETS

le for better fit, longer wear!

annon Fitted Bottom Sheet has four fitted corners that keep it beautifully h, wrinkle-free. Eliminates re-tucking! And only Cannon reinforces all with strong bias tape for better fit, longer wear. Sheet size is printed fre- y along the tape. No need to unfold to find the right size!

Fitted top sheets are extra-long!

The two fitted corners of the Cannon Fitted Top Sheet slip over the foot of your mattress . . . then, you just pull it up. This sheet is extra-long. Gives you ample turnover at top, and lots of toe room at bottom. Long enough to use as a bottom sheet—the only fitted sheet you can rotate successfully!

Cannon Combspun Percale!

e lovely, luxurious sheets, white or colored, are Cannon bspun Percale—with cotton combed till only longest, gest fibers remain. Yet, they cost only pennies more than y-duty muslins. (Scalloped hemlines at slight extra cost.)

SHELL PINK · AQUAMARINE · MOONLIGHT YELLOW · SUNSET ROSE · PINK LILAC · TRUE BLUE

Make colorful ensembles with sheets!

Choose from 7 COLORFAST colors. Lagoon Green, above, or any of the other colors at left. It costs less to make slipcovers, curtains, etc. from Cannon Percale Sheets than comparable fabric by the yard. Learn how. SEND 10¢ to Cannon Mills, Inc., Box 1, Brooklyn 1, N.Y. for booklet "MAKE IT WITH SHEETS!"

Cannon

Combspun* Percale Sheets

More women use Cannon Percales than any other brand

s. Pat. Off.

NON

COPR. 1954, CANNON MILLS, INC., N.Y. 13, N.Y. • CANNON TOWELS • STOCKINGS • BEDSPREADS

Cannon Mills, Inc., Box 1, Brooklyn 1, N.Y.

I enclose 10¢. Send me 20-page, full-color, idea-crammed decorating booklet: "MAKE IT WITH SHEETS!"

Name_____
(PLEASE PRINT)

Street_____

City_____ State_____

G.E. Develops 1¾-Pound Fold-up Steam Iron to Do All Pressing Jobs for Travelers!

New Steam Travel Iron takes up less suitcase space than pair of slippers . . . costs only $14.95*

Travelers who have long complained about what suitcases do to freshly packed clothes can now relax. At last there's a lightweight, compact travel iron that keeps clothes looking really fresh—because it steam-presses them, just like a tailor does.

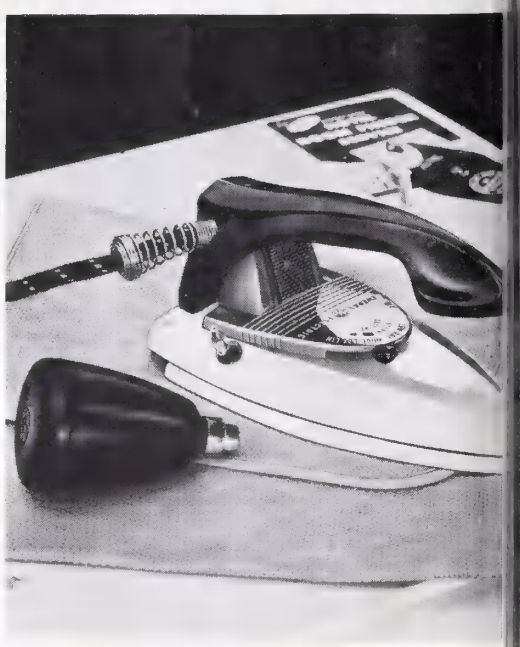
A detachable rubber bulb transforms the new G-E Travel Iron into a steam iron in seconds. Just by filling the bulb with water and fitting it onto the iron, the iron is ready in seconds to steam-press travel wrinkles out of suits, skirts and light fabrics.

Without the bulb, it becomes a fine automatic dry iron. And it works on both AC and DC!

Ideal for vacationists, salesmen, anyone who owns a suitcase! See it at your General Electric dealer's today.

The G-E Steam Travel Iron means your travel wardrobe stays fresh—you look better and need fewer clothes. General Electric Company, Small Appliance Division, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

 Manufacturer's recommended retail or Fair Trade price*



GENERAL ELECTRIC

STEAM SAVES TIME AND MONEY on pressing bills for suits and woolens. Your wardrobe stays fresh with simple touch-up steam ironing, needs no valet service.

WRINKLES DISAPPEAR from some light fabrics like magic. Dresses crushed in a suitcase smooth out when steam from the travel iron passes through the fibers.

LIGHT, COMPACT, easy to travel with. Handle down. Takes up less suitcase space than a pi slippers. Comes complete with carrying case.

MUNKACSI

Tell me Doctor

Editors' Note: There are many questions which women would like to ask a trusted physician, but there is not always the opportunity. In a continuation of this series, Tell Me Doctor, Doctor Safford will answer some of these questions which have been sent to him by readers. The questions are all real but the names are fictitious.

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

ve been perfectly well since that tion. Why should I bother about ng in for examinations every year?"

patient was a woman of middle age. doctor hastened to consult her hisard. "Mrs. Way," he read. "Yes, I reer you. I believe I performed a small tion for you a few years ago. The nurse ok up your record. What can I do for oday?"

doubt that you can do anything," said oman. "I wouldn't have come except ny friend who introduced me to you 'd better do as you suggested. So here I Here's the letter you sent me."

e doctor accepted the note and read: r Mrs. Way: A review of my files shows you underwent an operation in June, I have not seen you since the routine perative examination. A checkup at l intervals is considered of paramount in most surgical cases, and I suggest you arrange for an examination at my within the next few weeks."

e doctor looked up. "And here is your d. Let's see, the follow-up was quite factory. But didn't I advise you to report nother within a year?"

es, but I couldn't see any reason for was feeling perfectly well."

Many things can happen to a person of age within a year—and frequently do. s become practically an axiom among doctors that at least one gynecological ination yearly is desirable between -five and sixty-five."

didn't know that, but if it's true I'm I came. What do you expect to find?"

don't expect to find anything; but it is to make sure. I'll explain further after xamination. Will you go with the nurse, Way?"

ck in the consulting room a half hour , the patient said, "Doctor, I've been dering what you are going to do with all e little specimens you took. I thought were just going to look me over and see was all right."

That's just what I was doing. Those imens were from the neck of the womb the area surrounding it. They will be nined under the microscope and we will the report in a short time."

Examined for what, Doctor? I hope you not going to tell me that I have a cancer, because I know that I don't. There hasn't been any bleeding. I'm just as normal as I can be."

"No, I don't think you are developing a cancer, Mrs. Way. As I said before, this examination is done simply as insurance against possible trouble. I'll try to explain if you will sit back and relax. And you may ask any questions which occur to you as I go along.

"The uterus, or womb, as you probably know, is a pear-shaped organ suspended by ligaments low in the abdominal cavity and opening into the vaginal canal at the small end, technically called the cervix. The cervical opening is normally very small. You can perhaps imagine how tremendously it must be enlarged, by stretching and other processes, in order to permit the passage of a baby weighing, let us say, seven pounds. In most cases this stretching results in a certain amount of damage, particularly with a first baby. The damage is usually not severe, but it is definite; and the healing process is not clean and sharp, as in the case of an incised wound which has been stitched."

"But I thought doctors used stitches when women were torn in childbirth."

"They do, and an extensive laceration of the cervix generally bleeds so that it demands repair at once. But the cervix, just after a birth has taken place, presents such a soft, swollen mass of tissue that it is very difficult to detect smaller injuries. So the patient may be left with an area which is not entirely normal. In other words, it may be vulnerable."

"I suppose you mean vulnerable to cancer?"

"That is the most important consideration, certainly."

"Then only a woman who has had a baby could develop a cancer in that region?"

"No. From five to fifteen per cent of cancers of the cervix are found in women who have never had a pregnancy. There is no question, however, but that most cancers of the cervix occur in women who have borne children."

"Is cancer of the cervix a common condition, Doctor?"

"Unfortunately, yes. It ranks about equally with cancer of the breast as the most common malignant lesion in the female."

"And it's usually childbirth injuries which cause it?"

"I did not say that. We do not know positively what causes cancer of any part of the or Safford's new book, The Intimate Problems of ren, containing several chapters which have not ared in the Journal, has been published by Haw- Books, Inc., 70 Fifth Ave., New York 11, N.Y.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 89

YOU'RE LOOKING AT A ONE DRESS WOMAN

Shelton Stroller

Into every woman's life there comes one dress which is preferred above all others. If you agree that no dress is half so precious as the one you wear most often, Shelton Stroller promises to become your pet fashion.

Time and again it answers your question, "What shall I wear?" Surprises you with a young-at-heart quality that stays fresh and alive, no matter how active your day. It's no wonder women call Shelton Stroller the "fashion of a thousand lives". But what makes it especially desirable, is its smooth 100% NYLON JERSEY. So kind to the skin, ever so practical, it washes! dries rapidly! sheds wrinkles! saves ironing! Each Shelton Stroller has a 100 inch wide stroll-a-long skirt with two side pockets. Each features the on-in-a-jiffy zipper front. Makes stepping into a Shelton Stroller a pleasant start to many a carefree day. Sizes 12 to 20, 12½ to 22½. In black, navy, grey, brown. About $13

Watch your newspaper for store ads announcing arrival of Shelton Strollers in your city. Or write now for name of nearest store and receive FREE FASHION FOLIO

© 1954 SHELTON CASUALS

Shelton CASUALS, DEPT. L8, 1350 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 18.

This is the full 13-Egg Angel Food Cake Mix

Now, even higher, lighter, more gorgeous than ever. The whites of 13 Country-Fresh Eggs are right in the package. Water is all you add.

New! Pillsbury Angel Food Cake Mix

Journal About Town

Gossip about people you know, Editors you like, and what goes on in New York

Fifty Years Ago in the Journal

AUGUST, 1904, marked the end of the first season of a new Italian tenor named Caruso at the Metropolitan. "Travelogue" joined the English language, coined by Burton Holmes, and George M. Cohan wowed the people with his Forty-five Minutes From Broadway.

"Is it true that you decline each year over $200,000 worth of patent-medicine advertisements?" a reader asks Editor Bok in the August, 1904, JOURNAL. Answer: "The amount would be near to half a million dollars if you also include all the other advertisements we decline, such as real estate, financial investments, hair restorers, complexion beautifiers and alcoholic beverages."

[JOURNAL still considers liquor and similar items unfit advertisements for a woman's magazine. JOURNAL annually refuses to print, in its readers' best interests, nearly a million dollars' worth of ads other magazines find acceptable. In 1953, $785,383.97.

Because of this attitude JOURNAL leads all other women's magazines in total advertising revenue, and total circulation. Ed.]

"To clean black taffeta, sponge with a solution of two quarts of cold, strong black coffee and one tablespoon of ammonia."

Fashion hint: "A simple outfit for a week's visit to the St. Louis Exposition might consist of a coat and skirt of dark mohair or serge of instep length. Then you will need four or five plain washable shirtwaists and a simple straw hat."

"Mattie: You can freshen your black straw sailor hat by the application of black liquid shoe polish."

In an article about Chautauqua, New York, which was attracting thousands of Americans in search of culture, the JOURNAL remarks, "This is probably the only place in the world where one may meet a woman carrying Vergil's Aeneid under one arm and a dressed chicken for dinner under the other."

"Housekeeping without Ice: Fill a box with nice clean sand and bury things in it."

ZINN ARTHUR

Mary Martin and her daughter Heller—who has not lived up to her name.

WE always like mothers and daughters, as you know; and this is particularly true with Mary Martin and her twelve-year-old Heller. Mary at the moment is performing on the stage as Peter Pan, in a musical version of the Sir James M. Barrie classic. Always having her hair cut short, she had to have it cut shorter than ever for the play, right after this swing picture was taken for us. "It's like having two daddies," said Heller, who was named Heller, Mary told us, because they thought that she really was going to be one.

We went twice to see A Star is Born when it was downstairs here at the Music Hall

PAT CLARK

Judy Garland.

in 1937. Which is why we'll be on hand when an altogether new production of that fine film appears any minute now, this time with Judy Garland in the part played before by an actress with the same initials—Janet Gaynor. There was a scene in which Fredric March proposed to Janet in a darkened movie theater, a scene that will have a sort of real-life twist now when James Mason proposes to Judy, because we recall Judy telling us a while ago that it was in a movie theater, back in the days of silent film, that her parents had met and fallen in love. Her father was the vocalist there, she said, her mother the pianist.

We haven't told Gladys Taber about it yet, but the American Kennel Club has just notified us that the flop-eared cocker spaniel has been nosed out as the most popular breed in this country by the beagle: 43,561 registered cockers to 45,398 registered beagles.

What most fascinates the majority of visitors to the Workshop, men or women, is the Homemaking Department's collection of all that's latest in household equipment, functioning under real-life conditions. And the other day, Doctor and Mrs. Leonard Kortenhorst were no exception. He's the Joe Martin of Holland—President of the Dutch House of Representatives—his biggest moment in this country, his wife told Margaret Davidson, being when Speaker Martin gave Speaker Kortenhorst the former's official gavel. "And do you know why this right now is such a big moment for me?" Mrs. K. demanded of Margaret. "It's because I'm here on my fiftieth year as a JOURNAL reader. Your latest issue will be waiting for me at The Hague when I get home—if I can ever manage to get my husband away from those new dishwashers."

Margaret Davidson (right) and the "big moment" Kortenhorsts.

DI PIETRO

During 1952, the average person in this country ate over 6 dozen eggs more than he ate in 1929, consumed 47 more quarts of milk, ate 24 more pounds of meat. His consumption of citrus fruits increased markedly; that of potatoes, flour and cereal products dropped.

A. G. MICHAELSON

Margaret Hickey receives award from Lloyd Morey, President of the University of Illinois.

The JOURNAL reaped highest honors recently at a dinner up at the Hotel Plaza when the magazine was given the gold medal (top award of eight), and a scroll as the Benjamin Franklin Magazine Award for "the most distinguished and meritorious public service during the year." It was our Public Affairs series for 1953 which took this first prize of its kind ever offered, and in her little speech of acceptance Margaret Hickey, Public Affairs editor, won the evening's biggest burst of laughter with a paraphrase of Franklin's famous aphorism. "Never send a boy to do a man's work," she said. "Send a woman!"

Studies show that accidents, the leading cause of death in childhood, are most likely to occur when mothers and children are unhappy. . . . About 3 dozen mink coats are left each year on U. S. trains.

She held her wrist out unsteadily, and he fumbled with the clasp. Now, now, would he kiss her?

It wasn't that Morgan didn't love her family. She just wanted to lead her own life —of glamour and romance

THE JOURNAL'S COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE
CONDENSED NOVEL

READY OR NOT

THEY were moving again. Mr. Connor announced at dinner, in the faintly sullen voice of a man who doesn't like what he's about to say any more than his hearers will, that he'd found just the apartment.

"What?" Morgan's fork clattered against her plate. "Pop, are you saying that we have to move again?"

Mr. Connor started to shake his head, then nodded it and shrugged. He glanced hopefully at his son and his other daughter. They were younger than Morgan and might conceivably enjoy the prospect of yet another move.

Julie leaned an elbow beside her plate, nestled her chin on the fist and said that, as far as she was concerned, she thought it was a slick idea. "And you don't have to pay attention to some people," she added, loudly loyal to her father, but avoiding Morgan's glance.

"Well," Ned said cheerfully, "when do we start packing?"

"Why do we ever unpack?" Morgan muttered. She started to stack dishes without getting up from her chair, then remembered what she'd decided about keeping the home gracious, and rose. We will not, she had resolved slightly over a year ago, put catchup bottles or wrapped loaves of bread on the table. We will remove the dishes of one course before we serve the next. As the apartments in which they lived grew cheaper and gloomier, the importance of keeping them clean and gracious increased. Of keeping Ned and Julie aware of courtesy and things like —— "Will you please take your elbows off the table?" she snapped.

Julie removed her arm with elaborate gestures. "Surely. Let's keep the elbows polite, even if the tongues aren't."

"Stow it," Ned said. He did not expect Julie to listen to him, and she didn't. She was thirteen, four years older than he was, and they got along pretty well, but for all the attention she'd pay to his words he might as well speak Chinese. "Julie," he said, "if I woke you up in the middle of the night yelling Fire, what would you do?"

"Look to see if there was one, of course."

"Don't you ever believe anything I say?"

"Not without checking."

"You realize you could lose your life in this fire?"

CONTINUED ON PAGE 62

Copyright, 1953, by Mary Stolz. This is a condensation of the novel recently published by Harper & Bros.

ILLUSTRATED BY Charles

Once in

"I see you!"
George said, popping his head
into view.

ILLUSTRATED BY

Love with Amy!

She was cute and sweet . . . ything a man ould want.

But she was definitely leading a dog's life.

THE third sharp poke finally roused George Weaver. He sat up in bed, wincing in the sudden glare of the bedroom lights. Jane, his blond and pregnant wife, was crisply fixing her face at the dressing table. Mr. Duffy, his black and chunky cocker spaniel, sat on the bed chomping at a slipper.

"Wha?" said George.

"Hospital time," Jane answered cheerfully. "I'm having a baby, remember?"

George focused on his wrist watch. "At five o'clock in the morning?"

"Naturally." Jane grinned. "Have to follow the rule book."

George jumped out of bed and began to dress rapidly. "How do you feel?" he asked anxiously.

"As if I'm going to have a baby." George increased the tempo of his dressing. "Slow down, darling. So far it's only a distant rumbling." She stood up composedly. "I've alerted Doctor Davidson, packed a valise and made you some juice. All you have to do is find us a cab."

George rescued his slipper from Mr. Duffy, who snapped automatically at his hand, then busied himself with one of Jane's slippers. "And park Mr. Duffy with the super."

"And park Mr. Duffy," Jane sighed. "We should've shipped him to the Walkers' last week. So we'd have the big farewell scene over with."

"Well, gee whiz," George protested. "This way we had him for a whole week extra." He gave Mr. Duffy's black muzzle an affectionate squeeze. "Do you realize this is the last time you'll ever see him?"

"Yes, dear."

"Just 'Yes, dear'?" George was incredulous. "Won't you miss him at all?"

"Of course I'll miss him. But when the baby comes we won't mind so much."

"Mr. Duffy will mind," George said darkly. "He'll probably pine away and die of a broken heart."

"Not at the Walkers'. He adores the Walkers."

"It's not the same thing," George insisted. "We've had him for five years ——"

"Yes, dear," Jane said, and sighed again. Like her, the argument was in its ninth month. "And he was a wedding present. And people don't give away their wedding presents."

"Well, they don't." George looked at his wife pleadingly. "Can't we change our minds and keep him? Lots of people keep their dogs when a baby comes and it works out fine."

"It wouldn't work with Mr. Duffy," Jane said CONTINUED ON PAGE 105

by Arnold B. Horwitt

"Who is Gertrude Lawrence?" asked Mrs. Edward Irving Aldrich. She refused to discuss her only son's marriage to an actress, closed the blinds as if for a death.

GERTRUDE LAWRENCE AS "Mrs. A"

By RICHARD STODDARD ALDRICH

His wife and his mother were worlds apart, yet they were so very much alike! Each had her principles—and her pride.

Gertrude's fondness for Aldrich's sons, Dick (left) and David, pleased their grandmother. Small child is Teddy Corballis, boys' half brother.

Bride and groom, flags, roses and birthday greetings decorated wedding cake.

Richard Aldrich's mother was saddened and displeased when he gave up his career in banking to become a theatrical producer. In the strict Puritanical code of the Aldrich family there was no place for the theater or other worldly frivolities. There were further shocks in store for Mrs. Aldrich. Her only son met and was charmed by Gertrude Lawrence, who had come to Dennis, Massachusetts, to star in a production of Skylark at his summer theater. Their backgrounds could hardly have been more dissimilar. Gertrude had danced and sung and acted her way from a poverty-stricken childhood to international fame. Awed at first by her reputation for extravagance, glamour and high jinks, Richard found on acquaintance that "Gee" was amiable, co-operative, hard-working, but still with a flashing spirit that loved fun and laughter and surprises. Their friendship deepened through a winter in New York, but April nearly wrote "finis" to it. Seeking spring in the country, Aldrich made an impulsive trip to Northfield, Mass., where he had spent happy boyhood summers. He took Miss Lawrence with him, but April let them down. Instead of sunshine and flowers, they found snow and discomfort. Chilled and miserable, they quarreled bitterly. Gertrude broke up the quarrel—and the trip—by catching a train back to New York. Richard thankfully watched her go. He'd had enough of the theatrical temperament to last him a long time—maybe forever.

"TUESDAY found me again in New York, at the Harvard Club. It was difficult to settle back into the routine of my working day. I was conscious of a loneliness I had never felt before, and a dread of the dull days and weeks ahead without the brightness that was Gertrude. I discovered in myself a tendency to stare at the telephone. But the Aldriches are stubborn; we give in slowly, and it takes us a long time to eat up our anger. In no single act in our little Northfield comedy had Gertrude been at fault. She had been entirely and genuinely herself, whereas I had succumbed to apprehensions and to a miserable self-consciousness. I had reverted to what was least commendable in my Puritan past; leaving Gertrude stranded, and not unreasonably dismayed. And to crown these stupidities, I had sunk to CONTINUED ON PAGE 107

Copyright, 1954, by Richard Stoddard Aldrich

That her glamorous daughter-in-law was "not above honest toil," impressed Mrs. Aldrich deeply. At Dennis for a "rest," Gertrude cleaned house, repaired roof, painted shutters, picked cranberries, gardened—and occasionally rested.

The "Queen of Swat," no slouch in the outfield, sometimes persuaded her mother-in-law to umpire, conceded that "rounders" was more fun than cricket.

"Gee" loved picnics, dragged her husband to impromptu ones— Central Park in winter, the Dennis beach in summer. Here with Barbara bel Geddes and daughter.

"Swing isn't your mother's style," Gertrude said, "but we could have square dancing. She'd adore watching and it would help make up to her for not being allowed to dance seventy years ago."

Porch Revival

By H. T. WILLIAMS

FOR satisfaction in family summer living there never has been a substitute for the airy, inviting, cool, screened porch. We hail its return! Through torrid spells which affect much of our country, this family can eat, entertain and even sleep, free from insect pests, in cool comfort. Now that new materials have eliminated many former problems of damp, rust, fading and soil, the porch can become an extra living room with as much charm as any indoor room.

The screened porch here, sparkling cool with its brick floor and chalk-white walls, has a raftered ceiling in pale sea blue. Two hickory-and-reed chairs are painted chalk-white also, and the ottoman is cushioned in white canvas.

All the delights of alfresco dining without any of its discomforts can be had here. One end of this porch provides for meals and entertaining, with storage space for china, glass and needed equipment in a blue-painted French provincial commode, and storage space for extra pillows and lawn mats in the redwood chest which also doubles as a seating bench. Two white-polka-dotted navy-blue settees with frames of woven reed and rattan can be adequate beds on hot nights.

Things to remember when furnishing a screened porch are foam cushions that have no springs or other fillers to be affected by humidity; fabrics that are water-repellent, sunfast and mildew-proof; woods that are solid and can be indefinitely refreshed by paint, and rustproof wrought-iron accessories.

RIGHT: Fabric suited to porch use is a new sailcloth, $1.39 a yard, colorful for slip covers and cushions, unharmed by steady sunlight. Night lighting for the porch comes from wrought-iron lanterns, a modern glass lamp.

HAROLD FOWLER

LEFT: Surfboard-shaped table fo dinners is weather-resistant wal wrought-iron based. Very versat the tea wagon of teak and beech—its two lower trays lift o

The screened porch provides all-family living all summer long

Did the cryptic mes

"I shall not always be gentle, Katrine," he said,
"but by the soul of my mother,
I shall love you until I die."

...n forgiveness?

Or was it only that he wished to be rid of all thought of her?

She could not know.

Katherine

By ANYA SETON

Married at fifteen to a man she could not love, Katherine de Roet was plunged into a world of adult responsibilities. Her husband—boorish Sir Hugh Swynford, knight in the retinue of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster—spent most of his time away on campaigns, leaving Katherine to manage his run-down manor, Kettlethorpe. Katherine remembered the kindness of the duke and his gracious lady, Blanche, who had honored her by coming to her wedding. Nor could she forget the strange agitation she had felt when the duke kissed her, the bride.

Alone at Kettlethorpe, Katherine would have died in childbirth except for the unheralded arrival of the duke, and gratefully she named the child Blanchette, for the duchess. Months later, she learned with horror that, with the duke away at the wars, Blanche lay alone in the castle, stricken with plague and deserted by her frightened servants. Leaving her own household in care of her sister, Philippa—wife of Geoffrey Chaucer—Katherine tenderly nursed Blanche until she died.

Returning, the duke was crushed by sorrow, but still found quiet comfort in Katherine's presence. He called her to him, to offer her gold in reward for her devotion to Blanche. When their eyes met, they both suddenly realized that between them was a bond stronger than death itself. Katherine, whose heart had never been touched before, knew that she would always love him; but the thought of her child and of her marriage vows gave her strength to refuse him the love she longed to express.

III KATHERINE went to the stables and ordered Doucette saddled. She flung herself on the mare and set forth through the great gate to London. The Savoy was hateful to her, and she fled to the only warm, unstressful affection she had ever known.

Hawise opened the door to Katherine's knock.

"May I stay here tonight?" whispered Katherine. "Just tonight. I must leave for home at dawn."

"For sure, love." Hawise flung her arm around Katherine.

The Pessoners crowded around, kindly, murmuring.

"Come to bed, sweeting," said Hawise. "You look fit to drop." She marshaled Katherine up the loft stairs to the sleeping room and put her in her own bed. Hawise sat on the bed and held the candle near. "Can ye tell me, dear?" she said, her shrewd eyes scanning the upturned face. "'Tis a man? Aye, I see it is. And he has used ye ill?"

"Nay." Katherine turned her face into the pillow. "I don't know. Blessed Virgin, give me strength—I love him—I must get home . . . I cannot stay so near ——"

Hawise stroked the girl's arm. "And so you shall, but not alone, for I'll come wi' ye."

Katherine drew herself back and looked into Hawise's face. "Would you come with me, in truth?"

"Methinks ye've need of a good serving maid, m'lady," said Hawise, twinkling.

"But Jackie—we couldn't take him!"

"Jackie'll be merry as a pie right here. He's fonder o' his granny'n me anyhow. Nor can I bide wi' ye long if my Jack comes home from war. But I'll not let ye go the road alone."

"May Christ bless you!" Katherine whispered.

"Sleep now, mistress. I'll call ye before prime, we can scarce start sooner."

The Pessoners were all up to see the girls start. After the first protests against their daughter's leaving them, the goodhearted couple had given in, and Master Guy had hired a horse from the livery stable and routed out Jankin, his best prentice, telling him to make ready to escort Lady Swynford and Hawise. Dame Emma packed a hamper full of cheese, new-baked loaves and a leg of mutton.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 52

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

Copyright, 1954, by Anya Seton Chase

I learned not to be afraid

Anne attracted men — by the dozens. And by the dozens, they married other girls.

Why, at thirty, was she living with love letters and a hope chest instead of a husban

Anne resolved to find out, and with surprise met her own deep fears, her dawning answers, and a man she loved.

The JOURNAL presents another actual story of a young woman who learned how to be marriageal

"DO you begin to see you have been running away from marriage all these years, Anne?" Doris Marsh looked at me with wise, quizzical eyes. "Suppose we try to learn why. Perhaps the two of us can come to a closer understanding of you."

It was my fourth interview since the day I had first phoned for an appointment at the American Institute of Family Relations. I knew I had to speak with a marriage counselor. The morning I was thirty, I woke up in a sun-filled room in the home I shared with my mother, and looked at the ribboned souvenirs of my popular teens and twenties staring at me from my vanity table. At the foot of my bed was a hope chest filled with unused linens and unused sterling. Life had been a round of parties, of dates, of flirtations, sentimental letters, and promises I'd made and had no intention of keeping. The need to decide to marry always seemed far away. I postponed it, drew back into my shell, always found a reason to wave a man good-by and send him to someone else, while the years vanished as lightly as dance music. Doris Marsh, my counselor, a warmhearted, vital woman, herself a happy wife and the mother of two young children, is easy to talk to. We had talked at length about the exciting period of my youthful popularity, and the years that followed. I now realized I had pretty consistently found fault with any serious love that had been offered me, that I had behaved like somebody who was afraid of marriage even though I longed for marriage.

Why was I afraid?

THAT afternoon (I saw my counselor regularly each Friday) we took up the subject of my parents. I confided in Mrs. Marsh something I had never told anybody. Twice during my childhood—when I was six years old and again when I was eleven—my father had left my mother for another woman. On those two occasions he had sent no word and no money. He had just disappeared. My mother had been obliged to work at any menial job she could get; she had to feed us kids and to hold our family together. Many nights, as a child, I had lain awake listening to the sounds of her pillow-muted sobs. Afterward, of course, she and my father had patched up their relationship in a way. But he was always a stranger who went off on endless trips and came back without a word, like a guest in a hotel.

"Then you didn't receive a very good picture of marriage during your formative years, did you, Anne?"

No, I hadn't. Looking back through the mists of the past, I could recall my bewilderment and shame. I had tried to keep from everybody the secret of my father's faithlessness. Why had I cared so much? Well, I was shy and sensitive. But as Mrs. Marsh and I discovered, there was a further reason.

I had felt guilty. In my child mind, I had illogically worked it out that somehow I must be responsible for my mother's unhappiness and hardships. Before my father deserted us for the first time, he had petted and praised me, called me his baby. I had reveled in the role of Daddy's Girl, had loved to hear people say I was the image of him. Then, without warning, everything was different. I was cast off, rejected. What had I done? Unless I had failed in some mysterious fashion, I decided as a youngster, my father would not have abandoned my mother, my sisters—and me.

Talking with Mrs. Marsh, I saw how I had carried into maturity all those early memories of fear, mistrust and pain. My belief in the existence of serious, permanent love had been badly shaken when I was in pinafores. No wonder I was single at thirty! My childish ideas were still a part of my emotional make-up. I was very young for my age. Too young.

"MARRIAGE calls for maturity," Mrs. Marsh said to me. "To attain a good marriage, it's up to you to take certain practical steps and to grow up emotionally. Nobody else can do it for you."

When I left her office, I had a great many things to ponder. Without being in the least critical of either of my parents—it wasn't in our province, Mrs. Marsh said, to judge their lives—my counselor showed me how my character had been influenced by my background. My father was a drifter, restless and changeable. I, too, had those tendencies. But the traits weren't inherited or incurable, as I had supposed. I could mend my ways. I now understood that my mother's strength and decisiveness had helped foster my own shillyshallying. But I could try to change.

Mrs. Marsh suggested I take an apartment by myself. I just couldn't do it. My home meant too much to me. My mother and I lived comfortably now, and the gift shop I owned and ran was only three blocks away. My older sisters, married, lived nearby. But mother and I were especially close; she shampooed my hair, did my nails, cooked my meals, made my bed, took care of my clothes, helped me entertain, and we talked about everything together. She never pressed me about marrying, but wanted me to take all the time I needed to find the right man. After the harrowing years we had been through, life was calm and pleasant for both of us. I couldn't leave home now. In other ways, though, I was trying hard to develop self-sufficiency, as Mrs. Marsh advised, and become the person I wanted to be. I wanted to be a lovable, loving, forthright woman, with depth and confidence and faith in herself. Instead of immediately seeking my mother's advice—should I stock a new line of California pottery in my shop?—I began to make my own decisions. I made mistakes, but I was learning to stand on my own feet.

The business of changing my deeply rooted habits of action (or rather, inaction) wasn't simple. It was far easier to lie abed and let my mother bring in my breakfast (but what man wants to feed a slug-a-bed wife?). I forced myself to get up. I then discovered I was all thumbs in a kitchen, and suddenly longed to be a good cook; I joined a cooking class. On the night I baked my first cake I had a real thrill of accomplishment. At last I was making definite preparations to be a good wife—for somebody.

I had long disliked my voice and my conversational limitations. Trivialities and wisecracks can be boring in a mature woman. I was too self-centered by far. After I started to read newspapers and magazines and attend an occasional lecture I broadened my interests beyond the small daily doings of myself, my mother and sisters, my best friend Gertrude, who was an older woman—generous and good company—I considered my favorite companion and chaperon. I joined a public-speaking class (another evening away from the lazy comforts of home) and my voice took on more pleasing tones. Gradually, too, I conquered an old habit—a selfish, juvenile habit—of allowing my attention to wander from the topic of discussion to myself, my nervousness or embarrassment, my worry as to what others might think of me. I tried to think about other people for the first time.

IN the public-speaking class, I met Sam Abbott. Sam was forty, lean, distinguished in appearance, a widower with three children. I became flattered by my jingling telephone and Sam's attentions, but I began to see that I was drifting into another comfortable but meaningless friendship with a man financially unable to marry and whom I had no intention of marrying. I continued to see Sam, but I checked my unrealistic fancies. In the past, I would have wasted months in romantic dreaming, and once again side-stepped my chances of finding my love and my husband.

I was late to church on the always-to-be-remembered Sunday I met Grant. I had pressed my own dress that morning! As I

You can bid for the atten of all men—or no men—or one n Anne decided on ran up the steps, I saw a young man proach and then come to a sudden hal the sidewalk. I got a hazy impressio height, wide shoulders, sunburn and ness. The church doors were already cl when I reached the top of the flight. O I would have hurried on in. Now, i twinkling second, I took thought. S Hesitant about coming to the service turned and smiled down at the uncer young man on the sidewalk below.

There was nothing uncertain in answering smile or in his galloping cha up those steps. The congregation was si ing a joyful hymn as we took seats gether. I noticed the easy, accustomed this handsome young stranger picked the hymnbook and joined in the sing I liked his baritone voice.

AFTER the services, while waited our turn to shake ha with the minister, we introdu ourselves. Nobody can long like a stranger around Grant. Geor born and Texas-bred, Grant has both South and the West in his mouth. Ins five minutes I learned that his pare and four young brothers (Grant him was only twenty-nine, a statistic wh bothered me a little) still lived in Te Next, I learned that Grant and a GI buc owned and were operating in partners a motel near Tucson, Arizona. Unus expenses at the motel—new carpeting redecoration—Grant told me, accoun for his presence in Los Angeles. Th weeks earlier he had blown into to located temporary and well-paid work a builder, and now was earmarking half earnings to bail out the Arizona m while his buddy kept it running. I li Grant's honesty.

"I know a girl from Arizona who member of our church. She is very pre You should meet her," I heard my saying—in dismay. Just how dumb ca person be? Fortunately the Arizona wasn't in church. Gertrude was the When she joined us, I had already ask Grant to come home with me to Sund dinner and he had accepted. Gertrude cepted too. Why on earth did I invite h I was ducking the responsibility of ent taining my new friend by myself, grabbi for help I didn't need.

I proceeded to apply some of my rec learning. Instead of lazily settling do after that big chicken dinner with Gr and Gertrude, I tried to put myself Grant's place. Would he enjoy a tour in my car? We dropped off Ger- t her apartment, and spent an after- of exploration. The Hollywood Griffith Park, a sunset view of Los s from Mulholland Drive. We off the sunset at a little, candle- Spanish restaurant I knew down on n Avenue. Grant paid the modest instantly squandered the savings on rling silver pins—one for me, one mother.

thank-you for that home-cooked he said, and brushed aside my pro- ith: "Thrift doesn't match up with ct day. I want you to have a me- of our meeting."

t night I fastened the little pin to my and went to sleep with a smile on ce. It was still there when I awoke.

DURING the next weeks, as a sunny April glided into a sun- nier May and then into a sumptuous June, the whole seemed to smile. I was falling in love. loved it. Inevitably small difficulties d up but were soon smoothed over. nstance, I like to dance, and Grant ln't dance. After some clear-eyed ht it struck me that dancing means to the average happily married cou- ple. Why not be satisfied with the recreations both Grant and I enjoyed? There were times when I was tempted to accept a glamorous invitation—dinner in a fashionable hotel, a bang-up floor show—extended by some salesman acquaintance with an expense account burning a hole in his pocket. I squashed the temptation. Glamour wasn't worth the risk of hurting Grant or interfering with the way I was beginning to feel about Grant.

By mid-April, Grant and I were seeing, or talking to each other on the telephone, practically every evening. On days he didn't call, I felt lost and incomplete. Sometimes he would talk of his eventual return to Arizona and I would worry a little, and then console myself with the reflection that September was very distant. I had plenty to talk about on Fridays. Mrs. Marsh would smile and listen and advise.

Each day, as my mind and heart opened, I discovered some new talent in my man to admire. Usually, it was a talent lacking in my father. Grant is clever with his hands and quick to notice the things that need doing. I have never seen my father touch a lawn mower, clean a bathtub, pick up a hammer. Every Saturday Grant made it his business to wash my car and go over its innards. On one Saturday, he brought his tools and lumber and a quart of shellac to my shop and turned out for me a beautiful display case. My private moments with Grant were becoming very precious. But I shared him with my family, too, and was proud of the way he measured up.

GRANT, accustomed to a houseful of younger brothers, was wonderful with my sister's noisy, active sons. "Just a minute, kids," he would say, when the twins started a wild, destructive rampage. "Let's shift our activities outdoors and I'll show you a few wrestling holds I learned in the Army." And I would watch the three of them tumbling on the lawn, and my eyes would mist and my throat feel choky. I wanted my future husband (and I thought I had found him) to be a good father. My counselor and I had talked quite a lot about the tangible masculine qualities I admired, as opposed to my previous silly romancing about some impossible millionaire at the wheel of a real-gone convertible.

Grant was sweet and considerate to my mother. He never ate a meal in our house without complimenting her on something. Whenever he had dinner with us—he

CONTINUED ON PAGE 61

THE CASE OF ANNE: A GIRL WHO COULDN'T FALL IN LOVE

Counselor
Doris Marsh

Anne Robertson is an actual person (her true identity is concealed). On finding herself unmarried at the age of thirty, Anne turned for help to the Marriage Readiness Course at the American Institute of Family Relations, and received counseling once a week over a period of eleven months. Her counselor was Mrs. Doris Marsh. The Institute, located in Los Angeles, extends its help as a public service and for minimum fees to those living in the area where it is located; all its work is nonprofit, and is conducted by qualified counselors. In the hope that other family services throughout the country will find it increasingly possible to aid young people who ask for help in conquering resistance to marriage, the Institute has agreed to make public this account of one of its many applicants to the Marriage Readiness Course. Counselor Doris Marsh summarizes the case of Anne:

ANNE ROBERTSON, unmarried, telephoned the Institute for an appointment on her thirtieth birthday, broke the appointment the next morning, made and canceled two other appointments before she eventually appeared in my office. Clearly Anne at the time we met her had a somewhat juvenile taste for drama, combined with a good deal of hesitancy and self-doubt.

She is pretty, slender and brown-eyed, with soft, gleamingly brushed brown hair worn in a pony tail. She has style sense, and chooses the clothes that become her. She greeted me with a warm, appealing smile.

Anne seems very much the kind of girl men like to date but not marry. Her femininity is attractive, but her manners and attitude may seem too dependent, almost enervating in these days when extreme helplessness is hardly considered an asset in a wife.

Anne appears to have unusual sex appeal, with distinct ability to make a man aware of her—for a while. But her continued although unwitting flight from the hazards of serious love follows an almost classic pattern. Often these unmarried women come from broken or unhappy homes. In the first place, Anne started off as a perfectionist and set her demands far too high. She also pulled her mother too closely into discussing intimate affairs of the heart and overtalked a romance without participating in it, so that by too constant dwelling on possible

CONTINUED ON PAGE 62

JOSEPH DI PIETRO

A little girl's tears dry quickly when the doctor's prescription is as pleasant as this one: a new toy. At St. Francis Hospital in Trenton, New Jersey, the Hospital Aid has seen to it that the playroom is well equipped, the rooms brightened by gay curtains, bedspreads and toy bags.

Hospital Aid members spent long hours sketching designs, selecting gay fabrics and colorful wallpapers for the playroom and wards. More than $2500 in Aid money went into the project.

LITTLE Donnie, aged five and a half, cried when his parents left him at the hospital. Away from home for the first time in his young life, he felt miserably alone and frightened. Four days later when his father came to take him home, Donnie pouted. "Oh, daddy, I don't want to go home. I'd rather stay here."

The reason for Donnie's change of heart can be found in the colorful, friendly atmosphere of the pediatrics ward of the St. Francis Hospital in Trenton, New Jersey. On the seventh floor of the very modern new wing of this hospital, fitted out with the latest and best in medical equipment, getting well is a happy, as well as a serious, business. First thing in the morning a pretty hospital volunteer was on hand to wash Donnie's face and hands and help him into his yellow plaid robe. Donnie, who was to be under doctor's observation for a cyst on his arm, was not confined to bed and was to eat breakfast in the playroom.

Designed and carried out by women with children for children, the circus playroom is a special project of the fifteen-member Decorating Committee of the St. Francis Hospital Aid, now completed after a year of planning and sketching. The committee worked 750 manhours in three months to carry out the designs.

As soon as word got around the community about the new decorating work, there were many offers of help. The Junior League donated $200 for toys. Two groups of oldsters over sixty-five—the Golden Age and the Happy Time clubs—volunteered to make stuffed toys and scrapbooks as well as toy bags. Business firms provided materials and labor at cost.

The nursery finished, Aid members began eying other rooms. Bright wallpaper, curtains and bedspreads were selected to relieve drab gray walls in thirty-five wards and private rooms on the pediatrics and maternity floors.

Aid members now are concentrating on service work in the hospital. Volunteers staff the playroom every day to help the nurses feed young patients, tell stories, play games. Mrs. J. F. Johnson, chairman of the decorating committee, and three other members recently visited the New Jersey State Hospital occupational-therapy department to learn how to teach jewelry and toymaking to other volunteer workers, who in turn will teach the young convalescent patients in the pediatrics ward.

Over the side of the play pen goes an energetic patient, aided and abetted, no doubt, by the smiling circus ringmaster—one of the plyboard figures designed by Hospital Aid decorators.

Getting well is fun

. . . IN GAILY DECORATED HOSPITAL

AS gifts for hospitalized patients, flowers and pretty bed jackets are still welcomed, but a new idea is taking hold. Many friends and relatives of convalescents now are pooling their arts-and-crafts talents to brighten the walls and windows of drab wards and rooms—and, incidentally, promote more speedy recoveries. The colorful and creative project of the St. Francis Hospital Aid is a good pattern for other hospital volunteers.

Public Affairs Department
Edited by MARGARET HICKEY

No wonder patients in the pediatrics ward want to stay at the hospital! Every day a yellow-canopied cart comes around and there's a new and different toy for everyone.

Story hour is the most popular time in the pediatrics ward. Children listen spellbound as Sister Cecelia Maria reads in the playroom. Other convalescent boys and girls keep busy with drawing, puzzles, toys. Their playroom activities are supervised by Aid members and Junior Leaguers.

TOM PALUMBO

Lightweight wool — dress and jacket with acetate-satin collar, slim fashion that goes well under coats, by Ben Barrack. Lilly Dache's ruby-red velvet hat, satin bag by Greta. Dress alone with Therese Ahrens' velvet head band, rhinestone pin by Joseph Mazur

"MY FIRST IDEA

m hing dark after summer pastels,

rs with a jacket, a new kind of sheath slim, slim pleats, cottons that ike wool, wools sheer h to wear from now on . . .

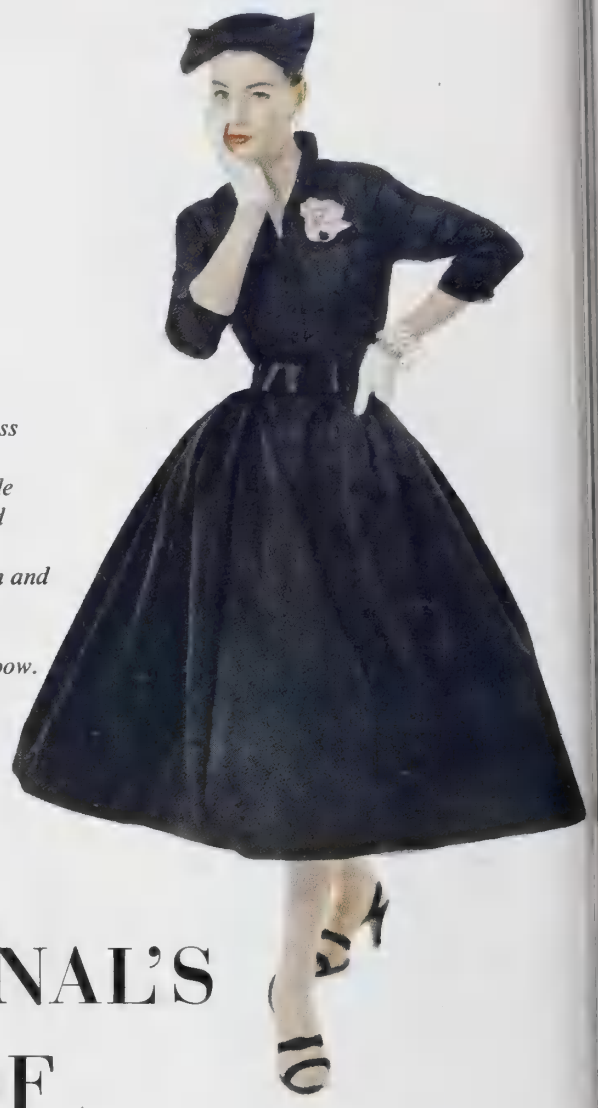
By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Fall cotton—in a tweed-weave, charcoal-gray dress trimmed with jet by Ben Barrack, worn with Suzy's velvet beret and a bright chiffon scarf.

Silk and wool has the right weight and look from now on. Slate-blue dress by Seymour Jacobson. Felt hat, Herman Cohn, capeskin gloves, Marcel Wagner.

This rayon-and-acetate suit bridges the seasons, is a year-round fashion by Alvin Handmacher. Taffeta scarf, chenille hat by Lilly Dache, calfskin bag by Irving Pichel.

Pleated sheath of acetate-and-rayon crepe by Carrie Donovon, a dress for many changes. Zebra-striped fur bag by F. Milch.



'OR FALL"

This wonderful all-purpose coat boasts four patch pockets in the front, a half belt in the back. Though slim, it would comfortably go over a suit, makes a charming ensemble when worn with a matching dress. Vogue Design No. 8396, 12 to 20.

An elegant little black dress in silk faille with a bouffant skirt, a convertible neckline. The waist circled in satin, satin buttons. Sparkled with picot ribbon and a jewel. Vogue Design No. 8407, 12 to 20. Sally Victor's hat with a bow.

THE JOURNAL'S GEM OF A WARDROBE

By NORA O'LEARY
Pattern Editor of the Journal

Planned to be beautiful . . . to be practical . . . to be timeless. Focusing on color, classic designs, trend-setting fabrics. An all-purpose topcoat, a lightweight wool dress to match, a slim tweed suit, an elegant little black dress, and a hand-knit sweater that looks pretty with all. These are clothes you will wear year in and year out, clothes you will never tire of.

Other Views, Sizes and Prices on Page 114

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) These patterns will be sent third-class mail. If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5c additional for each pattern ordered.

A good tweed is always in fashion. This slim suit leads a double life because each part looks well separately . . . the skirt with blouses and sweaters, the jacket over a bright wool dress. Vogue Design No. 8400, 12 to 20.

A "light as a feather" dress-fabric dyed to match the coating is classic and lovely. Note the "away from the neckline" collar, the deep front pleats. Vogue Design No. 8395, 12 to 40.

© VOGUE

RICHARD AVEDON

A hand-knit sweater in a becoming color is a true "gem." Ours, in coral wool, has an angora collar (could be matching). Looks pretty over both dresses. Order knitting instructions, No. 2625, 15¢, from Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Pa.*

* Penna. residents please add sales tax.

BACK TO SCHOOL

Smart mothers know that easy-to-care-for fabrics are a "must" for school clothes. We've combed the fabric market for ideas to pass on to you: Orlon-fleece coatings which wash, quilted calicos with matching plain fabrics which resist dirt and wrinkles . . . 100% washable wool flannels and plaid Orlon-and-wool for pleated skirts. Crinkle cottons which need little or no ironing come in wonderful colors. Peasant embroidery, pleated ribbons and felt appliqués are just a few of the gay, amusing trimmings to add. And for other ideas for making and trimming children's clothes, send 25 cents* to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL Philadelphia 5, Pa., for our folder No. 2626, with illustrations and directions.

*Pennsylvania residents please add sales tax.

BY NORA O'LEARY Pattern Editor of the Journal

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

Durable "Easy to Make" coat in Orlon fleece. Half belt in back. Vogue Design No. 2713, 4 to 12.

All-purpose jumper dress in a year-round cotton plaid. Crisp white blouse. Design No. 2685, 2 to 12.

Junior version of the shi dress. Short or long sleeves. Crinkle cotton. Design No. 2704, 6 to 1

See page 72 for Other Views, Sizes and Prices. Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) These patterns will be sent third-class mail. If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5 cents additional for each pattern ordered.

CARMEN SCHIAVONE.

Bright red crease-resistant cotton in a gay practical school dress, peasant embroidery. "Easy to Make" Vogue Design No. 2588, 2 to 10.

Lynne Canner goes off to school in her Orlon-and-wool pleated skirt with navy blue washable wool jacket. Vogue Design No. 2643, 2 to 12.

Party time: Lynne wears a crisp white pinafore with eyelet ruffles over a silky cotton dress. Pinafore, Vogue Design No. 2708.

DRAWINGS BY MARGARET SOMMERFELD

© VOGUE

Skirt of the suit worn with white sweater set of tubbable Vicara and nylon, as soft as a kitten!

Softly pleated, washable jersey skirt with matching overblouse, buttons in back. Design No. 2710, 6 to 12.

Gaily striped red-and-white cotton semiprincess dress. White collar, cuffs. Vogue Design No. 2711.

Quilted cotton circle skirt with crinkle cotton blouse. Vogue Design No. 2698, 4 to 12.

Party dress of embroidered organdy, with full skirt, picot ribbon sash. Design No. 2683, 8 to 14.

Windproof, waterproof vinyl with a knitted back makes a durable rain cape. Design No. 2592, 1 to 10.

'VE always got a lot of mail from parents asking about special problems which my book hasn't covered. (I feel badly that I don't have anywhere near the time, and ually not enough information, to be able nswer. I should have thought of that posity before writing a book.) The commonroblem brought up in these letters is sleep urbances in the first year of life. There two kinds: the going-to-bed type and the ing-in-the-middle-of-the-night type. The ng-to-bed type is more frequent. It often elops in the early months, out of a case hree-month colic.

t first, the mother says, the baby cried ry evening in real pain, with cramps and and distention. She had found it made him tle more comfortable, at least temporarily, n she carried him around in her arms. She glad to do anything she could. It made feel better, too, to be doing something.

y the time the baby was three months of the painful colic was about over, but the y seemed still to expect to be carried for t of the evening and would cry indignantly ut down. Between three and four months, d finally go to sleep by nine P.M., but gradu- he learned to stay awake longer and ger—to ten, to eleven. Now at eight months age he sometimes keeps it up to midnight, says. If you ask her, "Isn't he sleepy?" answers, "He seems to be exhausted! His s keep closing and his head falls forward. t when I move over to the crib and begin—carefully—to lay him down, he wakes with art, looks furious and yells." And she adds, isn't enough for him to be sitting up with or even to be in my arms, I must be walking n. If I stop, exhausted, and sit down, he res at me as if to say, 'Woman, what right ve you got to sit down? Get up!' "

the doctor asks, "Didn't you ever just put n to bed and let him cry?" the mother is apt say, "I tried it. I tried several times, but the ger I left him, the harder he cried. Besides," wants to know, "I thought you doctors n't believe any more that a baby should be owed to cry it out. I thought you believed at whan a baby cried it was for some good ason and that the mother's job was to comrt him."

The mother has a right to be challenging out this point. Many of us physicians, psyologists and nurses have been stressing in e past ten years that it's right for parents to to learn each baby's legitimate needs and to to satisfy them. Before that, ten or twenty ars ago, before it was realized how important e emotional satisfaction of the baby was, d when it was thought more important an anything else to be on guard against oiling, it was commonly recommended that mother never pick her baby up except exactly a specified feeding time.

Back in those days of strictness and rigidity, think there were few sleep problems. But at doesn't mean that I think those were the od old days. There were loads of feeding roblems in babies and there was lots of tenon built up in mothers who were trying to o their mothering by the clock instead of ith their natural feelings. Compared with ose difficulties, the sleep problems of today re few and far between.

I'm confessing, though, that good parents ave been confused because the professional eople have changed their advice so much, but leading that they were right to change when hey found how many difficulties extreme igidity was causing.

I believe that these sleep problems of inancy have been caused most often by parents' eing excessively conscientious and exact in ollowing a doctor's general advice to study he baby's individual needs and to try to satisfy hem. These problems certainly crop up most ften when the parents are unusually devoted o the baby and inclined to ignore their own comfort for his sake, and practically always vith the first baby when they themselves are east experienced and have little confidence in hemselves.

You'll be interested and perhaps feel sweet revenge, if you've suffered through one of these sleep problems, to know that another group of parents likely to have them is we pediatricians, psychiatrists, psychologists and social workers who have the usual difficulty applying our professional knowledge in our own families. Another group is the parents living with grandparents or very close to cranky neighbors who complain (or look as if they're going to complain) every time the baby whimpers at night.

In order to play the part comfortably, a parent needs enough self-confidence to be able to figure out for herself or himself that a baby who keeps falling asleep in the arms had better be asleep in bed—no matter what the baby himself says he wants, and no matter what the newest theory seems to be. That's just what parents are for.

Luckily, most of these going-to-bed problems in the first year of life can be solved in two or three nights. The first step is for the mother and father to realize that all of them, but especially the baby, will feel much more agreeable when they have more rest, and that the baby will be happier when he finds that he can't play this painful tug of war with them all evening. I mean that the parents need to see that it is not meanness but kindness to give a baby what he really needs, no matter how much he protests.

The mother should put him to bed at a sensible hour with all her usual signs of affection. Then she might add, cheerfully but firmly, "And now it's time for you to have your sleep and for me to have a rest," and walk out of the room. The words are perhaps more for the mother's benefit than for the baby's, but I've heard of a number of babies who were so impressed by the new tone of definiteness in the mother's voice that they went to sleep without a peep, for the first time in months. Most of them are outraged at first, though, and show it loudly. The average length of crying the first night is about twenty to thirty minutes; the second night, five to ten minutes. A majority don't even whimper the third night.

The most important rule, and the hardest for the kindhearted parent, is not to go back. The parents who say they have tried letting the baby cry and that he will never stop have practically always gone back in to speak reassuringly to the child every ten or fifteen minutes. This only enrages him further.

As you can imagine, the first time I recommended letting such a baby cry (it was in 1944, after I had suggested everything else I could think of without any success) I felt like a scoundrel, just as each parent does when trying this method. I wondered guiltily what my psychiatric colleagues would say. I was completely reassured when the mother called me up and said:

"It's marvelous. Since the second night the baby has gone to sleep quite happily. He's so much more contented in the daytime, now that he's getting his rest, and his appetite has improved. I realize now, when I suddenly feel so loving toward him again, that I was getting to hate him when he had us all running around in circles."

About the neighbors. It works best, if the parents can get up their courage, to tell them they have been advised that the best way to cure the bedtime problem is by letting the baby cry if necessary for two nights, and ask their indulgence. If the parents don't dare speak to them, they can pad the baby's room a little, with blankets over the windows and hung on the walls next to the neighbors, a rug or more blankets on the floor, to absorb most of the sound.

To be sure there is no misunderstanding, I want to emphasize that I am only discussing chronic resistance to sleep in the first ten or twelve months of life, which has been increasing gradually for several months, in a baby who has become angry and bossy. The meaning and the treatment are usually entirely different in sleep problems that develop or persist after the age of one year. If the baby or child has become frightened of going to bed, the treatment is also very different.

Before any one of you considers using the method discussed here, it would be wise to consult your own doctor to be sure your situation is comparable. Even then I would suggest a limit of about an hour of crying the first night and not going on for more than three nights, unless there is great progress—at least without consulting the physician again.

I'll have to wait until another time to describe waking-up problems. END

Dr. Spock Talks with Mothers

A parent needs enough self-confidence to figure out that it is not meanness but kindness to give a baby what he really needs— no matter how much he protests.

By Benjamin Spock, M.D.

Dr. Spock says: "One trouble with new parents is that they take the job so seriously they forget to enjoy it."

DI PIETRO

THE CL

"What kind of people are they, anyway pa

"Like other people," mom answered quietly.

BY JESSE STUART

EARING

It was hard to feel neighborly toward people like the Hintons, who were enemies at first sight... before they even knew each other's names.

FINN and I were pruning the plum trees around our garden when a rock came cracking among the branches of the tree I was pruning.

"Where did that come from?" I asked Finn, who was on the ground below piling the branches.

"I don't know," he said.

Then we heard the Hinton boys laughing on the other side of the valley. I went back to pruning. In less than a minute, a rock hit the limb above my head and another rock hit at Finn's feet. Then I came down from the tree. Finn and I started throwing rocks. In a few minutes rocks were falling like hailstones around them and around us. The land was rocky on both sides of the valley and there were plenty of rocks to throw.

One of their rocks hit Finn on the foot and one of our rocks peeled the largest Hinton boy's head.

"Think of it," Finn said. "We fight before we know each other's names! What will it be as time goes on?"

We fought all afternoon with rocks. At sunset the Hinton boys took off up the path and over the hill. We went home. When pa asked why we hadn't finished pruning the trees, we told him.

"I told you," he said to mom. "You'll see whether we can live apart or not."

"Wait until we know them and they know us," mom said.

"But how are we ever goin' to know people like them?" pa asked.

"Oh, something will happen," she replied calmly. "You'll see."

Next day Mort Hinton was with his boys. They climbed higher on the hill, cutting the briers and brush and tree laps and stacking them neatly into piles. Finn and I pruned our trees.

"I'll say one thing for the Hintons," mom said. "They're good workers."

"When they don't throw rocks," Finn said.

My guineas flew across the valley where the Hintons were clearing land, on the fourth day.

"Get these guineas back on your side the valley," Mort Hinton yelled. "Get 'em back where they belong."

I didn't want to put my guineas in the henhouse. But I had to. I knew Mort Hinton would kill them. I wanted to tell him that they would help his land. They'd rid it of insects that might destroy his crop. But I was afraid to tell him anything.

A week had passed before my guineas got out and flew across the valley. CONTINUED ON PAGE 60

ILLUSTRATED BY Harry Anderson

the MORE the MERRIE

By ANN BATCHELD

Menu 1

Baked Ham-and-Bean Casserole
Pickled Onion Rings
Coleslaw
Boston Brown Bread
Watermelon
Hot Coffee

Menu 2

Veal-and-Noodle Casserole
Sliced Tomatoes and Cucumbers
Corn Sticks
Raspberry Poached Pears
Hot Coffee

w o work, those who've gone far r some mountain lake, those who th summer out at home all have th g in common. No matter who a , where they are or what d they share one common earthy n g: they have to eat. You and y ngsters do too. You might get fi salad or out-of-the-refrigerator ls lunchtime, but come i tide—even on the hottest — our hungry tribe comes home
e The hotter the weather, n e the company too. And welcome a . Next summer it'll be your t lock your kitchen door, drop si Irma a card and say "We're on our
. ust now it's quantity we're
, s well as hearty good eating.
h e are dishes that come to mind r nute if you want something hearty e ansible so that, come guests and t of guests, or the casual p rs-in and the weekenders, there's t or all on the table without f uss on your part.
k the first courses, the side
e of extra vegetables, the cakes
s and CONTINUED ON PAGE 90

Menu 3

Vegetable-Meat-Ball Soup
Grated Parmesan Cheese
Hot Garlic Bread
Fruit Compote with Orange Sour Cream
Iced Coffee

STUART-FOWLER

Menu 4

Paella
Mixed Salad
Crusty Rolls
Peach Ice Cream
with Sliced Peaches and Strawberries
Lemon Sticks
Iced Tea

Line a Day

By ANN BATCHELDER

1 Historical note:

Two Englishmen out India way
Got bored, and more bored, every day.
No fun to work, and less to play.
(One's name was Skinner, t'other Grey.)

So each dreamed up a rare chutney,
As different as land from sea,
As Colonel Skinner and Major Grey—
Of the English army out India way.

2 Now whichever you choose of the dreamboats of these two (the chutneys are still going strong) you can't miss. A few spoons in the dressing for a green or fruit salad, in a number of hors d'oeuvres, set these things apart, elevated to the top drawer.

3 Very British and royal and court-circle-ish. And delicious. A savory. Take enough of the chutney that's full of fruits not very fine cut, add to it chopped peanuts and pistachio nuts. Mix in ½ cup white raisins.

4 Part II: Put the whole through the chopper with a good slab of Cheddar cheese. Heap on hot toast, run under the broiler to melt the cheese and get hotter than the guy sliding to second base in the last inning of a no-hit, no-run, no-error, tie game.

5 This is the time for tiny infant garden potatoes of the incubator set to be boiled until tender, drained, dipped in butter or margarine, wrapped in minced mint and served with steak, chops or ham.

6 Brown-'n'-serve rolls dressed in their best bib and tucker for Sunday breakfast: Mix ¼ cup soft butter or margarine, 2 tablespoons honey and 2 teaspoons grated orange rind. Spread over the bottom of a loaf pan. Arrange the rolls, top side down, on the honey mixture. Bake at 400° F. for 15 minutes. Let rolls stand in the pan a minute or so after taking from the oven. Invert the pan so honey topping is on top. Serve hot.

7 I'll bet you didn't know that pepper was good on bread. Well, it is. Mix coarsely ground black pepper with melted butter or margarine. Amount of pepper is up to you. Spread on slices of French bread, then into the oven to heat through. Good with green salads.

8 Cherry sauce is delicious on angel cake, on ice cream, or on a chilled baked custard. You might make it up and keep it in a jar in the refrigerator. You'll need 1 cup drained canned dark sweet cherries (pitted) which you set aside while you proceed to the next paragraph:

9 Mix 2 tablespoons cornstarch with a little of the cherry juice, add 1 tablespoon grated orange rind, ⅛ cup honey, 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, ¼ teaspoon vanilla and ¼ teaspoon lemon extract, and the rest of the cherry juice. Bring to a boil and cook and stir for 2 minutes. Add the cherries and, if you like, a drop of red food coloring. Serve hot or cold.

10 Sunday you go to church. You lunch. There is a long afternoon in which to follow your bent or just loaf. Then supper. One way to this, with results to repeat, is to heat a couple of cans of mushroom soup with 2 or 3 cloves and enough cream to make a sauce. Add ½ cup grated cheese. Heat. Now remove the cloves.

11 Second part: Cook a package of macaroni, broken up. Drain and place in a casserole. Add sauce, properly seasoned. Cover with grated cheese. Bake to a nice brown. Serve with a cold sliced-meat platter garnished with fruit.

12 There are dozens of uses for the ubiquitous sardine. A fine way to employ some of the fat, imposing skinless and boneless family that once swam the waters off the coast of Maine is to line a mold with them and encase them in lemon or tomato aspic.

13 A new wrinkle for Sunday brunch is to make French toast with raisin bread and sprinkle it liberally with shaved maple sugar. Or maple sirup is wonderful on it. Or any jam or jelly.

14 To my mind, boiling a chicken is heresy. An old hen responds because its age is against it. Steaming a chicken, from broiler stage to roaster, is right. The juices and the flavor stay in the chicken, not in the kettle.

15 Provide a fine, tender, well-steamed chicken, a well-organized chafing dish and tools, and you may produce more variations on the theme than ever Paganini did on a fiddle.

16 This dish is as true a ladies' luncheon dish à la chafing dish as a parasol is part of a garden party. Have a ring mold of rice ready and hot in the kitchen. Lace the rice with pimiento. In the chafing dish make a cream sauce, full flavored and seasoned. Add some slices of cooked chicken, and sliced cooked sweetbreads. Add green peas and asparagus, too, if you have them. Fill the rice ring and pass the rest of the creamed mixture.

17 You don't need separate vegetables, but you should have a fruit salad and tiny hot rolls to companion it. Iced coffee and sugar cookies give this luncheon a shining finish.

18 Nothing is more delightful for a summer luncheon than a cheese soufflé. While it is rising to great heights in the oven, stir up some creamed crab meat (the canned is fine) and when it is made, ready and hot, sprinkle it lightly with nutmeg. A combination that will make them sit up and take notice.

19 One of our editors ingeniously discovered that the tub-type waxed-cardboard containers, in pint and quart sizes, which freezer owners use to stash away their frozen treasures are perfect for carrying food to her country house on summer weekends. No pots, pans or casseroles to bring back. Perfect, too, for picnics or camping trips.

20 Sunday-best dessert, easy to do. Thaw 1 package frozen raspberries. Drain off juice. Cut 16 marshmallows into small pieces with wet scissors. Combine raspberries, marshmallows, ¼ cup sugar and ½ cup chopped walnuts. Let stand ½ hour, stirring occasionally. Fold in ½ cup heavy cream, whipped. Chill before serving.

21 Looks cool, tastes cool, is cool. This chicken-and-walnut salad in tomato cups, and cucumber boats. Scoop out the pulp from ripe tomatoes, and take out enough seedy pulp from cucumbers split lengthwise to leave firm walls. Fill both cups and boats with chicken salad flavored with chopped black walnuts and garnished with riced hard-cooked eggs.

22 Ask those who have eaten Crab Lorenzo—that chef's pride from the Italian cuisine—and they will tell you of the beauty of this dish. Make a rich cream sauce and add fresh crab meat—2 cups to 1 of sauce—then season and taste. Add ½ cup grated Swiss cheese. Stir and beat—have it smooth as a kitten's ear. Fill crab shells or ramekins with the crab mixture, cover with more grated cheese and melted butter or margarine. Bake in a hot oven to a leaf brown, and the cheese is melted.

23 Doing my duty by the P.M. tea addicts, the picnickers and the buffet set, I'll toss in a few timely sandwich ideas to keep you advised.

24 This one goes best as a spread for crackers. It's nippy, but how nippy depends on your taste. Cream up some cream cheese with a little cream or milk, add salt, pepper and grated onion to taste. Then chop fine a few small green canned chili peppers, drained. Add a little at a time. Stop when it tastes right.

25 Another that will speak for itself as a predinner bite—little rolls of dried beef filled with scrambled eggs don't go begging. And put a little sheaf of water cress in each. Not a bread sandwich—but a sandwich of sorts.

26 Grilled sandwiches go like hot cakes for a summer lunch. Mix 1 cup finely chopped cooked ham or tongue with 1 cup grated Cheddar cheese and ½ cup mayonnaise. Make sandwiches with this for a filling. Spread tops with butter or margarine, broil until golden, turn, butter again and broil the other side. Cut in two.

27 Cold sandwiches go in the refrigerator when made ahead. Wrap tightly in aluminum foil or waxed paper to keep them moist and fresh. Water cress should be tossed between towels to get rid of drops. Except for open-facers, tomatoes don't belong, but cucumbers do—and how! There are 1,000,000 sandwiches and allied snack affairs. Go to it. Best of luck.

28 A dream of a fruit dessert and as easy as opening a can: Allow one canned pear half for each diner. Fill the hollows with drained, canned crushed pineapple mixed with shredded coconut and chopped fresh mint.

29 And for a real cooler-offer that needs no cooking: Crush enough corn flakes to make 1⅓ cups. Chop fine ½ package semisweet chocolate pieces, and reserve 1 tablespoon for garnish. Add to corn flakes, then add ⅓ cup brown sugar and ¼ cup hot melted butter or margarine. Read on.

30 Pack the mixture on the bottom and sides of a 9″ pie plate, like a shell. Chill several hours or more. Fill the shell with ice cream, sprinkle with the reserved chocolate—and cut like a pie.

31 And now, my dears, I'm off to make a fourth at bridge on a neighbor's front porch. It's hot—and I hope she's busy making lemonade. Your ANNIE.

LIKE TOMATO SOUP?
(add water)

LIKE CREAM OF TOMATO?
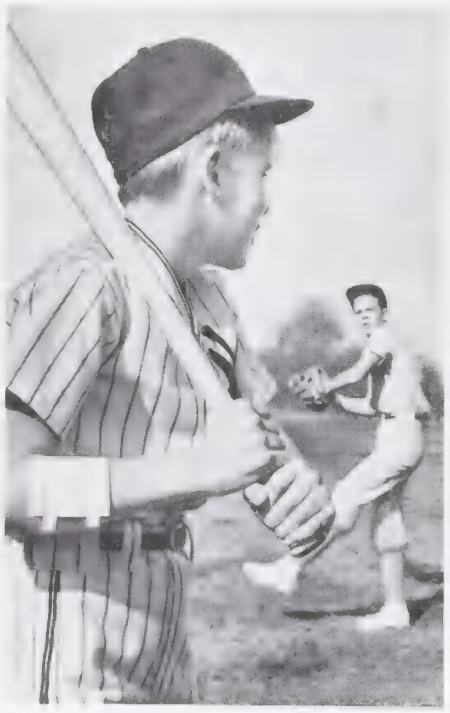
(add milk)

The famous flavor comes from Campbell's sun-ripened tomatoes. Simply wonderful . . . wonderfully simple—any time!

The soup all America loves most of all—



Campbell's Tomato Soup

For larger cuts, burns, abrasions...

use the dressing your doctor uses...

because it's sterile at the moment of use

Sealed in individual envelopes

Apply with Red Cross Adhesive Tape

Johnson & Johnson

No connection whatever with American National Red Cross

KATHERINE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 35

So the Pessoners all stood and waved cheerily on the doorstep. Hawise rode pillion with Jankin on the hired horse, and Katherine preceded them on Doucette. Jankin was a gangling lad of fifteen, and he was delighted with this expedition. He and Hawise chattered as they rode along Bridge Street to Bishopsgate, but Katherine rode in silence.

It grew colder, the sun gleamed once or twice, then dwindled behind a dun-colored sky. The horses' hoofs rang out on the freezing road. When they were three miles short of Ware, light snowflakes drifted down. They were hungry and stopped at an isolated alestake, hitched the horses, and Jankin stayed to see that a tattered little knave watered and fed them while the two women entered the tavern.

The low smoky room was littered with moldering straw. Behind a trestle piled with kegs and flagons the alewife stood, her arms akimbo, staring malevolently. Two men sprawled at the table, clothed in sheepskins and torn leather breeches. Their feet were wrapped in filthy rags. They had a long knife which they silently passed back and forth to cut chunks from a loaf of dark bread.

Hawise put the hamper on the farthest end of the table. "I suppose we may eat our dinner here, goodwife?" she asked dubiously. "An' we buy some ale."

The woman shrugged and made a gobbling noise in her throat.

"She hath no tongue," said the younger of the two men. "T' lord o' the manor yanked it out long since for evil talk."

"Hush thy clack, fool!" growled the other man, casting an uneasy glance at Jankin, who came through the door.

"'Tis but a lad," said the first man.

Jankin flushed and sat down beside Hawise, who unpacked the hamper. The alewife leaned over the trestle and, like the two bearded men, watched each item that came out.

"You will share our food?" said Katherine faintly. "For sure I can eat none." The stink of the alehouse sickened her, and she loathed these ugly evil people. "Come, we must go," she said, rising. "Leave the rest of the food."

The two others obeyed her. Hawise paid the alewife for the sour brew that they had hardly touched. The men stood watching while the trio mounted, their eyes on Doucette and the brass-studded leather saddle.

Katherine flicked the mare, they started north again at a fast trot. "A pack of ribauds," said Hawise. "They'd thievery in their eyes."

"Suppose they come after us and waylay!" cried Jankin.

"How could they? They've no horses."

"A short cut," answered Jankin, considering. "They'd know of one through the fields, they might hide in yonder greenwood and then jump out ——"

"I believe the foul creatures are runaway serfs, outlaws of some kind," said Katherine. She drew Doucette close to the others.

THEY entered the wood where trees grew close to the roadside. The snow, which had stopped, began to fall again. They were nearly out of the wood when they heard the pound of galloping hoofs. Turning, they saw four helmeted men bearing down on them full tilt.

"What now!" cried Hawise. "Do they mean to run us down?"

Jankin yanked their horse off the road, and Katherine swerved Doucette so hard that the little mare pranced angrily. The men pulled up in a flurry of flying clods and jingling harness.

"My Lady Swynford!" cried Raulin, riding directly to Katherine. "A fine race you haff run us. We haff pounded the road since tierce!"

"What is it you want?"

"His Grace promised you escort, yet you did not vait. He sends letters too."

"Letters! For me?" said Katherine faintly.

"Not for you, lady. For your husband, Sir Hugh, and for officers at Lincoln Castle. These men"—indicating the sergeant and two soldiers—"are your escort to Lincoln."

"By St. Christopher, I'm glad to hear that!" exclaimed Hawise.

Raulin dispatched the rest of his business quickly. He repeated instructions to the sergeant and agreed to take the disappointed Jankin back to London. Raulin consigned Hugh's letter to Katherine's keeping and said, "There is vun more thing. His Grace sent to you this." He held out a triangle of parchment. Katherine took it and turned it over. It was the shield the duke had drawn for her, her own blazon; the three Catherine wheels had been painted gold against the field of scarlet.

What does it mean? she thought. Was it a special message to remind her of that moment when they had leaned together on the table and he had drawn this for her? Did it mean forgiveness? Or was it only that he wished to be rid of all thought of her?

It was on a fine sunny morning that they rode under the great arch of Stonebow into Lincoln Town. It was market day. The narrow streets were lined with booths, and thronged with chaffering goodwives, most of them dressed in the scarlet and green cloth for which Lincoln weavers were famous.

"Hark! There's music!" cried Hawise.

In an open court the Tanners Guild was rehearsing for its procession on St. Clement's Day. Fiddles, pipes and tabors had the tanners, and they scraped and whistled and drummed while one of their number leaped up and down in rhythm and juggled with a large tin anchor which stood for the instrument of St. Clement's martyrdom.

The juggler threw his anchor high and missed it. It rebounded on the paved courtyard, clattering down beside a woman at a stall.

Doucette shied, and while Katherine quieted the mare she heard a familiar voice raised in protest. "Have care, you clumsy jackanapes!"

The juggler retrieved his anchor, while Katherine leaned over the mare's head and called "Philippa!" Then, seeing a tiny figure clutching at the woman's skirts, Katherine jumped off the horse. She scooped Blanchette up in her arms, and rained kisses on the little face.

Philippa had been standing by the fish stall, pinching a large glassy-eyed mackerel. She walked to Katherine and said, "By Sainte Marie, I've been wondering when you'd get back. Don't start spoiling that child again."

Katherine set Blanchette down an braced her sister. "And little Tom, Phi she said urgently, "is he all right?"

"Of course he's all right. Are all the ple with you, Katherine?" She pointed three soldiers and recognized Hawis astonishment. "Why, it's the Pessoner

Katherine explained that Hawise ha to be her servant for a while and that th of Lancaster had sent escort, at which P nodded with satisfaction, and turned company Katherine and the others up castle.

"Hugh is in town today, too," Philipp

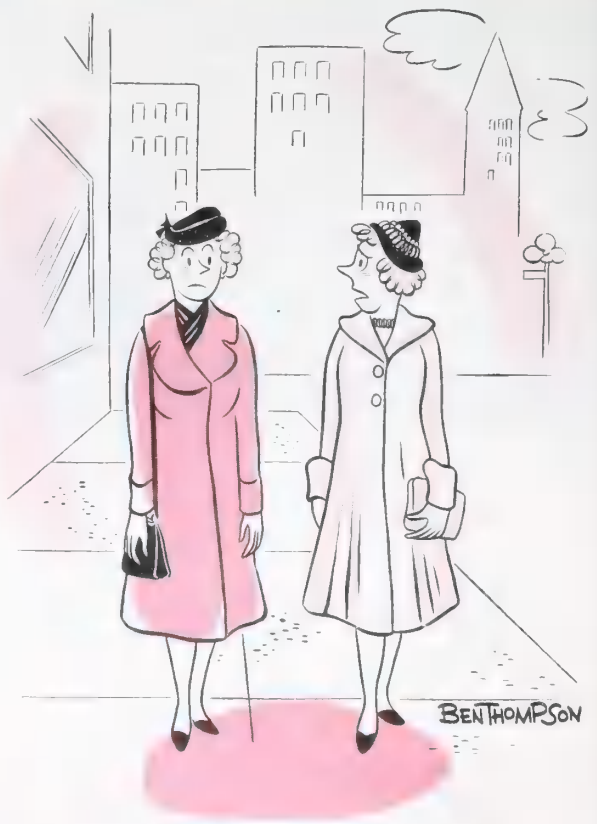
"How is Hugh?" asked Katherine q

"Better in health, though worried to over the manor dues. Did you get son substantial from the duke or duchess rest her soul?"

Katherine shook her head and Philipp a weary sigh.

"THEN I don't know what's to be do duke's receiver, John de Stafford, th seizure of your lands and chattels." S not add that she had been helping could and that the money expended o market-day purchases had come from h pension.

Katherine put her arm around her shoulders. "I'm sorry," she said sadly sergeant has some official letter to del this Stafford. Perhaps I should go, to beg him for time."



"It might help," agreed Philippa. "I he doesn't like Hugh."

They had reached the east gate of the walls. The gateward did not even look the party streamed through; there was stant coming and going of people on bu

They inquired of a clerk and walk horses to a low building. Lolling on a beside two tethered horses sat El Thoresby, Hugh's squire. Sir Hugh was Ellis told them, pleading his case.

"Well, I'm going in, too," said Ka resolutely. The sergeant followed her.

They walked through a roomful of scr clerks to a door guarded by a page. Wh page opened the door to announce Katherine heard an angry voice withi not pay the Coleby rent because I have

"I kept telling myself I'd wait until something better came along. It did, and he married her!"

know I've not been able to collect lleins since the crop failures."
very well, Sir Hugh," interrupted a g voice, "that your Coleby Manor nismanaged, but 'tis no concern of is to procure your feudal dues to of Lancaster, which I shall do." He tably. "Well, what is it?" he said at Katherine and the sergeant.
' she said, running to him and put-and on his arm. She saw with a eart startled gladness soften his
.
ho are you that comes here?" Stafled Katherine disagreeably.
, with her most charming smile, Swynford, sir. I—I cannot think be too hard on us, for sure a little and Sir Hugh will find ——" re time at all," said Stafford, bang-d on the table. "Tomorrow noon I'll nts; that's final. I've been too slack my duty to his Grace of Lancaster."
the sergeant said, "Here, sir, here's you from his Grace, sent from the e just come from there as escort to wynford, sir."
took the parchment and started to e when he noticed the small privy he large one. This he had seen but re, and it meant that the letter was tly from the duke, sealed with his t ring. He glanced up quickly at the the black hood.
broke the seals and cords on the t, read it slowly. He cleared his d read it again before saying to , "Do you know the purport of this he shook her head. Stafford glanced e parchment and read: "'We, John, e King, Duke of Lancaster, etc., wn that from our especial grace and od and loving service which Lady Swynford, wife of Sir Hugh Swynrendered to our late dearly beloved whom God assoil, we do give and e said Lady Swynford until further issues and profits from our towns ngton and Wellingore in the County to be paid at once upon receipt of and thereafter in equal portions at as and Easter. In witness etc. given e Savoy this twenty-seventh day of r, in the forty-second year of King reign.'" Stafford looked up.
glanced at Katherine and then at the
r. "It is most generous of the duke."
's a postscript," said Stafford, tap-parchment, "which provides that Sir Hugh Swynford shall be absent me on knight's service one of the n stewards shall be appointed to ride and Kettlethorpe to render assistance r supervision to Lady Swynford, the be met by this office. Tomorrow at id Stafford, rising, "you will receive ys due you from this grant and will your Coleby rent. I give you good nd lady."

vynfords walked out through the clerks and scarcely heeded when the took his leave to report to the conefore going into the court where Phi-d the others waited, Hugh suddenly and looked at Katherine. "For what service, my lady, has his Grace of r seen fit to bestow such reward?"
ray eyes met his steadily. "For none t the grant said, Hugh, that I served hess Blanche." She pulled her beads her purse and kissed the crucifix. "I by the sweet body of Jesus and by my and mother's souls."
ize fell first and he sighed. "I cannot ou." She showed none of her inward he kissed her hungrily on the lips, but e from his rough grasp she made a of putting her rosary back in her d saw the duke's letter.
:," she said quickly, "this is for you.
ead it to you?"
dded, flushing.
roke the seal and scanned the letter.
official order for you to report for duty in Aquitaine. . . . Ah, that glad-u!" she cried, for his face had bright-she had not seen it in years.

"Aye, for I've worried much that the duke did not want me. 'Tis not that I wish to leave you, my Katherine, but he has relieved my mind by providing proper stewardship for you. He thinks no doubt in these grants of his godchild, named for his poor lady."

"For sure it is, Hugh," she said gently. "Come, we have much good news to tell Philippa." They walked into the sunlit court.

Three portly, middle-aged men enjoyed the freshening air in the cloisters of the Abbey of St. Andrew at Bordeaux, now the duke's royal palace. Two were great lords of Guienne: Jean de Grailly, the powerful captal of Buch; and Sir Guichard d'Angle, who owned vast tracts. The third was the English baron, Michael de la Pole, whose taste for action had been well gratified since he chafed and cooled his heels, awaiting the Duke of Lancaster nineteen months ago in the Savoy.

THE three gentlemen, dressed in brocaded satins, sat on a marble bench, drinking the delicate wine from a nearby Médoc village.

"Fine stirring deeds of arms today at the jousting!" said De la Pole enthusiastically. "Our lord duke covered himself with glory."

"Aha," said the captal. "He's almost the knight his brother is."

"Better, far better!" cried De la Pole.

"Lancaster is dangerously ambitious!" said the captal. "I feel in him a ceaseless urge to rule, a lust for power greater even than he has—fires barely held in check ——"

"Yet they are held in check," cut in De la Pole. "'Tis not the English throne he covets."

"Ha-ha!" Sir Guichard exploded. "Do you think you tell us news?"

"Has he then made formal suit to the infanta?" said De la Pole, a trifle hurt that the duke had withheld his confidence.

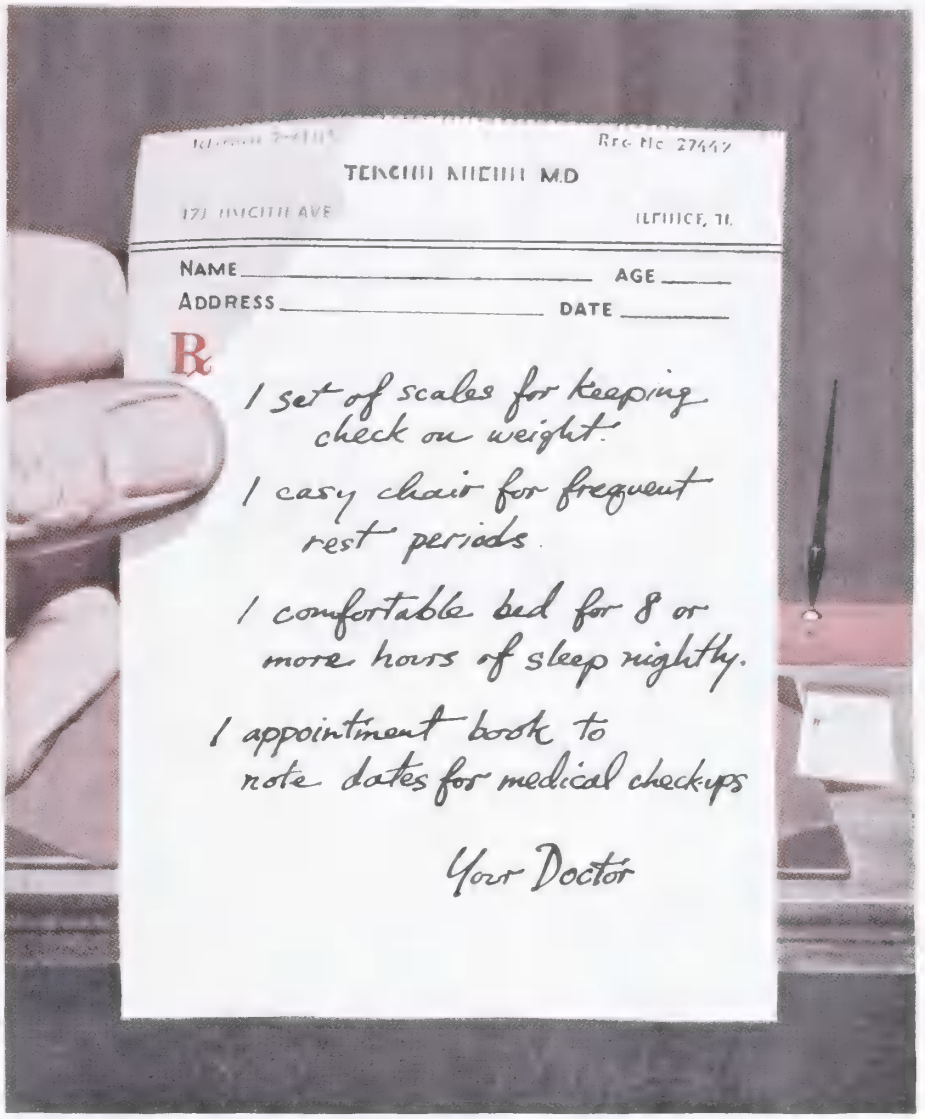
"Nenni—I think not yet. Something seems to hold him back. The exiled and penniless Costanza'll not keep him waiting, once he asks her. 'Tis the best marriage she could hope for."

"I think this marriage might be ill judged," said the captal, shaking his head. He rose. "But whatever we think, the duke will do as he pleases. C'est un veritable Plantagenet."

On the second floor of the abbey John sat in the garderobe of his private apartments. Raulin was scrubbing off the grime from the tournament with a handful of lint dipped in hot rose water. Nirac de Bayonne hovered near with a razor and basin, waiting to shave his master.

John was tired. On this day his lieutenancy of Aquitaine was ended, he was no longer bound to fight his brother's battles at his own cost as he had been doing for months. Again as always in this struggle with Charles the Fifth there was stalemate. There had been victories, there had been losses.

But there was a bold and brilliant step awaiting. A glorious chivalric deed blessed by God and rewarded by a prize so dazzling that John's scalp tingled. Last night he had dreamed that he knelt in the cathedral at Burgos and felt the touch of the sacred oil as the archbishop anointed him and the holy pressure of Castile's golden crown.



I shall send Guichard d'Angle to the infanta tomorrow, John thought, as he lifted his face that Nirac might shave him. He said, "Nirac, when you were in Bayonne last month, you said you saw the Infanta Costanza at Mass—the rightful Queen of Castile, that is?"

"Si fait, mon duc."

"How did she look?"

"Bony," said Nirac promptly, shaving the golden beard with deft strokes. "White skin, black hair, long upper lip on a mout' not made for smiling, nor, parbleu, for kissing. She is très dévote, they say. Her young sister Isabella is moch prettier." The duke frowned and Nirac, seeing he had made a mistake, added quickly, "But the Infanta Costanza is vairy young, scarce seventeen, she'll improve sans doute, and I could not see clear, la cathédrale was dark."

There was a long silence in the garderobe. John allowed himself to be dressed by Raulin, lifting his arms into the fine white silk shirt, stepping into the short linen braies to which the long skin-tight yellow hose were fastened. The topaz velvet tunic was dagged into leaflike

A good "prescription" for HIGH BLOOD PRESSURE...

IF YOU are one of the several millions of Americans who have, or will have, the common, uncomplicated type of high blood pressure . . . or hypertension . . . your doctor will probably recommend a "prescription" like that shown above.

There are, of course, several drugs that may be helpful in treating high blood pressure, and others of promise are under study. In addition, special diets . . . for example, those in which salt is restricted . . . are often beneficial. Surgery, also, may be helpful when other measures fail.

Successful control of hypertension, however, still depends mostly on whether or not the patient learns to live on good terms with high blood pressure. For example, many victims can keep their blood pressure from rising still higher . . . and may even lower it . . . simply by controlling their weight through proper eating habits.

Since the majority of people who develop high blood pressure are of the so-called "high-strung type," it is most important for them to learn to avoid sustained tension which tends to elevate blood pressure and perhaps keep it at an excessively high level. Avoiding tension usually involves a change in attitude and perspective toward what we must do, rather than ceasing or drastically curtailing normal activity.

Those suffering from hypertension should see their doctor for regular check-ups and treatment. This will enable the doctor to detect possible complications early, and to take steps to help correct them.

It is also wise for those who do not have hypertension to arrange for periodic health examinations, including a check on blood pressure. This is especially important for those who are middle-aged and older, are overweight, or have a family history of hypertension.

Did you ever hear the expression, "To live a long life, learn to saunter instead of gallop"? There's a lot of truth in it for everyone . . . especially for those with high blood pressure. In fact, many people today who have this ailment can expect to live long and useful lives simply by reducing the tension in everyday living.

COPYRIGHT 1954—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company
(A MUTUAL COMPANY)
1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N.Y.

Please send me the free booklet, 854J, "Your Heart."

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

curls at hem and sleeves and buttoned with pearls. When he was dressed, the squire and valets stepped back, expecting him to walk into the antechamber. But he shook his head and said, "Leave me, all of you—except Nirac."

John walked to the open window and gazed out across red tiled roofs to the curving Garonne. The river shone like pewter in the twilight, and two English ships were moving downstream. John watched the ships a moment and then he said, "Nirac, do you remember the Lady Swynford of Kettlethorpe?"

"Sainte Vierge! 'Ow should I forget! Belle et gracieuse, la Dame Katherine." Nirac paused, then added, "I do not forget 'er knight—that *Swine*ford—either."

John said slowly, "Knolles makes good report of Swynford. He's fought fiercely and been wounded twice."

"But 'e recovers, parbleu!" Nirac did not add, "What a pity!" He felt he need not hide his hatred of the Saxon knight who had so outrageously humiliated him at Kettlethorpe.

"Swynford arrived here at Bordeaux yesterday," said the duke. "He's bedridden from a leg wound. I sent Brother William to bleed him and apply poultices."

The duke's own physician for this swine of a knight, thought Nirac, mystified.

"I am going to ask for the Queen of Castile in marriage," said the duke. He raised his hand to quell Nirac's burst of excitement. "It is proper that my royal duchess should be provided with English ladies to attend on our marriage. I shall send escort and messengers to summon them. You, Nirac, will return to Kettlethorpe and fetch my Lady Swynford."

"Ah-ha?" said the little Gascon, but still uncertain. Four years had passed since the duke had been to Kettlethorpe.

The austere control vanished from the sharp-etched handsome face, and John said as one who cannot help himself, "I must see her again before I marry."

So, thought Nirac, it is like that.

"Mon duc, then you will send Sir Hug Bordeaux before she comes?"

John's lips tightened, then he gave angry laugh. "I fear she wouldn't com it were to join her husband."

"Merde! You mean she's virtuous Nirac, astounded, and understood at he had quite misread the situation had been at Kettlethorpe.

John, having broken through the b had erected against Katherine, now f desire to go on talking of her. Yet he it. He was ashamed of his longing, that he had not forgotten her as he ha himself to do.

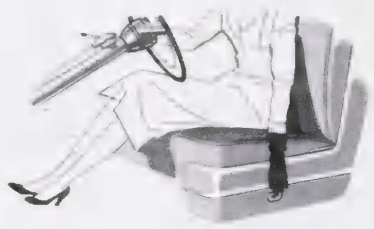
On the tenth of August the Grâce four days out of Plymouth, ran into hea The master had been through worse we many voyages and after a few hearty c ordered the sail lowered and the sea put out. He checked on the steersme rudder, then retired to the castled po a keg of strong ale, prepared to ride storm until the Blessed Virgin shou them north or westerly wind to blo again in the right direction.

Though it might well be that St would take as much interest as the Mother in this voyage, since besides t bound for Bordeaux at the Duke caster's orders, there were ten pilgrim holy shrine of St. James Compostella i These pilgrims had been stuffed in t with the freight and were constant abominably seasick.

In the tapestried cabin below the poop, the women were seasick too. Th cess Isabel de Coucy lay in the large and groaned. Lady Scrope and Lady Hamlake lay in another bunk, and ea the Grâce à Dieu wallowed and slid wave Lady Scrope clutched her com and whispered wildly, "Blessed Jesus, we shall all be drowned!"

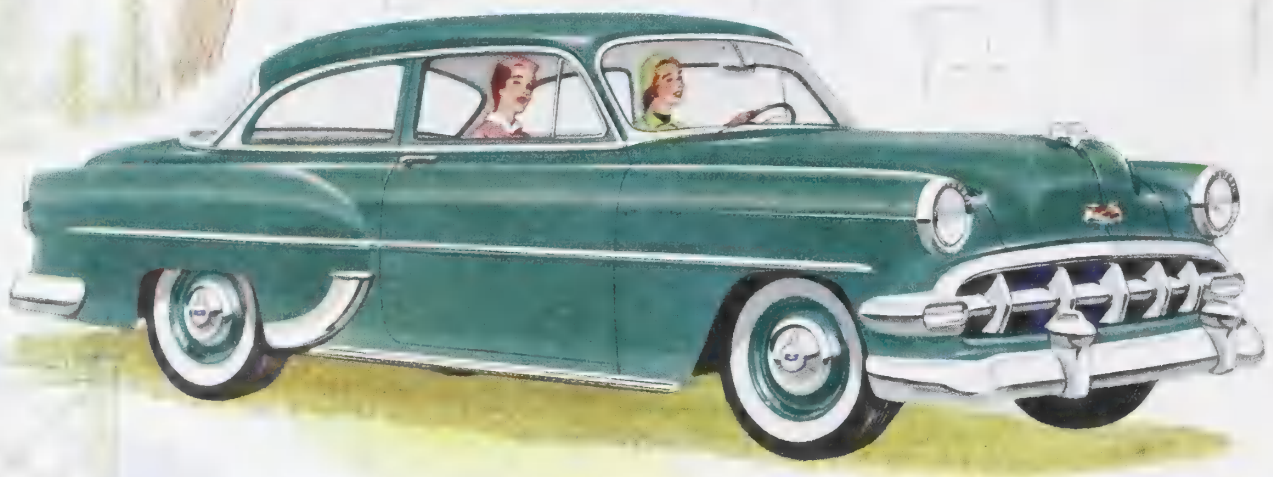
For Katherine there was no bunk at and a squire's lady were assigned two on the broad-beamed floor. She had n seasick. This small superiority over th cess Isabel gave her satisfaction. The had been unremittingly patronizing fr moment of their meeting at Plymout before they ascended the gangplank i Grâce à Dieu.

The king's daughter had been a beauty in her youth. Now at forty she longer a beauty. It was known to all ship that Isabel had seized upon this tunity to cross the sea so that she m once again to find her runaway husba Lord Enguerrand of Coucy, who wa years her junior.



The storm grew worse, and the noi enormous wave hit the ship, which m shivered and plunged with a shoc knocked Katherine against the bulwar Scrope screamed again, crying on St. C pher, St. Botolph and the Blessed V save them, for the ship would surely sin

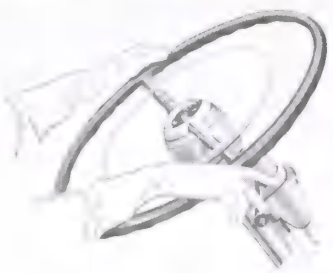
Katherine thought it quite probab clutched her beads tight against her and tried to stem growing panic wh thoughts ran in confused images of especially of the day Nirac came w puzzling letter from Hugh, dictate scrivener and summoning her to Bo "at the duke's command." Her first had been of anguished shock at the the duke's intended marriage. Her thoughts were of conscience-stricken for Hugh. Nirac was extremely uncom cative about Hugh's wounds, so she k tle beyond the sparsely worded letter.



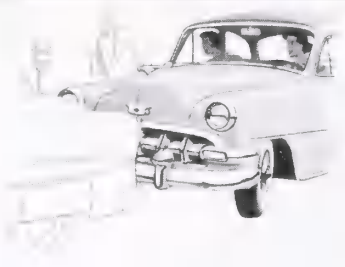
But there was no question of her refu go. So Katherine had set forth on her j stopping two days in London with whose Jack had returned from Fran claimed her. Jack was not the merry dehoy he'd been five years ago on Ma His years in the army had changed h had become rough-tongued and brutal. he was a master weaver now, he had s terest in his loom, but much in his gui ileges, and he spoke often of "royal and tyrants." Full of spite Jack was erine had felt deeply sorry for Hawise.

SAFETY PLATE GLASS in the windshield and in all windows of Chevrolet sedans and coupes gives you better visibility in all directions.

AT THE TOUCH OF A FINGER automatic window and seat controls* (on Bel Air and "Two-Ten" models) adjust front seat, lower and raise front windows.



YOU'RE LOOKING INTO THE FUTURE
WHEN YOU LOOK INTO A NEW CHEVROLET



And everything you behold is the latest in advanced styling and engineering. You'll find big-car features you never expected, gorgeous interiors in colors and fabrics that compliment any woman who desires and appreciates the utmost in good taste. And, in addition, Chevrolet is the only car in its class with world-famous Body by Fisher. See it at your Chevrolet dealer's.... Chevrolet Division of General Motors, Detroit 2, Michigan.

CHEVROLET

Optional at extra cost.*

CHEVROLET POWERGLIDE does away with operation of clutch pedal and gearshift. Simply set the selector at "Drive" and Powerglide* does the rest.

POWER STEERING does up to 80% of the work of turning the wheel. Makes driving even more pleasant and safer — and there's nothing new to learn.*

little ship quivered and plunged. ew harder. The master abandoned le and lost his fortitude when he rough the driving rain squalls a of rock and tiny specks of moving d its base. If that were the Ile and they were blown upon its bloodthirsty wreckers waiting on would dispatch whatever souls the d.

er crossed himself, then, lurching, d the cabin door and stumbled in last of howling wind and rain. The sed their heads, staring at him in ter's bearded cheeks were pale as s as he said, "Noble ladies, I doubt e this storm wi'out a miracle. Ye nd make vows."

rope screamed and wrung her cried, "Which saint will help?"

ter shook his head. "I know not. rs pray to the Blessed Virgin of the 'out a miracle we're doomed."

e knelt with the rest. She clasped crying silently, Sweet St. Catherine, uddenly in this moment of danger hout pretense into a dark corner of hat she had kept hidden, and she ow.

acle was wrought, by which saint em together there was no means of hough the master gave credit to the een of the Sea. At any rate, just as e the wind died and they had drifted of the baleful little Ile d'Ouessant. gentle wind had sprung up from the Grâce à Dieu's great sail filled, p resumed her course.

ys later, the Grâce à Dieu sailed up Gironde with the afternoon tide and uth into the narrower Garonne illage church bells along the banks the beginning of the festival. It cessively hot to the Englishwomen. abel sat in a cushioned chair while r perspiring women waved an im- fan made from parchment. The rope and Roos crowded as close as that their florid cheeks might also tiny breeze.

ipation of the landing, all the ladies ed in their best, which entailed furs ts far too warm for the climate. 's best was of dark Lincoln green ricot surcoat trimmed with fox. twenty her beauty had an exotic more vivid than when Geoffrey had first sensed it at Windsor. It was that caused Princess Isabel's angry Lady Roos as she watched Kath- stood by the rail.

woman's no trueborn child of that e Roet! She's some bastard—may- en. I shall tell my brother I find her itable for a waiting woman."

NCESS' suspicions were cut short by a f mariners and archers to the star- l amidships and a chorus of halloos watch in the crow's-nest dipped the pennant and raised it again on the incess heaved herself up from her l went to the rail. "Why, 'tis John— meet me!" said she, peering down at roaching eight-oared galley. Her brother was standing in the prow, his ad unmistakable in the sunlight.

lley drew alongside and the duke as- he ladder, followed by the Lords de la Roos. The duke jumped lightly onto and, walking to his sister, kissed her cheeks. There was a flurry of greeting other gentlemen clambered up.

uke turned slowly until he saw Kath- cross the heads of the fluttering, chat- dies their eyes met. She felt him will- o come to him, and her lids dropped, did not move. After a moment he the space between them.

st the voyage was not too disagree- Lady Swynford," he said coolly. too disagreeable, your Grace." She "How does my husband? Have you y lord?"

er. I believe," John answered, "though fined to his lodgings."

Katherine, again meeting his gaze, saw the color deepen beneath the tan of his cheeks. She said, "May Nirac guide me to Hugh's lodging directly we disembark?"

Before he answered a strident voice called, "John, come here! I've much to tell you."

"Aye, Nirac shall guide you, Lady Swynford," he said, then, turning to his sister, laughed sharply. "Your commands, my sweet Isabel, plunge me back into the happy days of my childhood. In truth, you've changed but little, fair sister."

"So I'm told," said the lady. "By St. Thomas, what's that caterwauling?" A medley of voices had arisen from all parts of the ship.

"It is the hymn of praise to the Virgin of the Sea," said John. "'Tis sung on every ship when port is safely reached—for see, here is Bordeaux."

Here is Bordeaux, echoed Katherine's thought. She fastened her attention on the city so that she might not turn again to look at him who stood behind her on the deck.

HOW WOULD YOU SAY IT?

Edited by John M. Henry

Overheard: "I was never very happy," said the old wife, "as long as I figured he belonged to me. When I thought I belonged to him I liked it better."
GILES FRENCH
in Moro Ore., Journal

An echo does have the last word, but it doesn't contribute much that is new.
J. A. CREVIERE
in De Pere, Wisc., Journal-Democrat

The best literature in the world is a complimentary paragraph in the home paper about yourself.
CLARKE A. SANFORD
in Margaretville, N. Y., News

"One of the most astute analysts of the human race was the chap who invented the eraser."
Hill City, Kans., Lecturer

"Think twice before you speak, especially if you intend to say what you think." Overheard in Kansas City, Mo., bus Hugh's lodgings were two rooms over a wineshop in an alley behind the cathedral. Nirac guided Katherine through the town from the pier. It was not until they mounted the stone stairs above the wineshop that Katherine thought of the angry treatment Hugh had shown to Nirac long ago at Kettlethorpe and wondered if the Gascon still resented it.

Katherine knocked, then pushed open the sagging door, calling, "Hugh."

He lay on a rough narrow bed. He struggled to his elbow and said uncertainly, "Is it really you, Katherine? Ellis left to fetch you but a short time ago. Who's that behind you?"

She said gently, going to the bed and taking his hand, "It's Nirac, the duke's messenger. I hurried straight to you."

His hand clung to hers; it was hot and dry.

She bent over and kissed him quickly. "Ah, my dear, 'tis well I've come to nurse you," she told him. "The duke said that you were better; are you?"

"For sure 'e's better!" cried Nirac heartily, coming forward and bowing. "'Is Grace's own leech 'as cared for 'im."

Hugh said, "Oh, it's you, you meaching cockscomb. I'd forgot all about you." His dull gaze wandered from the Gascon to Katherine. "Aye, I'm better, the wound's near done festering. I'd be up now save for the griping in my bowels; it weakens me." He made effort to pull himself from the self-centered lethargy of his illness, yet in truth her beauty daunted him. He said crossly, "I trust you're not too fine a lady to fetch some supper from the kitchen down below. Or has the duke's appointment turned your head?"

Nirac made a faint hissing sound through his teeth, but she did not hear it as she answered, "I'm here to care for you, Hugh. Don't you long for news of home—of our children?"

"I leave now, madame," said Nirac softly, and added in swift French, "I wish you joy of your reunion." He was gone before she could thank him for his care of her on the journey.

Through the rest of the day Katherine tended her husband. She remade Hugh's bed, washed him and rebound his leg, hiding her revulsion at the look of his wound.

GRADUALLY Hugh grew gentler. They slipped back into the groove worn by their five years of marriage. Katherine told many items of home news, particularly that the new flocks were flourishing. She also told Hugh about the birth of Philippa's baby.

It was thus that Brother William Appleton found them when he pushed the door open. "Deo gratias!" cried the Gray Friar, surveying his patient. "Here is betterment indeed! Truly a wife is God's gift. Benedicite, my Lady Swynford." He placed his hand on her head in blessing. "How do you find your husband?"

"Most grateful to you, Sir Friar; he says you saved his leg and maybe his life."

"Well, well—I've some skill but 'tis not all my doing." As he spoke the friar deftly unbound Hugh's leg, and scooping a green ointment from a little pot, plastered the wound.

"How soon do you think I can get about, brother?" asked Hugh.

"You can hobble a bit now, since your dysentery's lessening. Did you take all the bowel binder I left you?" He peered into the clay cup and shook his head. "Lady, you must see that he takes this each time before he eats."

"I'll see that he takes it, Sir Friar," she said, and held the cup for him to fill with a black mixture.

"We must have you strong and able to attend on the duke's wedding, Sir Hugh," said Brother William. He gave them blessing and departed.

In the soft gray dawn, Katherine rose and dressed to go to early Mass. She hoped that in the cathedral she might find a shrine to St. Catherine. She felt great need to kneel before her own particular saint.

Katherine slipped downstairs past the wineshop into the cobbled street. Early as it was, many others were astir. The doors of the cathedral were wide open, the organ tones vibrated through the still air. An ancient Bordelaise in high fluted cap and white apron was spreading baskets of flowers on the steps, and Katherine walked over to her.

As she leaned down to buy a bunch of jasmine, she noted a tall pilgrim a little way off, leaning on his staff. She finished her purchase. Holding the jasmine and sniffing delightedly, she walked into the cathedral porch.

She felt a hand on her arm and turned in astonishment to see that it was the pilgrim. He raised his head so that she might see his eyes and said, "Katrine! I must talk to you."

"My lord!" she cried, so astounded that she dropped the jasmine sprays.

"Hush!" he said sternly. "Come with me."

She bent over and picked up her jasmine, fighting for time to collect herself and marshal her resistance.

"I command it," he said; then with a swift change of tone, "Nay! I beseech you."

She bowed her head and began to walk, following him a few paces behind. They went down the steps, across the bustling place and up a street to a little inn. He took a key from his scrip and, unlocking a door in the pink plaster wall, motioned her to enter. It was the inn garden to which he had brought her.

"We'll not be disturbed here," he said, loosening the sackcloth cloak. He added with a wry laugh, "Look to what straits you've brought the ruler of Aquitaine—skulking in sackcloth. You should be proud of your witchcraft!"

"What have you to say to me, my lord?" Her gray eyes were fixed on him steadily and she thought that in the coarse brown sackcloth he had never seemed so handsome or so princely.

"What have I to say to you?" He broke off. Since the sight of her on the ship yesterday, she had obsessed him to a point beyond reason. He turned on her suddenly. "I love you, Katrine. I want you, I desire you, but I love you. I feel that I cannot exist without you." He seized her hands, looking up at her white face. "My dear love," he said softly, humbly, "can you not speak to me?"

"What can I say, my lord?"

"That you love me, Katrine—you told me so once."

"Aye," she said slowly, "nothing has changed since then. Nothing. And I am still Hugh's wife, however much I—I love you."

He gave a sharp gasp and, bending his head, covered her hands with kisses. "Sweetheart!"

s-s-s-t! It's

TWEED MIST

TOILET WATER CONCENTRATE BY LENTHÉRIC

Spray it on from head to toe... Clouds of fragrance where'er you go!

Exciting new way to wear fragrance... long-lasting Toilet Water Concentrate in a miraculous spray-type container sends a cloud of fragrance whooshing over you at a touch of your finger!

Adam's Rib • Dark Brilliance 2.75
Tweed • Miracle • Shanghai 2.25
Red Lilac 2.00
• • •
Regular Tweed Bouquet 1.50
prices plus tax

Lenthéric
NEW YORK PARIS LONDON

For salad success! Your own zesty "Easy-Mix" dressing

WITH MAZOLA OIL

It's homemade . . . it's extra delicious — it's fresh-blended with Mazola Oil

That real homemade flavor of your own salad dressing really does good things to salads! Here's flavor you just can't buy . . . a dressing to suit your taste with Mazola, the only leading oil made from corn. This pure vegetable oil tastes better . . . blends better with salad ingredients, brings out fresh, natural flavors. Try Mazola Oil for better tasting homemade salad dressings.

"So quick 'n easy . . . ready in 60 seconds!"

"EASY-MIX" GOLDEN FRENCH DRESSING

Exciting new flavor for all kinds of salads

2 teaspoons prepared mustard	1 teaspoon Worcestershire Sauce
1 tablespoon salt	½ cup vinegar
1½ teaspoons sugar	1½ cups MAZOLA Salad Oil
Few grains pepper	1 clove garlic

Measure all ingredients into bottle or jar. Cover tightly and shake well. Chill several hours. Shake thoroughly before serving. Makes 2 cups.

he cried, and put his hands on her waist to pull her to him.

She stiffened and shook her head. "Nay, but there is one thing changed since we two were in the Avalon Chamber: then you mourned a wife but lately gone, and now you are betrothed to one who will soon be yours."

"There's no love in that. You know that I must marry again, for England—for Castile."

"Aye," she said tonelessly, "I know."

"Katrine, Katrine, come to me—you're in my blood, in my bones, and in my heart there is nought but you."

She raised her eyes and tears slid down her cheeks. "I cannot, my lord. Even if for love of you I could so shamefully dishonor Hugh, yet I cannot, for I have made a sacred vow."

"A vow?" His hands dropped from her waist. "What vow, Katrine?"

"On the ship St. Catherine saved my life. For that I made the vow"—she stopped and went on in a whisper, "to be true wife, in thought, in deed, to my husband."

Outside the garden wall, the cathedral bells began again to chime the commencement of another Mass. John said gently, "My foolish Katrine—and do you think the whole ship was saved because you made this vow?"

"I don't know," she answered. "I only know that I made it and will keep it unto death."

He turned his head away and did not speak.

"Now you will hate me again!" she cried on a sobbing breath. She could no longer maintain the frozen stillness of her body. "Dear my lord, my heart will break if you hate me, and last time, too, we parted in anger ——"

He shook his head. "I love you, Katrine—and while you're near me, I feel that your wish is mine." He stopped, thinking that this had never been true of him before. "Yet I know myself." He took a quick step toward her, then halted. "Go, Katrine—go," he said, and hot tears sprang into his eyes.

She fled from the garden and through the place to the cathedral. The Mass had begun; she pushed her way to a confessional where she murmured so rapid and confused an account of temptation and contrition in her northern French that the priest made little of it and granted quick absolution.

In the midafternoon while the duke dined, Nirac set forth for the alley behind the cathedral. A little Moorish dwarf trotted beside him, swinging a popinjay in its cage, while a chained monkey scampered along the ground.

People crowded around laughing at the monkey, and urging that he do tricks, but Nirac would not let his charges pause until they came into the courtyard below the Swynford lodgings. There, Nirac told the dwarf to wait, while he clambered up the stone steps.

Katherine opened to Nirac's knock. Her pale strained face lightened when she saw him.

"Morbleu, but 'tis dark in 'ere!" cried Nirac, bowing to Hugh, who was sitting on a chair beside a table littered with the remnants of dinner. "I've brought you somesing to amuse you."

"That was kind, Nirac," said Katherine, smiling. "It's a bit dismal in here, but Hugh is so much better I believe he'll soon be out."

"Ah, bon!" Nirac looked at neither Hugh nor Katherine. "The good Brother William prescribes fine drugs, hein?"

HUGH grunted amiably. He didn't like Nirac, but he was free from pain for the first time in weeks. "To be sure, the Gray Friar knows his craft," he agreed.

Nirac nodded, then said to Katherine, "But are you not curious to know what I 'ave brought you? Come to the window."

Their only window gave on the courtyard and Katherine, leaning out, cried, "Oh what is it? A mannequin! Is he real? And the green bird, and a little beast jumping on the ground. Oh, Hugh, you never saw so droll a sight!"

"But 'e may see it, madame. We'll 'elp 'im to the window. 'E can sit there and watch."

Hugh was curious, and while Katherine supported his leg Nirac shoved the chair so Hugh might see out.

Then Nirac said, "But you, madame—you most see them close and 'ear the dwarf's so foolish jokes. Do you go down and I'll stay with Sir Hugh."

She hesitated, but Hugh said, "G Katherine. I saw a monkey once cou nuts. Ask him can his monkey juggle."

Katherine ran downstairs, where a small crowd had gathered around th who began to tumble like a bouncing

Hugh leaned over the sill to see what he could, and when the monkey and stamped its feet in imitation of th Hugh let out a short hoarse guffaw.

Nirac's business took only a min Gascon snatched a leaden phial fro his tunic, and emptied gray-white pow the clay cup which was still half fil Brother William's drug. The powder and disappeared into the black mixt slipped the empty phial into his tu walked back to the window, cryi Hugh's shoulder, "Ah, but 'ow dro dieu!"

WHEN the dwarf had run thro repertoire, Katherine came back, flushed with laughter, and cried, "Ah how good of you it was to give us such Hugh nodded. "'Twas courteous Here's silver for the dwarf." He fum his purse and held out some pennies.

Nirac hesitated only a moment b took the money. "I must return to 'is he said. The Gascon executed a s flourish of farewell, and trotted out t with his usual nimbleness.

"Strange little man," said Ka straightening up the table. "He's alwa pleasant to me, yet much as I've seen feel I know him hardly at all."

"These Gascons!" said Hugh. " nought in them worth knowing. He have thought to wait and help me to be

"Ellis'll be back soon," she said soo "or maybe I can manage if you lean shoulder. . . . But there is Ellis."

After Hugh was in bed Katherine p the supper.

When the vesper bells chimed out fr cathedral, she said to her husband, "O is ready, Hugh—can you relish it?"

"Aye," said Hugh. "I've appetite. C the wine, my dear."

She started to pour for him, an stopped. "Your potion, Hugh. First yo have your draught."

She gave him the clay cup. He grumbling, but swallowed nearly all t tents. "Phaw!" he said with a wry face.

"Oh, come, it's not so bad." She to cup and sniffed it. Seeing that there w left, she put it down, and she and Ellis their supper.

Shortly after they had blown the out and Katherine still lay sleepless pallet, she heard Hugh give a heavy then he cried out sharply. She started the darkness. "What is it, what's the m

He groaned again. "I've a fearful pa

She called to Ellis and told him to light. Hugh writhed and moaned. Wh came and lit a candle, she saw that face was greenish. He began to vom and Ellis worked frantically trying to ea

"What can have happened, lady?" pered the squire.

"I know not," she whispered back. can you find the Gray Friar?"

The squire stumbled downstairs and through the court.

Hugh lay back exhausted. She put h under his head. "Hugh, dear, finish E William's draught—it must help you held the cup to his lips and he swallowe fell back crying, "Water!" There was in the pitcher; she gave it to him.

Suddenly he gave a great cry of pai doubling over with spasm, began ag vomit. When the Gray Friar came, run with Ellis, he stood by the bed and sho head. "God pity him!" he murmured, Hugh's pulse. The physician knew the no time to be lost in giving him the las Katherine knelt in the other room wh friar's voice intoned the prayers for the The friar called her and she bent and the gray forehead. Ellis, kneeling on the side of the bed, wept with dry racking Then Hugh gave a long shudder a breathing stopped. The friar crossed h and Katherine followed suit.

William sighed heavily. "Poor n't understand it. I thought he was t these dysenteries ——" He turned his hand on Katherine's arm. "My
'tis a hard thing for you."

William stayed the night in the lodgings. In the morning he started the arrangements for the Requiem nporary disposition of the coffin, and r it on a homebound ship, when the ought him that perhaps the duke notified first. Having left Katherine nder an opiate, the friar set out for
.

ood by the fireplace in the ante-of his private suite and heard the r speak in a calm, sorrowful voice, my lord, the poor knight is dead,
lve his soul!"
e can't be—he was getting well!"
ke turned his back on the friar so that Brother William took it for d said humbly, "Your Grace, for-I did my best. I applied all the skill granted me, but it was not His will night should live."
unnoticed near the door, could see his face, though the friar could not. He ook of dazed incredulity give way to duke repeated slowly, "It was not nat the knight should live!"
'uneral arrangements, your Grace," the friar. "I thought you might wish your chamo call ——" widow," said
. "Aye, the shall attend yself."
er William ck, frowning.
d, she is in f, and I be-ruly virtuous

w that. And t forget. But things you do
v. Nay, good don't look so re, take this."
ed the purse
lt and thrust friar's hand a gold nobles.
poor, for the sick, for anything you w leave me alone!"

e next three days the court was mystiits ruler's behavior. Between one nd the next, it seemed, the duke had off all the heavy brooding and ill ne had shown for months.
day he rode out hawking by the river arty of congenial courtiers. Each day part in joustings and there were dancsinging in the Grand Salle at night.
g the courtiers, only the Captal de new the reason for this volte-face on of the duke, who had consulted him tain matter.
e fourth day after Hugh's death, the nt word to the Princess Isabel that he e absent for a while and that she and l were to preside over the high table ace.

sk the duke and Nirac left the palace privy stair, both enveloped in dark Though John rode his favorite charger, n, the horse's trappings were simple to befit a burgher. They rode through ets to the Swynford lodgings.
airs, Katherine sat by the empty bed,
at the note she had received earlier.
ad brought it and waited for her answer.
be here at vesper time and will receive l duke," she had said to Nirac. "But that is all. It must be farewell."
Nirac had bowed and gone she had scarcely moving, forgetting food and as she had for days. Even the duke's ad not awakened Katherine, though here within her there had been a shiv-Like the distortions dimly heard and rough that yellow plague fog at Bolke, life came to her muffled.

When the noise of horses clattered up from the courtyard, Ellis peered out the window. "There's two horsemen coming upstairs," he said. He opened the door, and Katherine stood up. A tall man walked in and threw back his hood. "My lord duke!" cried Ellis, dropping to his knees. Nirac hovered on the landing.

"I've come for you, Katrine," said John, ignoring Ellis and looking over his head at the girl.

"No, my lord," she whispered, but her breathing quickened. Ellis stumbled to his feet, peering from his lady to the duke.

"Aye, dear heart. You're coming with me. There's nothing now to keep us apart." John took a step toward her.

"You dare not touch her!" shouted Ellis. "You dare not touch my lady!" His fist shot out and blundered harmlessly past John's shoulder. The duke stepped sideways, then with swift negligent motion hit Ellis squarely on the chin. The squire lay gasping on the floor. Katherine gave a cry and would have run to the squire, but John picked her up in his arms. He laughed exultantly and, still holding her, walked downstairs with her and, mounting Palamon, placed her in front of him on the saddle. The horse jumped forward at the spur.

The saddle, which had been built for a man in full armor, easily held them both, and Katherine made no further protest. Her head fell on John's chest, where she heard the beating of his heart.

The horse cantered for many miles before it slackened, then John shifted her weight a little on his arm and said with a gentle laugh, "And do you sleep, Katrine?"

"No, my lord," she said, looking up at him in the darkness. "I think I am happy. It's very strange."

He bent and kissed her. "You will be happy, and always."

A cool salt-laden wind sprang up, she felt it on her face, and at the same time Palamon slowed to a walk. She roused herself and, hearing the shrill cry of a gull, said, "Are we near the sea, my lord?"

"Aye," he said. "We're in Les Landes, Katrine. We go to the captal's Château la Teste. Do you know where that is?"

"No. I only know that from wherever it is we're going, there can be no turning back."

He tightened his arm around her, they rode on in silence.

Les Landes was but thirty miles from Bordeaux, yet deep in an isolation desirable to a tribe of sea barons. As they neared the castle, two of the captal's retainers, holding torches, came to meet them and guided them the rest of the way.

They went beneath the raised portcullis through massive walls and stopped by the door of the round donjon tower. Katherine was so cramped and chilled that she could scarce stand. John put his arm around her waist and they ascended the stairs to the Great Hall.

Here, though no servants were visible, an enormous fire blazed on the hearth. In the iron brackets a dozen perfumed candles burned. The floor was strewn with sweet rushes and rose petals, while the damask-covered table was banked with jasmine.

John, watching Katherine tenderly, saw the deep breath with which she drew in the fragrances, and he smiled.

"Take off your black robe, Katrine," he said, "and refresh yourself, my dear heart. You'll find everything needful." He led her to a small room adjacent to the hall. A fat tiring woman curtsied as they entered. The duke withdrew, saying "Hurry!" on an eager laugh.

While the girl washed, the tiring woman brought her a gown from the garderobe. The robe was of cream-white sendal trimmed by an embroidered gold-and-green cipher on the

To its eternal honor Christianity has stood steadfastly for the sanctity of the individual. To imprison the human spirit is the unpardonable sin, the attempt to make men automata, to force them into the same mold. No means will ever be found to induce human beings finally to surrender themselves, either body or soul, to a dictated felicity, to satisfactions chosen for them, whatever vulgar Caesars rule the world.

—W. MACNEILE DIXON:
The Human Situation

If you're watching every pound, when the drinks are passed around—

have grapefruit instead

Your weight depends on what you eat—and drink! A chilled glass of grapefruit juice quenches your thirst, perks you up, yet lets you keep your weight down, too. For along with its lively flavor, Florida grapefruit is strong on vitamins, not calories. Lots of vitamin C, for instance, one vitamin you need a fresh supply of every day.

These thirsty days you're likely to overlook the calories that come in glasses. Don't. Instead, have grapefruit juice. And have grapefruit sections, too—in desserts and in salads. Keep in mind—Florida Grapefruit is kind to your calorie-count.

Worth its weight in health—Florida Grapefruit Sections or Juice in cans

Plump sections tumble out ready, as is, for breakfast or dessert, or for salads. Lively tasting juice is a wonderful refresher. A 6 oz. can of frozen concentrate makes a pint and a half of juice. Keep a pitcher chilled and ready to pour.

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION, LAKELAND, FLORIDA

Home Canning Topics

by Lucina Ball

IMAGINE—A QUART OF HOME-CANNED TOMATO JUICE, MADE FROM HOME-GROWN TOMATOES, costs about the same as a package of gum! Government estimates show tomatoes, for a quart of juice, cost about 2¢ to grow—and the cost of jar, heat and closure is but 3¢ a jar (figuring jar-life at 8 years). Approximately 5¢, for a quart of home-canned tomato juice seasoned to your own taste!

Good for Keeps!

When you use the Ball DOME Lid, you get the extra protection of a cream-white ENAMEL lining—a clean-looking inner surface that resists food acids. And Ball DOME-sealing is sure—you see it: DOME down, jar sealed.

Tempting Tomato Juice Cocktail

5 quarts chopped tomatoes	2 sprigs parsley
¼ cup chopped celery	1 tbsp. sugar
2 tbsp. chopped onions	1 tbsp. Worcestershire sauce
½ small bay leaf	4 tbsp. lemon juice

Salt and Tabasco sauce to taste

Wash, drain, core, chop and measure firm red-ripe tomatoes. Wash, chop and measure celery and onion. Add everything except lemon juice, salt and Tabasco sauce to tomatoes. Cook slowly until tomatoes are soft. Press through fine sieve. Add lemon juice (or vinegar to suit taste), also salt and Tabasco sauce. Reheat juice to boiling. Pour, hot, into hot Ball Jars. Process 15 minutes in boiling-water bath.

On The Record

Over four generations have preferred Ball Mason Jars because they're made especially for home canning. Shaped for space-saving; non-slip ribs.

One Secret of Success

By removing air bubbles after filling you help prevent food discoloration; assure a better seal. To release bubbles, run a knife around the inside of the jar between contents and jar.

What Number Jars?

It's well to gauge the number you'll need—add new Ball Mason Jars to those you already have, before it's too late. A bushel of tomatoes, for instance, yields 15 to 20 quarts. For other yields, see the Ball Blue Book . . . and get your Ball Jars now! They're the ONLY jars with Ball DOME Lids!

Ball Blue Book Shows the Way!

Luscious tomato puree or tomato preserves mean better menu variety year-round! These recipes—among the 300 for fruits, vegetables and relishes—are in the illustrated Ball Blue Book of Home Canning and Freezing. Send 25¢ (coin) to:

BALL BLUE BOOK
Dept. L84, Muncie, Indiana

© 1954
BALL BROS. CO.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

CAN WITH CONFIDENCE ...CAN WITH Ball

low-cut bosom. The cipher was a J and K intertwined with leaves and set in a heart. Katherine looked at the cipher and her eyes filled with bittersweet tears. She slipped the gown over her head and the woman girded it, then, unbinding Katherine's hair, she began to comb out the shimmering auburn strands.

John came to the door as Katherine started to replait her hair. "Nay!" he cried. "Don't bind it, my love. Leave it loose."

"Like a bride?" she whispered, half smiling.

They supped at the table near the fire in the hall. Nirac would have waited on them, but as he bent over to fill the gold hanaps with pale delicate wine, a shrinking repulsion penetrated Katherine's enchantment. When the little Gascon retired to the serving table she said softly, "My dear lord, could we not be alone? I can serve you."

"Of course," he said instantly, and dismissed Nirac, though John was faintly surprised. "You don't dislike Nirac?" he asked.

She shook her head, not knowing herself what had caused the shrinking. "A whim, my dearest lord." Suddenly across the table she gave him her tenderly wistful smile. "Will you be gentle with my whims?"

She was all beauty as she sat there in her white dress. Her hair glistened like the carnelians he had once compared it to, her red lips were parted, her gray eyes dark with love. He trembled and, going to her, knelt beside her.

"I shall not always be gentle, Katrine," he said, looking up into her face. "But by the soul of my mother, I shall love you until I die."

They stayed three days in Les Landes. On the third evening they sat before the fire, drinking wine from a single cup, whispering little words such as lovers have always used.

Then John reached out for the lute which hung by a red velvet ribbon from a hearth peg and said, "Lovedy, listen. Now I think I have the tune for the song I wished to sing you."

He sang the old English words to a haunting melody and when he repeated the chorus she joined him.

So lovely was their duet that the Captal de Buch, who had paused outside the door of the hall, turned to Nirac, who had followed him. "Can that be the duke? They sing like angels together. Are they then so happy?"

Nirac shrugged. "No doubt they are, captal. I've not seen them in three days. The tiring woman waits on them."

The captal thumped with his fist on the door, but they were finishing their song and did not hear him, so he opened the door.

"Your pardon, my lord—lady," he stammered, backing off. He saw the measure of entrancement which held the duke, in that he did not flash with fury at this interruption. Instead he put his arm around the girl in a gesture so tender and protective that the captal swallowed hard.

"What is it, De Grailly?" John said. "Have you come to be thanked for your hospitality?" He smiled. "We will not need paradise, I think, my Katrine, after Château la Teste."

The girl raised brilliant eyes and moved in her lover's arm, as though she nestled closer.

THE captal cleared his throat. "I came, my lord, because you told me to. It is now Thursday night. There are many urgent matters awaiting you at Bordeaux. May I have a few words with you, my lord?"

The duke started to refuse, but Katherine slipped from his arm and, giving the captal a tremulous smile, walked into the bedchamber.

"She's of a great beauty, your little Swynford, mon duc," said the captal, recovering his aplomb now that Katherine was gone. "I congratulate you on a delicious interlude."

The duke looked at him strangely and said, "She is my heart's blood. My life. I want nothing but her."

The captal walked to the wine flagon and poured himself a gobletful. "The Castilian commissioners have returned with the signed contracts and ring, your Grace. You are now formally betrothed to the Queen of Castile. The marriage is set for the Feast of St. Matthew in the church at Roquefort."

The duke said nothing. Lines drew themselves around his mouth.

"Yesterday," pursued the captal, "John Holland of Kent arrived from England with wedding presents and letters from the king's Grace, your father, and the Prince of Wales. I have brought them to you. We'll set out for Bordeaux at daybreak? Your council will be waiting you at nine."

"No," said the duke. "I'll not go to Bordeaux tomorrow. Nor for a fortnight."

"But, my lord ——"

"For two more weeks Katrine and I shall be alone together. I'm going to take her to the Pyrenees."

"But you can't!" stammered the captal. "And there's no time, the wedding arrangements'—— This is folly!"

John got up from the chair. "You forget, De Grailly, whom you are addressing?"

The captal flushed and murmured apology. The duke gave him minute instructions and ended the interview by calling "Katrine" in a voice of poignant longing.

A POEM CAME ON

By ROBERT P. TRISTRAM COFFIN

I felt a poem coming on,
I did not know its matter;
But I was sure it would be good
And make the day much better.

All at once it came all out;
It was a small boy bare
Of every civilizing thing
Except his well-clipped hair.

He was headed for a swim
But stopped to pick up shells;
The way his slim limbs arched and moved
Made me think of bells.

He was unconscious of himself
As a nearby plover,
No part of his gracefulness Needed any cover.

The boy was beauty, nothing less,
That every man should be.
Then my slim young poem went Tail up into the sea.

The lovers left Château la Teste the next noon, headed for the south. With them on the journey went two of the captal's men, a shepherd and a blacksmith, both well acquainted with the nearly trackless wastelands they must traverse.

Katherine rode pillion behind John on Palamon. He raised one of her hands and kissed the palm. "You are happy, sweetheart?"

"Happy, my dearest lord."

"Nay, Katrine, for these ——" He could not bear to put a term to the time they would be like this together, nor had she asked. They spoke of nothing but each other and their love. "For this journey I am not your 'lord'; we are but John and Katherine, a respectable couple bound like many another on pilgrimage to Compostella. We are nothing else."

She laughed joyously.

"You've never seen the mountains," he went on, as they followed their plodding guides. "I long to show them to you."

He did not know why he yearned to take her to the wildness and grandeur of the Pyrenees. Perhaps it was that he wished to be alone with her in lands which did not owe him suzerainty and where no one could know him. Perhaps it was the more primitive instinct of seeking the most beautiful of natural frames for their love.

And on the second day when they saw the Pyrenees, a rugged pile of purple shadows tinged with silver, sharp-etched against southern sky, Katherine caught her br Tears came to her eyes. And as they p trated through the Basque lands into Nav climbing ever upward among rushing stre rock cliffs and the darkness of pines, their deepened. No longer frenzied in its phy hunger, but sustained and quietened spirit higher than themselves.

One day they reached the top of the and pushed on some miles to a tiny mou inn. The black-eyed Basque landlady a no questions, and allotted them a small chamber, while the captal's two servitors quartered in one of the many caves holl out of the cliff.

THE days John and Katherine spent a inn were a timeless enchantment. They dered among the mountains and found a pastured valley where Katherine picked flowers: the tiny lemon-colored saxifr violet ramondia, white spiky asphodel, alpen rose. She wove them into garlands John lay on the velvet greensward beside

In this bright secret valley which they made their own there was a ruined ch Two of the chapel walls had fallen rubble, but against a portion of the east the rough square altar still stood. It carved with odd runic scrolls and suppor stone crucifix. They loved the little chap indeed they had endowed each feature valley with the magic of their own dream sun shone each day, and each night the blessed them through the chill, sparklin

When nearly a week had passed there a night when Katherine felt a change. A dark urgency and restlessness was or lover. Several times he started to speak t but checked himself, and she was afraid

She fell at last into a heavy miserable When she awoke the first rays of the sun through the window. She started up w cry, for he was not beside her. She dr with clumsy, shaking fingers and ran ou into the cool sunrise.

Palamon was in the stable, so she gu where John had gone, and ran up the hills until she reached their valley. At fir could not find him, then she saw a so figure standing on top of a little peak guarded the valley to the south.

She climbed up to him silently. He di move as she joined him on the summit thought he had not heard her.

Yet he spoke, without looking at he gaze fastened on the horizon. "That is C far yonder where the gold light falls o hills."

Castile. The word hissed like an add hate it, hate it!" she cried. "And I hat the Castilian woman! Tell me, my lord who-would-be-king, when will the Cas wench become a bride?"

He jerked around with a violence to r her own. "You dare to speak to me like You forget, Katrine ——"

"Forget! Can I ever forget that this i tense? I am no duchess, no queen, but I been your equal in love; for this I dare you how I feel."

Anger died from his eyes. He bent his and stepped toward her. "Dear heart, v equal in love. You've no cause for hatre you shall never leave me. You shall go ba England at once and wait for me a Savoy ——"

"And I'm to be like Alice Perrers? what of your new duchess, the Queen stanza? How will she like this arrangem

He stiffened and said coldly, "You little knowledge of courts. It is a comm rangement. After all, we have been lover past fortnight without scruples."

"This past fortnight, my lord, we hav or dishonored no one. We are both— free." Her voice broke, she looked at him anguish and fled down the hillside. Mov blind impulse, she ran into the little r chapel and flung herself to her knees wi hands clasped on the altar.

She felt him kneel down beside her and after a moment, a touch on her arm. H very low, "Look at me."

She raised her head slowly and ob He took her right hand in his and solemnly. "Here on consecrated grou light thee, Katrine, my love and in ive thee this ring, in the name of the d of the Son, and of the Holy e drew from his finger the sapphire nd slipped it on Katherine's finger.

down at it, bent and pressed her lips
.

ember eighteenth, three days before of Saint Matthew, Katherine sat guest chamber of the Benedictine Bordeaux. Her traveling chest had ght and she was again dressed in rning robes. Katherine sat quietly t over the harbor where a cluster of ed and swung with the ripples of ne. Her face was white and still.
nun knocked on the door, entered t madame had a caller—the duke's Katherine rose.
William had been chatting with the e turned as Katherine entered and neath his black cowl his eyes were did not smile at her.
rtress vanished. Katherine sank a stool. She raised her face to the waited for him to speak.
e softened only a trifle as he saw the eneath her gray eyes and the lines of hat pulled at her mouth. Then he head. "I had never thought to come woman as you, with the sort of mesing. The duke awaits you in his Chamber. He cannot receive you exe of the many who are filing through ce."
," she said. Dull red flowed up her ld be wise," continued the brother distaste, "for you to remove that ear. It would be as familiar to many ce as it is to myself."

k off the sapphire seal ring and into her bosom.
uke will manage that you have a few alone together, but the time must
I am directed to repeat the arrange-Grace has made for you. When you will proceed to the Savoy, bearing ters which will grant you fifty marks d appoint you resident governess to 's two little daughters. You may send sister, Mistress Chaucer, and your children to join you at the Savoy, y will also be provided for. You will the Savoy until the duke returns." paused, before adding with biting
, "When, I gather, further intimacies nue to be suitably rewarded." er William!" Katherine jumped to "You've no right to speak to me like already refused these arrangements, use them, though now—now ——" er lips. "Do you think I've no pride?
think I don't suffer?"

r drew a long sigh. "Peace, child,"
"I don't judge you, that is for God to gazed at her intently. "Nirac de is ill," he said.
!" she cried in amazement. "Why do k of him now? Oh, I'm sorry he's ill, e scamp."
believe that I am quite wrong, thought with relief. This girl at least knew if there were truly anything to know.
e more kindly to Katherine as they toward the palace.
entered the crowded anteroom and William introduced her to the chamwho said that my Lady Swynford e received in her due turn.
t the chamberlain spoke her name and ame to usher her. An unknown squire her at the door of the Presence
r and opened it for her to enter.
uke sat in a gilded canopied chair. On d he wore a coronet studded with ons, rough lumps of emeralds, balas
His surcoat of topaz velvet was furred mine, and above the gold Lancastrian is face was tired and bleak.
tood where she was, in the middle of r, until he reached out his hand and Come to me, Katrine." went over to the dais and, kneeling, is hand. He drew her slowly up against d kissed her on the lips.

"Brother William gave you my message?"

"Yes, my lord."

"You'll not refuse again, my dear one. I must know that you'll be waiting for me."

"I cannot refuse again," she said in a strangled voice, "for I believe I bear your child."

"Jesu!" he cried; his eyes blazed with light. "Katrine, now you cannot leave me! I'll cherish you, care for you. You shall see what it is to be loved by the Duke of Lancaster!"

"And in return, my lord, I give you my good name."

"Nay, darling, it need not be. I'll do all to protect your good name. 'Tis fitting enough that you should be appointed governess to my daughters; they're fond of you. And everyone knows that your husband died in my service and that you were"—he paused—"beloved of the Duchess Blanche."

She looked at him sadly, thinking that men saw only what they wished to see; it would not be easy to conceal their love or the fruit of it. She said, sighing, "I'll do as you say until you return, and I'll do my best for your children." And mine, she added silently, for in these last days she had thought much with painful yearning of her trueborn babies.

A flourish of trumpets sounded from outside the window.

"The heralds practice for your wedding march," she said, the words dropping like stones on a wooden dish. "And now adieu, my lord."

"Katrine!" he cried. He pulled her close against him. "You must be careful, you will be safe on this journey. Oh, my Katrine, do you love me?"

The bitterness left her eyes, she put her arms around his neck and met his hot, demanding lips with a gentle kiss. "Aye, my lord, I love you," she said with a laugh that was half a sob. "I think you need not ask."

(To be Continued)

DISCOVERED! New joy of eating for health-loving American families!

NEW Enriched NUCOA is digestible even for babies*

NEW! ENRICHED!

Enriched for the richer glow of health. Made with doubly-pasteurized skim milk and extra-light vegetable oils—so easy to digest!

HERE'S NEW JOY OF EATING that embraces all your loved ones—*for New enriched Nucoa is good even for baby's first spread. Even more digestible than wholesome toast!

Richer in milk-minerals, too, than the most expensive spread! Everything that goes into New Nucoa margarine is good for you!

Rich in 2 vitamins your child must get!

Even Nucoa's golden color comes from carrots to give your child Vitamin A. Essential to good vision, glowing health! He gets Vitamin D, too. Just 2 ounces of enriched Nucoa gives 62% of his daily need for Vitamins A and D!

Made and shipped fresh every day!

Not one pound of Nucoa is ever kept in cold storage. Fresh-made Nucoa is smooth and luscious on bread—heavenly in your cooking and baking. Discover New enriched Nucoa for yourself!

NEW ENRICHED NUCOA®—so good it's digestible even for babies!

NEW!

DOCTOR'S DEODORANT DISCOVERY*

SAFELY STOPS ODOR 24 HOURS A DAY!

New Mum with M-3 won't irritate normal skin or damage fabrics

Proved in underarm comparison tests made by a doctor. Deodorant without M-3, tested under one arm, stopped perspiration odor only a few hours. New Mum with M-3, tested under other arm, stopped odor a full 24 hours.

1. *Exclusive deodorant based originally on doctor's discovery, now contains long-lasting M-3 (Hexachlorophene).

2. Stops odor all day long because invisible M-3 clings to your skin—keeps on destroying odor bacteria a full 24 hours.

3. Non-irritating to normal skin. Use it daily. Only leading deodorant containing no strong chemical astringents—will not block pores.

4. Won't rot or discolor fabrics—certified by American Institute of Laundering.

5. Delicate new fragrance. Creamier texture—new Mum won't dry out in the jar.

6. Gentle, safe, dependable—ideal for sanitary napkins, too. Get new Mum today.

NEW MUM®

cream deodorant with long-lasting M-3

(HEXACHLOROPHENE)

® PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

THE CLEARING

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 47

"If you don't keep your guineas on your side of the valley," Morton Hinton hollered to me, "I'll wring their infernal necks."

That night I put my guineas up again. I fixed the henhouse so they couldn't get out and roam the hills as they had always done. While Finn, pa and I cleared land on one side of the valley, the Hintons cleared on the other side.

Though we'd never been close enough to the Hintons to talk with them and we didn't want to get that close, we found ourselves trying to do more work than the four of them. Each day, that early March, rain or sunshine, four Hintons worked on their side of the valley, and pa, Finn and I worked on our side. One day a Hinton boy hollered at us, "You can't clear as much land as we can."

"Don't answer him," pa said.

The next day Mrs. Hinton came to the clearing and worked with them. Mom watched her use a sprouting hoe, a mattock, brier scythe and an ax.

"She works like a man," mom said, as she watched her from the window "Poor woman. I feel sorry for her. Out working like that!"

"Other women work," pa snapped. "You work, don't you?"

"When I'm pregnant, I don't get out in the cold March wind and clear ground," mom said.

"I didn't know she was pregnant," pa said.

"Well, she is," mom answered.

When April came and the Hintons had finished clearing the hill, and had burned the brush, Mort Hinton brought a skinny mule hitched to a cutter plow and started plowing the newground. He plowed slowly the first day. The second day my guineas got out again and flew across the valley to the plowed ground. Mort Hinton caught two of them, twisted their necks and threw them down into the valley. The others flew back home when he tried to catch them. Then he yelled across to where we were plowing our newground and told us what he had done.

"I feel like taking a shotgun and sprinkling him," I said.

"YOUR guineas were on his land," mom said. "He'd told you to put them up."

Mort Hinton plowed his newground by working from daylight until dusk, while Mrs. Hinton and the boys carried armloads of roots from the field and stacked them in great heaps. By the first of May they had made this rooty newground soil like a garden. Then came a rainy season in early May and they carried baskets of tobacco plants and set them in the straight-furrowed rows.

"They're workers, all right," pa said, agreeing with mom. "But I don't understand how a man can let his wife get out there and drop tobacco plants when she is so near to being a mother again."

"Maybe they have to work to live," mom said.

"Not like that," pa said.

On a dark night about a week later I watched from my upstairs window a moving light. It came from the direction of Hintons', over the hill and down into the valley below our house. In a few minutes I heard footsteps on the porch. Then a loud knock on our door. I heard pa get out of bed and open the door.

"I'm Mort Hinton," a voice said. "My wife sent for your wife."

I heard mom getting out of bed.

"I'll be ready in a minute," she called out.

Neither pa nor Mort said another word.

"I'll be back when everything is all right," mom told pa as she hurried away.

I watched the lantern fade from sight as Mort Hinton and mom went down the path into the deep valley below the house. In two minutes or more it flashed into sight again when they reached Hinton's tobacco field. The light moved swiftly up and over the hill. Next morning pa cooked breakfast for us. He quarreled about Hintons as he stood near the hot stove frying eggs.

"Yeah, when they need something over there," pa grumbled and muttered.

We were ready to sit down to breakfast when mom came home.

"Dollie Hinton's got a pretty girl baby over there," were mom's first words as she sat down for a cup of coffee.

"What did they name the baby?" Glenna asked.

"They've not named her yet," mom said. "Think they plan to call her Ethel. They're tickled to death. Six boys and now a girl!"

"What kind of people are they, anyway?" pa asked.

"Like other people," mom said. "They don't have much furniture in their house. They're working hard to pay for their farm."

"Will they be any better neighbors?" pa asked.

"I think so," mom said. "That hill over there is not a fence between us any longer."

"There's more than a hill between us," I said. "What about my guineas Mort Hinton killed? Did he say anything about 'em last night?"

"And what about the Hinton boy that hit me on the foot with a rock?" Finn said. "I'd like to meet up with him sometime."

By the time we had finished our breakfast, Mort Hinton was plowing the young tobacco. His three sons were hoeing the tender plants with long-handled gooseneck hoes.

"Looks like Mr. Hinton would be sleepy," mom said. "He never went to bed last night. And the boys slept on the hay in the barn loft."

Pa, Finn and I didn't have too much sympathy for the Hintons. Through the dining-room window we could look across the valley and watch Mort keep the plow moving steadily. We watched his boys dig with their hoes, never looking up from the ground.

"This will be a dry, sunny day," pa said. "We'll burn the brush piles on the rest of our clearing."

We gathered our pitchforks, hoes and rakes and went to the hill where we had cleared ground all spring. There were hundreds of brush piles on our twenty acres of cleared ground. The wind was still. The sun had dried the dew from the leaves and tufts of broom sage that carpeted the ground between the brush piles.

"It's the right time to burn," pa said, holding up his hand. "I can't feel any wind. The brush has seasoned in these piles until it is as dry as powder."

Pa struck a match to the brush pile at the bottom of the clearing. The fire started with little leaps over the leaf-carpeted ground. Finn, pa and I fired along the bottom of the clearing until we had a continuous line of fire going up the slope. Then a wind sprang from nowhere. And when flames leaped from brush pile to brush pile, pa looked at me.

"This is out of control," pa said. "G hoe and start raking a ring."

"I'm afraid we can't stop it," Finn "We'll have to work fast if we save th chards."

"Shut up and run to the house and ge and Glenna," pa yelled.

"Look, pa," Finn said, pointing dow hill.

Mort Hinton was in front. He was ru up the hill. His three sons were running b him, each with a hoe across his shoulde

"It's out of control," pa shouted to before he reached us.

"We've come to help," Mort said.

"Can we keep it from the orchards asked.

"Let's run to the top of the hill an against it," Mort said. "I've burnt hundr acres of clearings on hillsides and I alwa the top first and let it burn down! I fi bottom last. Maybe we'll not be too l save the orchards!"

MORT ran up the hill and we followed and I didn't speak to his boys and they speak to us. But when we started raking side by side, we started talking to the Hir We forgot about the rock fight. Now the time to remember it, when flames under the hill were shooting twenty to feet high. In no time we raked the ring a the top of the clearing. And the fire Mort ton set along the ring burned fiercely dow hill and made the ring wider and wider. once fire blew across the ring, and pa st it then.

As soon as we had this spot under co we raked a ring down the west side nea peach orchard. Mort set a line of fire this ring and let it burn toward the mid the clearing. Then we raked a ring on th side and fired against the fire that wa proaching our plum trees and our house. the leaping flames met in the clearing. W the fire under control. Our clearing was b clean as a whistle.

"How much do I owe you?" pa asked Hinton.

"You don't owe me anything, Mick," said. "We're just paying you back for th your wife gave us last night."

"Then let's go to the house for dinner said.

"Some other time," Mort said. "We go home and see about Dollie and the b

As we went down the hill, Finn and I t with Big Adger, Al and Little Mort squirrel hunting and wild-bee trees, wh and Mort laughed and talked about we and crops.

"I wish you'd pay a little more attention when I'm trying to break something to you gently."

I .EARNED NOT TO BE AFRAID OF MARRIAGE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 37

out as often as I would allow—he nly escort my mother into the living ectly after coffee was served, settle newspaper, and then he and I would hes. I admired his masterfulness with ith me, his way of taking authority. day night when my hands were deep water, Grant demanded a fresh towel. to a shelf just as he reached. His dry sed over my damp, soapy hand. met.

y?" he asked.

ed. I was so happy I couldn't speak. ant put his arms around me and we y old doubts and confusions seemed melted away. I felt as though I were a stful and trusted, as though Grant husband and this was our kitchen. Grant's thoughts followed mine.

you could see my apartment in the aid he. "The kitchen is smaller, but etty and much more modern."

ne reason, my mood changed. I could lf drawing back and clanging invis- s to shut him out. I rubbed my cheek dly against his cheek, pulled free and k to washing dishes.

ry next afternoon—it happened to be Day—Grant and I had our first By the time Friday and my appoint- h my counselor rolled around I was set and scared, for I hadn't seen l week. Both my sisters had been ith colds that fateful Sunday and un- ay their customary Mother's Day hated to leave mamma alone, and Grant and I should either stay at home er along with us to the beach. Grant He went to the beach—by himself. ute he rushed off, I knew I had been My mother was perfectly healthy. I old to be tied to her apron strings. f times during the week I had reached elephone to lower the foolish banners ide and do the peacemaking. But the e call must wait. Gertrude and I were a weekend jaunt to Carmel.

did you plan the out-of-town trip, Mrs. Marsh asked me. "Did you ant might drop around this Sunday up?"

ed. She was right. I had thought just guess," I explained uncertainly, "I nt Grant to feel too sure of me."

u love him, why shouldn't he feel sure

a good question. My counselor and I analyze the Mother's Day trouble. I voked the dispute. Why? I tracked quarrelsome mood to Saturday eve- en I'd taken fright at Grant's mention otel. I'd had the feeling he was press- toward a decision I wasn't ready to proposal of marriage had been about n in the pleasant, food-scented air of nen, and I had nipped it in the bud. I rked against what I wanted. What I —and each day I felt more sure of as to share Grant's life with him. I eved when he phoned. We didn't dis- quarrel. I had cleared up the reasons my own mind.

to wait two more months for my dul. Day by day, the relationship be- Grant and me was deepening. I wasn't any more. I was content to sit in the the evenings and look at the glimmer- s and talk quietly to Grant about seri- ngs I had never discussed with a man The word "marriage" wasn't men- But we talked about the number of n in an ideal family, with me wanting Grant thinking one boy and one girl ough, so that both could be sure of He would never be rich, he warned alth didn't interest me, I told him. We about his love for Arizona until the tion he found in that desert land seemed off on me. Not once did I protest his ber departure; it was clear his mind to be changed. And in a strange, new at made me glad and proud. Grant was He would make his own decisions.

During those evenings, I acquired an encyclopedic knowledge of the motel—the twelve rental units, Grant's apartment, the apartment occupied by his partner and his partner's wife. I heard about the loneliness, the long hours and confinement; the mad rush in the late afternoons when the tourists began pouring in, followed by the mad early-morning rush when the tourists poured out again; the difficulty of keeping an Indian maid to help with the perpetual grind of cleaning and bedmaking. I wasn't alarmed or disturbed. I was willing, I thought as I waited, to carry my share of the load. I knew the motel wasn't doing quite as well financially as Grant had expected, largely because of the heavy redecoration expenses. One evening I tentatively spoke of my fairly sizable savings. A little gruffly Grant said he was glad for my sake, so I didn't bring up that subject again. Grant's hard daily labor had paid for half the motel carpeting by mid-June and weekly reports from his partner indicated that the tourist business was booming. Someday in the future, Grant confided to me, he would like to buy out his partner's interest. It seemed that his partner's wife, an Eastern girl, wasn't fond of the desert. Anyway, the enterprise was hardly large enough, Grant went on, to support two families who wanted children. Now there was an interesting remark!

My proposal, when it finally came—or so I thought at first—occurred under inauspicious circumstances. It was a torrid Monday in July. After a movie, Grant wanted to stroll along Wilshire Boulevard and window-shop. I was telling Grant about the sterling and linens I owned, when we stopped at a furniture display. In the window, lighted by rosy lamps, was a velvet-draped bed, the most fabulous I've ever seen outside the movies.

Grant whistled. "After we're married," he said casually, "if you're a good girl, I may buy you a bed like that. In the meanwhile, all the beds in the motel are unusually comfortable. The bed in my apartment is tops."

"After we're married!" said I. "You haven't asked me to marry you yet. Aren't you rushing things a bit?"

"I don't think so. Fooling around can make a man trouble. My last girl got away."

His last girl? My heart that had seemed to be floating like a bubble somewhere inside me fell with a thud. His last girl? What a horrid and unromantic way to propose! Before I could stop my tongue, I was telling Grant I'd had a few other sweethearts myself. He needn't think he was the only one.

"Why, of course," said he, with a big wide grin. "You're thirty; in another month I'll be thirty myself. I'd hate to marry a girl no other man wanted. Would you like to marry a man other girls considered downright repulsive?"

Well, no, I wouldn't. It was stupid and childish, I realized, to expect a high-flown, movie-style proposal. It was the present and the future that mattered. I had no right to be jealous of Grant's past when he had proved his devotion and long ago had earned my trust. All the many things I had learned about myself and about Grant seemed, in that flashing second, to fuse together into the ultimate lesson. The lesson that brings sureness and wisdom and ecstasy too. I said shakily:

"You certainly aren't repulsive to me. You look exactly like my husband to me."

With that, we both burst out laughing. And then Grant kissed me squarely on the mouth right there on Wilshire Boulevard. Furthermore, I kissed him back.

The rest is history. Grant and I were married on the Labor Day weekend. Two months allowed me ample time to select a smallish trousseau appropriate for Arizona, to hold a series of clearance sales in my shop and dispose of the lease. I could think of no better place to invest my profits and savings than in my husband's future.

We bought out Grant's partner in order that the two of us could start off as the sole owners of a family business. Our wedding was simple. At Grant's insistence—he knew how much the day meant to me—I did wear a beautiful wedding dress and veil and my sisters stood at the altar with me.

Nearly a year has elapsed since Grant and I exchanged the rings we wear today. My continuing happiness is beyond my powers of description. My old doubts and mistrusts and fears seem as remote to me today as does the bewildered child of six, once myself, who decided in her ignorance that marriage was chancy and dangerous.

Some people might describe my present existence as hard—keeping a prospering motel up to scratch isn't a cinch—but I have my dear husband to help me. If you drive west on Highway 80 this summer you may drop in on us. Look for the place where a tall, sunburned man is vigorously mowing the lawn or wielding a paintbrush and a brisk-stepping woman is hanging out dozens of pillowcases and sheets. So far, we don't own a drier.

A new washing machine and a drier, as it happens, rank high on Grant's and my buying agenda. In four more months there will be three of us. To date my husband and I haven't settled the exact number of our children. Shall it be five? Or shall it be two? This is one of the many absorbing and satisfying questions Grant and I discuss from time to time, as we advance into marriage and grow in ourselves and grow ever closer together. END

"Suitcase Lugging is for the Birds!"

SAY COLLEGE STUDENTS IN THE KNOW...

There's a new no-work way to get clothes back to college

NO PACKING...NO PRESSING...
NO SUITCASE LUGGING—AND NOT A WRINKLE
IN A CLOSET FULL!

Why not send your son or daughter back to college the carefree, labor-free way? It's not only easier on them but also worlds better for their clothes. Just turn their clothes over to your local Sanitone Dry Cleaner and he'll take care of everything. Every single garment will arrive on campus with time to spare—all dirt removed—spots gone—colors and textures like new and everything neatly pressed...not a wrinkle in a closet full! Ask your local Sanitone Dry Cleaner or write directly to us.

HOW TO FIND YOUR NEAREST SANITONE DRY CLEANER—

Just look in the classified pages of your telephone directory, under Cleaners, for "Sanitone Approved Service". There you will find listed the Sanitone Dry Cleaner in your town. If you cannot locate one, write to us.

SANITONE franchises are still available for quality-minded dry cleaners who can satisfy Sanitone's rigid requirements. If interested in offering this superior nationally advertised dry cleaning in your community, write for details today.

APPROVED SANITONE SERVICE

Sanitone

DRY CLEANING SERVICE

A Division of Emery Industries, Inc. • Carew Tower • Cincinnati 2, Ohio

THE CASE OF ANNE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 37

problems Anne frightened herself, and subsequently scared off a number of men. Her eyes, her attention always strayed from the man on hand to the next one on the horizon—who might be a perfect Prince Charming. The men she rejected comforted themselves by finding a less popular and fickle girl, and Anne comforted herself by illogically doubting their loyalty to her. Eventually, she decided she lacked the ability to love. This fallacy became a real obstacle, of course—if you tell yourself often enough you can't love, you're likely to end up believing it.

Anne had always been popular, and her mother shared in her social triumphs. Anne was her mother's baby, fondly waited on and taken care of. Paying no board at home, she was able to buy, at nineteen, a car of her own she used for dating. Often she drove to a dance in it, and whenever a new male conquest offered to take her home, she accepted the offer and quietly left her own car behind; she picked it up the day after. Anne has always loved male attention, and showed tremendous skill in achieving it. Although only a fair swimmer, she often suggested to a man a trip to the beach—she was fully aware of her pretty figure. Constantly circulating and being surrounded by admirers is a natural enough desire in a young girl, but less appealing in the case of a woman of Anne's age who wants to achieve marriage and permanence. It was, finally, the very changeability in her circle of men friends that finally brought Anne up short, as she realized that she was continually changing partners with no impulse to remain with any one man. Suddenly, too, she realized that her former throng of suitors was n like ice cream in a hot sun.

Anne's life had become more center her home, her mother, her small busine one favorite woman friend, and she ex men to enter that limited circle of interest her. Naturally, quite a few men rebelled realization that courting Anne meant into her too-small and woman-centered life. Anne herself was becoming mor more reluctant to leave home and to a man to a life where her comforts wo far less assured and where she would pected to be a helpmate.

After she began counseling, Anne beg grow out of her dreamy introspection had paid no heed to her domestic lacks; ing lessons helped her, both practicall emotionally. Books, magazines, a p speaking course helped her develop o neglected intellectual side and gain control of her conversational habits, affectations and expressing herself naturally. She had been fuzzy and irre to an extreme degree, hoping always for one else to take decisions off her shoulde her long wait for the appearance of an husband, Anne was anxiously awaiting no man could give her—the emotiona curity she had lacked in childhood. mother, too, invariably spotted liabilitie suitor and passed her findings on to Anne guess is that the mother's overprotectiv and solicitude represented an effort o part to make up for the lacks displayed b father of the family. In her maternal effo spare Anne suffering, she very nearly ceeded in robbing her of all the joys of riage and motherhood. After we took s Anne began to recognize those facts.

Many of the moonbeams began to from Anne's head, and she now began to at men from a realistic marriage standp Formerly she had been inclined to look, i man, for some resemblance to her father- whenever she found it, to shy away fro When she met Grant, she deliberately so qualities *un*reminiscent of her father—an found those. She also learned to keep in Grant's whole personality and especiall strengths, so that she lost her fear of a re tion of childhood experiences. Anne beg realize that she was no longer helpless could make and follow through decisio an adult way—and having assimilated fact, she felt prepared to accept the challe responsibility and joy of marriage.

Grant is a strong, determined young Anne's distinct femininity and her ling indecisiveness—she still seeks Grant's word on many small matters—are flatteri him and build up his strengths. Anne i longer the totally clinging vine she once (a clinging vine would be of little help to G in the Arizona motel business). While lear to be more self-confident, Anne takes her from Grant's initiative, and he benefits by confidence in his skill and wisdom. Prob a man less determined than Grant could n have wooed Anne away from her mo Anne's mother, although she had becom sidetracked as Anne, actually wanted daughter to marry and be happy, and t she is as delighted as her daughter and in-law at the prospect of a new grandchil

Anne and Grant now know great joy evitably, they will know sorrow. But if t two, making such a superb effort to unders and complement each other, don't make of it, I will lose a big wager with myself. I d believe any of us will lose. From Anne's n Highway 80 is a happy road.

READY OR NOT

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27

"There're fire escapes, aren't there?"

"Yeah, but this blaze is out of control!

"Then what are you hollering for? Yo going to lose your life too."

"That's why I'm hollering."

Morgan began to laugh. "Where is apartment, pop?" she asked, acutely av that the time had passed when she could r over to tousle Ned's hair. Or, if she and were alone, she could. But Julie was grow an demonstrations of love by members er mily were embarrassing to her.

Nc far away," her father said. "In that lo nent over on the river."
ov Morgan turned from the sideboard ec im. She said in a tone of disbelief, u an . . . that housing development?
p , pop—how absolutely wonderful.
n't you tell me? It'll be practically
!"
Yc re pleased?" Mr. Connor said cau-sly As a matter of fact, it wasn't easy to h lace."
Of urse it wasn't easy. Pleased? Well, ira I'm pleased. Those places are clean, ff have windows that open on the et, d the ——"
It' lean here, isn't it?" Mr. Connor se around the dark kitchen in which
S Mo n laughed again. "It's cleaned. But e' difference. How can we afford it?"
It' heaper than this place. Why do you k re moving?" her father asked curtly.
is a better neighborhood."
O neighborhood," Morgan said with ne difference. "Who cares about that?"
Pe does," Julie put in, feeling enough e passed with no word from her.

n either Morgan nor Mr. Connor lisd Morgan had drifted away to newly tt walls and outside rooms. Mr. Connor d ted back to Sarah, who, if she had d ould have recognized the hurt in his e ould have known that a low pay el trailing lamely behind prices meant re n fewer clothes, a cheaper apartment.
t was nothing the kids could under-
ic. organ was wonderful, and she wanted ig ce. Well, a man does what he must,
h had been gone a long time now.
V n are we moving?" Morgan asked.
F of September. At least—well, yes,
. They're painting the apartment.
tt hen they said it would be ready."
Se ember gives us practically a month," e d, beginning to wonder if she'd miss fr ds. Life, to Julie, was a seesaw. There s t one end, with most of the world at ot r, going up and down, up and down, er re how she got on or how to get off.
w e decided it was just as well they were vi "I think I'll go in and start packing,"
s
I nk you'll sit and finish your dinner," or corrected.

Ned leaned across the table toward his father. "There wouldn't, by any chance, be two bedrooms in this place? . . . Yeah, I knew there wouldn't. Just thought I'd ask." He swung back into place, toyed with his pudding.

Morgan, looking at his arms that were long and thin, the face that now showed no little-boy roundness, realized that of course he didn't wish any longer to sleep in a room with his sisters. The one bedroom, with the double bed and the cot by the window that Ned used. Now he was nine, and he'd want a room of his own (that, of course, was impossible) or at least to share a room with pop. Pop slept on the couch in the living room.

Living this way, Morgan thought, so huddled and without space, had helped to make Julie the sharp defensive girl she was. It had kept from them the simple right of people to be alone when they wished to be. If you were poor, you put cardboard in the bottoms of your shoes when they wore thin. If you were proud, you kept your feet on the floor so no one would know. If you were poor and proud you patched up your feelings, too, and arranged for them not to show. Ned had asked only casually about an extra room, and had received the "no" quite lightly. It was important to him, but importance, too, required more space than they had.

Morgan sat on the brownstone steps, watching Julie and Mag and Deborah play hopscotch. Morgan looked up and down the street. Nearly every window encased a housewife leaning on a pillow, a shirt-sleeved man yawning and scratching his chest. The development they were going to move into was tremendous, a red brick city on the East River. Morgan had walked over to look one day. Beautiful tall buildings on the river, they were.

Mag Lewis kept glancing up at Marty Banks' window, because sometimes in the afternoon he lounged there, blowing softly on his clarinet.

"For the love of mud, Mag, if you're playing, play," Julie said loudly. "We didn't draw this hopscotch in the sky." Deborah laughed, and Julie went on. "Anyway, Marty Banks is not home, I saw him go out ages ago."

Mag looked down, praying that no one had heard. Then she noticed Marty coming up the street, and it was too late to get out of the game. Mag glared at Julie, and Marty eased up to Morgan without a glance at the hopscotch players.

"Hi, Morg," he said, settling back on the steps as though they were cushioned.

"Do you have to call me that?" she asked, though other people did and she didn't mind at all. "It sounds like a place to die."

"What's eating you, sugar?"

"Nothing is. I just don't like to be called Morg. Or sugar either, for that matter."

"Pretty particular, aren't you?"

"You bet I am."

Marty debated a moment. "Want to go to a movie Friday night?"

"No, thank you."

Marty took out a pack of cigarettes, lit one, leaned back blowing smoke first through his nose, then in a long, fast, irritated breath from his mouth. "This is all because of the other night, I suppose?"

"Suppose away. I don't care."

"Look, Morg—I mean, Morgan—you're sixteen years old. How long do you intend to wait before you kiss a guy?"

"What gives you the idea that just because I won't kiss you, I never kissed anyone?"

They stared at each other for an uncomfortable second. Then Marty flipped his cigarette toward the gutter. "Have it your way," he said. He was attempting to look scornful, which he was not, rather than angry, which he was. "So long, Morg," he said as he walked away.

Morgan continued to watch the children and the street. A few houses down, Ned and some other boys were building a wagon out of an old doll carriage and a wooden crate.

Morgan, looking at her brother, at her sister, decided they were well occupied for a while. She got up, dusting casually at her skirt, and turned into the house. She began to mount the thin steep stairs, not touching the rail nor looking at the treads. She mounted as though to a scaffold, head up, arms hanging.

Her father, descending, had this impression. "You look like Mary Stuart preparing to die well."

Morgan was pleased. "Mary Queen of Scots? She was pretty, wasn't she?"

"I don't know. They've been viewed from a bias for so long, these dead queens. Even Elizabeth has somehow emerged as a redhead. California version."

"Well, she did have red hair, didn't she?" Morgan asked. She loved the movies, and her life had a celluloid gloss that blurred and softened its outlines. Through chaste pulp love stories, the cinema's impossible beauties, columns which aspired to provide physical perfection, Morgan pursued a dream of herself—lovely, beloved.

Now, on the stairway, she and her father edged past each other, smiling a little. Mr. Connor carried a scraped blue dinner pail. There was a book in the lunch pail, squashing his sandwiches. His bent head concluded the stooped line of his back; his blue suit was too large, as though he had bought it to grow into.

In the street, he waved to his daughter Julie and turned east toward his job in a subway station. He walked along, thinking of Morgan. He had named her.

"What sort of name is Morgan?" she'd asked him once. "People don't get named Morgan."

"You're named for Morgan le Fay, sister of King Arthur."

"Oh. Well, that's nice. Only it's sort of silly, don't you think? Morgan le Fay Connor—of Dump Street."

"You don't have to live on Dump Street all your life," he'd answered, hurt.

As so often happened, Morgan heard the words and missed the tone. "No," she said softly. "I don't."

She went upstairs, to the fourth floor and their apartment There was nothing to do now but set the kitchen table, put macaroni and cheese, already prepared, in the oven, open a can of fruit. She could do all that later. Now she had a couple of hours all her own, if the children stayed downstairs.

She stood in the room where the oak-and-green-frieze living-room furniture squatted on thin linoleum and began to cry. In a moment, hot tears tickled her cheeks. She walked to the bedroom and fell on Ned's cot by the window, crying for the things she wanted but would probably never have, for the mother she missed and sometimes couldn't picture, for Julie's torn socks and Ned's broken screw driver, for her father who had no one to talk to.

Then, when the passion had leaked away, she rolled to her back and lay, fingers locked beneath her head, tear-dampened, relaxed, believing that now everything would be easier.

That business of Marty could be forgotten. She shouldn't have gone out with him in the first place. She wasn't a child, and it was silly to think that someone who looked and talked like Marty would take her to a movie and then take her home nicely. She should have known that the fumbling hard hands would be at her, and the persistent mouth. She squeezed her arms together now against the remembrance. Well, that was over. And he hadn't quite kissed her. Only her cheek. How horrible he is, she "Certainly I paid the light bill. You mailed it yourself two weeks ago!"

2 delightful forms of the TALC in America's beloved fragrance

April Showers

1. The long-loved talc . . . silky-soft, luxuriously smoothing and soothing . . . with the fragrance that's fresh as a garden in the rain. Ask for April Showers REGULAR Talc. 39¢

2. New! Deodorant Form

An exciting, "two-purpose" version of this famous, fragrant talc. Wonderful ingredients have been added for all-over body deodorant protection. Ask for April Showers DEODORANT Talc. 50¢

ANNOUNCING... THE NEW...

April Showers

LIQUID CREAM deodorant

You'll want to discover this new anti-perspirant in creamy liquid form. Its smooth, creamy texture is so kind to your skin . . . pleasant to use and refreshingly scented! 79¢

Prices plus tax

by CHERAMY PERFUMER

thought. But that was all right. Because soon now they were moving away.

She lay a little longer, not really relaxed any more. Pretty soon she'd get up and take a bath.

Always, after crying, she felt this limpness, this languor touched faintly with shame. Suppose one of the kids should come up? She stirred uneasily, dropped one leg beside the cot, her foot touching the floor. How long had she been doing this, stealing off to cry? A year? Longer than that? Since her mother died, perhaps. She remembered liking to be near her mother's dresses that hung in the closet, when she'd been a little girl.

Whenever they moved, they stored the packing barrels in the latest basement, along with the large black trunk that was one of the earliest things in Morgan's memory. Mr. Connor went down to the basement for the barrels and trunk. He said that he and Ned would get the things up between them.

They went into the trunk room, which contained not only trunks but barrels, crates, huge old suitcases, unused doll and baby carriages. All were filmed with dust and had the inert deserted air of human belongings that have been put aside.

"It's odd," said Mr. Connor, "how completely people's things need people in order to be things at all. If you see an old branch lying in the forest, or a shell tossed up on the beach, you don't feel they've been forsaken by the tree, or the ocean. But a trunk in a storeroom has been abandoned, and it can't be itself till someone comes and takes it out of the storeroom. Isn't that so?"

Ned, who was used to his father's habit of talking his thoughts, sometimes didn't bother to answer. "Spooky," he said. He started walking through tiers of trunks. "Here it is, pop." Ned lifted on tiptoe to grasp a thick shabby leather handle of their black trunk. Dan hurried over. "We'll get this up and then come back for the barrels, O.K.?" Ned asked.

Morgan said to dump the trunk in the living room and she'd start packing. "Come on, Julie," she said. "You were all set to pack a month ago, so suppose we get at it now."

"O.K., O.K. Did I say I wouldn't?"

Morgan had already begun to take pots and dishes out of the closets. She'd been up since six. She'd done a washing, made potato salad and meat loaf for tomorrow, when the movers were coming, packed her father's books, and a few boxes of assorted belongings that, as in the past, she'd been tempted to throw away, and, as in the past, had finally retained.

Julie lingered. "Morgan, do you think that if—if mother were alive, we'd be straying around this way?"

"Pop would still be earning the money. And it still wouldn't be enough."

"Maybe," Julie said. "I mean, maybe he'd have a different job by now. A woman makes a lot of difference to a man," she said severely. "Do you suppose we could get a kitten?"

"When?" Morgan asked.

"In this other place. I've always wanted a kitten."

"We'll see," Morgan said gently. It was obvious why Julie had spoken of their mother. She always did when she wanted something badly. To soften me up, Morgan thought. And yet, wasn't that right? The way it should be? Sarah Connor had died when her younger daughter was ten, but years later just the recollection that she'd been there was help that Julie needed and took. A kitten might be fun.

It was beginning to get light when the alarm rang beside Morgan in the morning. She nudged Julie, curled and warm beside her. "Julie, wake up. The movers said they'd be here at seven."

Julie turned a slow sleepy head toward her sister. "I'll bet you anything they don't get here till noon."

"But they said they would."

There was a stirring on the cot by the window and Ned emerged from the covers. "Hey, it's today, isn't it?"

Ned gathered his clothes and went to the bathroom to wash and dress. He flicked on the overhead light as he left and in the hard illumination Julie and Morgan hunched a little, as though the room were already unfamiliar.

They dressed quickly, and stripped the beds, folding blankets and linen, packing them away in the bottom bureau drawer.

"Go tell pop to get up," Morgan asked as Ned emerged blinking and stretching. "And Ned, ask if he'll rope that dresser, will you?"

She folded bits of cardboard and wedged them into the drawers while Julie washed. The room, curtainless, furnished only with boxes, bare bedsteads supporting thin mattresses, and the as-yet-unroped bureau, looked queerly large. Her heels on the hardwood floor seemed to echo.

"I hope," Mr. Connor said, coming in with a length of rope, "that in this brave new flat of ours there will be neighbors who don't play jazz in the morning." He rubbed a hand over his head distractedly. "It's like eating candy before breakfast. It's—it's perverted."

"I know, pop." Morgan turned off the light. "Maybe, if you tried, you could get different hours. Work during the day, I mean."

"Maybe I can," he said wearily. "Morgan, is it possible that we are moving? Again? Is this the next time, or the last time, or what are we doing anyway?" He straightened, sighed, jockeyed the dresser away from the wall. "A city is the most restless place in the world. Back in Indiana we never moved at lived where you were supposed to l guess nobody but fruit pickers and ra drifted around the way we do now. I think that'd be dull, Morgan? Alwa in the same old place?"

Morgan shrugged and didn't ans left him tying a lot of knots that no o be able to untie this evening.

The kitchen, like the bathroom, o the air shaft and so it was always to have the light on here. In the deve (every room an outside room) they able to eat in the morning sun. Quit paredly, Morgan felt the singing rise o the lightening expectation of newness der that took her with the same cap suddenness as did, at other times, the tears. She had merely glanced at the thinking that the hunk of ice remainin have to be put in the sink before they happiness rollicked through her like tossing branches. Almost she lifted on meet the thought—There is something ful. I'm ready, she answered silently. I'

The movers were on time, and she occupied to notice at what point all ing elation flowed away. Emotion wa like that. She sprang to meet it, for some time later would realize with it had gone and she had not kn going.

The morning sun was still flooding apartment when Julie and Morgan tu key, opened the door and stepped i stood wordless in a little space ca foyer (the renting agent had pronou fwa-yay) and stared at their home. T dows had been cleaned, and the sun through was hot and bright on new pa nished floors. The living room looke mous, and there were three double el outlets in the baseboards. The girls hu the windows.

"Oh, Julie," Morgan wailed. "Ju can't see it. We can't see the river from

"Because we're only on the second guess."

Down in the street mothers were li with their baby carriages, it being a fi On the sidewalk there was a thin tree in a patch of grass every twenty feet, and of grass, protected by strips of wire, ra the wall. Across the street, stretching a they could see, were tenement buildin windows sprouted pillows and blankets boxes to hold food, potted plants. Sto along at street level. Morgan could, by around, see down the one block that ie East River. She could see a section of v pier, a strip of piles, a glimpse of brown

They turned away. To the right w kitchen, narrow and tiny, with metal and red sideboards. The sink, the sto wonderful electric refrigerator were al white. On the left a narrow hall led p bathroom to the bedroom. And, as th said, every room was an outside room.

"What luck," Morgan breathed, "t it facing east." She walked slowly, exa the buff walls, the white woodwork. never get the table in that kitchen," sh

"Who cares? We'll put it in the room. I'd like to eat in the living room, said excitedly.

The sinks, the bathtub were not quite There was a coating of dust on them dried scouring powder. "If they'd hurr the things," Morgan said, "I could start ing." She wheeled, after a glance at the light bedroom. "Is that icebox thing g Julie stepped into the little kitchen, p ear next to the refrigerator. "It's pur She opened it. The interior was cold and and looked tremendous. "Isn't it bea Morgy? How long do you suppose it ta make ice cubes?"

Morgan put the meat loaf and potato she'd carried with her on one of the "Julie, you're going to have to go to the We haven't anything at all, really."

Julie set her mouth. "I won't. I wi always be the first one who has to go store. I hate it."

"But I have to take care of things up Morgan didn't want to be the first one

TASTES SO GOOD... COSTS SO LITTLE!

WHOLESOME HOMEMADE FROSTEE

M-M-M...Smooth...So Easy to Make!

Delicious Frostee takes about 5 minutes of your time, your refrigerator does the rest. You get fresh homemade goodness every time, because you make Frostee with wholesome fresh milk. Costs only pennies a portion! Four exciting Frostee flavors – vanilla, chocolate, orange, lemon. Try 'em all and you'll serve 'em often!

COOL! LIGHT! REFRESHING!

ebellion of Julie's was new.

see why I can't take care of things Julie said, sensing Morgan's hesita- always done it before."

w," Morgan said. She lifted her a little. "All right. When the movers you'll know where to have things

I don't see why not. We've got the nber of rooms and the same furni-n nodded as they walked back to the m. "You know something, Julie?"

uld"—she looked around happily— d put that cot of Ned's in here. hat wall. And then the couch could nd pop and Ned could have this for om at night."

Ned'd be crazy about that." Julie pleased as Morgan. "Sure we can. we can have a room of our own stopped. "Do we have to go to bed d does? After all ——"

n interrupted. "We shall have a sit- n," she said gaily. "We'll retire early, ting room, when Ned goes to bed."

id, "I think it's a nice idea, Morgy." oing down for the food." She lingered t. "See you in a while," she said as walked to the window again.

lly isn't an awfully nice neighbor- lie said tremulously. She was begin- iss the streets she knew. And to miss Deborah too. She would be going rent school in a few days. Having re- d, she had to talk of it. "I don't see 't go over to my old school. Morgy, you talk to the principal? Couldn't n sighed. "No, Julie. It wouldn't do l anyway."

dn't answer. Morgan went out, clos- oor carefully. She went quickly across , disassociating herself from the mat- he cardboard cartons of cornstarch per, from her father and her brother. upstairs, walked from room to room, ng what the new school would be like.

both your schools are so close," said on the morning of the first day of why don't you meet and have lunch ?" She was packing sandwiches in aper bags. Three bags each containing dwiches, a chocolate cupcake filled lanched creamy substance, an apple pkin. They each had a nickel for milk, rgan, who had to ride the subway, money for carfare. She made her suggestion, turned to find her brother and sister regarding her with horror.

"Honestly, Morgan, you act like you'd never been young," Julie said. "We'd be ruined."

Ned sank back with relief. For a frightened moment he'd thought Julie might agree. Reassured, he continued to eat toast and jam.

Morgan poured coffee for her father, for herself. "Julie, I wish you'd eat." She watched as her sister pushed a listless spoon through shredded wheat.

"I can't eat," Julie said flatly. "There's no point in trying to make me, because I can't." She looked trim and pretty in a plaid skirt, navy-blue sweater, a narrow navy ribbon through her light hair. "Morgy, I don't feel very good."

Ned got up. "I think I'll go now," he said.

Morgan looked from Julie to her brother, wondering which to speak to first. As Ned was already on his way to the door, she called, "Are you sure you know the way?"

"Well, of course. It's only four blocks." He sounded very reasonable, almost as if he were teasing Julie, only Ned so rarely teased that Morgan couldn't be sure. "So long, pop. 'By, everyone." He was gone.

Mr. Connor reached over and patted Julie's hand. "You really don't feel well?" he asked.

Julie shook her head.

"You know, baby," Dan continued, "if you don't go today, you'll have to go tomorrow, or the next day. You can't just stop school."

"And if you go later," Morgan said, "it'll be harder yet, because then you'll be the only new one. This way, all of you will be there together not knowing anyone ——"

"How can you say that?" Julie interrupted in a high voice. "Everyone will know each other from last year. And I'll be all alone."

"But you've said that every time we've changed," Morgan sighed. "And it isn't as if it had ever really been so bad. You make friends quicker than anyone else I know."

"I do not," Julie said, as though her character had been assailed. "And I'm tired of always moving around and changing things and not living like other people ——" She broke off, seeing Morgan glance quickly at their father and back to her with a hardened expression. Once again she'd been led by her own excitement into saying too much.

"You're selfish," Morgan said. "And furthermore, you're not sick. And furthermore, I'm tired of plenty myself." She got up and, in an unaccustomed gesture, put a hand on her father's shoulder. "I have to get ready."

In the bedroom she put on the jacket to her gray, and only, suit, drew a bright red mouth with her dime-store lipstick, ran a comb through her hair.

She returned to the kitchen, picked up her lunch, and then, aware that she couldn't possibly leave like this, that the thought of Julie would be with her all day, she said, "It may be a very nice school, honey."

Julie looked up bravely. "O.K., Morgy. I'll go. And I won't complain any more."

Mr. Connor started to speak, hesitated, began again. "It isn't your complaining that bothers us. I mean, it does, but if it makes you feel better, go ahead. It's just that you get so—so hopped up," he said lamely. "You know, Julie, pretty soon you won't have any emotion left for the real problems, the way you scatter it around."

"I know it isn't a problem to you or Morgy," Julie muttered, "but it is to me."

"Well, let's not start again," Morgan said hastily. "I really have to go. Want to walk down with me?"

Julie got up. "I suppose I might as well."

When they'd gone, Dan Connor smoked a cigarette with his second cup of coffee. He did the dishes, and then lay down for an hour. He didn't get in nights till after twelve, but he always had breakfast with his children.

Julie and Morgan parted at the entrance to the development.

"Well, so long," Morgan said. "Do what you can. It may be fine." Her reassurances were a little absent-minded.

"Good-by," Julie said, walking quickly away.

But around the corner she slowed her steps. It was a lovely morning. Even to these mean streets fall came with its warm sun and cool breeze. Her eyes, as she walked, searched passing faces, as though she expected to see someone, recognize someone, as though in all these assorted features that went by her on the street one set would merge into smiling, loving familiarity and come toward her, and a voice would say, "Here you are, Julie, I've been looking for you." Her glance ran from face to face, and now and then would be returned, but never with recognition.

"Look out, sister," a voice bellowed in her ear as she bumped into a large stomach and was pushed aside. "Whyn't you look where you're goin'?"

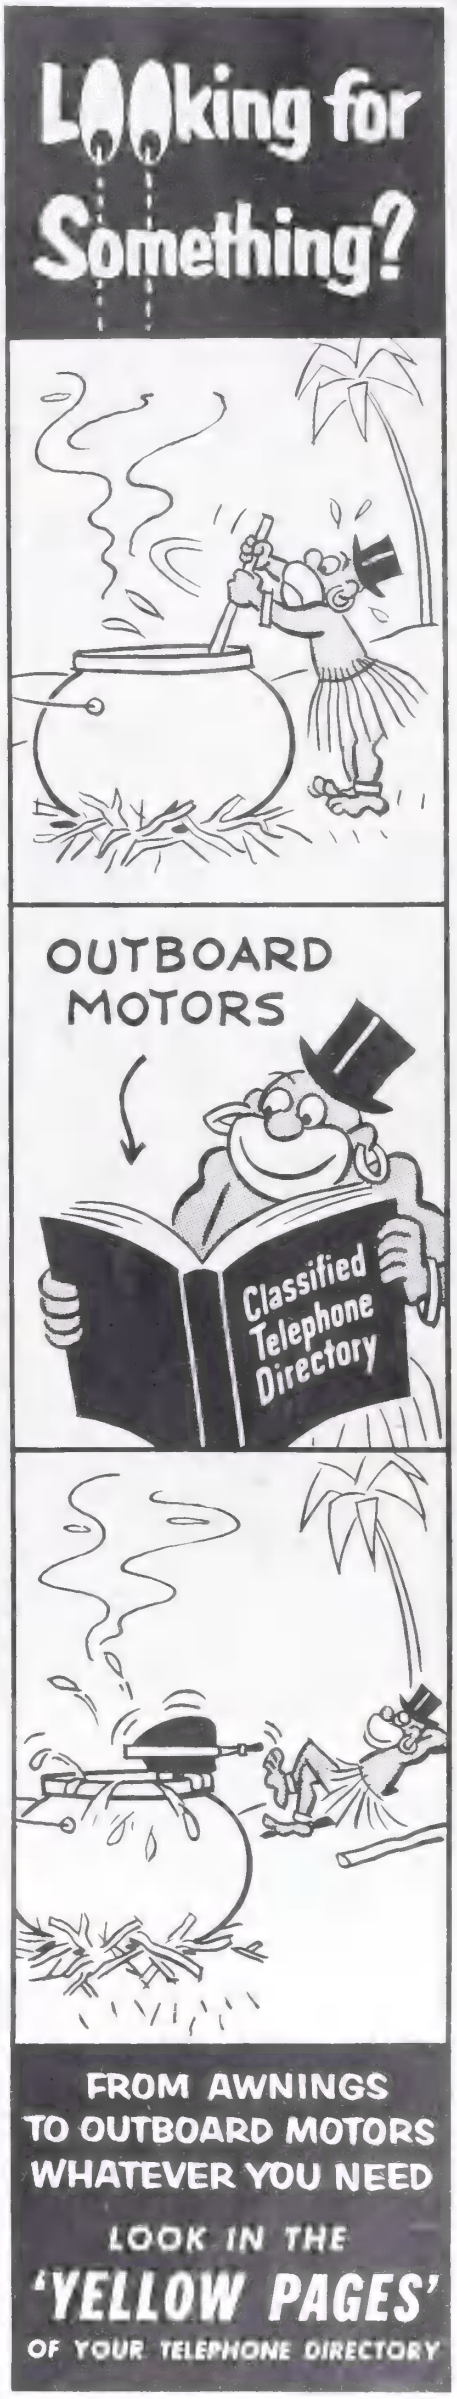
"Excuse me," Julie muttered, but the banged pedestrian had hurried on.

THERE were kids all around now. Yelling, pushing, screaming at one another. There was the school. It stood before her, and there was only one direction left in which to go. In. All the others seemed to have someone to scream at. Julie looked at them coldly and waited for some teacher, some authority to appear, to assign home rooms. Then, at least, she'd have a place to go.

Morgan managed to secure a strap hold, and then, with the practiced air of a seasoned subway rider, absently studied the ads above. She was scarcely aware of having taken the ride, of mounting the dirty stairs that led up from underground. She walked one block east, two uptown, to reach the high school, looked at her passing image in shopwindows, and wondered what she'd do if a handsome boy —— Well, let's see, she thought. He'd be driving along, in a big beautiful car, and he'd splash mud on her gray suit. She glanced at the gutters, saw no water or mud. All right, he'd —— Something would come undone from his car, a screw or a bolt or something, and this thing would fly over and hit her, not awfully hard, but sort of stinging, so that she'd cry out, and he would turn, a bit angrily. But then his face would soften as she stood there, holding her hand, not blaming him. It would be better not even to notice him at first. He would back the beautiful blue car and get out quickly. "Oh, look," he'd say. "I'm terribly sorry. It was my fault entirely." He'd take her hand gently, turning it around. "Oh, that must hurt," he'd say, looking at her with concerned brown (gray?) eyes. She'd be swaying a little, from the pain, but she'd give him a little smile and shake her head. "Now please," he'd say, "let me take you to a doctor." . . . "Oh no," she'd say quickly, "that isn't necessary at

CONTINUED ON PAGE 68

NO ROOM



BY WILLIAM D. BARNEY

There never will be room, she said,
Not in this meager dwelling place:
There is no way to make a space
Of three dimensions and of wood,
A pittance of the lean world's good
For one more child to lay his head.

There is no room, no room, he swore.
Our burdened days already groan:
What scantling can we keep our own?
Time, shall we pry the seams apart
And force it, like the too-full heart?
There is no space for one life more.

But if it heard, it gave no sign
That patiently began to build.
And though the tenant was unwilled,
Slowly the walls began to warm
That stood about the invading form
And lent their length as by design.

For space and time seemed now to know
To accommodate the alien guest;
But stranger still, a place impressed
In the hearts' low, well-trampled ground—
Love, and enough, and more, was found,
And every room began to grow.

"Wouldn't your folks like our Cake 'n Ice Cream Pie?"

asks Betty Crocker

Hello, everybody...We've been having the most fun lately in our Betty Crocker kitchens. We've been thinking up Cake 'n Ice Cream Pies!

Like the Betty Crocker Chocolate Devils Food Cake Mix cake in the picture, spread with vanilla ice cream and chopped red cherries. Or wedges of my good Honey Spice Cake—with butter pecan ice cream. Or White Cake with peach ice cream. Funny thing—our folks just can't tell which one they like best, so we keep on eating and eating!

ABOVE: White Cake 'n Ice Cream Pie, so very easy to make with Betty Crocker White Cake Mix and Peach Ice Cream.

BELOW: Betty Crocker's popular Honey Spice Cake Mix helped bake this cake. It's topped with Butter Pecan Ice Cream.

I hope you will, too. Because it's so easy to bake a cake with any Betty Crocker Cake Mix. And you get a perfect cake every time, you know—we worked so hard to make our mixes come out right that we can guarantee that!

Everybody's a little lazy these summer days, anyway. It's so much easier to spread ice cream on cake than to stop to make up an icing.

Somebody asked me how we do it. It isn't any trick at all. You just let the ice cream stand a minute or two in the kitchen. It doesn't have to be too soft. Then spoon on the ice cream and spread it smooth, if you like. Dress up your pie with cherries or nuts or anything you like, and send it off to the table right away.

SERVE ONE LAYER, SAVE THE OTHER!
This pie takes only one layer of cake, as you see, and just a pint of ice cream. So...bake another layer with the rest of the batter—save it—and serve it topped with crushed fresh or frozen fruit at lunch or supper the next day!

"You know," a mother of five young children wrote me the other day, "mine could be a stupendous task—but with you to solve my dessert problems, it really isn't as hard as it sounds. We use all of your mixes!" And then she added something that made me feel very good. "You just can't turn out a flop."

That letter seems to make our testing—and all our tasting—very much worth while. When you use our cake mixes and follow package directions—people keep finding out you do get a higher, lighter, better-tasting cake than any you've ever known.

I'd love to hear how your family likes our Cake 'n Ice Cream Pie. Do try one soon . . .

And have fun!

Betty Crocker
OF GENERAL MILLS

Chocolate Cake 'n Ice Cream Pie—Bake the cake with Betty Crocker Chocolate Devils Food Cake Mix. Top with Vanilla Ice Cream and cut maraschino cherries

Betty Crocker says: I guarantee

A perfect cake every time you bake cake . . . after cake . . .

after cake!

PERFECT? Yes, I DO mean perfect. You be the judge. If a cake you make with a Betty Crocker Cake Mix is less than perfect, write Betty Crocker, Box 200, Minneapolis, Minn., and General Mills will send your money back!

NEW

Send them back to school in Lee Riders

(Western style blue jeans)

Easy to wash. Lee Riders save you hours of work. No starching. No ironing. Riders pay for themselves in dry cleaning savings. And they're Sanforized to keep their fit, washing after washing.

Long wearing. Made of exclusive Lee cowboy denim, Riders take all the wear and punishment an active youngster can give them— and come back for more. Bar-tacked at stress points, tough as nails.

After school, too! Lee Riders "go" most anywhere! No need to change after school. Casual, comfortable, accepted style—look for the branded leather label to know you're getting genuine Lee Riders.

THE H. D. LEE COMPANY
KANSAS CITY, MO
COPYRIGHT 1954

Lee

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 65

all." . . . "But I can't just go away and leave you," his deep voice would protest. "I'll just run you around to my doctor on Park Avenue and he'll have this right as rain in no time." His name would be Colin. Always, no matter what way he came to her, in what guise, his name was Colin.

Morgan, smiling softly, approached her school. It was larger than Julie's, just as dingy, and Morgan didn't notice what it looked like. After all, it was only school, and that was the least important part of her life.

There was a little park across the street, and at lunchtime, because the weather was so fine, Morgan and Betty Gilman and Verna Herzog walked across to eat rather than use the huge school dining room.

MORGAN wondered, settling on a green bench with Betty and Verna, how Julie was now. Poor baby, she thought. She spread back the wax paper, sighing slightly when the slablike sandwich emerged. Once in a while, very, very rarely, she ate in the corner drugstore at the other side of the park. That was really wonderful. The short-order cook moved as if his hinges had been oiled, sliding the dishes up the counter to the soda-fountain boy who called orders and made drinks. I'd have a coffee frosted with a grilled cheese and tomato, she decided, biting into her cool flat sandwich.

"How'd the morning go?" Betty asked. "Mrs. Reinholt made us write a theme."

"Already?" Verna said.

"Oh, well, it doesn't make much difference, I guess. She talked a lot. It looks like a ducky English period for our senior year."

"My English class doesn't come till afternoon," Morgan said. "Are there any nice boys in your classes?"

Verna and Betty responded happily to the only interesting remark that had yet been made. There were only droops . . . there was a blond who . . . they all looked like weeds after college men.

"Where'd you see any college men?" Betty demanded of Verna.

"At this place where I worked this summer. A hotel in Vermont," Verna said proudly. She was eighteen, and would be nineteen before she finished high school, but it gave her certain advantages.

"What'd you do?"

"I was a—a maid," she said. "Anything wrong with that?"

"How should I know?" Betty replied. "What did you have to do?"

"Oh, make beds, empty baskets, mop. Things like that."

"I wouldn't be caught dead doing things like that," Betty said.

Morgan rolled up wax-paper wrappings and stuffed them in the bag. "I would. In fact, I do all the time, only I don't get paid for it. Did any of the college men ask you out, Verna?"

"No. Some of them flirted," she said slowly. "But that's all." She added, "I'll tell you one thing. I'm not going back there next year. Bunch of snobs." Her long face, surrounded by a wide frame of thick hair, was pensive, remembering hurts that she would be unable not to remember for years. That boy who had laughed and kidded with her for a few days. Encouraged, full of daring, she'd stopped him one day, ignoring in her happy confidence the look of surprise he gave at being so detained. "I'm off tomorrow," she'd said with a challenging smile. When he didn't speak, she added, "As we've been saying, it's lonesome when you don't know anyone. Except"—she faltered a little—"except, of course, I sort of . . . know you." Her smile and voice crumpled together. "Well," he'd said, moving away, putting distance between them, "I sure hope you find someone to help you out." And he'd gone away, down the hall and into his room.

On the bench, with the dry leaves hurrying past, making a little sound like rain as they twisted and ran along the park path, Verna bit her lips and felt her cheeks burn. Even now, nearly two months later. She wished she hadn't said that just now about college men.

Julie, at dinner, talked steadily. "—— the rooms like great bleak caves, Morgy, and practically no sunlight in the one I'm in on account of being practically smack up against a huge tall building. I do think it would be rather nice to build schools only in penthouses, don't you? Or out in the country so we'd have to ride for hours to get to them, and hours to get back. There's a pretty nice girl sits next to me, name is Anna Marie, and we ate our lunch together. She doesn't like the school, either, so we had a good time ——"

"Is she new too?" Morgan interrupted.

"Yes, she ——"

"Well, didn't I tell you?" Morgan insisted. "I did tell you there'd be other new people and you'd meet them."

Julie stopped eating for a moment. "That's just so silly, Morg. You couldn't really have known, and it might have been unkind to give me hope. What if I'd gone and no one had spoken to me or anything? It seems to me ——"

Morgan began to laugh. "I'm sure it does, Julie. Anyway, your day wasn't so awful, and if I can give you another unkind hope, it'll probably be fine at the new school." She turned to Ned, who'd been unnaturally quiet ever since she'd come home. "How about you, honey? Did you have a ——" She broke off. "What's wrong, Neddy?"

He blinked at her several times, opened his mouth, and then shook his head.

NEXT MONTH

Oh my darling, she thought, just talk to me of Lisa Kerrigan . . . and I will never be afraid again.

She was Bill's wife, the mother of his children—a sensible girl. Yet, after seven years, Pat still feared the house on Cherry Hill.

For how could she hope to compete with a woman she had never known—a beautiful, laughing goddess who enchanted all she touched, and who, forever young, lay buried in her husband's heart?

SHE GLITTERED WHEN SHE WALKED

By VIÑA DELMAR

Novel Complete in the September JOURNAL

"You haven't eaten," Morgan said.

Ned's voice was loud when he spoke. "I saw a puppy run over today. At first I thought it had a red flower in its mouth, but then I saw it was all—all blood and ——"

Julie jumped up. "Stop that!" She cried loudly to Morgan, "How can you let him talk this way? Make him cut it out!"

"You be still," Morgan snapped. "I mean it, just keep still." She went around the table, and knelt next to Ned. "Honey, I'm sorry you saw the puppy. It's—it's awful for you."

"Awful for the puppy," Ned mumbled thickly.

"Yes, awful for him too. But darling, you're just going—going to have to face things like that," she said slowly. "I don't mean that you'll see it again. But terrible things do happen, and we have to learn to know it." She cuddled his head against her, and he seemed to welcome it. He didn't cry, but his breath came and went shakily. And Julie, who loved animals, stood against the door, telling herself that she had yelled that way only because of the puppy. She hadn't thought of Ned's part at all. Morgan held the thin boy close. Nine was really awfully young. They forgot, with Ned, how young it was, because he was usually so able to care for himself. In a little while she let her arms slacken. "Don't you want your dinner at all, dear?" she asked gently.

Ned exhaled a great sigh and moved out of her arms. He eyed the ham and cabbage, picked up his fork and began to eat slowly.

That evening, for the first time, he was not happy about his cot in the living room. When the girls had gone into their "sitting room" he sat stiffly on the edge of the cot. His gaze was on the window that looked, with the la inside, like a black mirror. He was not at the window, it was just a place to eyes because he was afraid to close the go to sleep.

"Ned?"

He looked pitifully, gratefully at Mo the doorway. She wore a frayed gree robe, her hair was up in bobby pins, th a blob of calamine lotion on her ch looked beautiful.

"Ned, Julie and I were wonderin would disturb you to have us read tonight. The light is getting bad in our Probably the bulb's going to blow out.

"Oh, sure," he breathed. "That'd be

Morgan, calling Julie, realized that th he hadn't even cared about face-saving his boy's dignity. This must be the wo very worst thing that's ever happened she thought. She had a feeling of pride because he was taking it well.

She and Julie settled down, one on th ther's couch, one in the armchair. Ned his back to them, away from the light. time there was silence, except for a slig from the radiator, the sound of inter traffic below. Morgan turned the pages magazine, Julie those of her book, ver fully.

"Morgy?" Ned turned under the b

"Yes, honey? You really should slee

"I know. Morgan, do you suppose a has a soul? I mean what could a pup wrong that he couldn't have a soul?"

"I don't see ——" Morgan began.

"Sure they do," Julie put in. "Why sho they?"

Ned smiled at them both. "That's kept telling myself," he said, and turned from the light again. "Night," he said, a little while was really asleep.

In the other apartments the Connor their neighbors, had hung their wash o that stretched over alleyways from build building. Or, when they lived on a top the roof. It was pleasant, when the w was good, to stand on the soft tarry s pulling clothes from the creaking wick ket, shaking them out, hanging them your gaze wandered over other rooftop

The development, unbelievably, ha floor apartments with narrow gritty te They were referred to as penthouses an up all the roof. To offset this deprivation matic laundry machines were provided basement where laundry could be wash a small sum, and racks in the kitchen nished lines for drying.

THE basement was a subterranean wo doors and gray tunneling. Morgan disli When she went down in the green met of an elevator and walked to the la room she held her basket tightly, like a and looked over her shoulder fearfully steamy safety of the laundry room and women was reached. She wouldn't let J Ned in the basement at all.

"I don't care," she complained to Ne day. "I don't care what the conveniences miss a roof."

"Me too," Ned said agreeably. "Re ber, Morgy, how the tar would bubble u stink so good?"

"Smell," Morgan corrected absently.

"Did it ever!" Her brother sighed in remembrance. "Just the same, I like it here. Could I bring a friend of mine to "Well, sure, honey. Someone from sch She bent down and reached in a bin for toes.

"No, it's a guy I met in the playgro he told her.

"Bring him any time you want. If I'm that is."

Ned was a little too inventive to b alone in an apartment with his friend. O and two of the "guys" he knew had de to be chemists with ink and pancake It had been one of the few times Morga been grateful for linoleum on the floor than the rug she craved.

"Oh, sure," he said now. "I want y meet him anyway."

Morgan turned her smile away from He was so formal sometimes. So dear.

Connor thought if a person fell asleep n woke days later, he would always o tell if he'd wakened on Sunday. He ke Sunday, and even its being his day e him no more lenient toward it. A lrugged late sleeping, rumpled afterds. Of cooking odors and scattered ers.

damn," he said one Sunday in Octo-amn." He let the Times slip toward . The paper was just another part of
h. Too many sections, columns, too enacing words of pessimism. "There's be another world war in my lifetime," and waited for Morgan to ask why, he know. But she was hovering over e where onions sputtered in the frying got up and went to the kitchen door.
ave another world war," he said to his r.

an looked around. "Oh, gosh, do you
?"

waved his hand impatiently. "Is that e got to say?"

——" She poured tomato sauce on ns, lit a flame beneath a large pot of urned to get a box of spaghetti from
t. "I hope we don't. On account of the s, you mean?"

, and so much more." He shook the per, as though its terrible messages prinkle on her.

gry?" she asked, stirring the spaghetti t was warm out, and the kitchen wins open.

of." He leaned against the doorjamb, his daughter, wondering what went er dreamy mind, thinking of his wife ve long ago that had brought him to nday, this dinner.

IMES, when he looked up suddenly s reading and encountered one of his
, he had difficulty believing in them.
ld stare for a moment without com-ion at the moving figure which might ve been save for the chance that took wn one street rather than another, years ago in an Indiana town.

t to call the children?" Morgan said.
odded.

late September Sunday, eighteen years had strolled, goalless, from his boarde. He'd been twenty-five and without Employed as a stitcher in a slipper he had money in the bank because as nothing to spend it on, aside from ks, and went forth on Sundays because an't read always. He walked past well-iddle-class homes on whose porches women and blue-serge men rocked Children, subdued for Sunday, sat on
s. He was halfway down the street, ng-ago Sunday, noticing its gradual in atmosphere. Narrower porches on set nearer together. Still, a nice street.
lo! Dan—hello!" He turned toward a shingled house as Tad Walsh, who also in the slipper factory, came down the greet him. "Come and meet my cousin ew York," Tad said. Like many words ange the course of life, these were said
. They went up the steps, and Sarah, d cool and very lovely, smiled at Dan t out her hand.

Morgan and Julie and Ned had their ns, Dan his, and Sarah none. Each day his children and every mortal soul made revocable choice that set another wheel within the larger wheels.

spaghetti's good," said Ned.

y," said his father.

telephone was an extravagance, but always had one. Dan felt safer knowing ls could, if they had to, get in touch
m. So they afforded it, and possibly in o went without something else, though n couldn't imagine what that might be.
ever seemed to buy anything but food nce in a while, with extreme caution, g.

y Gilman did not have a phone, so she o a drugstore to call Morgan. "Hi,
? Look, could you come over to-
. . . Oh, nothing—just sit around and Maybe we could take a walk. . . . Well, ie if I can get the money. . . . See you about eight, huh? . . . Yeah. Well, g'by. Say, there's an awfully cute boy here, you ought to see him. . . . O.K., about eight."

"I'm going out," Morgan said, hanging up.

"Where?" Julie, at the table that doubled as a desk, was doing arithmetic. She did it easily, almost without paying attention, an accomplishment which filled Morgan with admiration and awe. "Tell Ned he can't go out, will you? If you don't tell him I can't manage him at all. When'll you be back?"

"By eleven, anyway. I'm going to Betty's."

"That birdbrain," Julie said scornfully.

"I wish you wouldn't talk about my friends that way," Morgan requested without heat. Julie had enormous contempt for so many people and so many things that no one could take time to resent her remarks. She turned to her brother. "Ned ——"

He was lying on the couch with The Adventures of Reddy Fox. "Yup," he said, not looking up. "I heard her. I wasn't going no place."

"I wasn't going any place."

"Thought you said you were." He kept his head down, grinning.

Morgan laughed and Julie snorted.

Ned and I have the same sort of minds, Morgan thought, going down to the street. We both laugh at jokes and love movies and wiggle through school any old which way (except, she thought, Ned seemed to wiggle more successfully). Julie despised jokes and she was so good at school that if Morgan had had a different temperament, she might have been envious. She thought Julie must be like pop. And yet, for all his bookish restless brain, poor pop hadn't got much of anywhere. Shoving change at people's hands every night in a subway booth. Sometimes she wondered how he must feel, never having anyone to talk to about the things he loved—his books, his grand ideas. And I can't talk to him, she thought, walking slowly toward Betty's, five blocks away. Pop and I can only talk about

Five days of new freedom

Every day is just like every other day of the month for women who have discovered Meds®—the safer, softer tampon. In Junior, Regular and Super absorbencies.

groceries and moving and whether the kids are staying healthy.

The evening was dark, but not black; the air gingery with delicatessen aromas, with the salt pungency of the river, with the cool tart taste of autumn. Morgan breathed deeply, wishing —— Well, she'd be going along, like now, and suddenly a young man, obviously not of this neighborhood, would put out his hand to detain her, with beautifully polite hesitation. "I'm terribly sorry to seem rude," he'd say, "and if you wish, just walk on and I'll quite understand." . . . She'd pause, not really waiting, but courteous, a little curious perhaps. "Yes?" she'd murmur. "I don't think ——" . . . "Oh, no," he'd say, with a quick white smile, "we haven't met—not yet, that is. It's just that —— This is difficult to say. My name's Colin [Colin what? Oh, well, Colin something] and I'm down here scouting a location for our new production. I haven't picked the star yet, because I never seem to find quite the right person. A young girl, a beautiful one, one who looks as though she might live in a place like this. But not be of it. You see what I mean?" . . . "Well, I think I do," she'd say, lowering her eyes. "I think I understand. But why are you ——"

"Hiya, duchess." She automatically turned her head and then flushed because she had. The boy who called leaned insolently against a street lamp. He was smoking, and he looked, like so many of the boys who smoked in the streets at night and called to strange girls, coarse and hard and handsome. "You want company?"

Morgan ducked her head and hurried. She heard his laugh, his called "Don't worry, baby, I'm not gonna follow you," and went the next block almost running. She hoped Betty would want to go to the movies, that she would not want just to walk around, the way she often did, strolling past the boys. Not that Betty ever let herself get picked up, but she liked to go around teasing and running. Well, no one was forcing her to walk with Betty, or even to see Betty at all.

You get used to people, she thought. Used to people and unwilling to spend every night at home with Julie and Ned, listening to the radio, reading.

The Gilmans lived in a railroad fl room opening on the next in a string tical shapes. Betty was at the door Morgan could touch the bell. "Where been?" she asked impatiently, not wai an answer. "Don't say anything abou out till Angie's gone, will you?" The were whispered.

Beyond, Morgan heard the clink o and rush of tap water in the kitche Gilman, then, was still home. In a ch side one of the windows, with the radi softly in her ear, sat old Mrs. M Angie's mother. She smiled uncerta Morgan, her filmed eyes too unreli her to identify the caller.

"Hello, Mrs. Metzger," Morgan sai closer. "How are you?"

"Well, thank you. That's Morgan. H you, dear?" Mrs. Metzger always said thank you," when you asked how s though everybody knew she was almos and had arthritis in her knees so th only walked with help. Yet she seeme She sat by her little radio, listening to and dance music, and she smiled when people came in.

THE Gilmans had a thin flowery rug floor, and furniture covers of zebra- cotton. Mrs. Gilman had made them. S a seamstress on Seventh Avenue and There were red satin cushions scattered the room. There were ecru lace curtain windows, so dusty that it was diffi breathe if you stood close to them, and photographs of movie stars in ten-cen frames on the tables. Betty sent for the hers was the only apartment Morgan ha seen where they weren't banished to th room.

"Can you go to the movies?" Morgan

"Hush," Betty said, with a quick gla her grandmother. "I told you to wait.

Mrs. Gilman came out of the kitcher ing her head to fasten a dangling e smiling at both girls. Her lips were very s her figure thin, almost gaunt. "Hi, Morg," she said. "What do you think girl here, letting her poor old mothe in the kitchen while she entertains frie the parlor?" She flitted across the room girlish tight-waisted dress, took a ci from a glass dish and patted her m tangled gray curls. Mrs. Metzger pa attention. Lighting her cigarette, Mrs. C dropped to a chair. "Tell you what, think you'd better cut out this walki streets at night."

Morgan started, and Betty said, "H Pete's sake, Angie."

"Oh, don't get so huffy. I didn't mea thing. I'm talking about how it looks to people. Two big girls swaying along lo at the boys. Now, I ask you."

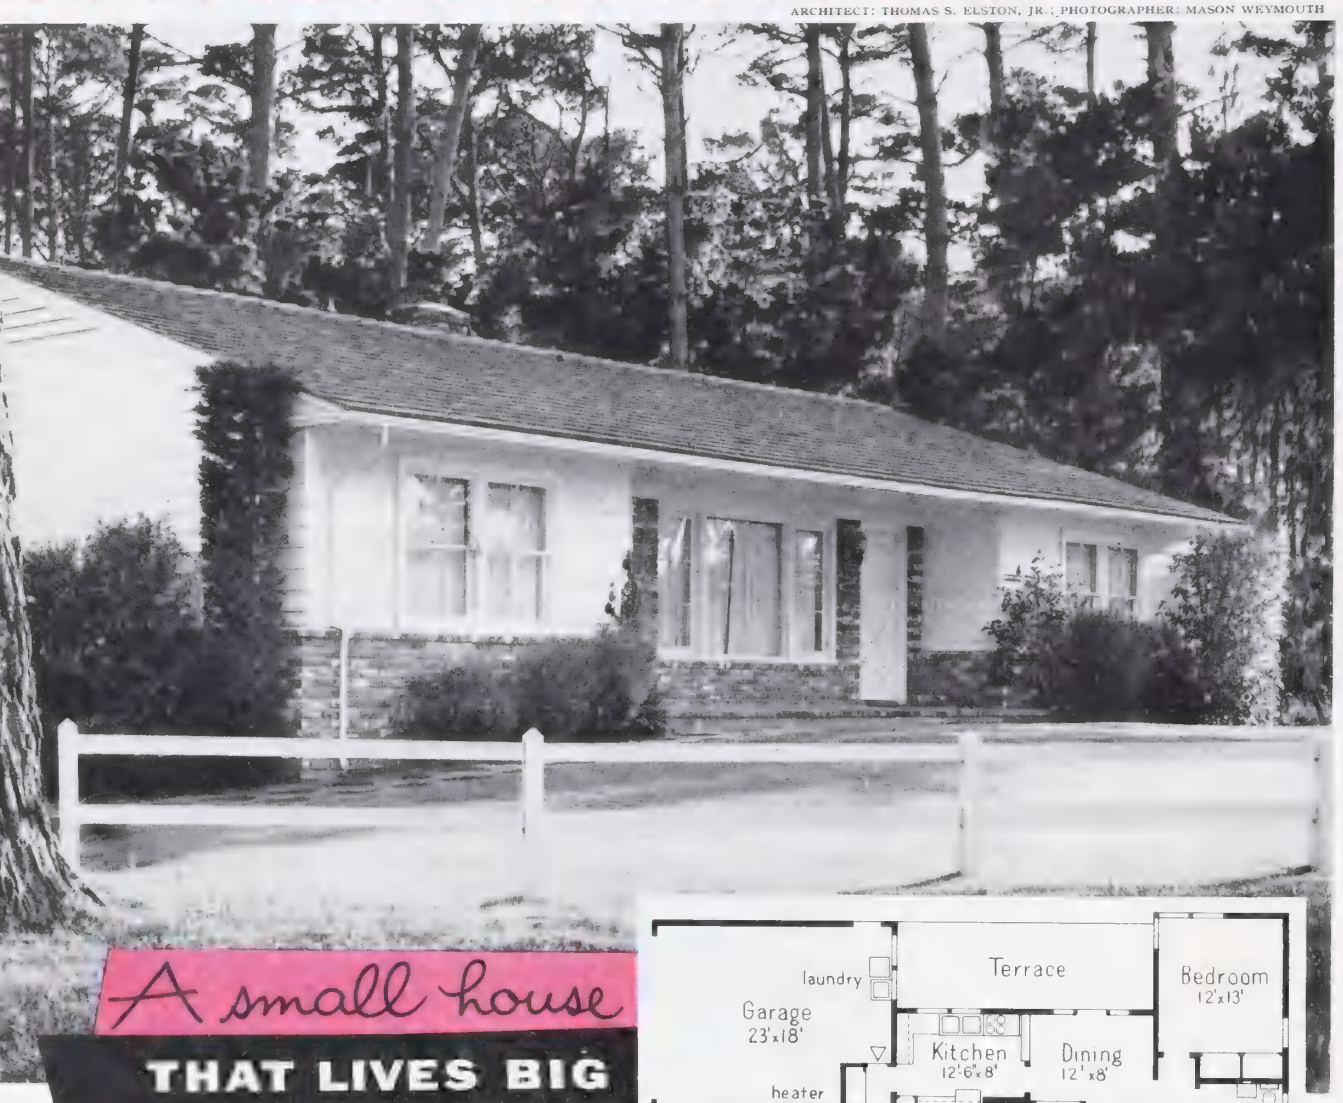
Well, Morgan thought miserably, her hot, her hands moist, I'm glad someboc it. Someone should have, if we couldn't it out ourselves. She looked from Be Angie. Very alike they were. When sh met Angie, she'd been fascinated by seemed to her glamour, by the rows o fumes on the fluffy (slightly grimy) dr table. Morgan no longer thought that was glamorous, but she liked her.

"You understand?" Angie was saying daughter.

"Oh, sure," Betty said easily.

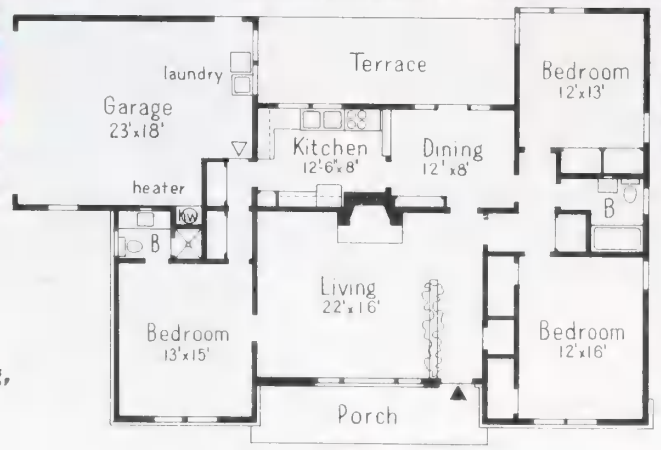
Angie looked at her sharply, then shru "You're a big girl now, Bets. I tell you things for your own good, but I can't you around and check up."

"I know you can't." Betty's voice h inflection at all.



Angie sprang lightly to her feet as the bell rang. "That'll be Bert. Have a good girls. Make fudge or something. 'By, n She grabbed up a light short coat, opene door to her date, and was gone.

Betty stood at the window, watching t mother and the man turned the corner. " gram," she said, turning back, "time you to bed."



Old Mrs. Metzger looked up. "Bu early, Betty," she said. "I don't want to bed. I want to hear that mystery play."

"Sorry. Mom said to get you right to soon as she left."

ARCHITECT: THOMAS S. ELSTON, JR.; PHOTOGRAPHER: MASON WEYMOUTH

A small house THAT LIVES BIG

Small in size, big in comfort, here is a house planned for easy family living and entertaining, easier housekeeping.

By CAROL L. MERCADO

This trim little budget house with walls of white clapboard and used brick sparkles against a grove of redwoods in Carmel, California, but would be at home anywhere in the country, and would make almost any family feel at home.

Let's walk through and see how clever planning eliminates wasted corridor space without sacrificing privacy. Just inside the doorway, our view of the living room is shielded by a wall of bookshelves, topped with plants. The shelves are open above—the unbroken ceiling line gives a spacious feeling to living room and entry. The handsome fireplace gets the same mottled-brick effect as the foundation walls and terraces outside. To the right of the entry, past the guest closet, are the children's bedrooms, both double size, with plenty of closet space.

The dining room, straight ahead, has built-in china cupboards, one backing up the living-room wall, another between dining room and kitchen; a real step saver, it opens from both rooms. The kitchen, planned for convenience, has lots of work space, two walls of ceiling-to-counter cupboards with base cabinets below. Outlets are located all along the counter area so electrical equipment may be used right where it is stored. An ingenious closet conceals a fold-out ironing board and an insulated shelf to store the hot iron immediately after use. The laundry area in the oversize garage is handy to kitchen and drying yard. See how the garage acts as a utility room, making heater, hot-water tank and laundry equipment easy to service, detouring traffic away from the house. A rear exit from the master bedroom provides mother with a direct route to the kitchen; father uses it as a short cut to the garage. The master bath has shelves and drawers built in beneath the counter top.

The living terrace, notched in between bedroom wing and garage, is completely private. Notice how laundry, kitchen and dining-room windows cover an expansive view of the yard, allowing a busy mother to keep a watchful eye on children's play from all work areas of the house. Roof overhangs shade part of the terrace; the rest is open to the sunlight.

n opened her mouth to protest, but at Mrs. Metzger's face silenced her.
of them knew the lie was there, not a finger to point at it.
night, Morgan," the frail unhappy
, as Betty's firm hands led the way night, Mrs. Metzger," she said d felt like crying. What was the old now? Lie in her bed in the dark, not ep for a long time, because old peoso little, not able to hear her radio, anyone. Morgan sat in a zebraair till Betty came back.

," Betty said.
you think that was a filthy thing to
?"
What are you talking about?"
grandmother. She didn't want to go hy couldn't she sit and listen to her rogram for a while?"
, Morgy, you don't understand at ft her, we'd have to be back practit away. She doesn't sleep well, and
, but she gets tired if you leave her the chair. Once she even fell off. If ut her lying down now, and get her e'd be in an awful state in a little least this way she's safe."
e's lying in the dark in there, wide d all alone," Morgan cried out.
" Betty looked at Morgan, then don't care. Angie knew I wanted to night, but that didn't bother her, did supposed to stay home all the time, re of gram? How would you like was breathing quickly, squeezing her ether.
sighed and shook her head. "I wouldn't. But it seems . . . sad."
so do a lot of things," Betty said nd after a short silence, "Want to ie? I guess Angie's put the kibosh lks, for a while anyway."
put the kibosh on for good, as far ncerned," Morgan muttered.
s the matter with you?"
t know. Maybe I do. I just don't walking around, that's all."
haven't noticed you not liking it."
aven't?"
oked at each other warily, knowing ething resembling friendship, that y rate, the security of habit, could ry easily discarded.
aited, and then Betty said, "John t the Lyceum."
went to see John Wayne, and for the Morgan couldn't give him all her ttention. Sometimes you save things se you want so much to keep them, se you're afraid of what will be left them go. You go on, safe with the hinking that it wasn't what you'd , but thinking, too, that what you'd might not exist at all. Betty and were neither daring nor rich enough
e.

y, this guy's invited me to dinner."
ning in from the playground, was ed from the chilly late November air.
, because Julie was out, pulled him t me feel your face," she said, put-against his brilliantly cold one.
Like snow." Like cold velvet. Before born, her mother had said, "We're have a baby, Morgan." Morgan had love him then. Julie had come as a and unwelcome surprise, but Ned by that "we" were going to have.
I love you, she thought, letting him
e he squirmed in her arms, how I love
ng. "What guy?"
one that I told you, that I met in the d."
That was ages ago. I thought you
g to have him up here."
I am. I don't see him much, because y busy. This guy goes to college, and in the playground to ——"
hat?" Morgan interrupted.
s in the playground weekends."
ight you were talking about a little

t play with little boys," Ned said.
Vell, I meant ——" She smiled and peaking.

"I know what you meant. Can I?"

"Have dinner with him?" Morgan shook her head. "Now, don't blow up. I have to know more about him first, and so does pop. I mean, honey, we just can't let you go off to some stranger's house, can we?"

"He's not a stranger. I've known him for months."

"I haven't."

"But he isn't asking you," Ned said furiously. "Honestly, you aren't being fair. I don't meet everyone you go out with, do I?"

"You —— I'm not nine years old." She knew it would make him angrier, but could not help laughing. "Ned, hold on. You bring your friend up here and let me or pop meet him first. Then if—I mean, then you'll probably be able to have dinner with him. Why in the world does he want you for dinner?" she added curiously.

Ned took off his coat, turned with dignity. "Because he likes me. That's why."

"Yes, but dinner," Morgan repeated. She picked up his jacket, hung it in the closet. "Does he live here?"

"Yeah. In Building F. His mother is real nice."

"You mean you've already been to their apartment?"

"Well, sure. Lots of times."

"But you never told me."

"You never asked."

Morgan walked over to him quickly. "Ned Connor, you know you aren't supposed to go in people's homes that I don't know. How many times have I told you ——" She stopped and slumped to the couch. "It's too much for me. It really and truly is. How am I supposed to bring you up? Nothing I say makes the least bit of difference."

Ned, nervous and subdued, sat beside her. "I'm sorry, Morgy. I forgot."

"No, you did not forget," she said sharply. "You disobeyed. And I've asked and asked ——"

Modern mothers never fret or shout "Oh—quiet please!"
Their homes are restful clean and safe . . with those Heavenly Carpets by Lees.

...those heavenly carpets by LEES can do more delightful things, add more color and comfort to your home than anything else you can possibly buy.

Lees make life easier too.
They're so easy to clean—
so safe, soft and quiet.
Every happy "lived-in" home needs Carpets by Lees.

JAMES LEES AND SONS COMPANY, BRIDGEPORT, PENNA. OTHER FAMOUS PRODUCTS: COLUMBIA · MINERVA AND BEEHIVE HAND KNITTING YARNS

the portable with the "magic brain"

ELNA Automatic

Knows all—sews all

Elna, with its Magic Brain, does everything from the simplest mending job to the fanciest embroidery, easier and quicker. Only Elna gives you all these time- and effort-saving features:

- Lightest full-size portable—just 17 pounds.
- Without attachments sews straight and zigzag.
- Embroiders automatically. Dozens of stitch combinations.
- Free arm for darning, mending, tubular fabrics.
- Sews stretchable seams on jersey, nylon, elasticized fabrics.
- Guaranteed for life.
- The only portable that has U. S. Testing Laboratory seal of approval. • 2000 dealers in U. S.

For as little as $179.00 you can buy the Elna Transforma Straight Stitch Machine. Liberal terms.

NECCHI SEWING CIRCLE ELNA

Embroider automatically

Choose your design on the Magic Disc . . . drop it in. It's as easy as playing a record.

Only Elna has the carrying case that opens into a full-size worktable, large enough for doing slip-covers, draperies, etc.

Without Attachments, Elna sews on buttons, makes buttonholes, fancy monograms.

Free Booklet 16 pages in color, crammed with helpful sewing ideas. Write for it today.

ELNA SEWING MACHINE CO., INC., Dept. EG442, 164 West 25th Street, N.Y. 1, N.Y.
(Look for your local dealer in the phone directory)

© 1954

"I won't do it any more, honest." His voice was low and unhappy. "I never went in no one else's house without telling you." He waited for her to say "anyone else's," and when she didn't, put his hand on her shoulder. "Don't be mad, Morgy."

"Oh, mad. What's that got to do with it? Look, Ned, I'm doing the best I can with you and Julie, but you just can't do . . . put things over on me like this." She got up and moved away from him. "Don't you understand? I'm not a mother. I can't figure things out all the time. I can only trust you to do what I ask, what pop asks. It's too hard for me, I tell you. It's too hard." I'm going too far, she thought. I shouldn't be talking to him like this, and glanced over to realize that she really had said too much. His face looked peaked and too still. Shaken, she rushed over and, with her arms around him, tried to take her words back. "Baby, I didn't really mean it. I adore taking care of you. It's just that—oh, it's not that I'm trying to be nosy or strict."

Suddenly he patted her hand. "I know, Morgy," he said with his darting smile.

Morgan leaned against the wall weakly, as though she'd won a fearful battle. He really does know, she thought. Ned understands things. But I must never, never —— "Will you bring him up here sometime?"

"Sure," said Ned. "How about tonight?"

When, that evening, Tom Miller rang their doorbell and Ned answered it, Morgan's first thought was, Well, he ought to be all right. Her second, slower and more amazed, was that if Verna and Betty could see what little brothers brought home, they'd both be screaming for one.

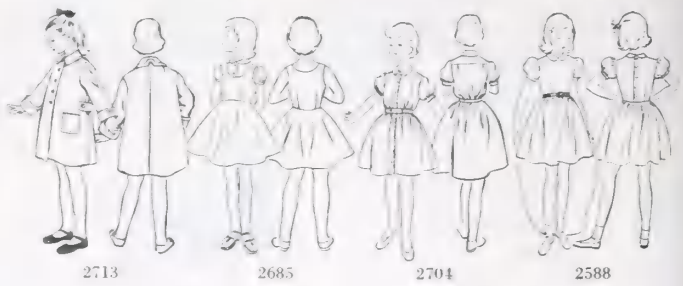
Tom was tawny and tall, with Slavic face. High cheekbones and made him look amused, and a little He wore a plaid wool shirt and gr pants. They were good clothes, thought, thinking of Ned's cordu that were thin at the knees and se Tom spoke a word she began to re Is he by any chance being charitabl she wondered. Bestowing kindness lected little boy?

"Ned, dear," she said, "you really wear those old things around when company." Ned looked at her in ur surprise, and Morgan couldn't hel her effect by laughing. That sounded

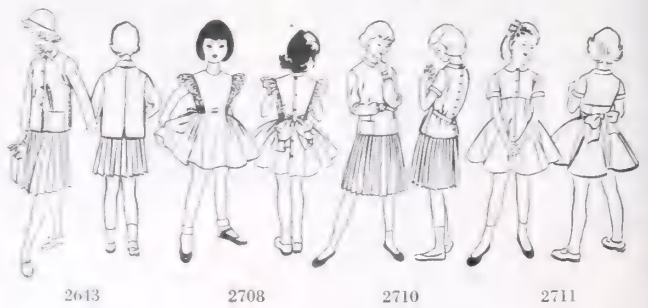
"You certainly shouldn't," Tom ously to Ned. "Especially since I got up in my best."

"Oh, well," Morgan said, still "Sit down, won't you. I'm sorry isn't here to meet you, and I'm sorr such a fuss about letting Ned ha with you. I ——"

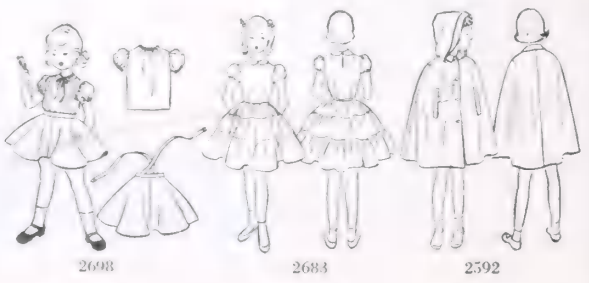
"I don't mind," Tom said. "Glad Ned's sister, anyway. He and I sup playground together, you know. An ner is his reward. We're going to eat things we want. That right, Ned?"



"M-m-m," Ned said, with a warni at Tom and a significant motion tow gan. Obviously he had no wish to de menu to outsiders. One of the tru lived by was the superiority of su other forms of food.



"Supervise the playground how?" was saying.



"That's my job," Tom Miller said "I go to Columbia, and I have this j

OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATTERNS ON PAGE 44

Vogue Design No. 2713. "Easy to Make" coat; 4 to 12. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 2685. Sleeveless dress, skirt and blouse; 2 to 12. 40c.
Vogue Design No. 2704. One-piece shirt dress; 6 to 14. 40c.
Vogue Design No. 2588. "Easy to Make" one-piece dress; 2 to 10. 35c.
Vogue Design No. 2643. Suit; 2 to 12. 40c.
Vogue Design No. 2708. Pinafore; 4 to 10. 40c.
Vogue Design No. 2710. Two-piece dress; 6 to 12. 40c.
Vogue Design No. 2711. One-piece dress; 6 to 12. 40c.
Vogue Design No. 2698. "Very Easy to Make" skirt and blouse; 4 to 12.
Vogue Design No. 2683. One-piece dress; 8 to 14. 40c.
Vogue Design No. 2592. Cape and detachable hood; 1 to 10. 40c.

2713 2685 2704 2588

2643 2708 2710 2711

2698 2683 2592

here, weekends and some after-
's my assistant."
ed brightly. "I blow the whistle, uite a responsibility."

," he nodded. "It's louder than a e."
an," Morgan said.
ored that. "And I tell kids, here can't do that."
t?" er I want them to stop doing."
put her hands to her face. "Oh, they stop?"
less Tom says it too," Ned said barrassment. "Still, I do blow the ou're the toast of the playground," id.

K.," Tom said. "Got good wind.
tle probably stops traffic in the n Ned blows it."
ndicated, surveyed Morgan with
"Now, is it all right about dinner?"
se," Morgan said, as though there been any question at all.
nen," Tom said, "let's say Friday.
Morgan nodded. "That's the night s eat out, and my brother's never eak of at all, so Ned and I will have to ourselves." He added, "We'd nly"—Ned's alarm was pathetic—thing just between the two of us," quickly.
was about to say something, but alled her.
ves in one of those penthouses." inned. "He makes it sound like nd Fifth Avenue."
now is they use up the roof, and I oof," Morgan said coolly. "What's about them? Do you have gardens ng?"
no. A glass door leading onto a t of brick and fresh air."
Morgan said, "it's better than none
Don't mind for now, because it's so
'll mind next summer. And anyway, things they have in the kitchen are bout three socks and a washrag and re full up." Tom looked confused.
ings. Doesn't your mother hang her hem?"
she has someone in to do it," Tom tainly.
he pleasures of the rich," Morgan ished. "We're not rich," he mum-one who lives in this place is rich."

re are all the different degrees, Morht. She was conscious of the change dliness to faint hostility between her Miller. It was her own fault. But she thought wearily, I just don't s Ned's friend, not mine. I was only
And I hate hanging the wash in the Miller stood up. "See you tomorrow

, Ned," he said. "Uh . . . it's been ing you, Miss—that is, Morgan."
ut his hand.

N, rising, took it briefly. "I'm glad.
e Ned happy," she said. There should hing to add, but whatever it was
r. She closed the door after him and Ned, who had missed the final under-and was perfectly content.

he first of December, Julie spent her -cents-a-week allowance on liver-December, she put it in a box for s money. Thirty-five cents on each of ly was what she spent. Ned usually shopping time with nothing at all. His nsubstantial as foam, passed from andy-store proprietors with scarcely touch it in between. Sometimes he his father a five-cent cigar, or some-Morgan—a ten-cent pin with blue ne, a key ring shaped like a heart. His at Christmas were handmade prodmpanied by long explanations and of handsome things for future years.
final week of November, Julie made uld be her last purchase of liverwurst Christmas. The butchershop, when ed in, was almost as cold as outdoors.

The butcher wore an old derby, a heavy jacket over his stained apron. Julie, unlike Morgan, was never friendly with tradespeople. So, though every Friday for nearly three months had seen these two meet for a transaction unaltered in any detail, the butcher looked up and said, "What'll it be?"

Julie said, "I'll take thirty-five cents' worth of liverwurst, please."

"You want it sliced?"

"Please."

"Cheaper if you don't," he said, reaching into the case and pulling out the long pale roll. Julie didn't answer, and he began to run his swift honed knife through the soft meat. She watched silently, counting the slices.

In the street, Julie pulled her fuzzy coat tighter, wondering why the liverwurst should be cheaper unsliced. It weighed the same. She turned into an alleyway, walked till she reached a length of connecting alleys that lay between two blocks of buildings. All windows, all dark cellar doors were closed. There was nothing in the alleys but ash cans and Julie. And, presently, the cats.

She walked along slowly. "Kitty?" she called. "*Here*kittykittykitty." Her voice was high and sweet and loving. It lured the cats from boxes and doorways where they curled out of the cold. There was a scrabbling on the other side of the fence and a big fawn-colored tom appeared. He leaped lightly to Julie's feet and lifted his broad blunt face, eager, hungry, but controlled, to hers. Julie opened her package with stiff fingers and peeled thick yellowish skin from a piece of liverwurst. She broke it quickly, and put it on the ground, using part of the paper for a dish. He pulled it off the paper, turned his head slightly, and began to eat. Seven more thin quick cats had joined him before the last of the liverwurst was shredded and laid on the paper. Julie watched them, her gaze fond and brooding. When they'd finished, they walked curling around her ankles. Some of them cried anxiously and nosed at the paper till she crumpled it. Stooping down, she patted their small heads, ran her hands along fur that, for all their washing, never was anything but rough and a little gritty. She wondered why it never made her feel better, feeding them. She came away each week aware only that they were still hungry, still prowling, still cold.

At home she found Morgan and Verna practicing dancing. The small radio whined and tinkled. It moaned of love, lost, lost. Morgan and Verna soberly, inexpertly fitted their steps together, stumbled when Julie appeared at the door.

"Hi, Jule," Verna said.

Julie said "Hi, Vern," but Verna didn't notice the emphasis. The two girls made an abortive movement toward a continuation of the dance, abandoned it when their knees clashed. "That crumby music," Julie said. "And I don't think you can learn to dance with another girl."

"We don't expect to learn," Morgan said lazily. "We already know how, I guess. We're just trying it out."

Julie shrugged. "I have homework to do, so I suppose I better do it in the bedroom."

Morgan said she thought that would be a good idea. "I'll turn the radio low, so it won't bother you. Ned's having dinner with that Tom Miller, so Verna's going to eat here."

Julie gave them a nod that might have meant anything and went into the bedroom, closing the door.

VERNA looked after her doubtfully. "I wonder what it's like to be that sure of yourself."

"She isn't, really," Morgan said. "But I know what you mean. She sort of unnerves me sometimes too. She's at a difficult age."

"What age isn't?"

"Ned seems all right," Morgan said slowly, wondering how much of Ned's all-rightness was real. There were the nights he couldn't sleep well, when he cried out in fear. He seemed to forget, in the day, these cluttered terrors of the night.

"You want to dance any more?" Verna asked.

"You mean will you have the next stumble with me?" Morgan giggled. "Do you think we'll ever manage? Maybe you should have asked Betty. I'm scared of blind dates."

"I didn't want Betty. Besides, he isn't exactly a blind date. I mean, I know him, even if you don't. He's tall, and all-right-looking and isn't a wolf. After all, we're only going to a restaurant and dance."

"Well, I'll go. Only maybe he'd have liked Betty better." She thought a moment. "She probably has a date anyway."

"Betty," Verna said firmly, "would spend the whole evening talking about her wealthy relatives in Virginia. Let's get dinner."

"What was all that dancing about anyway?" asked Julie, coming out of the bedroom when the odor of food had reached her.

"Verna and I are going on a blind date tomorrow," Morgan said. "At least, I'm going blind. Verna knows them. They live in her apartment building."

Verna was setting the table and Julie offered to help. "Wonder what Ned's having for dinner," she mused.

Morgan laughed. "I can't bear to think."

"Pie, probably," Julie said.

"And sweet pickles."

"And doughnuts."

"Potato chips."

"Chocolate bars."

"Layer cake."

"And pie. For dessert."

"No, candy for dessert. Pie for dinner."

"What did you have for dinner, darling?"

Ned blinked, sleek and languid with contentment. Tom had returned him at ten-thirty, shortly after Verna had left and Julie had gone to bed. He hadn't come in, just winked at Morgan, handed her a drowsy brother and departed.

Ned yawned at her question, began to pull his sweater off. "Chicken," he said.

"What else?"

Ned sat on his cot, prepared by Morgan for his sleep, and gave her a dreamy smile. "Oh, chicken . . . and potato chips, and . . . celery and hot rolls . . . and tomato juice and chocolate éclairs."

"Who selected the dinner?" Morgan asked in amazement.

"I did, Morgy. Tom said I could have anything I wanted. That's what I wanted."

Morgan shook her head. I'll never understand children, she thought. Never.

Dan Connor, coming in shortly after midnight, found a note from his elder daughter. "Ned," it read, "had his dinner out tonight. He did not eat sirup in a spun-sugar basket. He chose a perfectly good meal. What do you think of that?"

Dan hesitated, smiled, took up a pencil and wrote. "Train a child up in the way he should go, and he will not depart from it."

The table was set for breakfast as, in the evening, it always was. Dan slipped the note under Morgan's plate, thinking that a word of praise from her father was long overdue.

VANITY

The male of the species undoubtedly has a great many strong points, not the least of which is vanity. Lady Astor once proved the point conclusively at a London banquet. The question had arisen as to whether men or women were vainest and she stated flatly that men are the greatest offenders. Disregarding the storm of protest, Lady Astor proceeded to channel conversation to masculine fashions. "Why, it's even true," she said, "that the less important and intelligent a man is, the more attention he pays to what he wears. The most learned gentlemen are the most careless. Right at this table one of our most distinguished diners is wearing a tie which is not even carefully knotted!" And as though they were puppets on strings every man at table quickly reached up to straighten his tie.

—MARY ALKUS

Sleek

the safe Depilatory that creams off facial hair in a jiffy!

Sleek, created and developed by Elizabeth Arden is the safe way to remove unsightly hair on face, arms and legs.

Sleek is a dependable, medically safe depilatory, time-tested in purity, safety and effectiveness . . . incomparable for all hair removal on delicate areas of the skin.

Sleek is a "must" for summer, the unveiling season with bare arms and legs dominating the beaches! Use it freely to keep face, arms and legs satin-smooth. Once used, you'll never be without it.

Sleek has the most delightful fragrance (unlike the average depilatory)—and leaves the skin smooth, smooth as satin.

Sleek is a safe quick-action cream—works in minutes. It is a pleasure to use—no fussy preparations or messy aftermath.

Sleek is easy to apply. Simply cream on Sleek with your fingers . . . and minutes later rinse with warm water—and all hair vanishes with the rinsing. S-L-E-E-K . . . and it's off.

4½ oz. 2.00 plus tax

The one safe Depilatory to use on your face as well as legs and arms!

Elizabeth Arden

Verna and Morgan sat with stiff backs on a sofa in the Herzogs' living room, waiting for the doorbell to announce that their dates were arrived.

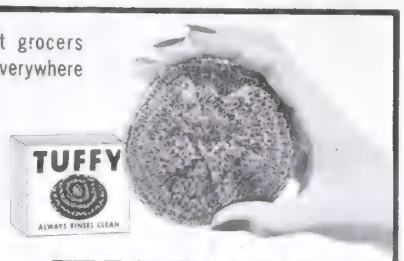
Mrs. Herzog, in a wash of yellow lamplight, rocked and knitted. She looked peaceful, but she shot quick glances at her husband whenever it seemed he might stir and speak. He, a large man with a still-featured venous face, sat in an overstuffed chair. He lifted a big freckled hand to the chair arm in an impatient gesture, rose.

"Guess I'll go see George for a while." He nodded at the two girls on the sofa. "Have a good time." He went out.

Nothing washes all your dishes as fast, as easily as TUFFY.®

—because only TUFFY is tough enough to scrub crusted pans, gentle enough to wash finest china and silverware

TUFFY washes finest china . . . takes off sticky food faster than mops, dishrags, sponges. Yet TUFFY never scratches.



TUFFY scrubs pots and pans . . . whisks out stubborn, crusted foods that clog a brush. No food sticks to TUFFY.

TUFFY washes silverware...digs out food that sticks in fork tines. Then TUFFY rinses out clean, fresh as new.

at grocers everywhere

TUFFY
scrubs yet doesn't scratch never smells—never sours
because it rinses clean

U. S. PAT. NO. [illegible]
© THE S.O.S. CO., CHICAGO; TUFFY OF CANADA, [illegible] TORONTO

Morgan, half attending the departure of Mr. Herzog, remained in a fantasy projection of the evening to come. Rationally, she knew that this unknown boy would probably be just what Verna claimed he was. An in-between. The world was full of those, and often they were nice enough to know, to talk to. Morgan didn't expect much, and in that was rarely disappointed. To the ones she dreamed were given all the cherished qualities, all the endearing responses that she needed. The difficulty lay in her tendency to confuse the dreamed with the real but not yet met.

He might, this Roy Austin, be —— Well, he'd be not too tall, with a compact graceful build. His voice would be rich and never loud, and when they met, he'd smile slowly, as though he'd come to the end of a search. "Hello," he'd say, low beneath the other voices in the room. "Hello—Morgan." She'd put her hand out, her eyes on his face, and not speak for a moment. Just smile slightly, the way he did, to let him know she, too, was thinking that at last they'd met. He'd be graceful and low-voiced ——

When the doorbell had rung twice, Verna heard it. She went down the long hallway. There was the sound of the door opening, of the mingling voices. There were the footsteps approaching.

Then they were there. Slightly blinded by nervousness, Morgan could distinguish only two lank boys, dressed in fairly flashy best, thrusting their hands at her. She didn't know which was Roy Austin. One of them said "Hi" and the other nodded. He was over six feet and his arms and legs were like twine. He, it developed, was Roy Austin. The other was Pete, for Verna. Morgan never found out what his last name was. Pete was not very tall, not in the least graceful. He jutted his jaw and grinned and said he had news for them—tempus was fugiting.

In the buses (one uptown, one a transfer crosstown) the four were separated. Morgan and Roy Austin sat tensely together, looking with elaborate interest at the passing scene. Roy swallowed loudly and flung his long thin hands about as though they were unexpected encumbrances that he hadn't quite decided what to do with. Morgan looked surreptitiously at his window reflection. He had yellow hair, a gently sloping chin and a peering expression.

"Well, here we are," said Roy.

"Where?" she asked, startled. "It's time to get off?"

"No, no. Not yet. In a coupla blocks. I just meant—here we are."

"Oh." She turned to him, but his face was too close, and she looked away. "Yes. Here we are."

"Cold tonight."

"Isn't it, though? Winter is practically upon us."

"Sure is. Hate to see the warm weather go. Don't know why it is, but that's the way I am, a real water baby."

"You like to swim?"

"Like it? Tell you something, it's the only thing keeps me sane."

"It is?" Morgan said with mild wonder. "Have you—I mean, are there a lot of problems in your life?"

"Who hasn't got problems? But I just like to swim."

"That's nice."

THERE was silence. Then, "Well, let's get out of this fire trap," Roy said. He lifted his twining length into the air and preceded Morgan down the aisle.,

The four of them stood on the corner of Forty-second Street and Seventh Avenue, shivering in the night air, looking at each other cautiously. From Forty-second uptown, as far as they could see, night was nearly vanquished. Sliding, glittering, twisting, winking, blaring Broadway drove away the dark and substituted its own daft personality in shards of color, brittle minglings of music and voices, mutable throngs of human beings.

"Man, the joint is jumpin'," said Pete, snapping his fingers so that they made a tune. "Maybe we shoulda gone down to hear Ray."

"Ray?" Verna said, smiling. Morgan realized that Verna had been smiling ceaselessly since they got off the bus. She looked vivacious, and slightly strained already.

"Sure. The Ray," Jack said. "He's playing at the Stat."

That's a hotel, Morgan thought nervously. She hoped they wouldn't decide to go there. Didn't tables have to be reserved? And didn't you have to know headwaiters?

"I don't want to go down there," Roy said loudly, and Morgan realized he was uneasy too. "It's too—it's too cold. Let's beat it on over and warm up, hey?"

Pete looked relieved and said that'd be better probably, it was pretty cold.

Rumble of music and voices and shuffling feet came up the stairs to meet them as they descended to the dancing-floor level of the restaurant. The six-piece orchestra was mounted on a dais, and the tables were closely crowded.

"How delightful," Verna said, as they sat at a table granted them. No one replied. They sat, looking around, and were grateful when a waitress came to take their orders. The boys said they'd have beer. They let the girls order for themselves. Two orangeades.

"Well," said Pete. "Dig the femmes—orangeade, no less." He told a joke about the three college men in a bar, two of whom ordered Cokes and the third water, "because he had to drive." This was received in silence. Pete spun the ash tray with one finger. "Dance?" he said to Verna.

"Love to," she replied.

They rose and thrust themselves upon the field.

Roy shook his head and lit a cigarette. "Funny thing about me," he said, and paused.

"Yes?"

"Yeah. I just can't stand dancing. I've always been like that. Don't know why it is, but there you are."

Where? Morgan wondered. This was supposed to be a date for dancing. "Perhaps because you like to swim so much," she suggested, relieved at not having to get close to him as, if they danced, she would.

"That could be it," he approved. "I got my mind on a new sort of dive. My own version of the one-and-a-half gainer."

"Could you have a version? I mean, either it is a one-and-a-half gainer, or it isn't. I should think, anyway."

"Well, now, that's just where you'd be wrong." Roy leaned forward. He was going to explain, so she would know. Five minutes later, he was saying, "So there you are. Not exactly a one-and-a-half, but almost. See?"

"Oh, yes. Yes, I do."

Roy leaned back again. He lit another cigarette. "Ever been over to the St. George?"

Morgan shook her head.

"Tell you what. Let's you and there next week, O.K.?"

"But . . . what is it?"

"What is it? It's just the best dar pool in the city, that's what it is. everywhere. You'll love it."

No, I won't, she assured herself.

"Pick you up Saturday, Frida you say," Roy was telling her.

The idea of going anywhere at lank blond crane, much less to a he'd be mirrored all over the place, side him, was inconceivable. "I c

For a moment he looked as thou nounced she couldn't breathe. "He deliberated. "Really?"

"No."

HE blinked and rubbed the back "I could teach you . . . I suppose.

"I'm allergic to chlorine." How could you refuse without saying want to?

"That makes it hard," he said, ticeable regret.

Makes it impossible. "I'm afra admitted. She pulled orangeade t ored straws and wondered when Pete would return. She wondered how Ned and Julie were. I wish I she thought. I wish I were home rea azine. But the evening was not ha she was spending the night with V

Pete and Verna returned. "It ful," Verna was saying.

Pete hummed, sliding on easy be there de da da." He was graceful ion, when he danced. "Dance?" Morgan.

"Oh, I'd love to."

"Well?" Verna said.

They were back in the Herzog ap the bathroom. Morgan was washi It was one o'clock, and Mr. Herzo ing. Morgan lifted her shoulders, over her face.

"We had fun, didn't we?" Verna

"Oh, sure."

"Then what's the matter?"

"Nothing, Verna. I'm tired."

Verna sank to the edge of the know what you're thinking. But gan, you have to go out once in a you? I like to have dates."

"Me too. It's just ——"

"Yes. But it's always just — sighed. "Anyway, we can tell Bett day that we went dancing."

"Sometimes I wonder why I married you, until I get a jar that won't open vent on talking, in whispers, after they d. Verna fell asleep in the middle of a For a while, Morgan tried to think olin, but he evaded her, and she, too, p. Except for that one attempt, they e no mention of the evening past. The t could be said was that it was dull; that it was over. Verna would go on te, if he asked, because he was better ning. Morgan would not see Roy, be- hadn't asked again, and she consid- worse than nothing.

old you in school that all people were qual, but Ned thought it didn't take oking around to discover it wasn't so. re kids a few blocks away so unequal ent to camp two weeks in the summer. ve underprivileged?" he asked Mor-are you talking about?"

t underprivileged. I could go to sum- p, maybe, if we were. Enough."
ooked at her brother without kind- ou don't have any pride, do you?"
mean if I could take my pick between d two weeks in the country, which take?"
t answer," Julie said, walking away. urned back to Morgan. "Maybe I e said, not regretfully.
well. One man's pride is another —" She hesitated.
ner camp?" Ned suggested.
n smiled, and then said, "Not in your ney. We're not poor, really. Not g to get benefits. We have a decent d enough food and clothes. There's l difference between being us with extra and being poor."
nodded. "I thought so. Maybe I like camp anyway."
be you'd get poison ivy."
. Or drowned. Could you come to see play?" ing! A play? You didn't tell me."
elling you now. I'm a Wise Man. Do w the names of the three Wise Men?"
shook her head. "Well, I do. Mel- aspar and Balthazar."
you're marvelous. I'll bet you're the son on this block knows that."
hought this was probably so. "The xt Wednesday. Can you come?"
lnesday? Well, Wednesday's a — Oh, I'll play hooky. Pop can write st say," Julie called out harshly, "you ice examples. Don't think that I care, I don't. I'm just saying."

an sighed unhappily. While she won- hat to answer, the phone rang. It was iller, inviting the three of them to her nt to eat doughnuts. "I made mounds today, Morgan, and you kids'll simply help me out. I thought since it was y you could let the homework go and round gorging for a while."
an said they'd love to and hung up. nors, even Dan, had got to know the though between Morgan and Tom nained a sort of tension that was not lly, but wary. They seldom spoke to er directly. Morgan wondered what ay if they were ever alone together. But at was not likely. Tom liked Ned and e rest of the Connors with him. Be- ere were college girls.

LLER was, as all the Connors had no- right and warm. His mother was like a lazing fire. Deep voice, enormous a crackling vitality that, in an hour, Connor exhausted. ("Oh, admirable," d in answer to a question from Mor- dmirable. Sort of wearing, though.") Miller opened to them. "Good evening, s all," he said. "How do you like the wfall?"
w?" Ned yelled. "We didn't know it wing." He ran toward the window.
Miller came out of the kitchen. "I hope all hungry. I have enough doughnuts feed an army."
I go out on the terrace?" Ned asked. Miller thought he could. "Come on, he first snowfall of the year. Let's all it."

They crowded onto the tiny terrace, into the cold blanched air. Snow spun and spiraled, falling more densely even as they watched. Julie leaned over, watching roofs on the building across the street whiten thinly. It's going to stick, she thought happily. Ned said it. "It's going to stick," he shouted. "We can have snow men and snow forts."

Morgan shivered and went back into the apartment. "Beautiful," she said as the others followed her in. "But cold."

"Julie," Mrs. Miller said, "how about helping me in the kitchen?"

Julie started slightly. She rose happily and followed the big woman.

Ned, who was helping or hindering Mr. Miller in the construction of a clipper-ship model, coaxed for a few minutes' work while they waited.

"It's in the bedroom," Mr. Miller explained to Morgan. "I work on an old table they won't let me bring in the living room. Would you excuse us? Unless you'd like to come along?"

Morgan shook her head. "Thanks. I'm fine here." She was peacefully fitted into a huge armchair with a finish smooth to the touch, quite unlike the frieze at home.

So, briefly, she and Tom were alone.

Outside, the snow fell, palely visible through dark shining windows. Within, silence fell, soft as the snow, with something of its coolness. Morgan's gaze moved about, lighting on the fine old rug, the smooth auburn finish of mahogany furniture. It was worn, but the wear came from age, not flimsiness.

"Ned tells me you go dancing a lot," Tom said. "You like to dance?"

"Isn't he funny?" she said with surprise. "I've been once in the last six months."

"Where'd you go? If I'm not too curious, that is?"

"To the ——" For a moment, she knew the temptations Betty had. It would be fun to say

CONTINUED ON PAGE 78

tastier coffee!

—the modern coffee made especially to give you consistently better flavor than ground coffee!

New Nescafé is actually an improvement over ground coffee . . . tastier, cup after cup! Like home-made coffee, it's percolated. But Nescafé's scientific controls bring out the consistently fine flavor no home-brewed coffee can match. Then an exclusive jet process transforms this perfect coffee into gems of Nescafé. Just add water, you have delicious coffee! Nescafé costs far less than ground coffee, too. Start today to enjoy this modern coffee . . . tastier new Nescafé!

All Coffee— nothing but Coffee!

new Nescafé®

© 1954 The Nestlé Company, Inc.

Roman Stripe Salad...

New way to combine tomatoes and cucumber! Serve it with Miracle French, Kraft French, or delightful new Casino.

Crimson Beauty

So pretty—cut in petal fashion with golden Miracle Whip or Kraft Mayonnaise for the crowning touch.

Two Way Tempter

Really, it's a three way tempter —with a red-ripe tomato, jellied consommé, and Miracle Whip Salad Dressing.

Tomu

Kraft's new Cas choice for this Or use Mirac

Red-ripe Tomato Salads..

Talk about tempting . . . can anything beat a tomato salad now when tomatoes are at their peak? And how many wonderful ways you can serve them! Variety comes easy with all these salad ideas, and all the dressings made by Kraft.

Easiest, most delightful way to vary any favorite salads is with Kraft's Family of Dressings. There are so many different kinds to choose from, including three great French dressings . . . the finest of mayonnaise . . . and the one and only Miracle Whip.

So pick your salad dressings from the Kraft shelf at your grocer's. No fuss, no worry, and compliments for sure!

There's a just-right KRAFT DRESSING for every taste...try them all!

MIRACLE WHIP—No other dressing for salads has ever even approached Miracle Whip in popularity. A different kind of dressing, it has a different just-right flavor that's never been successfully copied. Have you tasted it?

KRAFT MAYONNAISE—True mayonnaise at its finest—made of the very choicest ingredients mixed satiny smooth by Kraft's own exclusive beater. You'll love the delicate flavor and luxurious richness of Kraft Mayonnaise.

MIRACLE SANDWICH SPREA to give tomato salads by using Miracle Sandw a dressing. Kraft makes Whip, sparked with spe ishes. Try it on plain le

Summer's Best

Best of all with Kraft Mayonnaise or the one and only Miracle Whip.

Sea Isle Salad

Miracle Sandwich Spread makes a wonderful dressing for shrimp. And, of course, for tomatoes.

Tomato Topsy

Top off this perky salad with true mayonnaise at its finest, Kraft Mayonnaise.

Tomato Egg Stack-Up

Make the Egg Salad with Kraft Mayonnaise; serve with any of Kraft's three French Dressings.

PLAIN, SOME FANCY, ALL EXTRA TEMPTING dressed by Kraft hen you feel ke your own make it with pose" Oil. way it blends

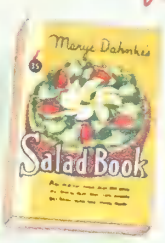
dients.

KRAFT FRENCH—Small fry, and grownups, too, who don't like other French dressings love the flavor of this one. Kraft French Dressing is creamy-thick; it doesn't separate.



MIRACLE FRENCH—The liveliest of Kraft's three French dressings is Miracle French, robustly seasoned with onion and garlic. Try brushing it on meats before you broil them.

CASINO FRENCH—New Casino has a most intriguing flavor—somewhat sweet, somewhat garlic-y—especially fine on fruits. It takes 12 different seasonings to get Casino's flavor!

RECIPES for these Red-Ripe Tomato Salads are in a nice little leaflet free at your store. Or write to Kraft Kitchen Recipes, Box 5756, Chicago 77.

RECIPES for 500 wonderful Salads

are waiting for you in "THE SALAD BOOK" by Marye Dahnke, Director of Consumer Service for the Kraft Foods Company. 320 pages of salads for every occasion; superb, full color illustrations—and it costs only 35¢! On sale at bookstores and wherever Cardinal Pocket Books are sold.

KRAFT
THE NAME THAT MEANS
WONDERFUL SALADS

Kraft Salad Dressings also available in Canada.

Combine Style Distinction with Scientific Design

You'll discover what real walking ease is like when you step out in your first pair of supremely comfortable, foot-flattering Dr. Scholl's Shoes. Made over Dr. Scholl's scientifically designed lasts, their glove-like, foot-cradling fit makes them ever so kind to your feet.

Dr. Scholl's Shoes are made in all sizes for all types of feet — Women's, some styles 2½ to 13, AAAAA to EEEEEEEE; Men's, 5½ to 16, AAA to EEEEEEE. Expertly fitted at Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort® Shops and Shoe and Department Stores in principal cities. If not obtainable locally, write for catalog, Dept. 48, Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago 10, Illinois.

THUM

ACCEPTED FOR ADVERTISING IN PUBLICATIONS OF THE AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

for Prolonged and Persistant

NAIL-BITING • THUMB-SUCKING

USED BY PHYSICIANS, DENTISTS, NURSES FOR OVER 20 YEARS — AT YOUR DRUG STORE

Sell Custom-Made PERSONAL CHRISTMAS CARDS

Limited number of men and women wanted to make exceptional profits with big Album presentation of highest quality Personalized Christmas Cards from $9 to $23 per 100. Exclusive designs reproduced with finest craftsmanship. 40% commission. Added profits with lower-priced "Personals" and big line of top-value Box Assortments. Write fully for samples.
WALLACE BROWN, 225 FIFTH AVE., DEPT. T-309, NEW YORK 10, N.Y.

COMMENDED BY THE PARENTS' MAGAZINE

Greatest Safety-Comfort with Keystone DIAPERS
Pat. No. 2,523,989
• snap-fasten no pins or folding
• one size fits any baby

For sample send 40¢ to KEYSTONE MILLS
Dept. H-84, Athens, Ga.

EXTRA INCOME?
OF COURSE! Extra income in your spare time! Write for details without obligation.
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 336 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

MATERNITY Style Book FREE

NEW Fifth Avenue styles keep you smart throughout pregnancy. Adjust easily. Dresses $2.98 up; also supporters, undies. Everything for Baby, too. Low prices. FREE Book in plain wrapper.
LANE BRYANT, Dept. 929
Indianapolis 17, Indiana

Tiny BURNS MAY LEAVE Lifetime Scars

Apply Fast 4-Way All Around Help

Soothing cooling OIL-O-SOL for minor burns. Helps ease pain, fight infection, prevent blisters, speed healing. At your druggist. MOSSO'S OIL-O-SOL

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 75

"To the Stat," wouldn't it? A restaurant didn't seem a glamorous admission. But she told him where they'd gone. "I don't suppose you've ever been there?"

"There's lots of places I've never been, so don't hold it against me."

Suddenly Morgan laughed. "You haven't missed the opportunity of a lifetime, I assure you."

"That bad?"

"Oh no," she said, a little giddily, "not bad at all, really. But I was on a blind date and he didn't like me." Saying this made her feel quite superior to Roy and the entire evening. Tom grinned, and she went on happily, "If I'd grown a fishtail and swum into the fountain, he might have."

"You couldn't dance with a fishtail."

"He didn't dance anyway," she said triumphantly, and they yelled with laughter.

Oh, it was a wonderful feeling, laughing with Tom. It was being special, and luckier than anyone else. It was being happy. When Mrs. Miller came in with a tray of cider mugs, followed by Julie with a platter of doughnuts, Morgan and Tom were still finding things funny. As he got up to help his mother, Tom's eyes fixed for a moment on Morgan's and he smiled again. A different smile this time, no longer amused at her silly date, a smile just for her. So that's it, Morgan thought, floating into that sort of happiness she'd always imagined with Colin. This was what it was like to love without the help of a dream. I'm in love, she thought. I can only sit here nibbling doughnuts, but I've just fallen in love. She took deep silent breaths and looked at the floor, so no one should guess.

Later, Tom walked the three of them back through the basement. Julie was frankly tired, and Ned, vigorously protesting wakefulness, could scarcely keep his eyes open.

"I think the Millers keep your brother up too late," Tom said.

"No you don't," Ned said, lifting his lids heavily. "No you don't, Tom."

"He can sleep late in the morning," Morgan said as they reached the apartment. She looked around a little shyly. "It's been very nice."

Tom leaned, elbow on the doorjamb, head against his hand. "I have an idea, sort of."

"Have you?"

"Yup. Have you got some heavy clothes? Boots, or something?"

Morgan nodded slowly. "I have boots. Why?"

"Well, I thought that if you wanted to, you could get into some warm things and then come up with me while I got some, and we could take a walk in the snow. Do you like walking in the snow?"

"Oh, I love to," Morgan said, thankful that Julie couldn't hear through the closed bedroom door. "Or, I'll tell you. I'll get ready, and you go up and get your things, and then I'll meet you by the gate." Her voice was high with excitement.

"See you in ten minutes," Tom agreed.

SHE hurried into the bedroom. "Julie," she said to her sister, who was standing at the window, forehead on the cold pane, "Julie, I'm going for a walk with Tom. Not for long." She waited, expecting some outburst of elaborate unconcern. But Julie murmured something noncommittal and continued to stare at the night. Morgan pulled out a pair of boots, sat on the floor to tug them on. "I wish I had a nice jacket," she said mournfully. "I'll just have to put on a sweater and wear my coat." A beautiful red wool jacket would be so fine, and maybe a pair of fur mittens, like Betty's. How could you get a boy to like you if you went around dressed like something that had fallen off the hanger? She pulled on brown cotton gloves, put a kerchief on her hair, stood at the mirror to apply lipstick, and wished she looked delicate. She did not resemble anyone in the movies, as Betty, and Verna, could be fancied to. She didn't look like the women in the cigarette ads, or the girls in the love-story magazines. She didn't look like anyone but herself, and it was discouraging.

Tom was waiting by the great iron gates of the development. He wore a wonderful thick leather jacket, boots that clasped his trousers tightly round the ankle, and no hat. He came toward her through the falling snow, and Morgan realized that she liked everything about him. His voice, his gait, the remembered look of his smooth muscular arm: Colin had never been a figure for her, she had never known what his gestures would be, what he would wear. Tom was real. He was here.

He said, putting his key in the smaller door that fitted in the large gate, "I hate these things."

"What things?"

"These blasted gates. Who are they keeping out?"

"Why, I don't know," Morgan said with surprise. She'd never thought of the gates one way or the other. They swung back by day, were locked at night, and you had to have a key to go through the door if you came in after nine. "Strange people, perhaps?"

"Who's strange? Is there anybody so valuable in there?" he asked, waving toward the red brick buildings they were leaving.

"I don't know," Morgan said again. "If there is," she added, "it's not the Connors. We'd be more likely to get locked out than in."

Tom looked at her sideways with an odd expression—gentle, and even, she decided hesitantly, protective. She yielded to the warm delight of being so looked at, and walked along smiling softly to herself.

For a while nothing more was said. The snow, with soft inexorable accuracy, was finding, filling, covering every crevice, every plane, every step and doorway. It sifted airily against Morgan's face, and Tom's.

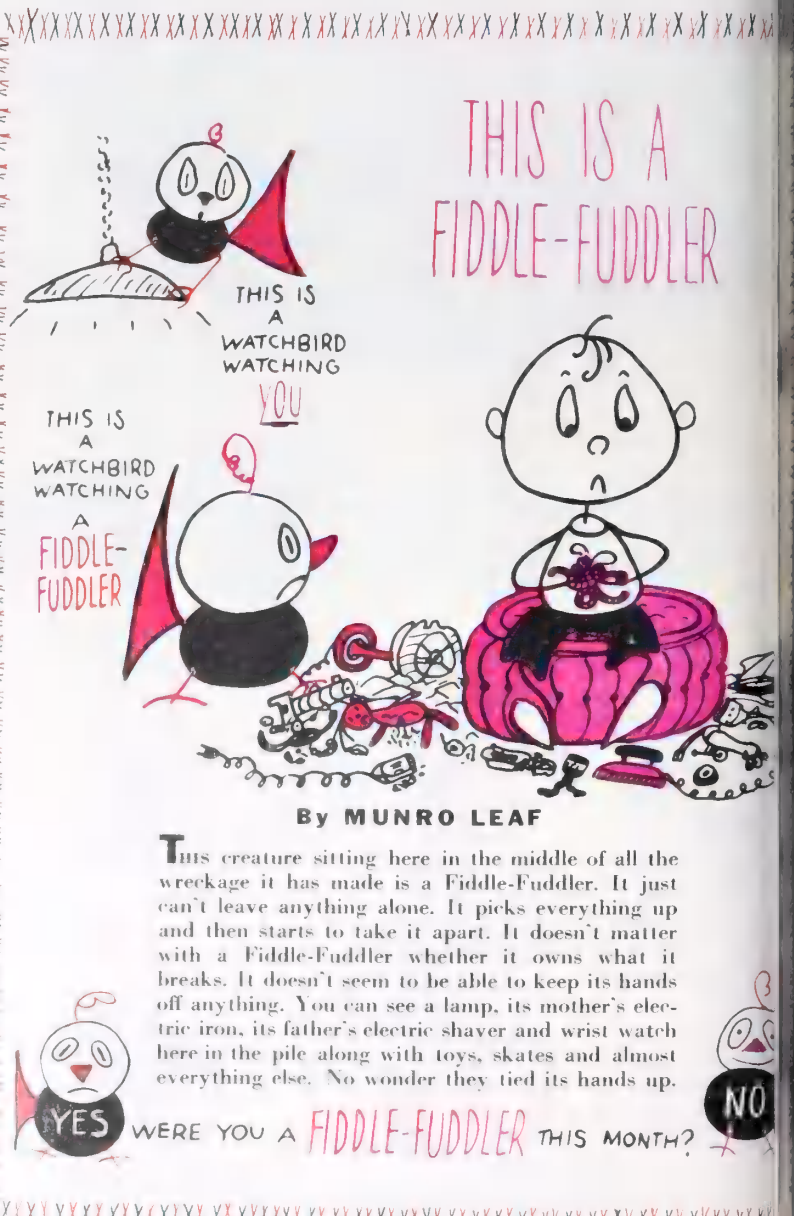
It wasn't cold, but cool, vibrant, delicate. "It's marvelous," Morgan said, breathing deeply. "I'll bet even your old gates will have peaks of snow."

"I guess I sounded pretty silly. But I burn at things like that. Locking gates so everyone will know the development is sacred to people who can pay the rent. It's symbolic of the sort of thing that goes on all over the world. In this case it's just sort of ludicrous, since half the people who are locked out money than the ones who get all t tion. Mr. Rasche, the grocer, lives store and it's no palace, and he cou all. But . . . generally. You know?" with the utter outrage at injustice young people can summon.

"My father says he recognized th wrongs and settled down to live v long ago."

"That's a criminal attitude."

"Such a silly thing to say about m Morgan answered softly. "I'm sort up. I thought you were a phys. ed. m



"Heck no. Economics. But even the point. A phys. ed. major can be ju scious of things as anyone else. I about it, don't you see, Morgan?"

MORGAN, aware only of his voice name, nodded fervently.

"People have got to care," he sa "There's something wrong when yo kids that don't have enough to eat and old people staring all day at the cause they've got nothing else to do, people scared of what they'll have to

"Well, yes, there's something w right," Morgan said slowly. This wa what she'd expected them to be sayi walked in the snow. But where To was willing to follow. She was even to make an effort at understanding, never been with her father. "But w does my caring do? I can't change t And neither can you."

Tom stopped walking. He put a Morgan's arm, turning her toward thought that I wouldn't, somehov little, change the world—I'd see no living at all." His hand fell away arm. Morgan could feel the light pres but knew he'd been unaware of touc They walked on, shooting the snow dery wings before their feet.

By MUNRO LEAF

THIS creature sitting here in the middle of all the wreckage it has made is a Fiddle-Fuddler. It just can't leave anything alone. It picks everything up and then starts to take it apart. It doesn't matter with a Fiddle-Fuddler whether it owns what it breaks. It doesn't seem to be able to keep its hands off anything. You can see a lamp, its mother's electric iron, its father's electric shaver and wrist watch here in the pile along with toys, skates and almost everything else. No wonder they tied its hands up.

Lucky Baby
h's Mommy uses JOHNSON'S
BY POWDER
ot t, smoothest, silkiest powder in ne orld. A few sprinkles at each ia change will chase away prickes d chafes . . . keep your baby or , happy. Sixty years of use as proved its quality and purity.

"What do you want to be?" Morgan said.

"A teacher."

"You mean a college professor?"

He smiled. "I haven't thought that far. It just seems to me that teaching is the only way to reach people, to make them understand."

"Isn't it funny that you're so good at sports?" she mused. "Ned says you're on the track team and everything."

"Not 'and everything.' The track team. What's funny about it? Will you tell me how this idea got around that if you study you can't tell the difference between a lacrosse stick and a butterfly net?"

"What's a lacrosse stick?"

Tom laughed. "In other words, you study?"

"I don't study or know the difference."

"I see. A compromiser. Well, a lacrosse stick is ——" He stopped and drew one in the soft snow with his finger. The outline didn't take very well.

"Lacrosse is a game?"

"A form of murder, actually."

"Do you play?"

"I have. Running's better. You can jog along, thinking about things."

"I thought you had to run fast. You can't jog fast."

"I'm a distance runner."

"Oh. Do you always win?"

"I never win," he said cheerfully. "I bring up the rear, to be sure no one's lost."

"Let's run now," Morgan said suddenly. "Come on, Tom." And she ran down the street, snow crunching beneath her boots, snow dashing wildly in her face and eyes. Her breath felt like slivers, she was warm, and her heart beat furiously. She looked sideways, to see Tom trot idly up beside her, his arms crooked lightly.

He grinned at her. "Lift your knees. You're running like a girl," he said, with no gasping of breath.

"How should I run?" she puffed. But she watched the easy pumping of his legs, and began to lift her knees higher. "Oh, gosh, I can't," she said, stopping, her breath coming in huge gulps. The snow fell between them as they stood, looking at each other and laughing.

After Morgan left, Julie went in to see that Ned was in bed. He was. He was already sound asleep. She turned off all but one dim light, and went back to get ready for bed herself. Morgan's happy, she thought. Well, it was probably nice for Morgan. If only that kind of happiness, the kind girls got from being with boys, weren't so . . . private. It made Julie a little lonesome, a little jealous. She sat in the big chair and tried to read, but it wasn't the same with Morgan gone. The room seemed stiller, like a place that waited for another presence. She held the book on her lap and watched the white snow sift against the window.

When her father came in, she ran to meet him.

"What're you doing up?" he whispered, with a glance at Ned. He hung his damp coat in the bathroom. "Where's Morgan?"

"Out walking in the snow."

"Is she crazy?" He almost forgot to keep his voice down. "What's either one of you thinking, to let her go walking around this time of night by herself?"

"She's not by herself. She's with Tom Miller."

"Oh." He hesitated in obvious surprise. "I see." They walked into the kitchen, where Julie began to heat milk for her father's before-bed cocoa. On the sideboard was a sandwich wrapped in wax paper. She put it on a plate. "Why don't you have part?" he offered.

"I'll just have cocoa, pop."

They stood at the sideboard, swallowing the hot drinks.

"Tom's a pleasant fellow," Mr. Connor said, turning his sandwich around in absent inspection. He bit into it.

"We went up to the Millers' for doughnuts tonight."

"You did? That's nice. Funny to think of Morgan walking in the snow. She's such an indoor girl usually."

"I suppose this isn't usually." Julie shrugged. "I'm glad you're home," she added softly.

"Well, so'm I, honey."

They idled through the little washing up, exchanging slow comments. Neither admitted that they were waiting for Morgan to get home.

Morgan fell asleep with a nursery rhyme, slightly modified, in her mind. Tom, Tom, the Millers' son, she hummed to herself, Tom, Tom, the Millers' son, stole my heart and away he run. . . .

Up the iron stairway went the costumed children, up and up to the lofty assembly room with its stage, its flag, its decrepit piano, its ageless musty schoolhouse odor. A towering Christmas tree was strung with popcorn garlands, paper ornaments, silver stars. It was lighted, sparsely but beautifully, and its forest breath filled the children, and the teachers, with heady excitement.

As the pupils filed in some of them ignored the waiting rows of parents at the back of the room, but most looked eagerly for the familiar face. There were occasional called greetings from smaller children. The older ones contented themselves with short nods, fleeting smiles. Ned, having made sure of her, did not look at Morgan again.

Miss Applejoy, the music teacher, stood at the piano, swept the children into silence with her eyes, sat down, hands high. The principal strode onto the stage, smiling peaceably at his children, nodded to Miss Applejoy, whose hands fell upon the cracked, yellowed keys.

"Oh-oh, saay can you-oo seee!" the children sang, straining their young pipes, following the amiably swinging arms of the principal who had, without knowing a note of music, successfully led thousands of children through The Star-Spangled Banner.

The singing concluded, a deep murmurous thunder ensued. Then the pupils, the teachers, the parents were seated. The principal explained that the fourth grade would present a brief Christmas pageant. He left the stage. There was a moment of utter silence, then Miss Applejoy began to play softly, with strange beauty, on the old piano. "O little town of Bethlehem," the children sang clearly, sweetly, as the curtain drew back.

There was the stable, and there within it Mary, in blue, bending over the cradle; Joseph, with a staff, standing beside her. Shepherds moved about, holding white lambs, and above them hung the shining star.

The children's voices hushed, and from the wings came the vibrant ringing voice of a boy, and Ned came walking with slow steps, in a robe of green, a crown of gilt, a little scarlet box held out before him.

"Myrrh is mine, its bitter perfume Breathes a scent of gathering gloom——"

he sang in an unshadowed treble, a choir voice, bird's voice, the beautiful voice of a young boy. Morgan closed her eyes and felt the warm tears slide through.

The fifth grade and the sixth greeted Christmas. The audience joined in carols. The Christmas program was over. When Ned had shed his costume, he met Morgan in the hall and they started home. Outside, cold clamped immediately at their ankles, their faces. The schoolyard was sanded, and puddles, iced solid, were black irregular traceries flung over depressions in the ground.

"How'd you like it, Morgy?" Ned asked.

"I think it was—you were—wonderful," she said, knowing how little that said what she thought, and knowing Ned would not want more. It was the Christmas holiday, and Ned was joyous, not tender.

"Oh, swell," he replied with satisfaction, and the words that were not said, the love that was not expressed, were nothing to a boy with Christmas and two weeks of vacation ahead of him.

Ned, from the first of December, marked off days on the calendar. Today he took up his crayon and drew a mark through December twenty-third.

"There," he said. "That's done."

"The day isn't," Julie remarked.

"Well, it's as good as is," Ned replied imperturbably. "When will Morgan get back so we can go get the tree?"

Lucky, Lucky Baby—his Mommy uses JOHNSON'S BABY LOTION too!
Scientifically formulated to prevent irritating rashes. New extra protection for delicate skin. Rich in soothing lanolin. Smooth it all over body after every bath. Give your baby the benefit of this new extra care.

The warmer the weather... the more need for Tampax

You put away your furs, your wools, your winter clothes in the summertime. Why should you tie yourself to something as hot, as uncomfortable, as unnecessary as the whole bulky belt-pin-pad harness?

Free yourself . . . with Tampax. This internal method of sanitary protection is not only comfortable all year round, but ideal in warm weather. The Tampax can't be seen, can't even be felt, once it's in place. Tampax doesn't chafe, doesn't irritate—and it even prevents odor from forming. Best of all, you can go bathing while wearing Tampax.

NO BELTS NO PINS NO PADS NO ODOR

Think what a difference that makes to your vacation and week-end plans. You feel you can plan anything, go anywhere, any time! A whole month's supply of Tampax goes into your purse, offers no packing problem. And Tampax is so easy to dispose of.

Drug and notion counters everywhere sell Tampax in your choice of 3 absorbencies: Regular, Super, Junior. Look for Tampax Vendor in restrooms throughout the United States. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

TAMPAX INCORPORATED LHJ-84-N
Palmer, Mass.

Please send me in plain wrapper a trial package of Tampax. I enclose 10¢ (stamps or silver) to cover cost of mailing. Size is checked below.

( ) REGULAR ( ) SUPER ( ) JUNIOR

Name.....

Address.....

City..... State .....

"Pretty soon. She had to bring—take—her presents up to Verna and Betty."

"What'd she get them?"

"A little wooden hatstand with a doll's face on it for Betty, and six love stories for Verna. She read them first."

"What sappy presents. What'd you get Morgy?" Ned asked persuasively.

"I'm not going to tell."

"Ah, Julie—c'mon. I'm not going to tell."

"You bet your life you're not."

"But it's more fun. Stretches it out, you know. I'll tell what I got for her."

"I don't want you to tell. Anyway, I can guess."

Ned looked stunned. "What do you mean? How could you guess?"

"Because," Julie said, "you ——" She stopped. What was it in her that wanted to torment Ned? She wanted to say that every year brought the same things in Ned's little parcels. A calendar pasted on red drawing paper, a bit of colored rag for sticking pins in, a cardboard bookmark. She hesitated, looking at him, and turned away.

"I what?" he persisted.

"Always want to know things," Julie said flatly. "I bet you even peek in the closet."

"I do not," Ned shrieked. "I do not, and you know it, Julie."

SHE did know it. Ned was quite easily honest. He'd tease and delight himself with speculations about the closet. He'd never open it. "I opened it one year," she said scornfully.

"Oh, Julie, you didn't."

"Oh, Julie, I did."

"But did you see everything?"

"I took it all out and looked." She sounded cold and defiant, determined to make herself and her crime fully known.

"When? When did you do that?"

"Oh, long ago. You were just a baby."

"Did anything happen?"

"It depends on what you mean by happen. I had a horrid Christmas, that's all. Nobody found out or anything." She was suddenly downcast, remembering her ridiculous squeals of surprise, and how hard it had been to go on pretending surprise. She remembered the way her mother had watched her. "I think mother knew," she said.

"Mothers know everything," Ned told her sentimentally.

"I don't know about that." Julie picked up a book. "I want to read, Ned. Think of something to do."

Ned went into the kitchen for bread and butter, walked to the window. In the street, sunlight glistened on patches of ice, and a man, carrying an enormous tree, was followed by a little group of children. They didn't speak and they looked cold. "We won't get a big one," Ned said, but Julie didn't answer. He went on staring out the window till Morgan came in.

"Hi, everybody," she called, standing just inside the door, packages in her arms, her cheeks and eyes shining with cold. "It's simply awful out. Like the steppes of Amazon."

"You mean Asia," Julie said. She got up. "Want me to help?" She took some brown paper grocery packages into the kitchen.

"What's that?" Ned said happily, gesturing toward two tissue-wrapped boxes.

"They're for me, greedy. From Verna and Betty."

"Do you know what's in them?"

Morgan laughed and ran to the bedroom to put them away. "I got a turkey," she said, coming back to the kitchen. "And nuts and olives and cranberry sauce, and ——"

"What are we going to cook a turkey in?" Julie interrupted. "We haven't got a roasting pan big enough for a turkey."

"Mrs. Miller is lending us one. I was up there for—for a little while, and she said she would. Tom's going to bring it down."

"Did we get Tom a present?" Ned said. "I mean, I made him one, and Mr. and Mrs. Miller. But did you two?"

"Well, I didn't," Julie said. "At least, not Tom. Will this fit in the icebox?"

"Take out one of the shelves," Morgan said. "Did you for Mr. and Mrs. Miller?"

"Yes." She'd borrowed from her father, and the cats would wait another week.

"That was nice of you, Julie." Morgan was darting delighted glances at her sister, and her voice had a heady ring of delight that to Ned was the Christmas spirit finally gathering itself in their house.

Packages continued to pour from the bags. A bottle of green olives with red centers—Christmas colors—a cellophane bag of walnuts to crack, a bunch of white thick celery. Everything was cold to touch, everything was brilliantly beautiful. She must have bought Julie's present, Ned thought. That's why she keeps looking at her that way. Julie didn't seem to notice as she stored food away.

The doorbell rang; Ned ran to let Tom in.

It was Christmas Eve, after dinner. Ned was in the bedroom, with the door open, wrapping his gifts. Caroling filled the apartment, and Ned thought it was nice to hear his father's low voice now and then through the music.

ROLL CALL IN EDEN

BY VONNA HICKS ADRIAN

"And whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof. —Genesis 2:19

Lord God bade Adam call, call,
Call every creature by its name . . .
Lion, Leopard, Lamb,
Circling round the Tree they came;
Up from Tigris swam Crocodile to hear his name.

They frolicked round the fruited Tree
And Leopard nuzzled Lamb. The plush
Of Tiger's striped flank
Met Zebra's there . . . until a hush
Chilled the circling rank,
Chilled the bloom on vine and bush:

Serpent!* rang the call, call,
Serpent!* . . . Through the shuddering leaves
Slid Serpent, smiling to foresee
Red rage in Rhino's eye, and fall
Of blood on emerald grass
Beneath the ruby-fruited Tree.

"I'm going out for a bit." That was Julie. Ned looked up from the intricacies of her present. Why would she be going out tonight?

"Julie, where would you go tonight?" Morgan said. "It's Christmas Eve."

"That's why. I'm going over to the church for a little bit."

"The church?" Morgan repeated. "Well, that's nice." She seemed rather at a loss.

"They put the baby in the cradle tonight," Julie explained. "I've been watching them move the shepherds and the Magi closer and closer. Tonight the baby goes in and I want to see it."

"I didn't know you were doing that."

"How could you?" There was the sound of the closet door opening as Julie got her coat. "I didn't tell you." A pause. "Would anyone like to come?"

"I'll go with you," Ned called. He shoved his two unwrapped gifts under Morgan's pillow and went into the living room. "Don't look under your pillow, Morgy. I'll finish when we get back."

"You really want to come?" Julie asked.

"Sure, I'd like to go in a church."

"It's good to go to church on Christmas," Dan mused. "The Birth seems to have got trampled in the market place."

"What?" Morgan said.

"Christmas. The merchants' bona other hundred years of this and th remember who the Christ Child was

"Let's go, huh?" Ned said.

The church was two blocks aw corner. Its windows were luminous hued color and they seemed, from a through the snow, to float like g tapestries. Nearer, gray stone walls substance and the large carved doo open as a group of people came out

"Take your hat off," Julie whisper entered.

"Oh, sure." He snatched at it, stuff his pocket. "What do we do now?"

"We just wait a minute. Till thos near the crèche are gone."

"What's a crèche?"

"The stable, with Mary and Josepl cattle."

"I know. Like we had at school."

The church was musky, candlelit, mysterious with shadowed places. Ned up at the ceiling, which was lost in He was surprised to find that the seemed, from inside, unlighted. That cause the night pressed at them out t somehow he'd imagined that church would shine from both sides. It n almost white light about the stab brighter, having the walls so dark. stood behind the rows of pews, a began to play Adeste fidelis.

Julie shivered a little and lifted h She walked softly toward the side a down to the stable, Ned following.

The little figures of the Magi, mou camels, were at the stable entrance were clustered overhead. Joseph and M the shepherds were within, with a cow lambs close to the cradle. But the Baby lie in the plaster straw.

"He isn't there," Ned said unhappi

Julie didn't answer. She looked snow-powdered crèche, noting the cl position of each figure. Then she si can't understand. When does He go

"Just before Mass," said a voice, and they turned to an old person who had moved up beside the

"What Mass?" Julie asked.

"Midnight. But the singing starts a and just before the singing, the nuns Baby in."

"I see. Thank you," Julie said. She lieved that the woman went on then, at the altar. She didn't like to talk to p a church where they belonged, for fea know she did not.

"But that's more than two hour Julie. We can't wait."

"No, I suppose not." They conti study the stable, the Christmas hos said, "Ned, let's sit in one of the pew

"What for?"

"Listen to the music, maybe."

NED hesitated. "O.K. It's nice here."

"Yes. I like a church." They sl consciously into a nearby pew, look to see if anyone was watching. They kneel. Just sat back rather stiffly.

The organ continued to sing in the air. The children recognized carols, many of the hymns. Ned wondered music could be heard out on the snow He shifted a little on the hard seat. Ju her eyes on the white, lace-hung altar. candles and the arabesques of gold did it all mean—the music and the the gold and the shadows, the blood- candle cups? Transfixed, Julie stared altar as though it might yield up its to her, if her eyes were steady. I wan good she thought. Most of all, over eve I want to be good. The way saints ha good, or the Knights of Arthur's Table pure, and kind, and never wrong, she th Like them.

"Julie," Ned whispered, "I'm getti sitting here."

At home, Dan greeted them happ though they'd been gone a long time. nice?" he asked.

"Neat," Ned answered. "Only Jesus in the cradle. He goes in about eleven Only we couldn't wait."

of course not." Dan looked at his daughter. "Perhaps, if you wanted to, l walk over then, Julie?"

ook her head. "No. No, I guess not."

d her gaze to Dan's and said thought- 's funny that you can't keep a feeling, I mean, you can feel something so nd then in a little while all you can er is that you did feel it."

aid to Julie, "Sometimes, honey, the ng that saves us is not being able to eeling. Emotions can be very strong, alting, very sad. Besides, emotions ck. Others come." He lifted his eye- Anyway, when you're young, they do."

an, detecting sadness, said quickly, ouldn't we hang some stockings? On ccase or something?"

ey did that, and lit the tree, and then ved the cot into the bedroom so Ned t see them putting his presents under stmas tree.

ristmas morning, Julie, opening her r from Ned, her pen-and-pencil set copy of Yeats from her father, her chief from Anna Marie, tried not to at there did not seem to be a present r sister. Oh, it'll be there, she assured It's little, probably, so I haven't noticed listened to Ned shriek with pleasure e new screw driver with alternating the plaid wool shirt, the little garage cars, the bathtub boat. The pile of s beneath the tree dwindled, and Julie feel a hurtful pressure in her throat. Morgan couldn't just forget?

oorbell rang.

ry Christmas, everyone," said Tom, in with a white-and-green hatbox held before him. "Merry Christmas."

his big brother," said a voice, and a lder version of Tom was with them.

yeah. This is my brother, Geoff," id. "These are the Connors, Geoff. nd Morgan, and Julie and Ned."

smiled. "I asked to come, too, to meet ous Connors."

we famous?" Ned asked.

rtain circles," Geoff told him.

t's in that box, Tom?" Ned asked.

e of yours, young fellow." Tom over and stood before Julie. "Miss eetings from your sister." And he laid at her feet.

bit her lip and looked at Morgan. "I— ——" n it, darling," Morgan said.

knelt to undo the ribbon. Her hands motionless as she spied the punched the cover, and once more she looked r sister. "Is it ——" Quickly, she un- ribbon, pulled the cover away. The at in the middle of the bottom of the nking young blue eyes. She was gray, ost a Persian. Julie knelt, not speaking, ching the kitten.

she beautiful?" Ned cried. He toward her. "Julie, don't you like her? n't you say something?"

dy, let Julie pick her up first."

reached into the box and lifted her warm and slightly purring. It fitted her hands, soft as a boll of cotton on nch. It licked her finger briefly, then s chin on her thumb.

re did you get her, Morgan?" Julie rapt voice.

t in a bid for her ages ago. This woman the laundry told me her cat was having She's seven weeks old now."

ppose she'll miss her mother," Ned We'll have to be very kind to her. Say, e you going to name her, Julie?"

her Tammany," Tom said.

shook his head. "This is a lady, Tom. ould have a ladylike name. Mitzi, could call her Dinah," Mr. Connor you promise not to disappear through king glass."

," Julie said. "Only I'm not at all like o I don't think I could use her cat's She looked at Morgan. "It's the . . . t present in the world, Morgan."

got up, holding the kitten which pleased to go on nestling in her hands. ame is Amy."

"Now that really is a ladylike name," Tom approved. "Suits her just right." He settled down beside Ned and the little garage. "Say, look at this, Geoff."

"Christmas doesn't really last any longer than any other day, does it?" Ned said that night. He was in his pajamas, running an elaborate sand dumper that Mrs. Miller had given him. Julie was in the kitchen with a pan of shredded newspaper, teaching Amy to be housebroken. Morgan was slumped in a chair, doing nothing. She said, in answer to Ned's remark, that she was very glad it didn't. "Why?" he asked indignantly.

"Because . . . it's beautiful and it's fun, but I get all worn out."

"Morgan," he told her, tipping a bucket of sand into his truck, "you're getting old, or something. Last year when I said that, you said it should last longer, and we could take some away from the next day, remember?"

"Was that what I said? Well, I guess I am getting older. Seventeen in February."

"That's not so terribly old." He sat back, clasping his knees. "Morgy, you won't . . . get married or anything like that, will you? I mean, what would happen to us, if you did?"

"Hold on. What started this?"

Ned lifted his shoulders. "I asked Geoff how old that girl is that he was going to marry ——"

"Neddy!"

"Oh, he didn't mind. Anyway, he says he isn't going to marry her, it was a—a . . . well, I forget exactly, but something he's gotten over, so I said how old was she if he was going to marry her, and he said she was twenty-one. They parted the best of friends," he added thoughtfully.

"He certainly seemed happy."

"He's a nice guy. Not as nice as Tom, of course."

"No," Morgan said, smiling to herself. "Not that nice." She looked at Ned. "Did you tell Tom I wanted a charm bracelet?"

"Yeah. Wasn't that all right? He asked what you wanted, so I told him."

"It was fine. I just wondered." She twisted the bracelet gently round her wrist. Not one he'd bought with all the charms attached but a silver link chain with all different charms fastened on. Including a tiny gold track shoe that Tom had got, as he said, not for distinguished running but for perseverance. The bracelet jingled softly as she moved her arm.

"But you won't, will you?" Ned persisted. "Get married?"

"Not ever, darling?"

"Well . . . not till I do. Then it'll be all right."

Morgan, about to make some light reply, saw his face and changed her mind. "I expect I won't," she told him. When he asked for unimportant things—éclairs for dessert, a movie—Ned was often hesitant. He let no doubt delay him with that which really mattered.

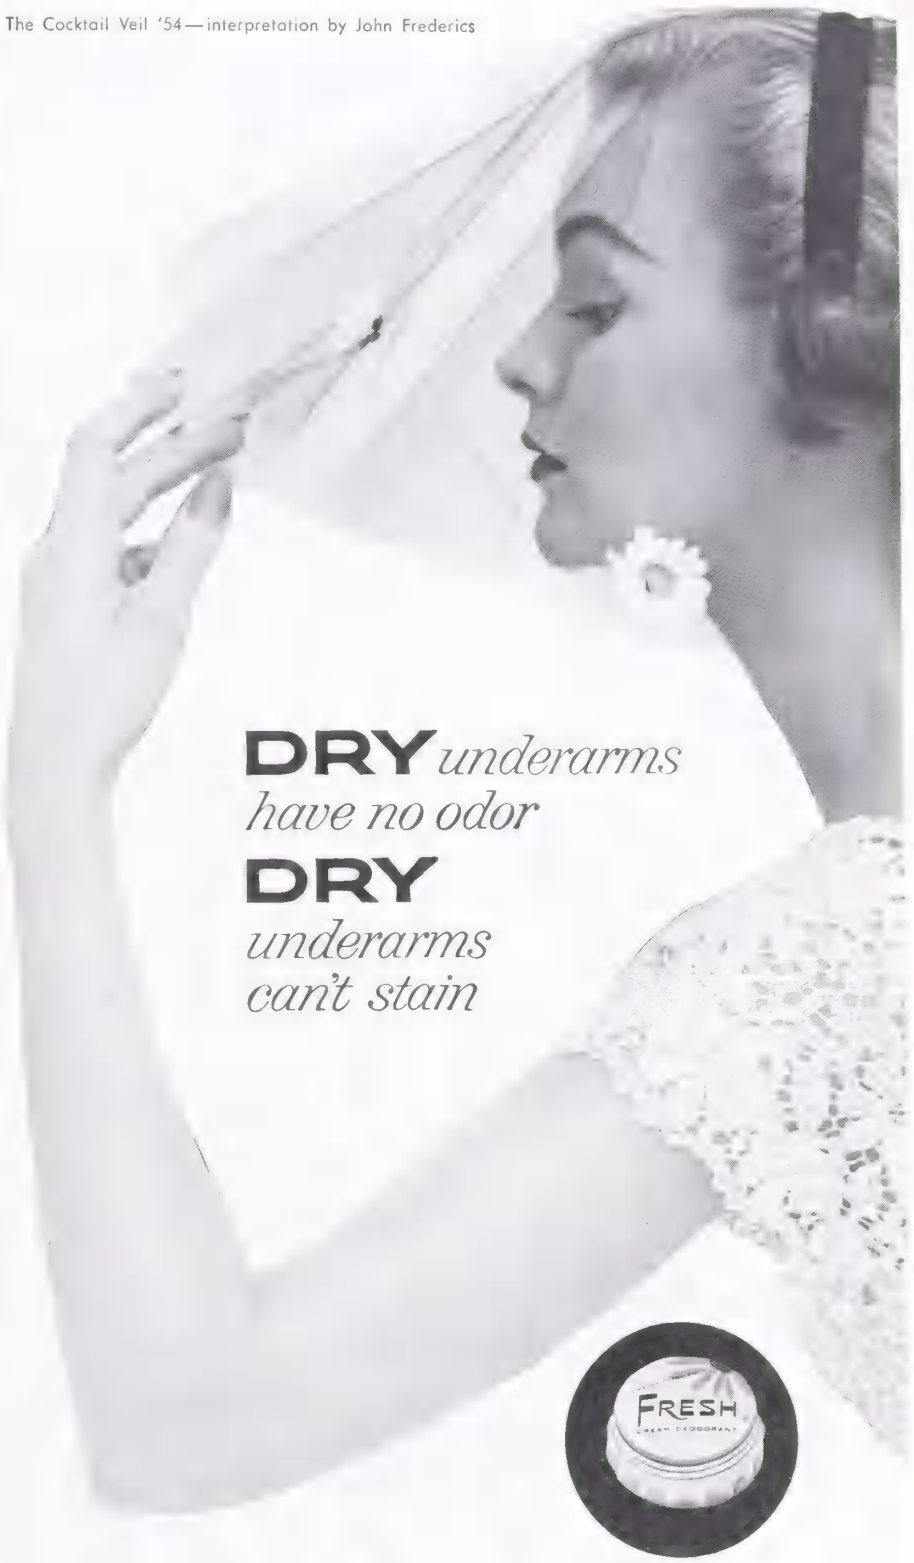
It rained on her birthday. When she came out of school, Morgan found the marble lobby streaked with wet dirt, acrid with the odor of damp clothing. She hunched in her coat at the head of the broad flight of stone stairs leading to the street and eyed the straight-falling rain. Reluctantly, she started down.

AT the curb, a short way up the street, a little bright blue coupé glistened perkily in the rain, and as she approached the door opened and Tom jumped out.

"Morgan, hurry," he said. "Get in."

She stood, too astonished to move.

"Come on, come on. It's wet out here," he urged, and propelled her into the small front seat. He ran around and got in the other side. "There now," he said, turning to her proudly. "What do you think of this?"



"But . . . where did you get it?"

"It's mine. I did it with my little playground. Didn't you ever hear of anyone saving money before?" he grinned.

"I never knew anyone who bought a car before," she answered slowly. It seemed a tremendous thing to have done. "It's all yours?"

"And paid for. Also, I have a license. Isn't she beautiful?" He peered through the windshield, started the motor so the wipers would

The Cocktail Veil '54—interpretation by John Frederics

only FRESH has this "Moisture-Shield" formula to keep underarms DRY!

For sure protection, and for long-lasting protection, you can trust gentle, new Fresh Cream Deodorant.

Fresh has a special "Moisture-Shield" formula. Tests in a leading university laboratory show that new Fresh has up to 180% greater astringent action than other leading cream deodorants. It's this astringent action that keeps your underarms dry.

- Trust your loveliest clothes to Fresh.
- It's fluffier! Never sticky or gritty.
- Fresh is guaranteed not to lose its effectiveness for you—or your money back.
- Be lovely to love always—use gentle, effective Fresh Cream Deodorant every day.

Fresh is also manufactured and distributed in Canada. Fresh is a registered trademark of The Pharma-Craft Corporation

Something thrilling happens

Your skin feels soft and smooth as a rose petal

Simple two-way treatment helps blemished skin. Suddenly your skin looks like a little girl's. Gone are hateful blackheads, externally caused pimples, oily shine, flaky dryness. That's your thrilling reward for making Cuticura Soap and Ointment your daily routine . . . How does Cuticura work such wonders? Cuticura Soap is superfatted, the mildest, best kind of complexion soap. It preserves the natural moisture as it cleanses. And Cuticura Ointment softens, gently stimulates, visibly improves your skin. Millions of women the world over thank Cuticura for their exquisite skin. Get Cuticura Soap and Ointment today!

Cuticura

FREE soap sample and folder giving correct techniques for cleansing normal, dry, oily and blemished skin. Write to Cuticura, Dept. J-8, Malden 48, Mass.

GREYHOUND PRESENTS

Delightful Vacations

for summer pleasure!

Greyhound EXPENSE-PAID TOURS include hotels, sightseeing, transportation

Choose from hundreds of these pleasure-planned vacation tours from any part of America—for any length of time, any budget. For example:

NIAGARA FALLS—5 days, 4 nights' hotel, from New York City $41.00

EVERGREEN CIRCLE—3 days, 2 nights' hotel, from Seattle $28.40

PAUL BUNYAN—MINNESOTA—7 days, 6 nights' hotel, from Minneapolis... $38.95

YOSEMITE NAT'L PARK—3 days, 2 nights' hotel... $48.50

Add low Greyhound fare from your home. U. S. Tax extra.

FREE! MAP OF U. S. A.—WITH TOUR FACTS!

Mail to Greyhound Tour Dept., 71 W. Lake St., Chicago, Ill. for colorful vacation-planning map—describes 50 Expense-Paid Tours.

Name_____

Address_____

City & State_____

Send me special information on a tour to:_____

LHJ-8-54

GREYHOUND

MORE CASH FOR YOU!

YES, you can have more cash in your pocket if you put your spare time to work. Write for our money-making plan. No obligation.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
338 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

THIS STUNNING BOX OF 21 XMAS CARDS

YOURS FOR ONLY 1¢

Yes, this new 21-card assortment is really yours for only 1c, just to prove how easily a little spare time can earn you $50.00 in cash! Just see these pretty Xmas Greeting Cards—and you'll want to start showing them to friends and neighbors. You make up to 50c profit per box. Make extra profits with complete selection of Name-Imprinted Xmas Cards, Gift Wrappings, Personal Stationery, All-Occasion Cards—as low as $1.00 per box.

Only One to a Family! Limited Offer!

Just send postcard and ask for the 1c box. Send no money. We will send the illustrated 21-card box, for which you will owe us 1c. We'll also include additional assortments ON APPROVAL, plus Money-Making Plan and FREE Personalized Samples. Hurry! We have only a small quota of 1c boxes. Write postcard to ARTISTIC CARD CO., INC.

548 Way Street, Elmira, New York

swing. There was no heater and it was cold. But not so cold as outside, and dry, with the delicious protection of a little place snugly secure from the elements. Everything, even the dashboard, was painted bright blue. Hand-painted. The gear shift sprang in a slender shaft from the floor and had a large red-and-white dice cube for its handle.

"Well?" said Tom.

"I don't know what to say," Morgan answered. "I just . . . it's marvelous."

"You're the first person to see it."

"You mean you haven't told anyone else?"

"Oh, sure, I told the family. But you get the first ride. Where do you want to go?"

"Let's drive along the river. Would that be all right?"

"Anywhere you say." He put the car in gear, steered into the street.

Morgan looked out eagerly, to see if anyone she knew would spy her here, being driven off in an automobile. Verna was absent. Betty was playing basketball. She sighed and turned to Tom with a smile. "I was hoping someone would see me."

"We'll give them other chances," he said. "Lucky it was raining today, so I didn't have to work."

"And I was just thinking how awful it was to rain on my birthday."

"You see. Never judge hastily. Happy birthday, Morgy." He took one hand off the steering wheel, fumbled in his pocket, and thrust a little package at her.

"Hey, watch where you're going," she cried.

Tom swerved away from the sidewalk. "Don't get nervous. I can drive fine."

"I know you can. At least, I'm sure you can." She glanced down at her present. "Shall I open it?"

"Sure." He turned east, heading for the river.

The present was another charm. A tiny car which had been carefully painted blue. "Oh, Tom, it's darling." She turned it around, examining its minute details. "Who painted it? You?"

"Yup."

She giggled. "You did a better job here than you did on the real thing."

"I didn't paint this," Tom said, waving a hand. "It came this way."

"Well, I'm glad it did. I like it."

"Me too. Let's call it Bluebird."

"All right. The first ride in Bluebird."

They'd reached the river now. It swam along beside them, broad, brown, wrinkled and dartled with the driving rain.

"I'm glad I found you this afternoon. It was sort of a chance. I waited nearly an hour."

"You did, Tom? That was very nice."

Now the piers and the docks, the warehouses began. Tom turned onto a vacant, two-storied pier, rumbled over the wooden floor and stopped near the edge. Rain beat against the windshield, so that the scene before them blurred. The two great bridges, Brooklyn and Williamsburg, emerged from shadows.

"This is only the second time I've been in a car," Morgan said, leaning her head back against the seat. She was conscious of the cold now, of her wet ankles, and the clammy interior of the coupé. But she wouldn't mention that in Tom's moment of acquisition and pride.

"Is it?" he said. "That's odd."

"Why odd? I'll bet there are people who've never been in one at all."

"When was the other time? That you rode in one?"

"Oh, ages ago. A friend of mine, Kitty McMahon, her family moved to Jersey and they bought a car. They took me out in it one day before they left. Anyway, I think you're terribly smart to have gotten one, Tom."

He smiled and put his arm over the back of the seat, not quite touching her head. Never before had they been alone, except for the night they walked in the snow. Never, as Morgan thought now, in a place where they could sit still, and talk, or —— She think of anything to say; she didn't move, for fear he'd take away his a breathed softly, staring ahead at the the blue dashboard.

Morgan wondered what he was about, sitting so quietly, with his ar but not quite, touching her. If I shou head back, a little bit, she thought, touched his coat sleeve, what woul He had a nice profile. A handsome, b a mouth that was nicely shaped. A talking, and for—except he never kissing. At least, he'd never kissed had a moment of anguished jealousy ing who might have been held tig arms, against his chest, who might ha the softness of his mouth. Suppose s her head back and he turned, so eyes were very close, looking over ea faces . . . then would his arm tight shoulder, and would he bend to would he kiss her?

Softly, shyly, she leaned her head gave her a quick, smiling, sideway and turned back to the river. Rat Morgan sat up.

"Cold?" he asked.

With another person, or if Mo been a different person, she might yes, might have snuggled against hin how cold she was. But Morgan cou that. She c shake her h wonder if notice she w one except ter. We're friendly, she bitterly.

"Look," "Let me put on your brac held her wri steadily, and bled with t "Hold still, he said, an with deter fitted the lit the silver cha

Morgan felt as though she were f warm pulsing wool. Tom, she cried please, Tom. But, of course, said no leaned back wearily when he'd finis

"I suppose we should get back," making no move to start the car. through the tear-spattered windshie warships across the river. "There they said. "There they wait."

"What waits, Tom?"

"The war. Its ships and its purpose. destroyers? Put in for repairs. The a few days off. Then off they go, sh What do you think we're doing?"

"Us?"

"Not us. Well, us too. But every can't plan anything, any more. Th know, most of them don't count on We go to school, or get jobs, but it contingencies. All just waiting, you

She nodded, and then what he w crystallized. "Tom, are you goin drafted?" she cried.

He seemed moved at her desperate ence to all fates except his. But he also, and rather thoughtfully, surpris not just me—I—you know. It's ever

"I know, I know, but you're wh about," she said frantically, not sto think how she sounded. "I don't wa be a soldier, to be killed."

"Morgan," he said urgently, "don don't talk this way." He looked at he then softly, then perplexedly. "To be I probably won't be drafted. Not finished school. It's just—I was trying you understand ——"

Morgan dropped her eyes, and si know. Pop tries to make me underst I guess I'm just not bright."

"Don't say things like that. You a gent, and that's why it's wrong that y seem to know how important it is t stand what's happening in the world a few soldiers and the people of anoth try. We're in this. All of us."

ss we are," she said dully. Her face with the recollection of what she'd in her fear of having him go. It was orse to have it overlooked than it ave been to have him speak of it.
back," she said.
ninute. Look, Morgan, don't be sad."
ot."
you are. And I don't want you to be.
use of me." She didn't reply, so he ver and took her hands in his. The jangled softly.

AN, with the sort of prescience she had s feelings, realized that Tom was try-y he loved her, and could not. She oment of distaste for herself. He was kind and honest. He was Tom, try-arnedest to help her, and she wasn't ither of them. Well, she thought, I'll ybe, someday —— She looked up and a very respectable smile. "I'll start newspapers," she said. "Tomorrow.
y, because it's my birthday."
eased her hands with a lightened ex-
, as though she had delivered them m torment. As they drove off the hollow wooden floor rumbling under es, the street lights went on. They ike huge floating dandelions in the the mist from the river.

was at Anna Marie's, where they'd afternoon doing homework. "I guess r go," she said, closing her books. She ut the window. "It's raining."
sure. It's been raining all afternoon."
arie, softly blond, looked at her thin
You know, Julie, if you go on frown-way, you'll get creases in your fore-hat?"
en you won't be pretty."
n't be anyway. What difference does
?"
ll sometime. Besides, you'll probably y in a few years. One of those coltish me boys like them."
you going to start that too?"
which?"
boy, boy, boy thing. It honestly seems I hear any more."
, Julie, you reach a certain age, you t's sort of unavoidable, I'm told. Do t to be a girl Peter Pan?"
dly," Julie said stiffly.
now, don't get mad. I was fooling, Anna Marie studied Julie, added, "I s subnormal not to like boys."
ormal. Maybe it is. Maybe I will,
." Julie looked rather sadly around, Anna Marie. "Of course, if you do—ing them, I mean—that'll be sort of hard on me. I'll have to catch up, I suppose. Or just not see you."

"In the first place, liking them and getting to go out with them are two different things," Anna Marie said soothingly. "And in the second place, what would it have to do with us and homework and all?"

"I'm not sure. But it isn't the same. Girls who like boys have to be talking about it all the time. I don't propose to be one of those girls giggling in groups and sending anonymous valentines and calling boys on the phone and then hanging up when they answer."

"That's a very confused sentence."

"Well, I'm a very confused person."

Anna Marie laughed. "You know what my father says? That the eleventh commandment is, 'Thou shalt not take thyself too seriously.'"

"Did he say it about me?"

"No, but that's a perfect example of what he meant."

Julie, reluctantly, had to smile. "I have to go," she repeated. "It's Morgy's birthday, and pop said he'd buy her a cake and candles before he left. I have to fix them."

In the street, she put up her shabby umbrella, clutched her books beneath the other arm, and started home.

Amy came to the door when she entered the apartment. The kitten skittered over slippery linoleum on her small wide pads, then sat at Julie's feet, her pink mouth open in a series of mewings that might have meant anything. Julie took them to mean dismay over a long separation. She shed her dripping clothes, accidentally sprinkled Amy, who retreated.

"Come on," Julie said, kneeling. "Here puss, Amy."

The kitten advanced delicately, a smoke of fur and whiskers. She came almost within reach of Julie's fingers, then turned and ran up the back of a chair. But Julie coaxed and wheedled, and eventually Amy succumbed. She even followed when Julie went into the kitchen to stick candles in the store cake.

"You're my little fur love," Julie told her aloud, and Amy made some answer to the low voice.

Ned was having what he called the "chicken pops." Morgan sank to the edge of his cot and patted his leg. "How do you feel, love?"

"Itchy." He scowled. "Julie says I look like a cannibal."

"Caliban," Julie corrected.

"It's the same thing, isn't it?" Morgan asked absently, straightening the covers. She didn't see Julie's expression, but looked up at the tone of her voice.

"Honestly," Julie was saying, "I think it's amazing to have such hideous gaps in anybody's information. How could you not know who Caliban was?"

Morgan exhaled a long breath into the air above her. "It seems to me that all I hear on all sides is how ignorant I am." She looked at Julie. "How in the world can I start learning all these things now? It's too late."

"You could begin," Julie said, "by resisting that sort of reading." She indicated Morgan's love story with her head.

Morgan smiled and shrugged her shoulders. "Some other time, Julie. My resistance is low today." The three of them laughed.

But Morgan, looking at Ned's afflicted face, thought, I'll never be good enough, or smart enough, or anything enough for Tom. I just can't begin reading, and caring about all the things he cares about. After their first ride in Bluebird, she had tried, really tried. She'd sat down with her father's Times and looked from one headline to the next. But she hadn't heard of half the people, didn't know what the references were, didn't care what these people thought about anything. Only what Tom thought—that was all.

She was house-cleaning. A rag wrapped around her hair, an old cotton dress and a thin sweater, another rag in her hand. She left Ned and returned to the kitchen, where she was scrubbing down the shelves. Julie was "turning out the bedroom."

"Morgy?"

Morgan looked around. "What is it, Julie?" She sat back on her heels to wring out the rag over a pail of soapy water.

Julie, her face smudged and frowning, came into the kitchen. "My head is full of dust. It feels like an old attic. Not the kind with trunks full of glamour, the kind with bats. Dead bats."

"Well, sit for a bit."

"You're going to be awfully tired for Verna's party tonight."

"If there is one."

Julie lifted her eyebrows. "What's the matter?"

"Oh, Verna's father. I guess he didn't go away or something. Poor Verna."

"What a crumb he must be," Julie said crossly. "Spoils everything. I'm glad we don't have that to put up with." For a moment they thought lovingly of their own father. "Is this our spring house cleaning, I hope?" Julie went on. "I'd sure hate to do it again very soon. You do pick the silliest times to clean, with Ned sick and a date tonight. Why don't we stop, and do the rest some other time?"

Morgan continued to rub her rag in languid circles over the shelf. "We could, I guess. I'll finish this and stop. Can you think of anything for dinner?"

"Broiled mushrooms and tangerine pie," Julie said.

"Pretty." Morgan smiled and stood up. "There. Now I'll put the stuff back and that's that." She began collecting pots and pans. "Frankfurters and baked beans, I guess. I wonder if Neddy wants anything."

"He's asleep," Julie said. She leaned her head back against the window jamb, closing her eyes. Morgan looked for a moment at the delicate curve of her sister's cheek and neck, the thickness of the lowered lashes. Why, she's lovely right now, Morgan thought. Perfectly lovely. Julie opened her eyes then, and the familiar, faintly discontented, faintly puzzled expression with which she faced the world returned. "Morgan," she said, "tell me something. What was mother like?"

"You don't remember?"

"Not enough."

"She was—she loved us a lot." Morgan paused. "She was very thin. And excitable, you know? I remember she used to get all upset if one of us was sick or anything."

"Yes, I remember that too. What else?"

"Well, she was fun. Funny. She'd say terribly funny things." Morgan tried to recall some, but couldn't. "You and Ned laughed an awful lot at the things she said."

"Didn't you?"

"Sometimes. I didn't always know what she was getting at. And"—she hesitated—"and it seemed, once in a while, as though what she was saying was funny, but . . . unkind too. Pop got a new suit once, a summer suit, very light-colored. It was almost white and he was proud of it." She broke off.

"Go on."

Ask Any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

THE way to achieve happiness is to have a high standard for yourself and a medium one for everyone else.

Untidy housekeeper to neighbor: "How do you keep your house so neat?"

Neighbor: "Oh, I just practice what you preach."

A legal notice in reverse, from the daily press:

"I am responsible for all debts and obligations of my wife, Virginia, both present and future, and am more than happy to be the provider for a woman who has borne me five lovely daughters and with an overabundance of love and care has made the past eight years of married life the nicest years of my life. On this our eighth anniversary, I wish to publicly express my gratitude."

Lovingness in family life, like any healthy growth, needs cultivation and continuous stimulation: visits between members, presents, round-robin correspondence.

When a big man in a little yard is using a power mower, it is due to one of the following:

1. High-pressure salesmanship.
2. Plain laziness.
3. Sensible wife.

Little boy to mother: "You shouldn't have worried; I had myself along all the time."

In other generations children were often disciplined by the strength of words: "We will not have a child in our family with spoiled and unseemly manners."

Chase this "GHOST OF THE PAST"

make it VANiSH

Fresh fragrant VANiSH Toilet Bowl Cleaner banishes unpleasant bathroom odors in a jiffy, leaves an enjoyable aroma. Simply pour VANiSH into bowl. Instant bubbling "scrubbing action" whisks away rings and stains. Eliminates unseen germ-laden scum. Harmless to plumbing and septic tanks. Use it regularly. It's easy with the handy new Expellid Opener.

the fragrant way to clean Toilet Bowls

JUDSON DUNAWAY CORP., Dover, N. H. makers of EXPELLO Moth Killer

For a Little Spare Time
$60.00 IS YOURS
With New EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards!

You make more money with Cardinal because Cardinal gives your customers more for the money! 6 EXCLUSIVE Name-Imprinted Christmas Card lines low as 40 for $1 . . . EXCLUSIVE new idea Gift Wraps & Curl Ribbons BY-THE-YARD at $1 . . . EXCLUSIVE 26-Card $1 Assortment . . . EXCLUSIVE Stationery . . . over 250 new $1 Gifts, other money-makers.

CARDINAL PAYS YOU MORE! Cardinal's EXCLUSIVE new "Petite Gold Rush" $1.25 Christmas Card Assortment pays you 75c per box—$60 on 80 boxes! Make up to 15c MORE PROFIT per box with Money-Back Guarantee, Extra Cash Bonus, New Party Plan. No experience needed. Costs nothing to compare! Get surprise "Choose Your Own FREE BOXES" Offer, 5 Assortments on approval, 35 Imprints FREE. 52 in Gifts offered FREE if you act fast! Write on a postcard TODAY.

CARDINAL CRAFTSMEN, Dept. 37-L, 1400 State Av., Cincinnati 14, Ohio

Only CARDINAL Gives You . . .
EXCLUSIVE Personalized Christmas Cards
40 FOR $1
150% PROFIT On EXCLUSIVE Gold Rush Asst
EXCLUSIVE Gift Wraps & Ribbons By-The-Yard
250 FAST-SELLERS GET SAMPLES NOW!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY

Callouses
Pain, Burning, Tenderness

SUPER-FAST RELIEF!
Puts You Right Back On Your Feet!

You'll enjoy super-fast relief from your painful callouses, tenderness or burning on the bottom of your feet when you use Super-Soft Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. They're wonderfully soothing, cushioning, protective and remove callouses one of the fastest ways known to medical science. Try them!

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

because Mrs. Wise has

NO TACK MARKS

with

Smo.o.thedg.e®

the modern tackless installation which grips carpet from underneath and always gives that smooth tailored finish right up to every edge . . . Poor Mrs. Naive . . . someone "sold her out" when they sold her tacked down carpet. Write for our free booklet. Learn all about weaves, quality tests and tricks with color.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

THE ROBERTS CO.
Dept. LH48
1536 N. Indiana St.,
Los Angeles 54, Calif.

Please send me my free copy of "Carpet As You'd Like It."

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

City _____ Zone ____ State _____

Note: In Canada write Box 129, Weston, Ontario

"Oh, it wasn't anything, really. She said, 'Oh, darling, you look gorgeous. You look like a Good Humor man.'"

"Poor pop. His new suit."

"She loved him too. But I got the feeling, somehow, with her, that none of it—pop and us and the way we lived—was what she'd planned. She loved us, though."

"Why do you keep saying that?"

"Because I don't seem to be saying the right things."

Julie got up. "You know what I remember?"

"What?"

"I don't seem to be able to picture her, only hear what her voice was like. Breathless, sort of."

"Yes, that's the way she sounded, always."

The phone rang and Morgan ran for it before Ned should waken.

"Oh, fine," she said softly. "Can I help? . . . Well—all right. . . . Yes, we will. See you tonight, Verna." She glanced over at Ned. He hadn't moved.

She started water running in the tub, then went into the bedroom where Julie was stretched on the bed. "Well, the party's at Betty's. Wish I could care at all."

Julie shrugged her indifference to the party and Betty both. Morgan moved about the room in her soft slippers. They did not refer to their mother again.

Driving home in Bluebird, Morgan and Tom were silent till he'd parked the car, turned off the headlights and leaned back. "I never did like parties," he said at last.

Morgan shook her head. "You're right, I guess. I know I wonder sometimes why we aren't gayer. You, me, the people at school. Julie. She's very . . . nervous, for a girl her age. Not interested in—oh, the things you'd think she would be."

"Julie's different. Perhaps she's decided to think her way through life, not feel."

"But isn't that sort of sad?"

"It might be if her thoughts stay sad. Maybe they won't. I was like that, sort of, as a kid. Spent my time reading and pondering the significance of the sun casting shadows, that sort of stuff." She looked uncomprehending. "That if you have sun, you have shadows. One presupposes the other. It seemed darned symbolic then. Don't look so impressed," he grinned.

"I'm not. I mean, not by the sun and the shadows."

"By what, then?"

"You," she said softly. "I've never known anyone like you." She stared down the street, almost empty now. The street lamps glowed quietly, the darkened doorways and windows seemed meant forever to be empty. A wind moved over the river, trifling with papers in the gutter. "And I love you," she added. "I suppose I shouldn't say it, but I've wanted to so much."

"Me too," he said in a quiet voice.

Morgan sat utterly still, knowing what she'd heard him say, not able to believe it, brimming with a turbulent emotion that nothing she'd ever known had prepared her for. And yet almost afraid that if she made a gesture, spoke a word, the words he had said would be brushed away.

He put his hand on her cheek, turned her face toward his. This was how she'd dreamed it once—their eyes close and searching, his arms tight around her and his beautiful mouth swiftly, softly against hers.

"It isn't a dream, is it?" she said wonderingly.

"Why should it be a dream, darling? Morgan"—he kissed her ear, her hair—"Morgan, I do love you. I love you terribly."

She leaned against him, trembling with the dream that had made itself true, the one that she'd been dreaming toward all her life. Tom, Tom, the Millers' son, stole my heart ——

NED, when he had recovered from his chicken pox, got the measles. He did not go back to school at all that year. For days he drifted in a hot oblivious sea of illness, unmindful of tending hands, of unhappy eyes fixed upon his tossings, or stricken ears receiving his cries.

During those days, when he was most ill, Morgan never left the apartment. As she, Julie and her father had all had measles, they were not quarantined, but a quarantine could not have kept her more firmly at her brother's side. She sat on a chair by the cot, holding his flamelike hand, running bits of ice over his whitened cracked lips. "Please, Neddy," she'd say gently. "Please, dearest."

The doctor came daily for almost a week. He came and went, with his antiseptic odor, his unsurprised manner. She was quite too in awe of doctors to question him about Ned's progress, and nothing he said informed her clearly.

One day, just after her father had left, the doorbell rang. Morgan, blinking scratchy eyes, went to answer. He's early, she thought, and opened to Mrs. Miller.

"Oh. I thought you were the doctor." She sank limply to a chair and sighed. "I guess I'm tired."

Mrs. Miller nodded. "I guess you must be." She looked at Ned, who was sleeping. "How is he?"

"I don't know, Mrs. Miller. I don't seem to be able to get the doctor to say much. He's very nice, but we aren't . . . understanding each other very well."

"How often it works out that way." She walked to Ned's cot. "He seems to be sleeping peacefully, Morgan." Morgan was at her side immediately.

"He does." She put a light hand on his forehead, turned to Mrs. Miller. "He really does. Not so . . . hot and angry-colored." She wanted to go on, but her voice and her legs seemed abruptly weak. She went back to the chair and leaned her head on the arm. "Just a minute," she mumbled. "I'll be fine in a minute."

"Morgan," Mrs. Miller said. Her voice seemed distant, but piercing. "Morgan, dear, get up and go into the bedroom. Sleep for a couple of hours and I'll watch Ned." Morgan swayed to her feet, inaudibly grateful, surprised at how suddenly, overpoweringly sleepy she was. Mrs. Miller was walking with her to the bedroom, talking. "I'd have done this before, but Tom probably told you we were up at the lake, trying to get the cottage in order. I hurried down here the minute we got back ——" She went on and on.

How kind she is, Morgan thought, and what a terrible lot of words she knows. The bed was before her and she plunged into its arms, sat up again to remove her shoes and skirt, lay down and felt the cover being drawn over her. "You're . . . nice to do this," she said thickly. "But . . . the doct——"

"I'll take care of the doctor," Mrs. Miller said, and Morgan heard nothing further.

She awoke to mauve-toned twilig open window, odors and sounds t cated someone in the kitchen getting How beautiful, she thought. How wo lie here, letting people work for me. Sh under the cover, breathing the air t now, with the sun gone, had somethi warm gold presence, its late-spring Amy, not a kitten any more, not qu yet, was curled beside her, purring a lent. "Aren't we a pretty pair?" Morg pered. Amy extended a languid paw, h refrigerator door open, and departed.
Morgan said to the vanishing tail, I s should too.

Ned was lying with his head propp little, a glass of ginger ale beside hi look of bright comprehension in his was glorious to Morgan's.

"Baby," she said happily, "what h done in the last two hours?"

"Got better," he said huskily. "A call me baby, Morgan."

Morgan grinned at his petulanc certainly did," she said. "Get better, They tell me that a patient who's cr
the mend."

Ned smiled and sucked on his gi and Morgan went into the kitchen to J Mrs. Miller.

"It's incredible," she told them. ' sick this morning. Really sick. And n at him."

"And now listen to him," Julie s sounded pleased. "Did you have a goo

"Oh, wonderful—marvelous. I ju thank you," she began, but Mrs. Mi tered that away with her hands. "An was wonderful, and I feel made ov looked at the meat loaf being remov
the oven. "I'd have gotten dinner."

"I decided," Mrs. Miller said, "th better really get a rest, or you'd be s Tom and I have invited ourselves to you. Oh, and the doctor says he won't again. He left some instructions for follow, but Ned will be all right."

"ONLY he isn't going to school any m year," Julie interrupted, "so who's g take care of him? You'll have to go school pretty soon or you'll never g
But we can't leave him alone, can we

"Pop will be here most of the time out earlier in the afternoon. We'll m

"Of course you will," Mrs. Mill
"Morgan, I have an idea." But she just then, have a chance to say what Tom, who'd been up explaining to G his father why they must eat alone, ca

"Well, no — I didn't exactly get our lawn mower back. The way it worked out, I more or less invited them over here for dinner . . ."

elous out," he announced, with a or Morgan and a general one for e air's like—like—oh, marvelous. think of our Ned, Morgy? Take case and he's better in minutes.
off says he doesn't care if he eats nk he's in love."
said Julie.
. Geoff is a weather vane in the
, this way, that way. And now, ling over a flat parcel—"this seems
t. When do we eat?" he asked his er said to Morgan that her idea y better wait a bit; Julie started meal; Ned opened his present,

, and disappeared into its pages.
first gay meal in a long time.
overy dinner," Tom called it, ate only ice cream.
t," Tom said, "that after dinner uld go to a movie, to relax. And with her, in case she gets lost."
t suggestion," his mother replied.
at Julie, who shook her head.
ke them, anyway," Julie said. "I'll th Ned."
stay too," Mrs. Miller said casu-lie gave her a look of dedication.
when Mrs. Miller said, "Now, ea ——"

and Tom got to the street, Morgan
n't really want to go to the movies.
ed to get out," she explained.
?"
."
ked along, not touching, not hav-direction, happy to be together, ng. The warm May night, colored s dark grapes, had lured the side-sitters out. The hard-faced hand-stood again at street lights, but anced at Tom next to Morgan, and
y. Music tumbled lightly through ws, and it was all music—the purr-eels, the children calling, the voices night deepening.
you want to do?"

over by the river."
uld be nice."
was jet, shiny, like a beetle's back, d stippled with gleams that slid surface, dived, reappeared. At the , a freighter was tied up, lightless han stone.

same pier they'd driven on during d the first ride in Bluebird. Not night fisherman, his small daughim, sat with dangling legs and line er end of the dock. A man leaned ling, reading by flashlight. A cour dark shapes close, on the pier's ge.
and Tom sat opposite the fisher-to a bulkhead. Morgan felt she breathe deeply enough the rapturark air. Spring was a time of long melling things, of wanting to swal-or hold it, or fly into it.
pring fever," she said.
tically summer."
."
aps it wasn't only spring. Perhaps , no longer ill, or Mrs. Miller's r —— It was Tom. Sitting beside heir shoulders touching gently, she the nearly frightening urgency of felt in the car that night—the ur-felt, too, so that they'd pulled en and confused. Tonight she was just to sit here quietly, dangling ing with him. She leaned her head brine-scented bulkhead, thinking . And about his mother. What like, she wondered, to have that erosity, that chance to indulge it?
e two children—well, herself too—eeks of the summer. To offer the th what all the country must be, to had never known it.
nother," she said. "She's so ——" e? But she's crazy about Julie and they'll be crazy about the lake. I hy you won't go along."

"Tom, you know why. Pop's here. I don't just go off and leave pop."

"No. When's his vacation?"

"I don't know."

"Maybe you could then."

"I don't think so. Pop —— It's the children I'm glad for. Tell me what it's like."

"Wonderful. The lake is wide, and there's a broad meadow behind the house. We're right on the water, so you only have to walk about four steps and you're wet. Geoff bought a canoe for taking his girls into romantic settings. If you'd come up, I'd take you."

"And your other girls?" she said, not sure if she teased or not.

"Stop it, Morgy. You know I've never given a darn about a girl except you." He turned to her in the dark. "You do know that, don't you?" he repeated.

"Well . . . yes, I know. Only I don't know why," she whispered.

"MORGAN—my love." He leaned over and kissed her cheek lightly. "Morgan, you're the last person in the world to feel . . . uncertain. You love people because . . . why? Do you know why? Well, neither do I. I only know that I do, that I think about you all the time, and wonder what you're doing a million times a day, and want to be with you, and hold you, and ——" He broke off. "And I love you so much it sort of scares me. As if ——" He looked down at the dark lifting water, up at the star-chalked sky. "Well, anyway, don't ever think that I don't."

Morgan's eyes were large and still on his, and her lips a little open.

"Morgy," he said fiercely, and then had his arms around her, holding her tight, rubbing his cheek against hers and whispering her name. And Morgan, listening, kissing him, understood very well, though she'd never known before, what it was they were feeling. Not tired now, not content to sit peacefully together, but caught up in this terrifying daze of pleasure and yearning. I don't care, she thought, I don't care what happens. . . . But she did, and when he said, "Please, Morgy?" she pulled away breathlessly.

"I'm sorry," he said in a little while.

"Don't be sorry. Please don't be. We love each other, and if people love each other, they just naturally—they just ——" She sighed, and went on. "But we can't, Tom. You know that."

"Of course I know it. What do you think I've been telling myself, trying to tell you? I know what we can't do. But what I don't know is what we do about it. I tell myself over and over that it'll be perfectly all right. I wouldn't do anything in the world to hurt you. And yet, every once in a while, when I'm with you, like tonight"—his voice slackened, and he took her hand quietly—"I forget what I've told myself," he said.

The fisherman across the way began to put away his tackle. Morgan and Tom waited in silence till he and his little girl had gone past. The other couple, they noticed, was gone too.

"What do you suppose people do?" Tom asked in a gentle, curious voice.

"They wait," she whispered.

He said quickly, "Sure they do. I frightened you, and I didn't mean to. But you understand, don't you?"

"I understand. And you didn't frighten me—anyway, not more than I did myself. You aren't all alone, you know," she said, smiling a little.

"We are together, aren't we?"

She nodded.

"Morgan, look. I'll be out of school in two years, and then I suppose I'll have to play soldier for a while, and then get a job. Suppose it all takes four years - will you marry me in four years?"

Morgan, who hadn't cried in a long time, cried now. "Oh, I want to," she said with the tears streaming over her cheeks. "I want to. I will."

In the morning Julie burst in upon her father's sleep to tell him about the trip to the country. "Is it all right, pop?" she asked.

"Are you actually asking my permission?" Mr. Connor inquired, trying to keep his tone humorous. "Isn't the entire matter virtually arranged?"

"Oh, no, pop." Julie sighed. "Of course if you say no we won't go."

"Does anyone expect me to say no?" her father asked.

Julie shook her head slowly. "I wouldn't think so. It's a wonderful chance for us, and we thought you'd ——"

"Well, you thought right. Tell me about this country retreat."

He listened to Julie's rapturous detailed description of a place she'd never been, allowing his mind to stray now and then.

"—— and I should think there'd be cows," Julie was saying. "At least, you would think so, wouldn't you? And buttercups and flies. Butterflies, I mean. I'll keep notes on all I observe and feel. It could be valuable for next year's schoolwork. I don't have a bathing suit, but I can swim a little, from going to the Y. I'm going to take some poetry with me."

"That'll be good," her father said. "Take a book someday, and go away by yourself and read, and then you'll find so many things, in poems you thought you knew, that are fresh and differently lighted. Oh, and you'd better buy a bathing suit."

"What is poetry?" Julie asked dreamily.

Her father irresistibly added, What is truth? But he said, "Not the same thing to any two people. To me . . . I think it's a cry against all

Cheerful homemakers choose
PEQUOT PASTELS

Anne combines a career with raising a family as so many modern women do. Her home is run with the same competent efficiency she brings to her position in the business world, yet Anne remains the essence of femininity. Her bedroom reflects this, delicately beautiful furniture with soft, restful pastel decor. Her sheets and pillowcases are Pequots in dusty rose, perfect complement for their surroundings.

Kathy is active in 4-H club work, excellent cook and good amateur decorator, too. Her bedroom is a charming arrangement of inherited antiques, set off beautifully by one of her most treasured possessions – colored Pequot sheets and pillowcases in a green as lovely as the first leaves of spring!

Ralph is a building contractor whose hobby is painting in oils! Perhaps that's the reason for his love of colorful surroundings—it's a love his wife Irene enthusiastically shares. Ralph particularly likes blue and here he is immersed in downy soft Pequots of cerulean hue!

Pequot Mills

"All about Sheets" and "Easy Sewing Magic with Sheets" are valuable, informative booklets every woman should have. Send 10¢ for each booklet to cover mailing to: Dept. L-5, Pequot Mills, Salem, Mass.

ever dream

elastic stockings

could look so sheer?

Now you can keep VARICOSE VEINS a secret because Bauer & Black nylons look so much like fine hosiery on your legs.

Now, only your doctor will know you wear elastic stockings.

New Bauer & Black nylons are truly inconspicuous—so sheer you can even wear them without overhose. And they're fashioned to the shape of your leg (look for the seam up the back) so they fit smoothly at ankle and instep. Yet veins don't show through.

And, because they're fashioned, they give you the kind of support doctors recommend. Open toes for foot freedom and comfort. Easy to wash. Quick drying. Light and cool.

Any wonder that more women wear Bauer & Black elastic stockings than any other kind?

BAUER & BLACK

Nylon or Cotton Elastic Stockings

send for free booklet!

BAUER & BLACK, DEPT. LH-8
309 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago 6, Ill.

Please send me your new free booklet about varicose veins, "Comfort, Relief and New Leg Beauty".

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone ____ State ____

the things we can't understand, nor accept, nor reason with."

"But poetry shouldn't be a cry against something."

"That's why I say it's different to each person who reads it," he told her. "Just be glad you do, Julie. People who miss poetry miss a great deal."

"Even though they never know it? Can you miss something you don't know?"

"I think so. I know I've missed something," he said with puzzled slowness. "Not knowing what it is hasn't prevented the sense of it."

Julie did not, as Morgan might have, stir restlessly. She said in soft encouragement, "What do you think it is? What do you want, pop?"

"Oh"—he smiled, lifted one eyebrow—"a united Ireland."

"Don't, pop. Tell me."

"It's as if . . . well, you know, Julie, in those old heraldic ballads, how the knights rode forth into the glimmer and darkness of the forests, to break the enchantments and deliver the castles? I feel like one of those knights, but I arrived at my destined castle to find it . . . undeliverable. Deserted." He looked at Julie pensively. "Do you understand? Does that make any sense?"

"Oh, it does, pop. And you know, you are sort of knightly. Like Don Quixote," she added innocently, and as her eyes were lowered she did not see the start of dismay, nor the following acquiescent smile that greeted this. "But, of course," she added, "you do have some things. I mean, the castle may be deserted, but look at all you've picked up on the way."

"My three heralds?"

"Yes."

"I'm prouder of them than I'd have been of the castle. Except that it would have been nice to present the castle to them."

"Oh, we'll take you as you are," Julie assured him warmly, so that once again he realized that true communion between them wasn't possible. Julie understood, to a point. But she did not (how could he expect her to?) really identify the undelivered castle with her father's unaccomplished dreams.

"Metaphor," he said suddenly, "is a treacherous thing. After a while it's better to forgo it and do something objective, like eating breakfast or putting new laces in your shoes."

"I think you're very right," Julie said.

DAN thought how excellent it was to have a child like this. She was the most vulnerable of the three, and, possibly, the least attractive. But there was something there, some slender, springing, inquisitive spirit that Ned with his charm and poise, Morgan with her lazy grace, did not share. Oh, but they were grand, the three of them.

"Why isn't Morgan going too?" he asked. "To Mrs. Miller's lake?"

"She said she didn't want to. She said she's going to get a job." Julie looked momentarily charmed by this idea. "If I could get a job, I'd work in the ten-cent store, at the goldfish counter."

"Why not at a pet shop?"

"Oh, I couldn't. I think a pet shop is the saddest place in the world. I'm going to take Amy with me."

Ned, who'd been asleep, woke and said, "She'll run away."

"That's silly," Julie answered calmly. She glanced at the clock. "I guess I woke you up pretty early at that, pop," she apologized.

Her father said he'd never been so pleasantly awakened before.

Dear Morgy and Pop: I like this place. There is a lady who lives down the road named Mrs. McCray and her husband is an awfuly nice old man, he has traveled all over the world and has a garden that is swell he gets plants send to him from everywhere and has the littlest rosebush in the world not even a foot high. I bet you wont believe it but he has two little fish that are 17 million years old, they are all dried up and look like little round stones. The best thing of all is he has a lot of arrow heads he has found around—stone—that the indians used and he gave me one, its black. There is also a beehive in back of the house. I mean ours not Mr. McCrays. I wish you were here. I miss you. Geff is teaching me to swim pretty good.

Love,
NED.

Dear Pop and Morgan: This is really the most wonderful place in the world. The lake comes practically to the door and Geoff takes us out in his canoe and has been teaching us to swim. There are a couple of girls, a bit older than me, who live up the road and I've gotten to know them pretty well. They're like all the rest about boys but somehow that doesn't seem so reprehensable to me as it used to. I don't think I should use words I haven't seen often enough in print, do you?

I do not mean that I'm interested in a boy, but they're having some down over the week end and there'll be one for me, as there are three. I'm a little nervous about this, but not angry, you know, the way I used to be.

Amy is crazy about it here. I've put a bell on her neck, attached to a garter so she won't strangle if she gets caught on a bush. My back and arms are all brown and I lie in the sun for hours every day, which is practically the nicest part of the country. Pop, I do read the poetry, and you were right, it's different from reading it in an apartment. Don't be hurt, and of course I miss you both and want to be with you, but I love this place more than anything I've ever known.

The fields are full of daisies and clover and flowers I don't know the names of. My room is very pretty and looks at the lake. I have it all alone, except for Amy, w always stay. It's strange, at night, t listening to the trees and the wat happy at the camp? Don't you mi

Love, ar

Morgan darling: I'm going to try again, because I think I didn't tell completely, that night, just why job. It's because I love you. I wish derstand. Can you have any idea of I wanted to stay in the city and b see you, all summer, and that was couldn't? When I realized, suddel the kids went away, you and I wou those chances to be alone, I was happiness. Your father's job—well that he's out late, and there we'd you and I and an empty apartment once I'd never do anything to hurt we were alone like that, day after how do we know what would happ you. I couldn't say that, but I can w you know that I do. I love you to leave you alone. But I guess I lo much not to, either.

And so, my dearest darling ador tiful Morgan, that's why I'm here, you when I wake up, when I go to all the times between. I won't wri again. It makes me want to go out in here and yell at the top of my voic down the branches. I'll write a lot, a what the camp is like. How's that u

BEGGAR'S CHOICE

By THOMPSON YOUNG

Well, here we are, sir; here's an hour to kill,
To spend or dawdle over, save or spill,
Before the next train comes that deigns to stop.
Of course there'll be a freight that I could hop,
But not you, sir. Such things no man of parts—
No patron of the well-developed arts
Of traveling-salesmanship (as I judge you)—
Would think or bother, run or choose to do.
The ancient voice of maxim likes to tell,
Long-faced, that, "Beggars can't be choosers." Well,
That's as it may be—and I ought to know,
Being as I am one who likes to go Where fancy hits me, as and when I like,
And starve or feast, however luck may strike:
In short, a beggar—such as aren't to choose.
Note, if you please, the choice of words I use:
"Fancy," I say, and "like." Such words imply Some freedom, don't they, friend? Well, such is my Belief. That's what I have, some freedom—some:
I take what's coming and make some things come.
I choose, and have more than my fill sometimes
Of choosing. Beg—for quarters or for dimes?
And shall I walk the highways or the ties?
Sleep in a barn, or under open skies,
Or else in haystack, freight car, flophouse—which?
Walk one more mile, or rest here in the ditch?
This major truth I will maintain as such:
We beggars choose as little and as much
As any others; that word I repeat.
How far our choice depends on what we eat,
Where live, how learn, how look, what were at birth—
These things I leave to science. What's it worth?
It comes to this: whatever a man is,
Whatever natural tendencies are his,
He can do either of two simple things:
Can take the natural course his nature brings
Or else revolt against it all the way
And all life long hold himself at bay.
So there you have the grist from my old mill
And have the sum of freedom of the will.
And further, in regard to freedom's fruit,
I say —— There, sir, you hear that dismal toot?
There comes the freight; she's puffing up the grade.
I think —— No, sir, I choose; the choice is made;
I'll ride the freight. No time for parting cup,
But if you hit the jungles, look me up.

rives me crazy to think of you working place in such hot weather. But then I myself of how you really are, how ve with that splendid air past all the itations that make other people miser-I know that probably even the ghastly n't worry you. Does it? Oh, Morgan, sh we were a few years older, that . . .
ep me in your thoughts.

TOM.

Pop: This letter is just for you, so ow it to Morgy. She's very sweet, but es I want to say things that I don't e'd care about, so just explain that ng you one for yourself. I'd like to try n something to you, or ask you some-m not sure which. It's a windy dark d I feel very old. I know you won't do feel old, and I don't trust myself to a good person, and it bothers me. Not but tonight it does. We don't talk out things in our family, but once in a and I talk a little and I get the feeling e more if we were ever alone. Like—I ray every night, and I have for years, didn't tell anyone. And I always say s mother. You see, if someone knew ayed, they might think it was lovely ere of me, but I know it isn't, because g it to help me, not for any other rea-you suppose I'm ever going to have of character? If there should be a per-as they call God I wonder if he Don't let all this bother you, pop. It's it's dark and windy and I think too bout myself, I guess.

Love,
J.

Morgy: Since I sent my last letter to send this to you. Those boys came on end. In the afternoon we, Jan and d these boys and Ned and Geoff and ell, might as well give the boys' names is Percy, but he likes to be called n't that ridiculous? The other two are d Hank. Piggy's the one I got, and y pretty nice. In the afternoon we all he barn, the back yard and the back was fun, except that the dog, Plunder, robin, which made us all, especially me, pretty sad. We buried it. And rgan, the strangest part! I went danc- s scared to death when they said we ng to a roadhouse down the way and ut Piggy said he'd stay home too if I hat wasn't fair. So we went. It's a sort rny place with a juke box, where only ople go. And I danced, Morgy. Piggy very good, but I think it's really that t in my other letter to ask if you'd red plaid dress. I'd like my blue skirt n afford to have it cleaned. I need nd if that blue raincape can be worn d it up. And if you pass a five-and-ve a card of bobby pins. They don't m here. I mean five-and-tens. Mrs.

ys I'm putting on weight and she's I'm not really, because I get on the ry morning, but I must look better.
er comes every weekend. Geoff was tomorrow. His vacation is over, but ing up weekends too.

JULIE.

nder and Amy adore each other.

Pop: I just wrote to Morgan, but I o say to you that I loved your letter.
me a lot, to have you write such a and one that really knew what I was bout. I don't feel like that all the know, or even really often. In fact, el much better. It must be your letter, unshine.

Love and xxx,
JULIE.

Morgy and Pop: Its a lucky thing I ese sneekers along. Its raining. You d if you like the things I stick in my se pieces of leaf and all. Theres a lot here, mockingbirds, goldfinshes, redlackbirds, crows, robbins, and some n birds. In the morning they sing and ut not much during the day. Julie is ifferent, shes nicer to be around and doesnt have those funny ideas so much. If you dont write to me I wont answer. Do you think you could send me 50¢. One day Mrs. Miller said shed like to have Julie and me live with her always. We talked about it after and we like her very much and this place but dont want to.

Love,
NED.

Dear Morgy: It's marvelous here. Lots of trees and I swim every day. If you look at the front of the post card you'll see where I marked my room. Do you still work at the cafeteria?

Bestest, VERNA.

The day after Tom left, Verna had come to see Morgan. "How do I look?" she said gaily.

"You look fine," Morgan answered. Verna did. Bright-eyed, excited, in a cotton dress that was new and pretty. "What's it all about?"

"I'm going away."

"Away? How do you mean?"

"I mean I'm going to get on a bus tomorrow and go away. Back up to that hotel where I worked last summer."

"But you said you'd never go back there."

"I know. But I got a letter from the manager and he asked if I'd come back. They liked me, I think. I'm going to be a waitress, instead of a maid, and that's nicer." And maybe—just maybe, she told herself, that boy would be back. She'd be calmer this year. She'd be very dignified and reserved, and maybe ——

"What about the other job you had? The one in the cafeteria?"

"Well, that's what I came to see you about. I mean, besides saying good-by. Do you want it?" Morgan hesitated. "We could go over there together," Verna went on, "and I'd explain, and tell Mr. Krebble, who hired me, that you're going to take it instead. I just thought perhaps it'd be better than looking ——"

A cafeteria, Morgan was thinking. It wasn't the sort of job she'd thought of. She didn't, actually, know what she had thought of. She didn't especially want to work in a cafeteria, but she didn't want to work anywhere else either.

"What did you say you were going to do there?" she asked. "Dish up food?"

That night she waited up for her father, and told him. After she'd explained the change, and that Mr. Krebble had been agreeable, she thought her father wasn't even going to answer. Finally she said, "Is something wrong, pop?"

Mr. Connor sighed. "Oh, no. I suppose nothing's wrong. A job's a job, and I've always maintained that any honest job is nothing to be ashamed of." But was that true? He was ashamed of his own job, not because there was anything wrong with it, but because he knew (thought?) he was capable of something better. Shouldn't we, each of us, he wondered, work to the best of our capacity? Was dishing vegetables the best Morgan could manage?

He said hastily, "It'll probably work out fine, Morgan. You go to it."

CHATHAM'S was a large cafeteria under an El station. It was furnished with marble tables for four, chairs with worn wooden seats, and, in the center of each table, a Lazy Susan bearing catchup, salt, pepper, sugar and mustard. The plate-glass window, with "Chatham Cafeteria" in gold lettering and paper stickers advertising specials, was at no time really dirty, and the floor, an expanse of small tile lozenges, at no time really clean.

Morgan got her own hot dinner with the job, but had little appetite for it. After a week or so, standing over the steam table, ladling, spooning, tonging the slick gravied food into endless thrusting dishes, she'd close her eyes a moment and think that if she could face food after this, the only possible thing would be a cold green cucumber. A cucumber, crisp and chilly, with no taint of the cooking process.

The fans curled, distributing sluggish air. There was always the rattle of silver, the flat ring of metal trays, the voices lifting and falling. Morgan shoved a well of gravy into a heap of mashed potatoes. "Veg?" she asked.

A voice beyond the hand that held the thick dish said, "String beans."

Helene Curtis spray net BRAND contains exclusive spray-on Lanolin Lotion...can't ever dry the hair!

keeps hair set all day . . . softly . . . not in a touch-me-not way!

Regular size ($4½ oz.) $1.25

New large economy size (11 oz.) $1.89 both prices plus tax

Do you put up with wispy, "fly-away" hair because you shy away from the usual hard hair fixative?

Then please try Helene Curtis SPRAY NET.

Just spray it on. See how soft and "touchable" it keeps your hair while keeping it in place . . . all day long.

And remember this fact particularly: SPRAY NET can never dry your hair because SPRAY NET contains exclusive spray-on Lanolin Lotion. It actually helps hair that has a natural tendency to dryness.

And notice the lovely, lively lustre after you use Helene Curtis SPRAY NET.

No stuck-in-place look or sticky feel. End curls stay curled. And wisps stop wisping . . . with just a whisper of SPRAY NET.

Even dampness won't droop your hair-do. Nor will it straggle as you struggle through your busiest day.

Housewives, debutantes, girls-on-the-job all say SPRAY NET is the joy of a career.

Whatever you do . . . do try wonder-working Helene Curtis SPRAY NET today.

FOR QUICK "HAIR-DOS"

Sudden date? Give yourself a quick set with SPRAY NET. Put hair up in pin curls, spray, and in a few minutes your hair can be groomed. No waiting for water or wave set to dry!

BRUSHES OUT INSTANTLY

A few brush strokes and every trace of SPRAY NET is gone. Doesn't flake, linger on the scalp, or make it necessary for you to wash your hair more often than you like.

WON'T SHOW EVEN ON BLONDE OR WHITE HAIR

SPRAY NET is absolutely colorless, completely invisible on the hair. Adds a sheen, yes, but Helene Curtis SPRAY NET won't change the hair color a bit.

only Helene Curtis Spray Net contains spray-on lanolin lotion...

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

She supplied string beans, released the plate, reached for another that hovered in air. "Meat or fish?"

She worked afternoons from twelve to eight. The usual five-to-seven peak of diners was well under way, and Morgan's vision was preempted by the passage of plates, her hearing by selections of heavy food. How could people eat this way in hot weather?

"How're you doin', kid?" Cora asked. She was on salads, breads and desserts today. They alternated, sharing the steam.

"Fine," Morgan said. She smiled at Cora, who was stout and sometimes cross, but never with Morgan. "Just dandy." And she couldn't help recalling the importance she used to put upon catchup in a little blue bowl. How could anyone who really liked things to be nice work in the Chatham? But the pay was, as Verna had said, pretty good. Anyway, did it really make a difference, what you worked at?

On a Sunday in August, Morgan and Betty took the subway and went to Jones Beach. "Don't take a thing but your towel and bathing suit," Betty said firmly. "This is one time I won't eat from a sack on the sand. We'll buy hot dogs and pop." Morgan hesitated, agreed. After all, she was making enough money to manage a small treat for herself now and then.

Betty could swim, but she stayed close to the shore with Morgan, playing in the riotous cool waves that surged around them and trailed away. "You couldn't swim, anyway, in this," she said, and dived into an approaching wall of water.

Morgan simply stood, or sat like a child and patted the water, or dipped her face in the salty swells, letting her tan hair swirl and cling like a drenched plant. Thousands of people leaped in the water, lay on the beach, and yet when the two girls left the waves there was room for them to lie on the burning flaxen sand and feel apart.

Nearby, a little portable radio presented the sea and the sky and the sand with a dance tune, and a couple, a boy and girl in their teens, danced in bare feet. Morgan turned her head away, resting it on her arms.

Betty went on talking. It really was a pity Morgan wouldn't try to get a job in her department store. Betty thought Morgan would be grand at selling.

"I don't know what's the matter with me," Morgan said in a low voice. "I never would have gone looking for this job. I wouldn't even have gone in if I'd seen the sign in the window, like Verna. But when it was just . . . handed to me, it was so much easier than looking. And the pay's not bad."

"You sound just like Verna."

"Is that supposed to be a slam?"

"No. But she is sort of wishy-washy, you know. And you aren't. At least you never used to be."

I know it, I know it, Morgan thought, her stomach squeezing with despair. I didn't used to be, and I am now. But why? It's just that I'm waiting now, she thought. I've started waiting for something else, something really rather like what I've been doing all along, only this time with Tom, and I can't stand the part in between. Couldn't stand it? She had to. There would be years yet—years of waiting.

I want him back, she thought painfully. I want him where I can see his face, and listen to his voice. Even if we had to sit in a room full of people and never touch, I want to be where he is. She wondered what he was doing now, while she lay on the sand and missed him. There were people all over that camp who could stand beside him, glance over and meet his eyes, ask "What do you think, Tom?" and hear his voice respond. Not me, she thought. All those people, but not me.

They got back to the city in the late afternoon. Walking through the crowded streets toward home, they became aware of the siren.

"That thing's awfully close," Betty said. "I hate them. They frighten me."

"I know. Like a warning of some kind."

"Well, of course," Betty said in a tight, nervous voice, "they are warnings. To get out of the way."

"I meant the other kind. It doesn't toll for someone else, it tolls for you, or whatever that fellow said. Ernest Hemingway."

"It's stopping, Morgy." Betty turned her head, an expression of alarm in her eyes. She went around the corner rapidly, halting. "That's our house it's in front of." She turned to Morgan, eyes staring.

"My gosh, Betty. It could be anybody. That's a big apartment building." Morgan was feeling alternately hot and cold with fright herself. "Why do you have to think right away it's for your place?"

"I don't know," Betty moaned. "I just —— Come with me? Please?"

"Sure I will," Morgan said. "We—I guess we'd better go in."

Two men, rolling a rubber-wheeled stretcher, followed them in the doors that Betty held back. "Where—where are you going?" she asked huskily.

The man looked at his companion, at Morgan, back to Betty. "Look, sis," he said. "You just go along to your place, and we'll take care of our job. Go on, like a good girl," he urged. He looked again to Morgan for assistance.

"Yes," she said. "Come on, Betty. We'll go up." They went up the three flights of stairs running, and down the narrow hallway. The Gilmans' door stood open.

"Oh, no," Betty breathed, leaning against the wall. "Please. No."

Angie came out and walked toward waveringly. Her eyes were blurry, he puffed, her usually careful curls twisted She took Betty's hand, glanced at M and the three of them went back to the ment as the men with the stretcher appe the head of the stairs.

There was a great deal to be done, by by Betty. But Mrs. Metzger had died a past all that.

She was buried on Tuesday. That ev alone in the apartment, Morgan sat listening to the traffic, and the clock, she didn't know what time it was, twist charm bracelet round and round he

"You're going to the funeral?" Da said. "You don't have to do that, do yo

"There won't be anyone there, only and Angie and me. I'm going."

"Yes." Dan bit his lip, stared ov daughter's head. "I'm sorry about it."

"Well, she was going to die some Morgan said, almost impassively. "But never ready for anyone to die, are you

"No. You never are."

It isn't Mrs. Metzger, she thought. dying. Though Mrs. Metzger was very and probably wished to live a long ti with her pain and her blindness. It w dying. What if Ned —— She hunch shoulders. She loved so many people and Tom and Julie and Ned. And all c had to die. How do we stand it? she wor How do people stand it? What do y

She got up and walked across the back again. It was seven o'clock. Still lig She was frightened. She hadn't been moment, but she was now, terribly frigh Isn't there anyone, she wondered as the bing fear rose, anyone I could see? Or She began to cry in harsh jerky sobs, re that tonight she was quite alone.

Her crying turned to whimpers as she at the phone. Beside it in a second, sh lowed over and over, trying to steady he enough to speak to the operator. H there, she told herself, as the call was be through. Tom, you will be there, won Then she heard his voice, and leaned he against the wall.

"Tom?" she said. "Tom, talk to m minute."

She went back to work the next da Krebble, in his wan way, brightened wh came in. "Well, here's a girl we're glad back, eh, Cora?" he said in a tone ob meant to be jolly.

"Get him," Cora said, with a wink fo gan. "Well, did you get the body away? If you was somebody else, w thought you went to a ball game, but I Mick, if that kid says funeral, you can b molars it's funeral."

Morgan was looking at her with stun mobility, but Cora talked on, never k when she'd said something crude or cr always aiming at kindness, in an unva way. "You gotta face facts," she said

Morgan turned away. She put on he butcher apron, her cheesecloth cap, to station above the steam.

Oh, well, Morgan thought, I'm finish It was no conscious triumph over her c distrust of the world where people soug The Chatham was simply a place not to dured any longer.

She told Mr. Krebble during the din hour, when she'd finished her salad an

"You are?" he said in his voice that seemed to be falling down. "I sup shouldn't be surprised. Well—do yo you could stay till I replace you?"

Morgan looked faintly shocked. "Of I wouldn't ever just walk out on any job." But she hoped it would be soon th replaced her.

When Morgan let herself in the apa slightly after eight o'clock, Tom rose fr cot and came toward her. For a swift she was alarmed. "Tom—when did you What are you doing?"

He stood, smiling a little, rather s very brown, very deeply glad to see her. I'll always be doing. Looking for you.

For lessons in looking pretty . . .

CHOOSE BRUSHES WITH

stay-lively bristles

OF DU PONT TYNEX* NYLON

Good grooming is becoming second nature to this lovely miss! She's quickly learning all the wonderfully practical features of brushes bristled with "Tynex." And Mother likes the real economy these brushes offer . . . because they last longer and perform better.

In both personal and household brushes, "Tynex" means bristles that are exceptionally durable . . . never get soggy . . . never absorb odors. You can keep "Tynex" bristles fresh and sparkling with a rinse and shake . . . and you can sterilize by boiling. So next time you buy brushes, look for "Tynex"—the bristles that carry the Good Housekeeping Guaranty Seal.

Incidentally, the lifelike hair of the doll in the picture above is long-lasting "Tynex," too.

"Tynex" is Du Pont's new registered trade-mark for its genuine nylon bristles.*

Look for Du Pont TYNEX nylon bristles when you buy brushes

DU PONT

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING . . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY

k a step forward, Morgan took sev- they leaned against each other, tight- wordless, trembling a little.

worried about you," he whispered at u sounded so—so alone and miser- I got to thinking about it till I just stand it. I have to go back tomorrow." do? Why do you?"

work. I told them I had to have two but they couldn't give me any more. onderful to see you."

than wonderful," she said in a voice m. "It's all there is."

at together, on the cot, gravely hold- s and smiling at each other now and stopped at the subway station," he "and your father gave me the key. rprise. That's why I didn't go up to aurant for you. That and ——"

w. And you are a surprise. It's nicer " She twined her fingers in his. "I'm here, anyway."

are? That's the best news yet." He "I was going crazy every time I of you there. Sometimes I really don't nd you."

ither. It doesn't matter now." She be- nile, a smile that was tremulous, and d quickened with what she was about You . . . don't seem to mind now, be- lone with me."

ned toward her, and his eyes fixed on in a long, absorbed, unsmiling gaze. ," he said at last, his tone almost ng. "I love it, but I mind—and I'm f where it could lead. Except that it lorgan. We're going to spend the rest ves together, and not hash it up in nning." His eyes left her face, dwelt locked hands.

's what it would be? A hash?"

ook his head. "You know what I or us, it would be ——" He broke off took a deep breath. "For us, nothing derful, and right. Unfortunately, there us. And for everybody else concerned, about describes it."

e you."

a while, Morgan made coffee and es. They sat in the living room, their talk diminished for the moment. The ere left, and the long glances, and the eating of their hearts, and in all that thless reality of their love.

reat elm in the middle of the meadow a giant, Julie thought. A mother giant ny flocks, who leaned over girl and nd said in a hoarse entrancing voice, ere, the summer's long . . . it comes

But will it for me? Julie asked, unanswered. Will it come again for me? Because if she were not here, summer would not come again for her. I love it, she thought, sinking down in the rough warm grass, out of the tree's shade. Arms on her knees, she looked as far as she could in all directions with a fierce devotion in her eyes. The meadow was warm and slightly hilly. It lazed away behind the house and you couldn't see the highway on its farther side unless you walked far past the rise where the elm tree stood. Today, so close to leaving, the highway seemed to run across her heart.

"Can I look you up, sometime this winter?" Piggy had said, before he left last time. He'd been up, with Fred and Hank, many times since that weekend when they'd cleaned the barn and buried the robin. She got used to him. In a way, rather liked him.

"I don't know, Piggy," Julie had answered. She really didn't know. He was nice. It was fun to dance with him, and swim, and watch him dive. But it would be different in the city. Dressed-up clothes, movies, she supposed, and sodas afterward. It wasn't anything she could get interested in. "Couldn't you just wait, and see me next summer?" she asked.

"Well, heck, how do I know you'll be here next summer?" He'd gone on talking, but Julie didn't know what she'd answered. It was the first time she'd even considered that this summer's invitation might be the last.

"My beautiful," she whispered to the trees and the water and the fox-colored barn, "my beautiful." On the lake a sailboat skimmed past with upflung white-sleeved arms. She was filled with that passionate love which comes so close to being pain. I have to come back, she said to herself, I must!

"Julie!" That was Ned, coming up the hill to get her. "Julie, it's lunchtime!"

"I'm coming."

"We're having lemon-meringue pie."

"That's nice."

"You don't sound especially pleased," he complained, waiting for her to come up beside him.

"O Pie!" she caroled. "How I love thee . . . how I dote on thee, Pie!"

"Oh, you're nuts. Julie, you have a terrible disposition."

"No, I don't. It only seems that way."

"Not much to choose, if you ask me. Why are you cross?" he asked curiously.

"I don't know, Ned. Maybe I just don't want to leave here."

He slowed his steps. "Well, neither do I. But in a way I'll be sort of glad. I miss Morgan." Julie said nothing and he added, "Don't you miss pop and Morgy?"

"Naturally. Only . . . it's too hard to explain, I guess. It's just that I've loved it here more than anywhere else I've ever been. And I get scared maybe Mrs. Miller won't ask us back."

"She will," Ned said confidently.

"You can't know that."

"Sure I do. I asked her."

"Ned!"

"If you wanna know something, you ask."

Julie didn't answer. She was wondering whether to allow herself to fly into the rapture Ned's words offered, or to hold off, for fear they should be a snare. His own anxiety (and he was nearly as fond of the place as she was) might have misinformed him. And anyway, she thought, who can tell a thing about next year?

The night before they left, the last night in her little room, Julie sat by the window and looked around the room. She felt, suddenly, a superb strength. She was even, for a while, sure that next summer would come and she'd be here.

"Hey, Julie!"

She leaned out the window. "Hi, Geoff. When did you get here?"

"A bit ago. I came up to drive everyone back tomorrow." Julie smiled tremulously. "Come on down," Geoff said. "We're going to have a game of hide-and-seek in the moonlight."

"Oh. O.K., I'll be there."

Ned was it. They all stood round while he pondered a moment, scattered as he leaned his arm and his head against a tree. Julie hid behind a rosebush from which the roses had long disappeared.

"—— seventeen . . . eighteen . . . nineteen . . . twenty! Ready or not," came Ned's warning in the moony dark, "ready or not, here I come!"

SPANISH PROVERBS

If you are vexed or angry you will have two troubles instead of one.

An ounce of mother is worth a pound of clergy.

Lock your door so that you may keep your neighbors honest.

He who loves not the loved one's faults does not truly love.

He who spits against heaven spits in his own face.

TELL ME DOCTOR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 23

y, ut it does seem that such an injury ht ell make the area more vulnerable to ct or irritations which could be the ti point of a cancerous process. Let us th this may be only a contributory cause. re ve to be others in order to account for ig ncy of the cervix in women who have er en pregnant. But all this is rather n l. Shall we leave the cause of cancer to p ologists, and consider how all this ce s you?"

O urse. I hope you didn't find anything ou n your examination."

I not find anything that I believe to be ou now, but there is something which ld come serious in the future."

W t is it, Doctor?"

Th e is a small area of cervical erosion, ch as developed since I saw you two years

W t do you mean by 'erosion,' Doctor?"

L ally, it means 'eaten away.' The ex- n on showed a small, red area perhaps si of a ten-cent piece, in which there have b s been cell changes."

B it isn't cancer?"

I I quite sure that it is not, but I propose na absolutely certain. That is why I took cimens for examination. They are ap s from the neighborhood of the lesion, and are doubtless under the microscope right now."

"Can you tell from them if I have a cancer?"

"I wouldn't even attempt to do that, since I am not an expert microscopist. The pathologist who will examine the specimens can tell definitely, however. Please do not worry too much about it. The chances of finding anything serious at this time are small. It is, however, important to make certain that the condition which I discovered is as yet harmless, and even more important to eradicate the area of erosion at once."

"I always supposed that a cancer had definite symptoms, such as bleeding or pain."

"By the time those symptoms might develop, the condition would be well advanced. Early cancer of the cervix presents no symptoms at all that are evident to the patient. That is why it is so important to have examinations at regular intervals, why you are here today."

"I'm glad you sent for me, Doctor."

"I am glad you feel that way. Excuse me, please, while I answer this telephone call. . . . Yes. . . . Yes. . . . You are certain? . . . Fine! Thank you. . . . That was the pathologist, Mrs. Way. There are no signs of malignancy."

"Oh, thank God! And thank you for taking such good care of me, Doctor. And you are going to cure this . . . erosion for me?"

"That is what I propose to do, and we will start at once. Will you come back into the examining room?"

"You mean I won't have to go to the hospital?"

"No. It will be only a minor surgical procedure."

"I'm willing to do anything you suggest. Doctor, if you had found evidence of an early cancer, what would have happened to me?"

"I would have advised you to enter the hospital immediately."

"And that would have meant an operation, I suppose."

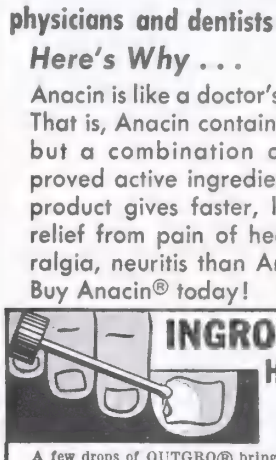
"It would have meant surgery, or X-ray and radium treatment, or possibly a combination."

"And—would I have a chance of a cure, Doctor?"

"Indeed you would have a very good chance. Early cancers of the cervix do very well under treatment, as a rule, especially when they are discovered before glandular involvement has taken place. That is why we advocate these periodic examinations—to discover the condition while it can still be controlled. I consider you very fortunate indeed, Mrs. Way."

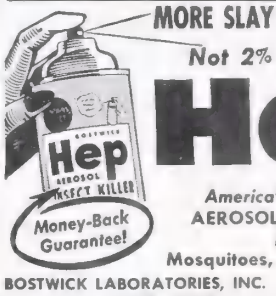
"And so do I!"

Another article in this series by Doctor Safford will appear next month.



IF YOU SUFFER PAIN of HEADACHE NEURITIS NEURALGIA get FAST RELIEF WITH

The way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend



Here's Why . . .

Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, Anacin contains not just one but a combination of medically proved active ingredients. No other product gives faster, longer-lasting relief from pain of headache, neuralgia, neuritis than Anacin tablets. Buy Anacin® today!

INGROWN NAIL Hurting You? Immediate Relief!

A few drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to be cut and thus prevents further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

MORE SLAY TO THE SPRAY! Not 2% but 3% DDT!

Hep

America's Biggest Value
AEROSOL INSECT KILLER KILLS
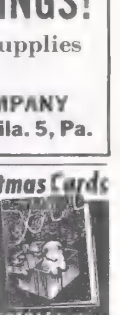
Mosquitoes, Flies, Gnats, Wasps

BOSTWICK LABORATORIES, INC. Bridgeport 5, Conn.



SPARE-TIME EARNINGS!

Write us for details and supplies
No obligation.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
337 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

Show New COLOR-PHOTO Christmas Cards

YOU MAKE $1 EVERY TIME YOU SELL 1 BOX

$25 Profit on 25 Boxes; $100 on 100 Boxes
Show FREE Samples of Name-Imprinted Cards with Natural Color photos. Make $1.00 on every single box. Up to 100% profit on 50-Card $1 Box (limited supply). Doubly-Personalized cards, Sound & Action Cards, Name-Imprinted Religious line, 160 Gifts & other fast-sellers. New Catalog Shopping Plan. Bargain Specials while they last! Get Assortments on approval, and Personalized Samples FREE. Write TODAY!
MIDWEST CARD CO., 1113 Washington, Dept. H-5, St. Louis 1, Mo.

Wonderful SHAMPOO Also CURLS AND WAVES HAIR

Women who shampoo with exciting NEW Marlene's HAIR WAVING SHAMPOO award it the highest honors. Not only does Marlene's make hair shine with cleanliness; not only does Marlene's make hair soft, luxurious, easier to manage, with more body and lustre ...but more important Marlene's actually CURLS and WAVES hair with each shampoo and set. Cleans, really beautifies, saves time and money. You have to wash your hair anyway, so next time try Marlene's.
At drug & cosmetic counters everywhere.

NEW JEWEL Christmas Cards MAKE $50.00 and more CASH

Proven plan for easy money. Show new JEWEL cards in popular oblong size to friends and neighbors. They'll buy on sight. Over 100 other items. Name-imprinted CHRISTMAS CARDS 25 for $1. up. BURGOYNE line. Chance to win MINK STOLE or OTHER PRIZES. Write today for Assortments on approval and get FREE pen for prompt action.

FREE BALL POINT PEN IF YOU WRITE NOW!

CHAS. C. SCHWEP CO. Dept. 37E Westfield, Mass.

ZIP! Off comes greasy scorch with BRILLO Soap Pads

Stop cleaning pans the hard way! Sturdy, metal-fiber Brillo® Soap Pads clean faster, shine pans brighter! That's because Brillo has more metal-fiber . . . a bigger cleaning surface. Every Brillo Soap Pad is loaded with soap that contains jeweler's polish! Of all cleansers tested, Brillo gives aluminums twice the shine—in half the time!

BRILLO SOAP PADS (red box) Soap-filled pads

BRILLO CLEANSER (green box) Pads plus cake soap

There's polishing soap right in every BRILLO Soap Pad!

THRIFTIER! 5 and 12 pad boxes

THE MORE THE MERRIER

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 49

rich desserts. Settle for fruit in some form for the sweet ending. What I'm getting down to is a streamlining or trimming down of summer meals to the one hot dish, salad and fruit pattern.

So keep these four meals in mind. And when the day or the weekend arrives, smile your sweetest smile and say, "The more the merrier." Let them come—one or many.

MENU 1

Baked Ham-and-Bean Casserole
Pickled Onion Rings
Coleslaw
Boston Brown Bread
Watermelon
Hot Coffee
(Planned for eight)

The meat that makes the summer. Aside from chicken, the most popular main chance by way of meat (and somehow I don't think of chicken as exactly meat, it's so in a set-apart class by itself) is ham. It's lightly perfumed with hickory smoke, it's delicately salted, it can be cooked in a score of ways and be the big blow in more dishes. And when it comes to leftover creations—well, what do you know? But here's one more for ham:

BAKED HAM-AND-BEAN CASSEROLE

Add 2 pounds dried baby Limas to 10 cups water. Bring to a boil. Boil 2 minutes, remove from heat and let them soak 1 hour, then simmer for 20 minutes. Mix ½ cup minced onion, ¼ cup molasses, 2 teaspoons dry mustard, ½ cup catchup, 1 tablespoon salt and 2 cups of the bean liquid. Arrange alternate layers of beans, slices of tenderized ham (about 3 pounds in all) and the seasonings in a large 3-quart casserole. Cover and bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., about 1½ hours or until the beans are tender, adding bean liquid from time to time if necessary. Serve with steamed canned brown bread.

Brother or sister, any onions today? I trust you like them. To me they are a Hit Parade, from what I think of as the premature and tentative baby, the scallion—green onion to some of you—right up the scale to the full-bosomed Bermuda, queen of the race. So, feeling for onions as I do, it boils down to:

PICKLED ONION RINGS

Peel, slice and separate into rings 4 medium-sized onions. Pour boiling water over them, to cover. Make a mixture of 1 cup vinegar, 1 cup water, ½ cup sugar, ½ teaspoon salt, and pepper to taste. Drain the boiling water from the onions, add the vinegar mixture and let the whole marinate and chill at least 1 hour. Before serving, drain the onions well and arrange them to overlap and look attractive on a flat glass dish if you have one. Or some good neighbor may oblige. Garnish with nasturtium petals and leaves (if they grow by your kitchen door) to brighten their corner.

Watermelon—the few ways to serve. There aren't many things to do with this resplendent fruit; but few that there are, there's nothing more refreshing than icy-cold watermelon, crisp and crackly to the fork. Cut it in big pie-shaped pieces. Spear seedless grapes and honeydew-melon balls or black sweet cherries with toothpicks and stick into the watermelon pieces dart-board fashion. These you eat first while contemplating the treat to come.

MENU 2

Veal-and-Noodle Casserole
Sliced Tomatoes and Cucumbers
Corn Sticks
Raspberry Poached Pears
Hot Coffee
(Planned for eight)

Making with the casserole. There are few dishes more popular or more easily made expansible than the casserole. That is, if it's a good one to begin with. For tops in eating and looks, too, I give you:

VEAL-AND-NOODLE CASSEROLE

Cook ½ pound medium noodles in boiling salted water until just tender, according to directions on the package. Drain and rinse. Have 3 pounds veal sliced very thin as for scaloppine. Mix together 6 tablespoons flour, ½ teaspoon dry mustard, and ¼ teaspoon each of thyme, marjoram and orégano. Season each piece of meat with salt (about 2½ teaspoons for 3 pounds of meat) and a little pepper. (By the way, a good investment is a pepper grinder or mill and plenty of whole peppercorns. Then you may have fresh-ground pepper whenever the condiment is called for, and you have no idea how much it does for your cooking.) Then dust the veal with the flour mixture. Brown it well in ¼ cup hot shortening or salad oil, adding more fat as needed. When browned, sprinkle the veal with 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind. Peel and cook 1 pound tiny white onions until tender in 2 cups canned condensed chicken broth. Strain out the onions and save the broth. In a 3-quart casserole make layers of the browned veal, noodles, onions, and a good layer of fresh and cooked garden peas or 1 package frozen peas, cooked. Melt 6 tablespoons butter or margarine and blend in 6 tablespoons flour. Gradually add 2 cups milk or part milk and part cream and 2 cups of chicken broth used in cooking the onions. Cook over low heat, stirring constantly, until as thick as heavy cream, or depend on the dependable double boiler. At all events, use the egg beater earnestly when the sauce is done. Season the sauce with salt and pepper to taste (like all sauces, this one should be tasty) and pour over the contents of the casserole. Cover and bake in moderately hot oven, 375° F., 45 minutes or until bubbly. Garnish with more peas. If the peas are fresh, I think that a few pea pods and a teaspoon of sugar cooked in with them makes all peas so much sweeter, and so much more tender and full of flavor, that I never cook them any other way. And another thing: all peas at any time ask for a little sugar, and so does corn. Finally, garnish the casserole with ½ cup toasted slivered blanched almonds. So you can steal a nap on the porch, prepare the casserole ahead of time, ready to pop in the oven at the appointed time.

RACE

By MILLICENT WARD WHITT

Wet wind, dark wind, pushing through the trees,
Tall grass, cold grass, quick against my knees,
Wild night, black night, catch me if you can!
And I dashed down the hillside, and ran, and ran, and ran.
But the trees bent fiercely after,
And the long wind blew,
And the clouds piled faster, faster,
And the sharp grass grew,
And I stumbled through the hollows
As I raced, the panting night
Close at my heels,
Till we crashed into the light,
And I leaped up the stairs,
Two steps at a stride,
And banged the door behind me,
Safe inside.

Deep South stuff. From down in Kentucky Home country, by way of ge imagination of some talented mamm sweet yellow bread made of corn and a shovel on the big hearth of the b where such magic was made that left an unforgettable memory. Th loaves, there were hot muffins. Gri baked on soapstone griddles, and spo dipped from its dish with pewter ladle and George knew this well, and I t every ordinary where the general cla on his way to the House of Burgess him some kind of hot corn bread. A I pass along to you a receipt for th corn-shaped delicacies known to us

CORN STICKS

Beat 2 eggs well with a rotary bea ¼ cup sugar, ⅔ cup milk and ⅓ cu butter or margarine. Sift 1⅓ cups fl ⅔ cup corn meal, 3 teaspoons bak der and ½ teaspoon salt. Add the the dry ingredients all at once. Mix but don't go at it hammer and to just enough to mix—and rest it and y Have iron corn-stick pans well gre heated in an oven at 375° F. Fill three quarters full and bake in a mo hot oven, 375° F., for 20 to 25 minut narily I bake corn sticks at 400° F., do all right at 375° F. along with serole. Makes 12 to 14 corn sticks got to be resourceful, you know. don't have corn-stick pans, use muf Serve these very hot, hotter tha muffins; but all muffins should hot as a poker. And have extra margarine and jam or marmalad you eaten that elegant ginger mar

Fresh or canned. Pears, fresh or are always in season. Unless a late from the tree and eaten then a it's not the fruit that lingers—it is retiring by nature. But fix it up wi fruits, or in many ways, it surprises everyone can enjoy:

RASPBERRY POACHED PE

Cut 10 medium-sized pears in half wise, leaving the stem on one side. core. Place the pears, cored side do large skillet. Add 1 quart water, 1 cu 6 slices lemon and 2 tablespoons lem Cover and simmer until almost tende 15 minutes, then turn pears and ad bottled raspberry sirup. Continue until really tender, but not too so

MENU 3

Vegetable-Meat-Ball Soup
Grated Parmesan Cheese
Hot Garlic Bread
Fruit Compote with Orange Sour Cream
Iced Coffee
(Planned for eight)

Soup of the evening. The third four one-over-one meals is right up alley, and it's so presented here. It l falderals. It is devoid of any fancies, straightforward way is a four-squa upper. It begins with

VEGETABLE-MEAT-BALL S

The day before, cover several be bones (enough to give good strengt stock) with 3 quarts water. Bring t then simmer 4 hours. Strain through cloth and chill overnight. Skim off With chilling, the fat solidifies and scrape it off. Add to the broth ½ c carrots, ½ cup thinly sliced leeks onions, ½ cup fine-cut celery, ½ c white turnips, 1 package frozen whol corn or 2 cups fresh corn cut from and 1 No. 2½ can tomatoes. Sea soup with 4 teaspoons salt, ¼ teasp per and ¼ teaspoon basil. While t tables cook, mix together 1 pound huck, 4 slices stale bread (soaked in and then squeezed dry), 1 egg, slightly t, 1½ teaspoons salt, ⅛ teaspoon and ¾ teaspoon thyme. Make from ef mixture about 3 dozen tiny meat nd add to the soup. Simmer about nutes or until the vegetables are tender. this as the main dish. Pass with it Parmesan cheese. Or, should you use mother's antique tureen, sprinkle each of soup with the grated cheese. This is "cup" soup. With it have pickles and and hot garlic bread. As it's a hot , cool off with iced coffee or iced tea. . And palm-leaf fans and rocking

This is the month. If any month in the is dedicated to fruit, that month is st. No dessert is better than these fruits, ice cream and some of the chilled and things. So to cool folks off and keep happy, I've given you one way to get a t of just fruit, any and all fruits that a gal August gives you. And this time the ay is: le and chill well a variety of fruits. sing from fresh, frozen or canned gives lot of leeway. Such lovely tempting s as melon balls, all kinds, apricots and n-struck peaches, plums and cherries—ll buy my cherries?" The list is long vely. Take 1 cup thick commercial sour , add 2 teaspoons orange juice, 1 tea- grated orange rind, 1 teaspoon sugar, y little salt and 2 teaspoons finely ed mint. Mix well. This is delicious l with the fruit. It should be chilled. t or decorate the compote with it.

FRUIT COMPOTE WITH ORANGE SOUR CREAM

MENU 4

Paella
Mixed Salad
Crusty Rolls
Peach Ice Cream
with Sliced Peaches and Strawberries
Lemon Sticks
Iced Tea

(Planned for eight)

rom fascinating Spain. From the beau- and fabled land of the toreador and dor, ancient art and fabulous food, comes known as paella. Our editors were in of late and they tell us that paella means nd there are restaurants named so. It eans a dish of rice and meat or chicken, ly with shellfish. Though there are many ns, this is how we make it. As it's de- d as more than good, you can go Span- nd serve:

PAELLA

until very tender a 5-pound roasting en in 1 quart water with seasonings—pepper, onion, celery and parsley. Re- from stock and take the chicken off ones in neat, forkable-size pieces. Save s stock. Brown 2 cups rice and 4 cloves , crushed, in 3 tablespoons salad oil. stock, ¼ teaspoon saffron, the cut en, 1½ pounds raw shrimp, peeled and ined, or the frozen ones all ready to use, kage frozen peas, or the same amount sh peas, and season with 2½ teaspoons Bring to a boil, then reduce heat to a er. Place a dozen scrubbed littleneck s on top, cover and simmer about 15 tes until the rice is tender and the liquid sorbed. Serve with a salad and hot crusty And—know something? Pickled wal- are out of this world with this.

Why go into this? It seems a little re- lant to bring up another salad, doesn't But while there are hundreds to choose , another one is always welcome. But ing seems more right with paella than a d. For that matter, what is any meal out a good crisp, lovingly made salad? be you've known, made and eaten this ever since Nellie wore pinafores. Here ll find a mixed salad—any name will do:

MIXED SALAD

Line a salad bowl with mixed greens. Endive, tomatoes, artichoke hearts and sliced hard-cooked eggs may add the something interesting. Dress with Russian or Roquefort dressing, serve very cold.

PEACH ICE CREAM WITH SLICED PEACHES AND STRAWBERRIES

This isn't a brainstorm, you will say. But after all, it is hot and the easiest dessert is ice cream if you buy it at the corner store. This time of year peach ice cream reigns as the queen—ladle it with sliced peaches and strawberries.

LEMON STICKS

Cream ½ cup butter or margarine, gradually adding ½ cup confectioners' sugar. Add 2 egg yolks and beat until light. Stir in 1 cup flour and 2 teaspoons grated lemon rind. Mix until smooth and spread evenly in bottom of ungreased 13" x 9" pan. Bake 10 minutes in moderate oven, 350° F. While this is baking, beat 2 egg whites until stiff, gradually adding ½ cup sugar. Beat in 1 tablespoon lemon juice and fold in ½ cup chopped nuts. Spread meringue topping over baked mixture and bake 25 minutes longer. Cool slightly and cut into 3" x 1" strips. Makes 32 sticks.

The garden calls. The day has been hot, but the evening calls us and the moon and stars beckon. Dinner's over, the dishes washed. The children are put to bed. Everyone relaxes in comfort and content. The white Shasta daisies and azalea mums along the perennial border remind us that summer will soon be on the wane. There are signs of this already, but the fall of the year is as lovely as any summer, and soon the wine that is October's air will give us new zest for living and the song of the cider mill as it goes about its pleasant task will be heard in the land.

Yours as always,
ANNIE.

Something NEW is Cooking!

Franco-American Spaghetti makes these easy recipe dishes that taste so good

Franco-American Spaghetti, with its lively tomato and Cheddar cheese sauce, is already a great family favorite. But now try combining it with other good things to eat—for a whole exciting new way of meal-making. New dishes easy enough for a quick lunch and so delicious, you'll be proud to serve them to company.

From the Files of a Wisconsin Cook

2 cans Franco-American Spaghetti
1 cup creamed cottage cheese
2 tablespoons melted butter or margarine
1 clove garlic, mashed
1 cup soft bread cubes

Empty 1 can of spaghetti into shallow baking dish; spread evenly with cottage cheese (you'll love how the flavor of cottage cheese blends with Franco-American Spaghetti). Top with second can of spaghetti. Blend the butter and garlic; stir in bread cubes till butter is absorbed. Sprinkle cubes over spaghetti. Bake in a hot oven (450° F.) about 15 minutes, or till lightly browned. Gives you 6 servings, at about 9¢ each.

So Good—
so Many Ways—you'll want to buy 3 cans

With HAM... Add 1/2 cup diced cooked ham to one can of Franco-American Spaghetti for a good and easy supper.

With TUNA... Heat one can of tuna with two cans of Franco-American Spaghetti—4 generous servings.

With CELERY... Saute sliced celery in butter, add Franco-American Spaghetti and serve bubbly-hot. Nice flavor team.

Instead of POTATOES... Franco-American Spaghetti tastes grand with meat or fish. Just heat and serve.

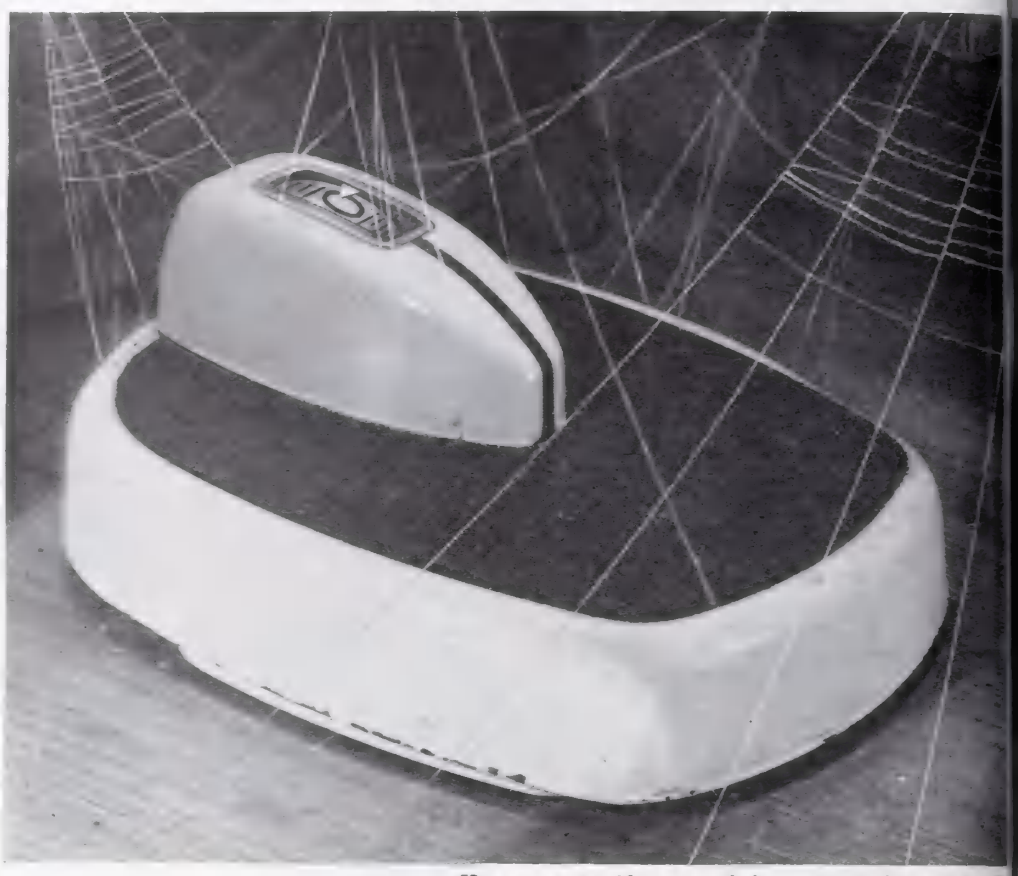
Ranch House Quickie

1/2 lb. ground beef
1 cup diced green pepper
1 tablespoon butter or margarine
2 cans Franco-American Spaghetti
1 teaspoon chili powder

See how the whole family goes for this savory blend of beef, chili and Franco-American Spaghetti's lively tomato and Cheddar cheese sauce. Brown beef and green pepper in shortening. (Make small meat balls of the beef if desired.) Blend in spaghetti and chili powder, and heat thoroughly. Makes 4 generous servings, at about 20¢ each.

Why don't people stick to their diets?

Some diets fail because they are based on fads



Even good diets fail when people don't stick to them

Why don't people stick to their diets?

Because they can't overcome that "always hungry" feeling

Why are they hungry?

It may be because their blood sugar level is low

Have you put aside your scale because your diet was too d

The fastest way to raise your blood sugar level, keep your appetite satisfied with less, is to have some sugar—or one of the good things containing it.

A new approach to diet planning, based on recent research, helps healthy people hold down their waistlines by raising the blood sugar level.

People have such a natural liking for sugar, it has always been one of the foods hardest to do without.

Now science finds that there is no need for any healthy person to do without sugar. In fact, your normal use of sugar may actually be helping to keep you from gaining weight. And if you want to lose weight, a moderate use of sugar as part of a well-planned diet can actually make it much easier for you to stick to your diet.

Why does eating a sweet just before a meal help keep you from eating too much?

Why does a simple dessert make a small meal so much more satisfying?

Science finds the reason

That's because sugar raises your blood sugar level faster than any other food. New research at a leading university has shown that the blood sugar level plays a leading role in regulating appetite.

When the blood sugar level falls too low, the appetite regulating center of the brain (the hypothalamus or "appestat") turns on the appetite much as a thermostat turns on the furnace in your house. You're apt to eat more than you need, without being conscious of overeating, before your blood sugar level is raised to the point where it "shuts off your appestat."

New way to diet without hunger

This discovery has already brought about an entirely new approach to weight control diets. It is based on keeping hunger down by keeping your blood sugar level up throughout the day.

You do not cut out any food, you simply cut down. To make it easier to cut down, you eat more often—with small mid-morning, mid-afternoon and bedtime snacks if you are hungry. But in all you do not eat nearly so much. You do not want so much.

You do not substitute artificial no-calorie sweeteners for sugar. They can't help curb your appetite since they have no effect on your blood sugar level. Using them defeats your purpose.

You may have a teaspoonful of sugar in your coffee or tea, or on your breakfast cereal or fruit. It supplies only 18 calories, can make it easier for you to turn down second helpings that would supply several times as many calories.

Because it makes a small meal so much more satisfying, you may eat desserts that include sugar with your lunch or dinner. And you may have an occasional between-meals sweet such as a soft drink or piece of candy. This is one of the fastest ways to satisfy your craving for food with the fewest calories.

More facts for weight watcher

Scientific articles on the blood sugar studies have been published just recent Medical Journals. But already many pop magazines have begun to pick up the s with articles that show how you can l your sugar and your waistline, too. Or these recently appeared in Reader's Di If you would like a reprint of this article, other interesting facts about sugar write

SUGAR INFORMATION, INC
Box 137, New York 5, New York

18 CALORIES

Surprise you that there are only 18 calories in a level teaspoonful of sugar? Compare this with the 2,500 a moderately active woman (123 lbs.) uses up every day. A 154-pound man requires 3,000 calories a day for normal activity.

All facts in this message apply to both beet and cane sugar.

Dear Journal Editors: On Wednesday of next week, I will be 29 years old. It might just as well be 49, the way I look and feel.

Life in our house is very hectic. We always seem to be yelling at the kids. I feel very sorry for my children, in that I must be an old witch to them. But I'm always so tired and I feel overworked though I have all (or almost all) modern conveniences. I even have a freezer which is empty because I don't have time or money to utilize it. My husband makes a very good salary, but both of us being poor managers, we always seem to be in debt.

As for preparing meals, things are just thrown together because the baby is crying, the three-year-old is on the kitchen table, and the other two are inevitably fighting. How do people manage?

Very truly yours,

DOROTHY CANNER.

Big sister Lynne, small Phyllis, first-grader Billy and baby J.P. are all lively, get way out of hand when Dot gets harried.

The Scrambled Housewife

Home sweet home often has the quiet charm of a barrel going over the falls — at the Canners', in Beechhurst, L. I., New York.

BY HILDEGARDE DOLSON

WALK down the tranquil suburban street in Beechhurst, Long Island, past homes that could pose for a real-estate slogan: Design for Gracious Living. Ring the bell of the trim, six-room brick house, and you're plunged into Canner confusion.

A slim brunette wearing gray flannel slacks, an appealing, uncertain smile and a bedeviled air greets you rather distractedly, in a din made by one small, high-fidelity-screech blonde, a blaring television set, and a baby yelling in competition. "Usually the baby's calm like his daddy," Dorothy Canner remarks. You're glad to hear that daddy's calm. Thirty-one-year-old William Canner works in New York as an investigator for a national agency servicing insurance firms. His salary, around $6700 a year, runs a losing race with the Canners' free-fisted spending. When bills and bedlam get too thick,

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MARY MORRIS

With all she buys to make life easy, why isn't it? Dot puzzles: "Our freezer cost $560 but I don't have money to fill it. I can't work the ironer. I'd need lessons for the piano. We buy $185 worth of food a month, but I never have time to plan menus ahead. Tonight we'll have lobster—it ups our morale."

"I have all conveniences. I'm the obstacle,"

Dot says. "I have no organization."

House is spotless when Bill comes home. But Dot is worn out, sallies forth to a bingo game for change of scene. She played three nights a week, lost $20 a month, till Bill cut her to one night. But he'll relent with a good-natured "Go out and live."

"If the children get underfoot when I have so much on my mind, I get mad. I love them and it's not fair to them."

"I read an ad or hear a commercial and I can't say no. How do you keep track of money when your income changes every week?"

Bill has "Old Betsy," the '46 car, at work. So world has to come to Dot. She shops by phone, is vague on prices, low on buying resistance: "Just charge it, please."

Young
HOW AMERICA LIVES

his wife goes out and plays bingo—at a net loss of $20 a month. "Bill calls himself the built-in baby sitter," Dorothy said. "But when I got up to three nights a week playing bingo, he really put his foot down. Now I just go once a week." She added, "I often play with friends from the church in Bayside where we had all our kids christened."

The three-year-old blonde formally christened Phyllis, and informally known as The Terror of Beechhurst, bounces in and out like a rubber ball, pounds a glass-topped table with an ash tray, slashes unwary legs with a holster belt, does a hula dance, pulls her panties down around her ankles, and staggers like Charlie Chaplin.

"Phyllis!" her mother yelled. "You're getting obnoxious."

As she's yanked up, Phyllis howls piercingly.

"Do you want a spanking?"

"No," the culprit said sunnily, turning off the tears. "I like you, mommy, and I'm going to have you at my party."

"That's her newest dodge," Dorothy said, as her child trotted off. "But even if I spank her, five minutes later she's ——" Screams rent the air. Dorothy, tensed on the edge of her chair as if waiting for just such a signal, leaped. "When she climbs in the baby's crib—well, I've never caught her hurting him deliberately, but sometimes I suspect the worst."

You're left alone in the living room that's as neat as a store-window display, with ivory ruffled silk lamp shades and bright-as-new slip covers. Dorothy reappears lugging a placid, nine-month-old towhead, Joseph Peter, who waves a convivial bottle. "I had to let Phyllis stay on a bottle till she was past three, because she was so jealous she kept swiping J.P.'s. It was easier to give her what she wanted." She added despondently, "That's the way I am. The kids think they can have anything they ask for. Last night Lynne, our eight-year-old, was watching a TV play, and the heroine moaned about not having money to pay the End of the month . . . staggering bills come in. Household cash, usually $50 for two weeks, was gone in two days. How to meet IOU's upsets Dot. Children and Bill feel her strain.

"Why doesn't she just write a check?" Lynne asked of heroine on screen who couldn't pay rent. Dot was jolted, tried to explain. "But it opened my eyes."

rent. So Lynne said, 'The dope! Why doesn't she just write out a check?'"

Dorothy's full red mouth, that often droops as disconsolately as her thin shoulders, curved in a vivid grin. Then she went on ruefully, "I gave Lynne a lecture right then, about the value of money, but I'm a fine one to talk! Bill gives me fifty or sixty dollars every two weeks when he gets paid, so I pay the butcher and maybe a couple others, and in two days the money's all shot and I'm charging again. When I get too far behind on his bill, the milkman says, 'Now, Mrs. Canner, you're being naughty again.'"

She put her gurgling son on the floor, on a blanket. "Every time Bill and I see anybody with a baby, we think, 'Gee, it would be fun to have another,' but we can't even manage the ones we've got. Bill plays favorites and he always likes the youngest best. As they get older, they get too fresh, and then even Bill can't stand it. When I hear him yell at the kids, then I can hear how wrong it is, so I yell at Bill, and it's a madhouse."

On this gloomy note, the phone rang. Phyllis, answering, babbled joyously, "Daddy—I'm good." Dorothy ran to take over. You hear her voice drop to a tender, pleased murmur, with giggles and lingering grace notes. "That was Bill," CONTINUED ON PAGE 120

Touched by her children's belief that she could solve anything, Dot decided to unscramble her problems.

Late one night, Canners reached a decision.

"Here we are—with a brand-new house and our wonde ful children. We're both hard workers, and we've made lot of headway in ten years. We know we can do it, we'll figure a way out of this crazy mix-up together

Your hair is romance...

keep it sunshine bright with White Rain

As surely as sunshine follows rain, romance follows the girl whose hair is bright to see, soft to touch, fresh as a spring breeze—the kind of hair you always have when you use New White Rain. This fabulous shampoo sprinkles your hair with sunlight. And with sunshine all around you, love and laughter follow after. Love and laughter . . . the essence of romance. Ask for White Rain . . . the lotion shampoo that gives you results like softest rain water.

Use New White Rain Shampoo tonight
and tomorrow your hair will be sunshine bright!

FABULOUS LOTION SHAMPOO BY TONI

LAMB SHANKS WITH CHIVE RICE

INTERESTIN and inexpensive

Personal shopping for best buys cut

WHEN I think of what we could have done with that $70 a month when we were so debt-ridden, I could almost cry. I had no food budget—no idea of prices—ordered everything over the phone and charged it besides.

I even thought I hated to cook, blaming my dislike on the kitchen bedlam the children stirred up at mealtime.

Now I realize I was only fooling myself. You've got to want to make a budget work and put some of yourself into the project if it's going to be fun. With encouragement and help from JOURNAL editors, we are at last getting our food bills down where they belong. You should see me combing the newspaper ads for grocery bargains, comparing prices in the margins. Bill kids me and says he's going to get me a Geiger counter.

I had never even heard of lamb shanks, for instance, before I began paring pennies off the food bill. Chops and roasts were the only cuts I knew. I discovered the shanks were wonderful barbecued. Even finicky Lynne passes her plate for more. And the whole dinner costs less than $2.00!

Barbecued Lamb Shanks with Chive Rice
Grated-Carrot-and-Turnip Salad
Lime-Watermelon Cubes
For six — cost: $1.97

Barbecued Lamb Shanks with Chive Rice: Have the butcher crack the lamb shanks for you. Dust 6 lamb shanks (about ¾–1 pound each) with 2 tablespoons flour and brown well a few at a time in a large roaster, using ¼ cup shortening or salad oil. Drain excess fat. Combine 1 cup catchup, 1 cup water, 2 teaspoons salt, 2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce, ½ cup vinegar, ¼ cup dark brown sugar and 2 teaspoons dry mustard. Add 1 cup sliced onion and pour over lamb shanks. Cover tightly and simmer 2 hours, or until meat is tender. Baste sauce over shanks 2 or 3 times during cooking period. Uncover and continue cooking 15 minutes longer. Serve with 4 cups hot seasoned cooked rice tossed with 1 tablespoon minced chives. Serves 6.

Grated-Carrot-and-Turnip Salad: Toss together 2 cups coarsely grated raw carrots and 1 cup grated raw white turnip. Season to taste with salt and pepper and mix with 3 tablespoons French dressing. Serve in lettuce cups. Serves 6.

Lime-Watermelon Cubes: Cut ripe chilled watermelon into cubes. Spoon some thawed frozen limeade concentrate over each serving.

Though my father was a chef, I had never been very adventurous about food. Bill and I liked to go to Chinese restaurants now and then, but it never occurred to me to try my hand at cooking Chinese style until the JOURNAL folks showed me how quick and easy it was. Vegetable chow mein is a real moneysaver. We never miss meat when we have this dinner.

Vegetable Chow Mein on Noodles Cottage-Cheese Mold
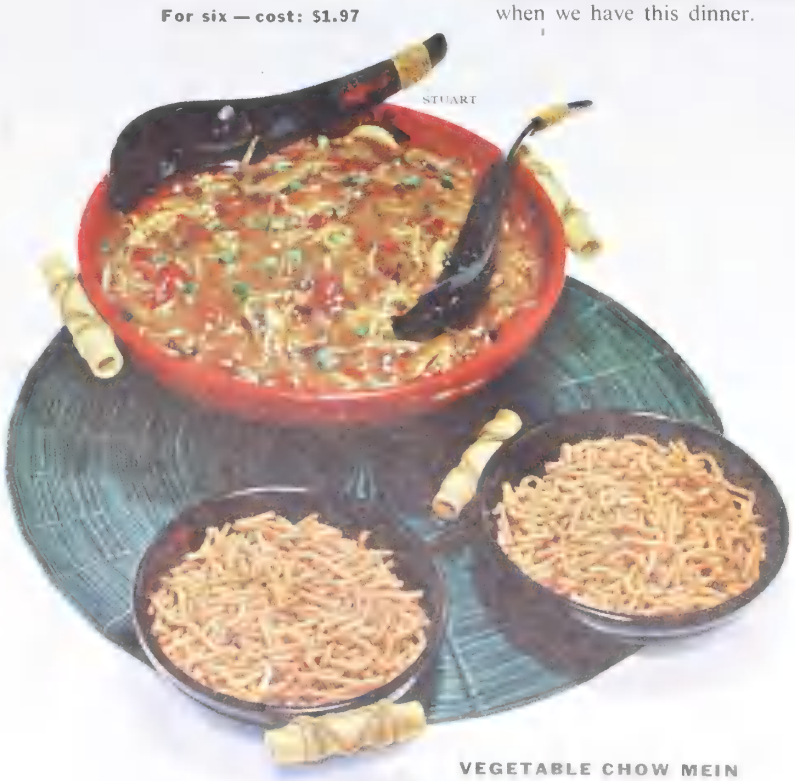
Sliced Peaches
For six — cost: $2.02

Vegetable Chow Mein on Noodles: Sauté lightly ½ pound mushrooms, sliced, ¾ cup sliced onion and ¼ cup diced green pepper in ¼ cup butter or margarine in a large skillet. Add 2 cups canned chicken broth, 1 cup canned tomatoes and ½ cup sliced celery. Blend 3 tablespoons cornstarch with ½ cup cold water; add this to the vegetables and cook until clear, stirring constantly. When thickened, add 2½ tablespoons soy sauce, 2 tablespoons pimientos, chopped, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon sugar and 1 No. 2 can bean sprouts to the sauce. Heat thoroughly, but do not overcook. Serve on heated canned chow-mein noodles. Serves 6.



Cottage-Cheese Mold: Sprinkle 1 envelope unflavored gelatin over ¼ cup cold water. Let stand for 5 minutes. Add ¾ cup hot water and stir until gelatin dissolves. Add ⅓ cup lemon juice and 5 tablespoons sugar and mix well. Press 2 cups cottage cheese through a fine sieve. Gradually add gelatin mixture to cheese, blending well after each addition. Pour into a 1-quart mold or 6 small individual molds. Chill until firm. Unmold and serve with fresh, sliced, sweetened peaches or berries. Serves 6.

Lasagne; spaghetti and meat balls; and spaghetti with clam sauce are three Italian specialties I learned fr mother. Spaghetti with clam sauc easiest—it takes only 30 minutes to r and is the least expensive. When Bi "Gosh, that's a good dinner," I fee and happy inside. Cooking is fun there are compliments for dessert.

Spaghetti with Clam Sauc
Green Salad Bowl
Bread Sticks
Stewed Fresh Plums
For six — cost: $1.82

Spaghetti with Clam Sauce: Sauté garlic, crushed, in 1 tablespoon salad o 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, 1 N can tomatoes, 1½ teaspoons salt, ¼ te pepper, 1 bay leaf, ¼ teaspoon sugar, of cayenne pepper and ¼ teaspoon o Simmer about 30 minutes until thickened. Add one 10½-ounce can clams and heat through. Serve on spaghetti. Serves 4–6.

Our milk bills used to be phenor But with four children I felt this w place I couldn't economize. No what happened, the children were to have all the milk they wanted to JOURNAL editors suggested I sub

VEGETABLE CHOW MEIN

SPAGHETTI WITH CLAM SAUCE

DI PIETRO

…is and J.P. think helping mother shop for bargains is a great lark.

BELGIAN MEAT BALLS

Young
HOW AMERICA LIVES

…o… bill $7.0 a month!

By DOROTHY CANNER

…e nonfat dry milk in cooking as well as …fy …nd mix it half and half with fresh …I ever thought I could get by with it …o… night after the children were in …I reconstituted some of the dry milk, …ed …ith fresh milk and put it in empty …bo…les in the refrigerator. (It really …s …e fresh milk if you refrigerate it …nig….) I hardly slept that night, won…ng …ether I'd have to pour it all down …im The next morning I poured the …de milk out for their cereal and to …c… ot a comment! Even Bill didn't …v… e difference—still doesn't. In a …th… ime I cut our milk bill one third. …ju… wonderful. It makes the best …pe… which is our Sunday dessert treat …f… d chicken. Sure we can have …ce… n Sunday and not spend much …$7.0…!

Fried Chicken
…aked Stuffed Tomatoes
Lime Sherbet
Molasses Cookies
For six — cost: $2.16

…Sherbet: Mix together 1½ cups sugar, …ps reconstituted nonfat dry milk, ½ cup …ju… and 2 teaspoons grated lime rind; …in… 2 refrigerator trays and freeze. Now …½… water into a 1-quart mixing bowl. …n… blespoon lime juice and 1 teaspoon …la… prinkle ½ cup nonfat dry milk over the top of liquid; beat with rotary beater or electric mixer until stiff, about 10 minutes. Sprinkle 3 tablespoons sugar on the surface. Beat until sugar is blended in and mixture is stiff enough to hold soft peaks. Beat frozen mixture in electric mixer. Beat 2 egg whites until stiff. Combine frozen mixture, beaten egg whites and whipped nonfat dry milk. Tint pale green with food coloring. Pour into 3 refrigerator trays and freeze 3 to 4 hours or until firm.

When you are food budgeting, you naturally lean heavily on hamburger. Outside of serving hamburgers on buns, I had never done anything else with ground beef except make lasagne and spaghetti and meat balls. Ever since the budget bug bit me I've made up my mind that I wouldn't be limited in food ideas even if I was limited in money. I would have variety, but at a price. The JOURNAL suggested I try Belgian meat balls. They went over big—even with Lynne, who until recently has balked at anything unfamiliar.

Belgian Meat Balls
Frenched Green Beans
Tomato-Cucumber Salad
Apricot-Custard Sponge
For six — cost: $1.93

Belgian Meat Balls: Have ¾ pound beef and ¾ pound veal ground together 3 times. Soak 3 slices bread in cold water; squeeze dry and crumble into the meat. Add 1 beaten egg and season the mixture with 1½ teaspoons salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, ½ teaspoon allspice and 2 teaspoons grated onion. Blend well with a fork. Add ⅓ cup melted butter or margarine; mix in quickly. Stir in 3–4 tablespoons water to make a moist mixture. Shape into 18 balls a little larger than an egg. Dust the meat balls with flour. Chop 4 onions coarsely (about 4 cups); sauté in ¼ cup butter or margarine in a skillet. When onions begin to brown, remove them from skillet and brown the meat balls. Add another tablespoon butter or margarine if necessary. When meat balls are nicely browned, add onion, cover and let meat and onion simmer for ½ hour. Then add ½ cup water and 1 teaspoon salt, cover and continue simmering for another ½ hour. Serves 6.

Saturday night is our big night out—supper in the back yard, that is. I make potato salad, cake from a mix, and a pitcher of lemonade, from a mix also—it's so easy. Bill grills the "franks" on our outdoor grill. We don't miss the steaks of other summers. We're just as gay and a lot happier. Why shouldn't we be? We're getting our debts paid up, we've got the budget habit and we'll never go back to hit-and-miss buying. Things are looking up. Tonight we're going to have:

Grilled Frankfurters
Soufflé Potato Salad
Spicecake Lemonade
For six — cost: $2.06

Souffle Potato Salad: Peel and dice 1 pound boiled potatoes to make 2 cups. Marinate with 2½ tablespoons vinegar, ⅓ cup chopped dill pickle, 1 teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper, ½ teaspoon dried dill and 2 tablespoons sliced scallions or green onions. Dissolve 1 package lemon-flavored gelatin in 1 cup hot water. Add ½ cup cold water, 3 tablespoons vinegar, and ½ cup mayonnaise blended with 1 teaspoon prepared mustard. Beat with rotary beater until smooth. Pour into refrigerator tray and chill in freezing unit until the mixture is firm about 1″ from the edge but soft in the center. Turn into a bowl and beat with a rotary beater or electric mixer until fluffy. Fold in the potato mixture and 2 hard-cooked eggs, sliced. Pour into 1-quart ring mold and chill in refrigerator until firm. Unmold and serve on greens, garnishing with tomato wedges and ripe olives. Serves 6.

FRIED CHICKEN, STUFFED TOMATOES

SOUFFLÉ POTATO SALAD

Revolutionary new lotion

—scientifically made to smooth and whiten

"Detergent Hands"!

Today—you expose your hands to redness and roughness every time you wash dishes, do the laundry. Now there is new help for "detergent hands." It's the revolutionary new hand lotion—Angel Skin by Pond's

Rough, dried-out hands are becoming every housewife's "occupational disease"

Day in, day out—your hands are constantly being attacked by today's powerful dish washing and laundry products. You know the results.

Now—Pond's brings you an entirely new kind of lotion, created specially to meet this urgent new skin problem. Revolutionary Angel Skin counteracts the harsh, drying action of detergents . . . helps prevent irritation. You see amazing effects on roughened, red skin. Your hands look smoother, whiter—right away!

Quick penetration, not sticky! It's impossible for new Angel Skin to leave a sticky film on your hands, because—unlike old-style lotions—Angel Skin contains no gummy "filler." All of Angel Skin's richness goes in at once.

Deep-softening Angel Skin by Pond's—only 49¢, 25¢ plus tax.

(slightly higher in Canada).

Red hands—Deep-softening Angel Skin heals chapping. Redness fades out Hangnails—Ragged cuticle skin that causes painful hangnails smooths away—with Pond's new Angel Skin!

Angel Skin

by POND'S

How not to stay broke

Do you really know where yo money goes? Finding out can be both a challenge and a comfort.

BY MARGARET DAVIDSON

STARTING to budget is like starting to diet. That first psychological hurdle—that getting started on counting your pennies—is the decisive moment. Once you set up the apparatus, the program becomes a game and a challenge.

Here is how the debt-ridden Canners made a financial turnabout in six weeks:

March 15

To Dot and Bill Canner, it was zero hour. Would they win or lose over debts and domestic problems?

In their first conversation with the JOURNAL, money worries were at the top of the list. "And our jitters," Dot said, "are shaking up the whole family. We know something's wrong, but we don't know how to begin straightening it out." For one thing, they never could catch up with debts. Added to that, Dot's meticulous housekeeping gave her no time for the kind of comparative shopping that saves money. Run-down health was jangling the family nerves and running up doctor bills. Even though Bill brought home one convenience after another to ease Dot's load, she was never able to organize time or thinking enough to use them—they were pushed into corners. "And we are, too," Dot summed up dolefully. "We're living so far beyond our income, it's scary. Everything looks black," and she summoned only a faint smile at Bill's quip: "Except our finances, of course—all red."

How much did they spend each month? Both Dot and Bill looked blank.

How much did Bill earn a month? Another blank spot—no two of his pay checks were ever the same.

That, obviously, was a key to many of their problems. Neither had kept financial records of any kind. Until Dot and Bill knew what their resources were, they couldn't know how to use them to full advantage.

March 22

After our first long planning session together, Dot and Bill figured out their whole financial picture for the first time—"We'd been postponing the bad news." It was easy to understand why. Their problem was in many ways a difficult one.

Income changed every payday. Bill gets paid twice a month, earns on commission. By listing all his checks for last year, they found his yearly gross income was about $6700, but his take-home pay slightly over $5600. Half-monthly checks ranged from a low of $86 take-home to a high of $337, and an average figure turned out to be $235. "We never recorded take-home totals," Bill said. "They don't appear on the pay statements we keep (only the gross figure and deductions) and we had no record books for keeping track of any figures." Dot nodded: "When Bill's checks were high, we spent them. And when they were low, we charged, figuring it was an off month we'd make up later. That's how we got into this mess."

Outgo figures took even more work. Loose bills, tucked into a drawer, had never been totaled. Dot and Bill tried to pay one at a time, usually to any creditor who reminded them most often. When they did add them all, the total owed (to doctor, c stores, upholsterer, gas station creditors altogether) came to a $1300 waiting to be paid—but ho ing from bills and from memory Bill totaled up their average mont ing at $587—a good bit more tha age $470 a month Bill earned.

"Now we know what's wro studied their own figures with sho do we do about it?"

A budget was clearly called for. was Dot and Bill's purchase of a record book, plus pocket noteboo she would carry to record all thei penses and solve the Mystery of th ing Pay Check.

M

By now, Dot and Bill had a budget worked out. There had starts, erasures, unrealistic estim finally the figures reached bedrock. ners had a framework into whi penses would fit.

To both Dot and Bill, just lea to plan spending brought an over sense of relief.

First step in making up the bud find an average monthly take-hom They had already done so—$470 average. Whenever he earned m would bank the difference to draw his salary fell, so that they would al a steady figure to work with—a ne assuring idea to both of them.

Second step was to add up fixed e known sums that had to be met th the year—and again strike a mon age. For example, a utility bill of $2 every two months—that called f month. Adding up all fixed expenses ners found they came to $224 a mo tal that would be put aside in a spe account. Balancing out the bills, the out a smooth system of paying then the first half of the month they wo house payments, $106, and pay th bill, $6, totaling $112. During the se of the month, an equal $112 would surance, gas and electric, and a gen fund to pay off debts. Their origin month, minus $224 for fixed expe them $246 to use in areas where cho into play.

Their third step was to allot mon nonfixed items, including a small fund and some buffer funds. It was heaviest juggling came in, but Dot finally evolved a system.

From the $246 about which they h choice, $46 would be set aside in the ward bills that came due once in a though exact amounts could not dicted. They kept a special record at of the budget book. During the firs the month, they would put away $1 and $5 for savings, totaling $23. D second half of the month, $10 woul ward medical needs, $5 for dental emergency use, totaling another $2 $246 minus the banked $46 $200 a month for daily expenses. To meet penses, they found e half month, and painstakut the following system:

. . . . .	$57.50
on	18.00
luding grooming) . .	5.00
and sitters	3.00
l cleaning	2.30
. . . . .	1.80
. . . . .	6.00
. . . . .	.50
llowance	1.50
us	.40
rity, gifts.	2.00
nd reading	2.00
otal each half month	$100.00

an that called for severe belt every item cut far below their ng, and with all the family prefices. Dot thought wistfully of on the freezer she never had -"I could use big money like now we don't have it." There or home furnishings: "We're nd owe so much to department t have to stop buying." Cloth-ment funds were worrisomely rmined to reform, the Canners w regime.

April 7

provements right away," Dot llowing week, showing a set of es that held
nds. "Even is a big imwas always p by phone t gave me was expenh cash on shop any-nger fritter-nth on gro-doling out
y carefully, nus ahead at the super-nonfat dry
s milk for 65 cents) and com-fresh, she achieved a spectacumilk bill alone. The family the difference; and most im-ept food values high.
g her housekeeping habits, she ore time to shop. In the past, eets twice a week, pillowcases ay—a chore she now cut in rugs that had to be laundered en't useful were stored away.
s that called for elaborate iron-ced by plainer ones. The port-the basement was used for the ars when she asked Bill to cut or it so that she could work at height. All through her home, set up permanent work areas er job, and days that were once were growing calmer. "Just discoveries was the fact that I breakfast table the night be-helps while I do the dinner morning I get up a half hour nily and have breakfast ready rve breakfast now."
elped cut down Bill's expenses.
e once bought to keep up en-needed once Dot started to d meals. Then, too, by using ay he achieved a big cut in the epair expense on their '46 car.
g a pack of cigarettes a day, he alf a pack. All expenses were n his pocket notebook, and at nsferred their day's total to the ook. With her new project as , she gave up bingo. To lose $5 clearly mean cutting down on children's allowances, or Bill's prizes weren't nearly so inviting o family peace and security.

April 15

"The children have colds, and on on the car conked out." Bill added, "Right now our extra TV set is in a repair shop and we can't afford the thirty-five dollars to ransom it, so we're trying to sell it. But we'll have to fix the car. I found a used-parts dealer, and by doing the labor myself we can hold costs to thirty-five dollars. We'll have to accumulate it from the savings fund, the emergency money, and anything we can save from the daily funds. But once this budget really gets going, we'll have enough set aside to take care of any setbacks on the spot."

The children's colds weren't severe, and the days of running up $30 a week in medical bills were over. Dot was learning elementary hygiene. To keep the sniffles from running through the whole family, each had his own towel, washcloth and drinking cup. That helped. "And we seem to have more resistance now that I'm watching nutrition." Dot herself had gone up from 109 to 112 pounds, and her nerves were steadier.

April 23

At the end of six weeks, Bill opened their budget book with pride: "We're on a whole new track." Dot's careful figures stood out straight and sure, up and down the pages.

In the first month of budgeting, their total outgo—including $80 toward back bills—was exactly $1.45 under their total income!

Bill whistled: "Money left over!" Dot beamed: "There's a milestone."

"It's not easy," Bill summed up their struggle, "but it's worth it. We've written all the people we owe explaining that our checks are going to arrive regularly from now on." He was planning to look for part-time jobs to speed debt payments; last year, his evening and weekend sales work brought in a few hundred dollars extra, and he felt he could do as well in '54. "But this time the money won't scatter to the winds—we'll know what we're doing with it." Both he and Dot were searching for new economies. Insurance policies, formerly paid weekly or monthly, could be paid quarterly at a slightly lower rate. Heating bills had been high last fall and winter; this year they planned to turn the thermostat down at night, an economy many of the neighbors practiced. Dot was keeping track of phone calls so that no bills would arrive double and triple her estimates to jolt her new stability. The whole experience of runaway debts had been a shattering one, and neither Dot nor Bill ever wanted to repeat it.

I have found that when one is embarrassed, usually the shortest way to get through with it is to quit talking and thinking about it, and go at something else.

—ABRAHAM LINCOLN

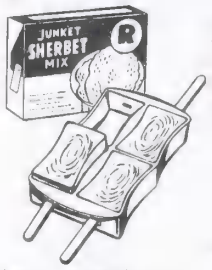
They were braced for another difficulty that might hit. If Bill's checks fell below last year's average, the whole spending plan would have to be revised downward. But Bill was sure that his income, even allowing for seasonal dips, would hold a steady course, and probably head upward.

To Dot, the balanced books and her amazement at finding she could handle money brought a fresh supply of assurance in meeting all her problems. As she learned from her study of budgeting, she won't always have to keep penny-by-penny records. Managing money, as any other art, soon becomes second nature. With her new knowledge of what she had available to spend, she would, in a short time, be able to work out of budget envelopes and memory and find herself free of daily recording.

"But I'm not sure," she told Bill, "whether I want to give up the book. It's easy, and I happen to be proud of it. More than that, I have ideas." She turned ahead to the empty pages. "If I clip in pictures of what we want after our debts are paid—a new car, for example—I'll remember what we're working toward. That ought to help me sort out the important spending from the unimportant. When you think that this book cost two dollars and is going to save us hundreds of dollars for whatever we want most"—she viewed it confidently—"it's a jack pot!" Bill didn't look worried either.

END

BUY-LINES by Nancy Sasser



AN ADVERTISING COLUMN

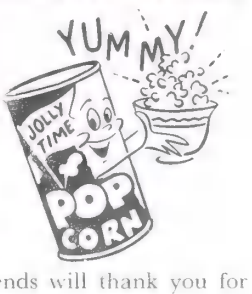
THE SUN SHINES in our house even when it rains . . . for that's when we can stay indoors and play our PARKER Games! And the neighbors always join us and you should hear the laughter ring . . . as we match our wits with "Keyword" (the best crossword board game ever devised!), "Monopoly", "Sorry", "Clue" or any of the other wonderful PARKER Games. I depend on PARKER Games to help me entertain, too . . . because they're so popular I know they'll be fun for everyone. So keep the sun shining in your house when you're at home or on vacation . . . by getting a complete assortment of fascinating PARKER Games. You'll find that they also make marvelous birthday presents for young and old alike . . . as well as perfect party prizes. And be sure to get this:

HELPFUL BOOKLET . . . "How to Have Family Fun and Popular Parties with Parker Games". It contains entertaining ideas galore plus suggestions for special party themes and refreshments . . . yet is yours for only 10c! See OFFER #1 in box.

HERE'S A MONEY-SAVING OFFER you simply mustn't miss . . . a wonderful flexible plastic mold for making frozen suckers at home! It's like money-in-the-bank . . . for when you make homemade suckers with "JUNKET" BRAND SHERBET MIX they cost only about 1½c each . . . a big saving over the price I'm sure you pay for suckers every day! So start saving money right away . . . by getting "JUNKET" SHERBET MIX today and sending for this:

SPECIAL FLEXIBLE PLASTIC MOLD . . . with four sections to make four suckers at a time and 8 reusable wooden sticks! It's a 59c value . . . but the makers are letting me OFFER it to you for only 25c plus a "JUNKET" SHERBET MIX box top. Since you can't get this mold in any store, be sure to check OFFER #2 in box . . . and order several for yourself and your friends.

"JUNKET" SHERBET MIX makes the most delicious sherbet I ever tasted, too . . . and comes in your 4 favorite true fruit flavors . . . Orange, Lemon, Raspberry and new Lime! Take your pick . . . then treat your family to a luscious, cooling sherbet tonight.



WAKE UP YOUR MAKE-UP . . . and let it "reveal" a lovelier late-Summer you! It's easy, you know, with Q-TIPS Beauty Swabs to help you . . . for I find that these dainty, double-tipped applicators are perfect for top to toe glamour and good-grooming! That's because they're longer and slimmer than baby's Q-TIPS . . . just the right size and shape to "transform" you into a skilled "beauty operator" and a natural-looking beauty, too! There's also a "bonus" for you in every smart new Q-TIPS dressing table box . . . lessons in loveliness by that master of make-up, Ern Westmore. You'll learn to be as clever with cosmetics as Hollywood stars . . . as well as how best to display your own bright beauty! So don't use the old-fashioned, faltering, fingertip method . . . if you use cosmetics, you owe it to the Man in your life (and to yourself!) to use Q-TIPS Beauty Swabs. And you can use them lavishly . . . for they cost only 89c at Cosmetic Counters everywhere.

MANY MOTHERS HAVE WRITTEN . . . asking me how they should tell their pre-teen daughters about menstruation. So I've asked the makers of MODESS to let me OFFER you their color-illustrated Booklet called "How Shall I Tell My Daughter?" . . . for it was written especially for mothers with young girls nearing their teens and contains the wisest advice on this subject I've ever seen! I'm offering it to you FREE, too, but I consider it priceless . . . because it not only explains how, when and what to tell the shy girl, the girl who seems disinterested and the one who asks questions, but its clear understanding of the mother-daughter relationship and delicate phrases will give you new confidence and inspiration. "How Shall I Tell My Daughter?" is approved by doctors and leading educators . . . so for your daughter's sake and your own peace of mind, take advantage of MODESS' generous offer and check OFFER #3 in box for your FREE copy of this helpful booklet!

I KEEP OPEN HOUSE on Summer week-ends . . . for that's the time when most of my friends drop in. And I always serve the same refreshments . . . tall, cooling drinks and big bowlfuls of JOLLY TIME Pop Corn! Of course, it's JOLLY TIME that turns these impromptu gatherings into a party . . . because everyone has such fun popping and eating this perfect pop corn! It really is perfect . . . pops crisp, fluffy and delicious every time . . . without hulls or hard centers ever. You see, JOLLY TIME is top-quality pop corn packed in air-tite tins and is always fresh . . . every kernel is guaranteed to pop or your money back! And besides making all occasions more enjoyable, you'll find a certain pride and satisfaction in serving America's most distinguished pop corn . . . so let me suggest that you keep plenty of both JOLLY TIME White and Giant Yellow on hand. Your friends will thank you for your thoughtfulness . . . and admire your good taste.

Write Nancy Sasser, Dept. P-4, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y. for:

☐ OFFER #1 . . . PARKER'S BOOKLET "How to Have Family Fun and Popular Parties with Parker Games." . . . please enclose 10c.

☐ OFFER #2 . . . "JUNKET" Frozen Sucker Mold . . . please enclose 25c and "JUNKET" SHERBET MIX box top.

☐ OFFER #3 . . . FREE BOOKLET "How Shall I Tell My Daughter?".

NOW...the loveliest of facial-quality bathroom tissues

Twin-Ply for Angel-Soft Absorbency— Soft-Ply brings you the utmost in softness, absorbency and strength. Yet it's so kind and gentle you'll use it as cleansing tissues for make-up, colds and in the nursery. And now you may have Soft-Ply in heavenly soft Decorator Colors chosen by leading designers to blend or harmonize with your bathroom color scheme. Look for your favorite color in the handy 4-roll pack, pure white in single rolls or 4-roll pack.

Softex Tissue. Here's Diamond's wonderful "Soft-Ripple" texture and "Tight-Woven" strength in a long-lasting roll of 1000 single sheets.

Diamond D Tissue. The famous "Soft-Ripple" process makes this popular-priced 650-sheet tissue highest in quality. Single rolls or 4-roll pack.

PRODUCTS OF THE

DIAMOND MATCH COMPANY

A GREAT NAME IN MATCHES, LUMBER, AND PAPER PRODUCTS—EXPERIENCE FROM 1835 . . . METHODS OF TODAY . . . FORESTRY FOR TOMORROW!

Children are happiest when firmness goes hand in hand wi

When children misbehav

Contrary to what may see tr there are ways to make children want to be helpful and obedient.

By LESLIE B. HOHMAN, M.D.

WHEN I went to discuss Dorothy Canner's special problems with her youngsters, the children provided me, as if by prearrangement, with demonstrations of the conduct that had their mother "on the ropes."

I had found Dorothy in the basement, hanging up clothes. Here, in the huge, light, warm room, so ideal for children to work off steam in, were the freezer into which Dorothy had never put any food, the mangle she had never used, and the play space the youngsters refused to play in.

"If I ever do succeed in coaxing them down into the basement," Dorothy mourned, "Phyllis throws Lynne's and Billy's things in a heap and refuses to pick them up. That just means more quarreling and uproar."

When we settled ourselves in the living room, Dorothy slumped in her chair as though she had no spine at all. She looked exhausted, without the strength even to sit up straight.

"The children have me completely bamboozled," she began. "J. P., the baby, is the only one that's easy to handle. The others are completely unmanageable. They quarrel constantly. They fuss about their food. Bedtime is a horror. Lynne [the oldest girl, 8] has a guilt complex that worries me. Billy [going on 6] will lie and try to clown or kid his way out of it. Phyllis [3] is into everything. She's a poor eater and sleeper. None of them obey. Sometimes I think ——"

It was at this point that the clinical demonstrations began. Billy came in from school with his first reading book, a primer that was the property of the school.

"Let me have it," demanded Lynne. "I want to see it."

"It's a schoolbook, Lynne," Dorothy protested. "Billy must be careful of it. Y alone."

As if her mother had Lynne snatched the book and took it out on the fron othy spread her hands in helplessness, then resumed of her woes and difficulties bors looked down on her had too many children. ground for this belief was mark she had overheard ab woman, who was about fifth child and had no hel been dropped by the neig their card parties. (Thoug very well that this was beca playing bingo three nights wasn't available.) Accordin was hopelessly inefficient by felt that she was in a trap, too much for her. "At tin confused I can't talk stra Dorothy is an excellent h Her house is spick-and-span in order, everything in its scrupulously clean. There i fact that Dorothy was a p tary before she married. S job for two years and got re which doesn't happen to a person.)

Just then Lynne came in primer, torn half to pieces. the ruined book to her mo tearfully, "Phyllis did it. I fault, was it? But I'm so s sorry!"

Here was Lynne's "guilt full operation. Dorothy at to yearn over the little girl dent that she was willing t erything because Lynne felt ful. It was equally evident Lynne used her "gui as a device t mother.

mind if I step in and handle the e way I think it should be hanked Dorothy. She gave her con-said to Lynne firmly, "Ruining was your fault. You left it where d reach it. We'll try to mend it.
your mother needs your help in able."
girl refused point-blank. Again y's consent, I put Lynne in her osed the door. She screamed and nately for half an hour, then called was ready to help.
had I let her out of her room than eyed a command of her mother's ne three-year-old in the bedroom.
o much for Lynne. She could not why her mother permitted a strange sh first her and then her little sis-ill Canner came home from work, nne crying in the hall, and Phyllis screaming and banging against hich I was holding shut by main e ran to Bill shrieking, "Throw t, daddy! He's got to go, he's got e doesn't go, I go!" One could ne Bill for being taken aback.
d to Bill and Dorothy—while still doorknob—some principles of ology and my theory for the correcrbing traits and bad behavior. This stated simply:
holds on to any pattern of bad be-the pattern is not rewarded. A ontinue either good or bad berns if he can achieve the reward he versely, any pattern of behavior f it is not rewarded.

ological rewards that most norn want are affection and attention.
like to play-act a big dramatic remain in the center of the stage.
of bad behavior cannot be nagging, argument and a mass of monly known as "reasoning with Spanking is almost equally ineffec-arent almost always whips when and angry. He is likely to feel osing his temper and more often els he has to make up to the child thy and affection, for the pain he
d. The direct opposite from the rehas been achieved. Bad behavior warded.
in a room behind a closed door hild simultaneously of attention, on and of any display of affection.
conversation with the parent must mitted, and if necessary the door oked.
ed to Bill and Dorothy that after I d Phyllis from her room, I would opportunity that presented itself to "I promise you," I ended my little by the time I leave here tonight, and I will be friends."
ely, Phyllis' screams soon sub-he was allowed to come out. Lynne, y her parents' calm acceptance of ence, set the table. Then the two of o put the book back together with t tape. There was no sign of antago-worked with a will, and the book mended by the time supper was as able to point out to the Canners en do not carry resentment if the t is just and consistent. The incinstrated, also, that this little girl y helpfulness and work if she was privilege of refusal. Phyllis was be-. When Dorothy dropped a dish-three-year-old ran to pick it up and ck to her mother. This gave me a praise Phyllis for her co-operation htfulness. She glowed as children do l behavior is recognized.
was Billy's turn. He came marching ving room loaded down with junk n the abandoned shipyard a block ere he was not supposed to go. He he greasy, rusty, dirty conglomeraon the living-room rug. Picking out old, rusty saw blades, he took them
er.
ght these for you, daddy," he said nning smile. "I thought you could It's a present."

Bill was obviously as disarmed by this approach as Dorothy had been by Lynne's guilt complex. I could see him opening his mouth to acknowledge the gift, and intervened hastily, inasmuch as both Canners had given me carte blanche to deal with the children's behavior.

"Pick up the metal, Billy, and take it outdoors," was all I said to the little boy. But I told Dorothy privately to have Billy return it next day to the place he had got it from, and to go with him. In this way she would see that the loot was returned to its proper place, and also get a check on where Billy had been in the shipyard. This was better than a cross-examination, which might encourage Billy's tendency to lie out of misconduct.

Supper started off as a rough-and-tumble affair, with each child demanding more and more steak and refusing to eat anything else. There was much grabbing, and screams that someone else was being served first and getting the biggest share. I intervened again and Bill Canner quickly took his cue.

"No second portions of steak until the string beans and bread and potatoes are eaten," he said, a new authority in his voice. "No one gets chocolate-ice-cream cake until he cleans his plate." The mob scene stopped abruptly and the youngsters got busy cleaning their plates.

It was heartening to see Bill and Dorothy brighten up and take the situation over. It was almost as if they were suddenly aware that they were the controllers of the children and not their slaves. This gave me a chance to emphasize what I believe to be eminently true: that to be happy, children must be saved from the constant emotional storms that come when they are out of control. Giving in to every momentary whim just leads to unhappiness. Because eventually the parents have to step in, since everybody cannot be served first, and no child can be allowed to eat nothing but steak. Far better not to let a situation get out of hand in the first place.

After dinner, the children and I washed the dishes together in a fine spirit of camaraderie. When the time came for me to leave, Lynne ran up with outstretched arms to kiss me.

Throughout the afternoon and evening I had of course been diagnosing the situation and the leading characters in it—Bill and Dorothy Canner. Particularly Dorothy, for she had been right in saying that the trouble with her scrambled household lay with herself. Her defects naturally are our main concern, since the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL had been called in for the express purpose of correcting them, so we shall look at these first.

The nub of Dorothy's difficulty, it seemed to me, was that she had never budgeted her personal desires, which were whimsical and ran to extravagant and elaborate things beyond their income. When she found herself badly involved, her consequent "confusion" was a way of relieving herself of responsibility. The myth she had developed of being a poor, inefficient manager excused her both for her extravagant buying and for her failure to use the real talents she has for managing.

She was oversensitive, and suffered much unnecessary mental anguish on this account. But she had built up an elaborate mechanism of blaming others and excusing herself while doing exactly as she pleased. For instance, she excused herself for her extravagance about groceries by insisting that Bill and the children would not eat simple, inexpensive foods. Naturally Bill likes steaks and roasts, as who does not? But he had expressed his willingness to eat anything Dorothy prepares, and had told me that beans and a good stew are among his favorite dishes. Children will prefer foods of their own whimsical choosing; but as every mother knows who has ever tried it, if they are allowed to get hungry they will eat any wholesome food set before them.

DOROTHY excused herself for last-minute ordering and catch-as-catch-can meals by saying that that was the way her mother had conducted her household—that it "ran in the family." Yet Dorothy well knew that her mother had done things this way because the father had lost his job, Mrs. Giacone had been forced to work outside her home and was actually supporting the family. Dorothy had no such reason for her failure to plan wisely. This seemed to me just another way in which Dorothy justified her own extravagant tastes.

She tended to be moody. But instead of recognizing her tendency and trying to understand it for what it was, she used it as an excuse for carrying out undesirable impulses, such as playing bingo three times a week.

On the credit side, the Canners had a number of real and fine assets. These included honesty; loving devotion to each other and to their children; good intelligence and the ability to see mistakes quickly when they were pointed out; ability to work hard; a determination to change mistaken courses and follow the wise advice given; excellent dispositions. In addition, Dorothy is extremely likable and it seemed to me was very earnest in her desire to improve her situation.

The children were bright, normal, affectionate and easy to manage. Yes, I mean that last, in spite of the behavior they had exhibited to me and to the JOURNAL editors. Lynne, to be sure, was fresh and impudent. But that could be handled easily, as shown by her helping Dorothy set the table and mending the book, after a brief period of isolation. She was old enough to be a real help to her mother and could easily be made to do household chores, provided Dorothy dramatized her contributions a bit and made Lynne feel important

A great new beauty is born

Checks diaper rash and odor!

It's America's favorite baby lotion! Squeeze bottle, 59¢. Giant economy size, 98¢.

Mennen satinized baby powder is smoother...protects baby better!

It's a brand, spanking new package; pure white... with the precious Baby-in-the-Rose, in life-like color.

Inside, there's great anti-diaper rash protection! Mennen Baby Powder is smoother, silkier: it's satinized! Has a special quality that repels urine and helps protect skin from diaper matter. Won't "cake." Keeps baby fragrant. 25¢, 49¢. No tax.

Slightly higher in Canada.

Mennen... Baby Specialist since 1880

when she did her work. The bumptious, unpredictable Phyllis had been tractable and as quiet as a three-year-old can be expected to be after a half hour of isolation in her room. Billy, with his sunny, affectionate disposition, could easily be persuaded to hang up his clothes and help his mother. He would drop his devices for getting excused from wrongdoing as soon as he found they didn't get results.

There was one further thing to be said about Dorothy. She was obviously undernourished—her weight of 109 pounds thinly distributed was proof enough of that—and run down physically. No mother can cope effectively with four lively youngsters when she is operating at only about half capacity. These things work in a vicious circle. To a run-down, worn-out mother, simple problems with her children seem insurmountable and make her nervous and tense. A nervous, tense mother arouses rebellious responses in her youngsters and that makes her still more nervous and tense.

A diet which would help Dorothy gain the weight she needed would add to her feeling of well-being and lessen her fatigue. When this happened many problems with the children would vanish automatically. Dorothy would be calmer and better able to handle any that remained. I believed that her sense of inadequacy so far as her neighborhood was concerned would be diminished when she felt that she had got herself and her home in presentable condition. Along with psychological help, it was plain that Dorothy needed a physical examination, and whatever medical assistance the examination indicated. I also felt that in her depressed state, a weekly conference with a sympathetic doctor would help her morale, and keep her to the regimen which, in my opinion, would soon bring order out of the chaos the Canners had been living in.

(Let me say parenthetically that the doctor to whom the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL sent Dorothy found little wrong with her except malnutrition brought about by her failure to eat proper meals. The treatment prescribed was a good diet and more rest. For breakfast she was to have coffee, egg, toast, fruit; for lunch, a salad, some kind of protein, fruit, tea. For dinner, meat, green vegetable, potato or dessert. Between meals she was to have milk, fruit or juice or gelatin. She was told to sit down and rest for at least fifteen minutes when she took her between-meal snack, instead of eating it on the run. She was advised to get up earlier in the morning and go to bed earlier at night. No medication was prescribed except vitamins, which were for the purpose of building up Dorothy's depleted body more quickly.)

Now I gave Bill and Dorothy my prescription for the psychological side of their problem. First, to stop the continual raiding of the refrigerator, if necessary by putting a lock on the door. Thus the youngsters would be ready to eat, at the regular mealtimes, the wholesome and inexpensive foods that I knew the JOURNAL food editors were advising. I suggested small initial servings for the children, and insistence that they eat whatever was placed before them.

Second, the basement playroom could be made more appealing and serve its function of keeping the children from always being underfoot if each child were given a section for his or her own, where belongings would be inviolate. Any intrusion upon another's space or possessions was to be punished.

Third, instead of putting all four to bed at the same time, to stagger the bedtimes at half-hour intervals, according to age. This would give the older ones a sense of added importance and do away with the bedtime uproar.

Fourth, to have the children take over some household tasks, which I felt they would do willingly once they understood what was expected of them.

Fifth, instead of talking, scolding or spanking when the children were naughty or disobedient, to shut them in their rooms until they expressed willingness to co-operate.

"I'LL put hooks on those bedroom doors this very night," promised Bill.

Before I left, I took Bill aside for a heart-to-heart talk. I told him that his yielding to Dorothy's every whimsical desire was not good for the family. The fact that he adores Dorothy and was willing to do extra work to earn more money was praiseworthy. But his first job was to assume control as the head of the family, even if this meant temporary unhappiness and tears. He mustn't let Dorothy turn to unhealthy methods of escaping her moodiness. Gambling, whether called bingo or something else, is an unhealthy method of escape. Dorothy's place was with her husba dren. When the Canners went ou ning, it should be together, with home.

Bill was forthright and stra "I've enough of the Dutchman i my foot down and take over, do say that's what I ought to do."

During the next few weeks, enc ports came from Dorothy's doct the JOURNAL editors. But I had t interest in this scrambled housewi to see for myself how the progran gested for the children was worki months after my first visit I was in home again.

DOROTHY sits up straighter no color in her cheeks and a sparkle that weren't there before. "I've pounds," she told me. "The minu eating breakfast, I began to fee was calmer. Things didn't look ne Getting up e have a sho I call the fan down to br gether and to get the to school i der. It seeme when I felt self the kids a and that ma better yet! how nervou I had been before."

Bill smiled fectionately. frantic phon ing my work he said. "She me two or a day and sh terical. 'Co Bill, come would beg when I call things are ways get, Bill!'"

The biggest though, was ner youngste friendly, hap going, they have aband urge to seize of the stage, tention by and unman Lynne and B accepted thei suggestion show me hov ment playroom had been porti with separate divisions for Lynne, Phyllis. Each section had someth on and work on, and places for th of toys and other possessions. Like the Canner house, it was neat as Billy and Phyllis had cleaned it tha while their mother and Lynne were

"Since we started this plan, th bring their friends down here," said "The different groups play side by out getting in each other's hair. idea how it cut down on the quarre we made Phyllis respect the possessi other children."

Lynne and Billy accepted cheer mother's suggestion that they stay d and play while we went back ups mother and daddy can talk to Do man." Phyllis was a little fretful woke from her nap, but this can ha any preschooler. The important t that an afternoon nap had becom Phyllis' scheme of life. She was ove fulness quickly and at a word from h went off to join her brother and sis downstairs playroom. As Bill and and I talked upstairs, we could hear t ing happily to one another below us.

"Yes, I put hooks on the bedroo that very night after you left," Bill progress report. "We've done every

FOR AS MUCH AS

By OLIVER ST. JOHN GOGARTY

"For as much as the pearl is a product which from an inward trouble and from a fault produces purity and perfection, it is preferred, for in nothing does God so much delight as in tenderness and in luster born of trouble and repentance." From the Persian.

Blame not the inward restlessness,
The doubt or even the despair,
Those portions of divine distress
That every spirit elect must bear;
That is the way Perfection grows:
An irritation in the shell,
And, lo, the luminous pearl glows.
This law is inescapable:
Before the luster comes the goad.
Take comfort, for the truth is plain,
For every human being the road
That rounds Perfection winds through pain.

Gibbs Kids Back to School in Style!

Boys' Interlock "Soft as Doeskin" 2-piece ski pajama. Replaceable covered-elastic waist. Contrasting neck, cuffs, waist, ankle cuffs. Maize with dark green; light blue with navy; dark green with light green; light green with dark green; red with navy. 4 to 8, $2.75. 8 to 16, $3.75. 18 to 20, $4.25.

Infants' pullover shirt, Interlock "Soft as Doeskin," patented shoulder, 3-eyelet DIDYTAPES. Birth to 3 yrs., 85c. Same in combed cotton, 75c.

Girls' 2-piece ski pajama, Interlock "Soft as Doeskin." Replaceable covered-elastic waist. Dark blue striped top with solid light blue pant; dark green stripe with mint; orange stripe with peach. 3 to 6x, $2.95. 8 to 16, $3.95.

Interlock "Soft as Doeskin" pullover shirt, patented shoulder. 2 to 8 yrs., 89c. Same in combed cotton, 75c. 2-way stretch panty, Interlock "Soft as Doeskin," replaceable covered-elastic waist. 2 to 8 yrs., 69c. Same in combed cotton, 59c.

Boys' T-shirt, Interlock "Soft as Doeskin" reinforced with nylon. 2 to 8 yrs., $1.00. Same in combed cotton, 79c. Elastic-waist Interlock "Soft as Doeskin" brief. 2 to 8 yrs., 79c. Same in combed cotton, 69c.

Infants' Interlock "Soft as Doeskin" 2-piece sleeper. Gripper fastened. Dark blue stripe with solid light blue; dark green with mint; orange with peach. 0 to 4 yrs., $2.25.

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Shrink Resistant for Comfortable Fit

Ask for Gibbs in Infants', Children's, Teen and College-Age Sizes

Gibbs Underwear Co., Empire State Bldg., New York 1, N. Y. • Philadelphia 34, Pa.

do. The next day after you were hy went with Billy to the shipyard, ested, and where do you think he stuff? On the docks where he rbidden absolutely to go because ll into the Sound! When they got thy sent him to his room. That than anything because he wanted ors with the kids. He hasn't been ard since.
ks are still there. But we haven't the kids to their rooms for a long t took just about a week to get the to them. It seemed as though they hen Dorothy and I really meant ng we notice is that they don't ision the way they did. They used n first thing in the morning when and the first thing in the afternoon got home from school. Now they rs or in the basement playroom. I ite figure out how to put a lock on tor door, but we sent them to their they raided it. They stopped that chimed in. "When they stopped

y were hungry for their meals.
tty good at eating what is set be-
Not perfect, but one hundred per We find it helps to give our 'budget names. For instance, when we we call it goulash, and they love it.
dson gave me a recipe for meat
we have them, we call them Bel-balls and they make a great hit. The ve gained weight too. I'm keeping at, just the way I'm setting down I spend. Here it is." Dorothy pro-mall notebook and read from it Phyllis has gained two pounds, ounds and Lynne three! They have ir cheeks, besides.
out their new bedtime schedule—
ly has done away with the rumpus en we put them all to bed at the J. P.'s bedtime is seven o'clock, seven-thirty, Billy's is eight and ght-thirty. Only we don't do it by The kids used to claim we set the ard on them when we did that. In-one goes to bed at the end of a certain TV program. Occasionally we make an exception when there's something on TV they'll all enjoy, but we don't do that more than about once a week."

I was pleased to see that Bill and Dorothy had been using ingenuity and imaginativeness, as well as firmness, to make obedience easier and more attractive. A little fillip of incentive had helped, also, to put over the program of household tasks that each child now performs. Phyllis empties ash trays, and picks up papers and puts them in the garbage. Billy dusts the furniture. Lynne makes her own bed and sometimes Billy's, sets the table and often wipes dishes for her mother.

"At first the kids took their jobs as a big joke," said Bill. "Billy woke me up the first morning shaking a dustcloth over my head, on the pretense that he was dusting my bed. But they have learned to take their jobs seriously and to do them without any arguments. Each one gets ten cents a week for home tasks—that's in addition to the regular allowance. If they do their work exceptionally well, they get a bonus of ten cents, which makes twenty cents extra a week. Each one has a separate dime bank for the job money. When a bank has five dollars in it, it opens and the five dollars can be spent any way they want to. The dime bonus is a big spur. The kids check up on each other to make sure it's earned!"

"And do you go out together in the evening now and then?"

Bill and Dorothy grinned at each other a little ruefully. "I suppose what you mean is, have we cut out bingo and 3D movies? The answer to that is 'Yes,'" Bill answered my question. "Our budget allows us just three dollars twice a month for entertainment, which doesn't leave much after we pay a sitter. But sometimes in the afternoon we park the two younger kids with Dorothy's mother and take the two older ones with us to a movie."

I was able to congratulate Bill and Dorothy wholeheartedly on what they had accomplished in two months' time. "How do you feel about it all?" I asked. "You people have revolutionized yourselves pretty thoroughly since I was here before. Has it been worth while?"

Bill answered first. "Well, it's like this," he said slowly. "The way it used to be, we had four kids raising ruction at one time. The only thing we could think of to do was spank. But that hurt us more than it did the kids and we always felt repentant afterward, just like you said. Or else we threatened and didn't do anything. Now we save our breath and act. It's been like being in a dark room, and then somebody turns on a light. The children were in the dark just the same as we were. I think they're a lot happier and I know Dorothy and I are."

Bill chuckled. "I guess the pay-off is that all our friends are using the methods you gave us! The girls in Dorothy's social club were amazed at the change in our youngsters and wanted to know how we did it. Then their friends wanted to know about it. It's spreading and spreading. It seems as though anyone with more than two children has about the same problems."

"And how about you, Dorothy?"

Dorothy said quietly, but with deep conviction, "I feel I've got my dignity back."

"You mean you feel now that you have the respect of the people in the neighborhood?" I asked.

"No, I won't say my relations with the neighbors are any better. In fact, I lost my bingo buddy when I stopped going to the bingo games. She used to call me every bingo day, but I've hardly seen her in the last two months."

"If that's the kind of friends people are, you're better to know it," Bill interpolated quickly with the warm support he always has for Dorothy.

"I think," said Dorothy, "it's more that I realize my home and my immediate family are more important than anything that goes on outside. When you feel that way, what happens outside can't hurt you." This solution for Dorothy's oversensitiveness is perhaps the best anyone could have advised for her.

Definitely, the good qualities Dorothy and Bill started with are winning out. Many a scrambled family could be saved the near disaster of this couple if they would take stock earlier and seek advice and help before they get so deeply mired in debt unhappiness. Fortunately, Dorothy asked for help before it was too late. Now she and Bill are climbing the road to security and peaceful happiness.

ONCE IN LOVE WITH AMY!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 29

ction. "He's a prince among cocker ls ut I wouldn't trust him near our H bites."
hen you try to take things away by will try to take things away from f s what babies are supposed to do."
h ed the leash to her husband. "I w t to rush you, but I'm expecting a vi or."
l nt, Jane." George fastened the leash bl ly lifted Mr. Duffy from the floor.
d tter say good-by to him now."
e e the dog a lingering hug. "Good-by, Du . I love you very much. And I wish ve 't such a sabertooth."
bo at him. It's almost as if he knows s ng to happen to him."
pt g's going to happen to him," Jane a few weeks he'll be telling every-h ever had it so good. You will ship ff st chance you get?"
el said George, starting for the ele-ou'll be at the hospital at least five h oes it look like a little pig?" George sat beside the hospital bed staring y eaver, aged two days.

s not!" Jane said. "I mean, she 't She beamed at the small pink face
g ut of the blanket. "Amy's a beau-a ." h h." George looked again. "Why is a nny red color?"
c se babies come that way. Don't ut it."
h worried?" George continued to ill her ears always stick out like

"George!" Jane cried. "Don't you like Amy at all?"

"Sure I do," George said stoutly. He gave the baby a tentative pat. "Good girl."

"Woof, woof," Jane said. "If she had long floppy ears and a black nose you'd think she was wonderful."

"Don't be mad," George said. "This is my first baby. Give me a little time to get used to it. Her."

"Of course, darling." Jane offered the baby to her husband. "You can start getting acquainted right now. Take Amy across the hall to the nursery for her nap."

"Me?" George looked nervous. "Suppose I drop her?"

"Why should you drop her?" Jane handed him the baby.

George took her in his arms for the first time, waiting to experience that surge of love and pride and wonder he had heard about. Instead, he felt merely uncomfortable as he carried her across the corridor. When he returned to the room, an orderly was setting a large basket of flowers beside Jane's bed.

"Look!" Jane held out a card. "From Mr. Duffy."

"Mr. Duffy has impeccable taste."

"Sweet Mr. Duffy." Jane smiled. "I hope he's getting on with the Walkers."

George avoided his wife's eyes. "I haven't sent him yet. Been too busy racing between here and the office."

"But that's awful," Jane protested. "Leaving the poor thing all alone in the apartment."

"He isn't all alone," George said sheepishly. "Matter of fact, I brought him along. He's downstairs with the doorman." He leaned out the window. "You can see him from here."

"I don't want to!" Jane snapped. She waited until the orderly left the room. "George, you've got to stop mooning over that animal. He's a lovely dog, but he's a dog. And Amy is a baby. Our baby. Start mooning over her."

"I take an oath," George said. "I'll ship him to the Walkers tomorrow."

"First thing in the morning!"

"First thing in the afternoon," George corrected. "Mr. Duffy has a sitting in the morning."

Jane stared. "A sitting?"

"For his portrait photograph," George explained. "I want one for over the fireplace."

"Oh, George!" Jane began to cry.

Mr. Duffy's portrait was canceled before George left the hospital that afternoon. And when Jane came home with the baby three days later, only an occasional toothmark in the furniture remained of his presence. But if George Weaver seemed resigned to his dogless state, he gave no indications of warming to Mr. Duffy's successor. For the first few weeks, a curtain of nurses and relatives kept him from having much to do with Amy, and George was content to have it that way. By the time the weeks had become months, he was settled into a pattern. He changed no diapers, gave no feedings, administered no baths. And when Jane sent him to walk Amy in the park, his attention kept straying from his gurgling charge. One afternoon some seven months after Amy was born, Jane found her husband in the park, far down the path from the carriage, bending over to scratch the stomach of a large, amiable cocker. She came up behind him.

"Albert Payson Terhune, I presume?" she said coldly.

RED CROSS
Cotton Balls

For bathing baby's eyelids cleaning the diaper area

applying baby oil or lotion

For { baby care / beauty care / first aid use

sterile
Johnson & Johnson

No connection whatever with American National Red Cross

George straightened up guiltily. "I just left Amy. She was sleeping like a baby."

"Don't talk to me, you dog scratcher!" Jane thundered. "Amy could be stolen by gypsies and you'd never notice!" George trailed behind as she walked back to the carriage with furious steps. "Look at her!" She pointed an indignant finger. "The sweetest, cutest, happiest, loveliest baby in the whole world and you can't stand the sight of her!"

"I can too," George protested.

"Bully for you!" The exchange awoke Amy and she peered over her shoulder with round blue eyes. "Look at those eyes," Jane commanded. "Did you ever see a baby with eyes like that?"

"I guess not."

"Then why don't you ever say so?" Jane demanded. "You used to go on for hours about Mr. Duffy's eyes."

"His were different," George said. "They were kind of melancholy."

"Amy will have melancholy eyes," Jane assured him. "She's bound to, with such a monster for a father."

"I can't help the way I am," George said, looking injured. "I just don't get much of a message from her so far. And Spock says it's a mistake to force the male parent ——"

"Ho-ho," Jane cut in. "I'll bet that's the only sentence in the book you remember."

"I try to play with her, sometimes," George went on. "But she isn't much fun. All she does is sit there. Or roll over."

"What do you want?" Jane inquired bitterly. "Card tricks?" Amy began to cry and she picked her up. "Isn't it enough just to look at her? To hold her in your arms? To smell how wonderful she smells?"

"She never smells wonderful when I pick her up," George said. He noticed the spots of color in Jane's cheeks. "Let's not quarrel in front of the baby," he said quickly. "According to Spock ——"

"Spock, my eye!" Jane shouted, and looked around wildly. "Taxi!"

In the distance a cab halted and Jane ran toward it, still clutching Amy in her arms.

George trotted in pursuit, pushing the carriage. "Don't you want me to walk her any more?"

"No, thank you!" Jane slammed into the cab and glared out at him. "Why don't you stick around for a while? Maybe you'll find some mutt who wants a buggy ride!"

"Where to, lady?" the cab driver said.

"Never mind where to!" Jane barked. "Just drive!"

Amy was placidly chewing a biscuit in the play pen when George returned to the apartment an hour later. Jane was in th applying lipstick with quick, a ments.

"Going somewhere?" George

"Out," Jane snapped. "I'm walk around the city for a few hou my teeth. Any objections?"

"No." George looked at his isn't it nearly time for Amy's bat

"It is, indeed," Jane said. "An boy who's giving it to her."

"Huh?"

"And feeding her supper. And her afterward. And when she you'll change her and put on her give her a big kiss before she goe fact," Jane concluded, "you'll be to her."

"But ——" said George.

"Good luck, daddy." Jane apartment door. "If you have an call up Sidney Rosenbloom. H
Brooklyn book, on Flatbush Ave

George followed her to the ele you at least tell me who Sidney R is?"

"The cabby who drove me h said, as the elevator door closed his idea."

Jane walked slowly back to the
She found Amy in the kitchen, chair, her face covered with bi George was on all fours behind h

"I see you!" he told Amy, popp into view.

"Gung!" said Amy, and began

"I don't believe it," said Jane.

George stood up proudly. "She supper. She had chicken soup and applesauce and eight ounces of m

Jane inspected her daughter's c
"So I see."

"And you should've seen her She kept trying to stand up."

Jane smiled. "I know."

"When I put her in the play pe she rolled over eight times. Fro front."

"That's very hard to do," Jane

"And you know what she did jus
I tried to take the cereal dish her?" Radiantly, George held ou
"She bit me!"

Jane inspected the tiny tooth m finger. "Incredible."

"She bit me!" George repeated full of love and pride and wonde way Mr. Duffy used to do."

"Gung!" said Amy, and bega again.

DIARY OF DOMESTICITY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 20

but when I see dogs shut in cars with the windows up in summer, I tremble with rage. After all, nobody has to have a dog, there is no law. If one chooses to have one, some decent kindness is obligatory. That's all there is to it.

At Stillmeadow, the water dishes are filled every little while all day; and if it is a scorcher, we sponge the faces of the old ladies with a cool sponge. We don't encourage them to play ball either. Holly is pretty lively, but the Irish seem to take both heat and cold better than many breeds. Her appetite never flags either. She takes her feeding dish and bangs it on the floor when she wants an extra meal!

I am glad for the tranquil summer days. "Life's still the wondrous thing it seemed in bygone peace," as De la Mare says. After all, if we are going to experiment ourselves right out of existence with the hydrogen bomb, which I think very likely, it is a good thing to walk a little in the dusk right now and listen to the quietness. I believe we may as well live every day to the hilt.

I like Katherine Mansfield's saying, "Life should be like a steady, visible light." Here in our green valley men have worked the farms and made the earth yield good crops, have established homes, raised their families and worshiped God since this country was founded. How wonderful, I think, if we could be about helping all people live such peaceful lives instead of spending our effort the fish in the sea and blowing little eternity!

One could hope for our childr from anxiety. Jill was taking pict friend Marcia, who was playin
"wow-wow," as she calls Teddy.
flash bulb went off, her dark solem on a look of doubt and awe—wh strangeness? I hoped she would see pictures of the H-bomb!

Faith comes, nevertheless, in spit era, faith comes dropping slow fro of evening, comes with the dear fam of George's cows, peaceful on t way, with friendly voices of neigh soft breathings of drowsy cockers
One whole perfect precious hour enough. There is wonder in the w pines so quiet against the violet faint delicate note of a bird from s branch. And in the lamplight sh houses along the winding country in spite of all, "some shape of bea away the pall from our dark spiri
it did in Johnny Keats' day.

The stars are steadfast, serene, b us to lift our eyes to.

So we light the candles in the and thankful to God we are for th day.

this is how you feel...

All over... all day
— wrapped in the flower
freshness of Cashmere Bouquet

cashmere bouquet
TALCUM POWDER

59¢
29¢ 43¢
Plus Tax

Conover Girls Pick Cashmere Bouquet

"Borrow this good-grooming cue from our Conover Career School students! A quick dusting with Cashmere Bouquet Talc smooths hot, chafed skin . . . helps girdles, stockings and shoes ease on smoothly."

Says Candy Jones
(Mrs. Harry Conover)
Director Conover School

GERTRUDE LAWRENCE AS MRS. A

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 30

ke a schoolmaster. I had pre-ize and sit in judgment. When me back—as anyone of spirit one—instead of turning the nture into a joke which both of enjoyed, I had pulled my bad me like a cloak and sulked.
eater part of Friday night with s, and I found myself very poor e was only one way out of it—had been at fault and to ask iveness. Though I had no basis at she could, or would, forgive that I would have no peace ntil I had taken that step.
ery early and headed for Harry r shop. I selected the long-which I knew Gertrude loved. to go with them: "Will you be vening's performance? I should e and explain.
f the day there was a telegram
It read:

GERTRUDE LAWRENCE

onger side-step the realization ve.
had been pleasantly content to ide a compatible, entertaining o valued her own freedom and e to enjoy mine. What had being, lighthearted friendship had d deepened into something led recognition. The former finite status quo was no longer r we must drift apart, or we
rd. And together.
what I had expected or planned.
o marry again, nor to be in love Certainly not with someone in ll less with a star of Gertrude's gnitude.
Gertrude had accomplished in by her own efforts, by her own rtitude and intuitive genius. I chievement so profoundly that ntertained the thought of asking her profession to become my ble to combine marriage with a hers?

Also, not to be ignored was the matter of money. Gertrude's yearly earnings amounted to a sum which any banker would treat with respect. I was doing well, but I was not in her bracket. I was appalled at the prospect of being married to a wealthy woman, especially one whose wealth was of her own making.

If anything could have put me out of love with Gertrude Lawrence, it would have been her salary and her attitude toward it.

Gertrude's extravagance had become a legend. It was the sort of thing to strike terror to a man, like myself, who had been reared in the Joy and Aldrich tradition that only criminals and madmen ever live up to their incomes. Father had instilled in me at an early age the idea that to let February's bills remain unpaid beyond the third of March was to give oneself a good head start toward ruin. And for some years I had been a banker, an occupation which leaves indelible marks.

Due to her natural exuberance and to the penury she had known as a child, Gertrude's zest for luxury was insatiable. When she found herself with large sums, she spent them with a lavish gesture. Until the Holtzmanns took over the control of her finances, Gertrude had never been able to retrench, even in lean periods. An entry in one of her diaries made when she was playing in London during the thirties records:

"Haven't a bob or an ounce of strength after six days in bed with a temperature. Blood count low and weight 105 pounds. Have a nurse, but God knows who will pay her. Picture doesn't start for a week. But shall find some cash somewhere and go off to St. Moritz for a week's sun and rest. Just Pam and me. Funny how everyone thinks I'm so happy and so well, and well off . . ."

It was part of her code to keep her chin up. In the strikingly characteristic words of her song in The King and I, she would "whistle a happy tune." That runaway holiday in the Alps was as gay as she could make it. No one would have guessed that she was literally down to the pound below her last. Her diary entry ends rather grimly: "Went to ski jumps in afternoon with Doris Duke (millionairess!). Twenty francs Swiss for her and her boy friend's tickets. I meant it to be Dutch treat but got stung again. Paid hotel bill (one week) 1654 francs with cheque. Fortunately Pam and I have our tickets home."

When she was doing well she left no wish ungratified, and no request for money went unanswered. She had no thought of tomorrow. Today's sunshine, today's fun were sufficient for her. Fastidious in all her personal appointments, she demanded the best and never minded paying for it. When she traveled by train, her maid arranged the stateroom with Gertrude's tasteful belongings. The berth was made up with her blue silk sheets and fine hand-woven blankets. There were her books, her family photographs and cherished possessions. Every room she occupied for even a night or a day was required to be immaculate, aired, scented and filled with fresh flowers. In season and out, her favorite white lilies stood on a low table in her dressing room and filled the vases in her apartment.

This was a duplex on West 54th Street. She had decorated it in a style suggestive of the Arabian Nights. It was the absolutely perfect stage set for a prima donna. I was aware that I was a shocking incongruity in such surroundings. Viewing myself there was like opening a satin-lined jewel box and finding a monkey wrench.

Her Rolls which waited to take her and her escort to supper and dance after the play was as chic in appearance as a Rolls can be. Whenever I took her out I would ask her to send her chauffeur home. We would go in my convertible or in a taxi. She would agree to this sweetly but with unconcealed amusement.

Her chauffeur was dismissed a good many nights that spring. Three or four times a week Gertrude went out to supper with me. She was showing the effects of her play's long run. I tried more than once to persuade her to go directly home after the performance.

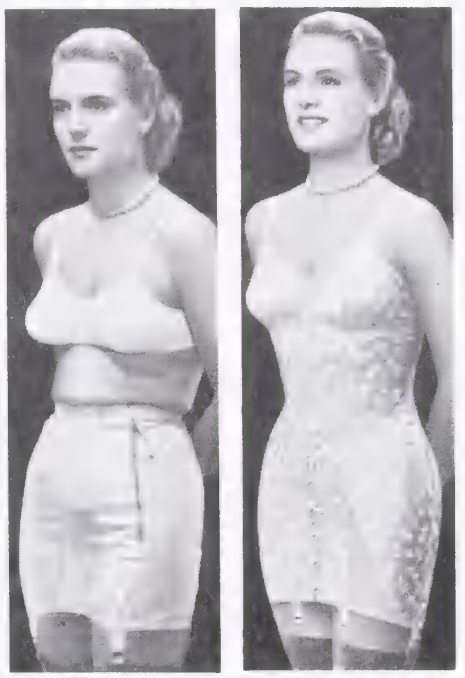
"I can't sleep if I go to bed too early," she told me. "I have to run down after a performance."

On other nights that spring, I would drive Gertrude out into the country. It always rested and refreshed her. Sometimes on those drives through Westchester she would say suddenly, "Let's stop at that diner." Perched on a stool at the counter, she would eat ham and eggs or a corned-beef sandwich with great enjoyment. Her favorite stop was at a restaurant where she could indulge her appetite for fried clams.

"This is even better than fried plaice," she admitted generously. "Though I've known many nights when an invitation to a supper of fish and chips would have made my mouth water."

On many predawns I would be sneaking up the three flights to my rooms in the Hobarts' top-floor apartment and would meet Harrison, in his work clothes, starting for his job as supervisor of the early deliveries of one of the big baking companies. He would grin at my tails and wilted carnation.

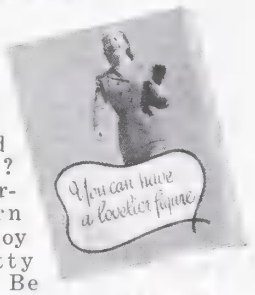
But it was a kind grin. Neither he nor Barbara asked any questions. Only, more than once, I surprised in my sister's eyes a look compounded of amusement, pity and exasperation. It said, clearer than words, "Why don't you get on with it?"



BARBARA adored Gertrude from the moment of their first meeting. She loved her bubbling, infectious gaiety, her childlike absorption in whatever was at the moment uppermost in her thoughts, her quick generosity which included the gifts of sympathy and tolerance no less than material wealth. Gertrude wasted no time or energy on censure, regret or self-pity. As gallantry was one article of her creed, being always at her entertaining best was another. As she expressed it: "All my life I have leaned on myself in trouble or disaster or in any crisis—financial or physical. I just look in a mental mirror and say, 'Come on, Gee, being sorry for yourself won't pay bills. Blaming someone else won't fill stalls. People don't want your woes. And it doesn't do to be too proud of one's 'wells' either.'"

Barbara and Harrison found unceasing enjoyment in the fertility of her imagination and in her extraordinary combination of extreme

IMAGINE . . .



A month ago I was ashamed of the way I looked!

BEFORE: This woman was ready to give up on her figure.

AFTER: Her new Spencers have made such a difference!

Send for the fascinating FREE Spencer Booklet TODAY!

Are you ashamed of your figure? Ever feel embarrassed? Learn how you can enjoy wearing pretty clothes again! Be proud of a trim, younger-looking figure. A Spencer Brassiere and Foundation can do the trick. Individually designed, cut and made for you alone—they'll give you lovelier figure lines, natural grace and beauty.

ASK YOUR DOCTOR. Because they are designed to meet the support needs of the individual, Spencers are prescribed by many doctors. Ask your doctor about a Spencer for you.

Send coupon today for free Spencer booklet. Learn how Spencer can help solve your figure problems. Or phone a Spencer Corsetiere for information about Spencer Brassieres, Foundations and Slips. Look in yellow pages under "Corsets," white pages under "Spencer Corsetiere" or "Spencer Support Shop." Never sold in department stores.

Please send FREE 16-page booklet. I have marked my figure problem.
I would like to make money as a Spencer Corsetiere ☐

Lordosis Backline ☐ Breast Problem ☐ Fatigue Posture ☐

Mrs.
Miss _____
(Print name and address)
Address _____
City _____ State _____
MAIL to SPENCER DESIGNERS, 141 Derby Ave., New Haven 7, Conn. 8/54
(In Canada—Rock Island, Que.)

SPENCER®
individually designed foundations and brassieres

fastidiousness with an earthy Shakespearean humor which was comedy at its highest.

Gertrude not only loved but understood Barbara, who had met with meager understanding in the family. Until Gertrude enlarged my comprehension I had been arrayed with the elders of our family in annoyed disapproval of my sister's management of her life; in particular of her second marriage.

"What if Barbara does make more with her writing than Harrison makes at his job?" she demanded. "They have an equal partnership in loving; and to them, that is what counts. Women like Barbara and me don't judge a man's worth by the money he offers us. We can get most of the things money buys for ourselves. What we would like from them is something else. Harrison gives Barbara that, and so they are happy and right for each other."

GERTRUDE told me, "Mother had an idea if I would only play my cards right I might have a coronet. Perhaps I might, but somehow or other I couldn't do that." She looked slightly rueful. "I have to admit," she said, "if you've been brought up on Clapham Common to revere royalty and the peerage and all that, you can't help feeling there's nothing like a good title. No matter what doesn't go with it."

"But you would marry?" I asked. "Someone you felt was right for you? If he loved you enough to leave you free to be yourself?"

She said slowly, "I think I would. Someone who would give me what I have never had and what I can't get for myself."

I asked what these were.

Suddenly her quietness was swept away by a roguish impudence which, I was learning, often served as a mask to protect her sensitivity. She began to sing under her breath:

"I want someone to watch over me. . . ."

That spring began with the invasion of Norway. All over the world Englishmen were quietly resigning from jobs, going home to fight the Battle of Britain, which loomed closer every week. No one felt this summons more keenly than Gertrude.

"I want to go home and be of use," she said one Sunday at Barbara's. There were just the four of us gathered around the fire in the Hobarts' big, untidy but very comfortable living room. As usual Gertrude had arrived bearing gifts—daffodils and Easter lilies. Her flowers filled the room with beauty and fragrance.

I understood and sympathized fully with Gertrude's desire to serve her country, but reason told me that her emotions were rapidly running away with her common sense. It was high time someone brought her to face reality.

"I shall cancel my tour," she went on. "As soon as my play closes, I'm going. I know I can be of use. I can cook, scrub, sew, nurse, sing songs and be generally useful."

"Mr. Churchill's girl Friday," I said.

She swung round at me, all indignation.

Before she could give vent to it, I continued: "What about Moss Hart's new play? You've promised to do it. As a matter of fact, Noel urged you to—and you always follow the Master's advice, don't you? Then, there's your engagement in Private Lives at the Playhouse for the benefit of the British War Relief. Are you going to cancel that to roll ten shillings' worth of bandages a day? What can you possibly do in England that is worth half as much as this practical financial support?"

"Whatever my King and my country wish me to do," she retorted grandly. "Do you think all I'm good for is to act? I can be a nurse. The Red Cross would take me. I could be a V.A.D. Perhaps I shall join the Wrens."

"And what will you do with Pam in the meanwhile?" I asked. "Do you plan to walk out on her too? Leave her high and dry in this country just at the time she needs you most, and at the first time you and she have been able to be together? How will she live? In any of the services you mention you wouldn't earn the price of your uniforms, which, if I know you, would have to be made by Hattie Carnegie or Molyneux. And where would you live? I doubt if you'd rate a suite at the Savoy."

Gertrude's eyes shot blue sparks. Even Amanda had never been so furious. I saw her glance go to a vase on the mantel. Her hand made an involuntary gesture toward it ——

"Northfield, Northfield, Northfield," I warned.

Barbara looked at me as if I had suddenly gone mad.

But it worked. Gertrude stood tense; but still and silent.

"Stop being an actress and start behaving like a human being," I told her. "Think with your head, not with your emotions. Of course you want to do something for England. Well, do it! Go and see your consul. Or better still, your ambassador. Ask him, as your King's representative, what he wants you to do."

"I hadn't thought of that," Gertrude said. "I could get in touch with the embassy."

"Why don't you?" I said, adding that I had met Lord Lothian. "He's charming. And in case it interests you, a bachelor."

She disdained replying to this thrust, changing the subject with the air of offended royalty. When she left, she haughtily declined my offer to see her home.

"You've hurt her feelings," Barbara said. "You have about as much tact as a bulldozer. She'll never forgive you."

Two days passed. Then she rang me excitedly, bursting with pride because her call to the British Embassy had been put through at once to His Excellency. "He treated me as if I were Somebody," she said pointedly. Lord Lothian was coming to New York and had suggested calling on her. She asked me, suddenly humble, if I would be present at the interview. "After all, you got me into this."

The request revealed the shyness which underlay her gamin audacity.

Lord Lothian was so unaffectedly pleased to be calling on Gertrude Lawrence and so interested in her eagerness to be of service to their country that he put her instantly at ease. He spoke feelingly of the usefulness of persons like Gertrude in building good will between the two great English-speaking countries. "There are jobs to be done in the United States which Gertrude Lawrence can do more effectively than one of my assistants. Or even I."

No cause could have made a stronger personal appeal to her than this. Her loyalty to England was fervent, but she also felt a kinship with America which I think sometimes surprised her by its intensity. Gertrude identified herself with our national life. She sought and made friends of Americans. She was an enthusiastic reader of the women's magazines, and after our marriage I discovered that she had accumulated files of clippings on every subject connected with running a home—including thousands of recipes which she intended to try someday.

After her meeting with Lord Lothian she was increasingly occupied with British War Relief. She personally sold thousands of dollars' worth of emblems. Her brief vacation at the Cape that June was used to start a chapter there.

GERTRUDE had leased the Garretts' big old house at East Dennis. She was desperately in need of rest before going on tour the middle of July. Pam chose not to accompany her mother. She professed absorbing interest in her art studies. Gertrude accepted the excuse, though she was well aware that Pam's major interest in town was a young medical student.

Plans for the summer season at the Playhouse were promising. Fran Hart, who, with Murial and the children, was occupying the late Raymond Moore's house, reported that we were sold out in advance for every performance of Private Lives, in which Gertrude was to open our season.

Gertrude left a week ahead of me. She telephoned from the Cape that the Moore rose garden was "as lovely as a dream of England." A small guest cottage in the garden had been reserved for my use that summer. Its surroundings were romantically lovely, but actually the cottage was rather dark and uninviting. At least I remembered it so. When I arrived I found the place transformed by fresh light paint, crisp curtains and other gay accessories.

"All from Woolworth's," Gertrude informed me.

In Hyannis Gertrude had discovered the delight of shopping in her first five-and-ten. Her enthusiasm and her ideas for renovating my cottage ran beyond the funds in her purse. She seldom carried more than two dollars with her. Graciously she told the clerk to charge and send her purchases. The manager's statement that the Woolworth policy was strictly cash-and-carry, and the fact that the rule could not be altered even when the purchaser was a personal friend of the Woolworth family created a dilemma. Gertrude's impulse was to reject the parcels and walk out haughtily. But on the other hand, she wanted the things. She telephoned her chauffeur to drive over to Hyannis with money to redeem her purchases. And she satisfied her dignity by telling the manager she did not believe his store would ever succeed. "How can it, when you don't deliver, or have charge accounts?"

As one perfect June day succeeded another, the horror of Dunkirk broke on the world. The news and its implications struck Gertrude to the heart. She hovered close to the radio, growing anxious and drawn. In those grim days I realized what work meant to her. Tense and anguished as she was, she went steadily on with the rehearsals for Private Lives. Her zeal for perfection increased. "Let's try it again," she would say to the company. "Let's get it right. It must be right." It was her way of keeping up her morale. And the play, when it opened, was as brilliant in its performance as Broadway would have demanded. Never was Amanda so enchanting, so provocative, so deliciously, outrageously amusing.

Before that week was up I knew that I could not let her go off on a four-month tour without asking her to be my wife.

"If only you were not Gertrude Lawrence," I said when we were alone after the final performance, "if only you were not Gertrude Lawrence it would be easy."

"What would be?" she asked.

"I would ask you to marry me."

Her reply was steady and in a voice suddenly low and grave.

"Please ask me, Richard," she said. "Only please don't—unless you are very sure you want me to say yes."

Caution dies hard in a New Englander. Unwilling to trust the good fortune which smiled on me, I insisted on going into details. "You know, Gertrude," I explained, "my income is uncertain. I've had hits before and I'll have them again, I hope. I'll have flops too. But, whatever the future, we'll live as I can afford without regard or recourse to your income. I won't be a kept man."

"I wouldn't want you, if you to be one."

"And are you willing to be M I asked incredulously.

"Try me!" she challenged, wit We commenced to make plans

"Darling," Gertrude said, "Fr there would be a full moon on th always longed for a moonlight-a ding, so do let's be married on the Fourth of July, a few minu night. And, oh, do let's keep it ve until it's all over."

NOTHING could have pleased r to be spared the glare of publici

Next morning I stopped by to clerk in Dennis about our marri knew I could depend on him to

"Just bring along your birth ce stated, "and divorce decrees, if body will learn about it from m

Greatly relieved, I arranged f to be rushed to me by messeng York. Then I called Gertrude to s

"They are in the vault, darlin

"Can David or Fanny get at t

"No, darling, the vault is in L

I took a deep breath. The Bat had just started; London was bombing. Air mail had been h war; even if there were access t would take many weeks for the reach the United States. I hurried the town clerk. He was sympath less as he read me the law of t wealth pertaining to remarriage.

Gertrude took the news sportin her disappointment was keen.

"Don't worry, Richard deare put off our wedding until I ret tour," she said.

"No, we will not!" I stated d paced the floor. "Too many thing if we postpone the marriage. Th some solution to this legal snarl.

Gertrude laughed. "Oh, if it's snarl we're all right. Let's teleph

I had known Fanny Holtzma cially, through Gertrude. Her an international lawyer was diffic grasp. My idea of a lawyer was p my uncle Samuel Nelson Aldrich cutaway and striped pants. Fan trast, was described by Moss Har delicate, mouselike creature give flopping hats and creating a first i wistful helplessness." She did not picture of a legal adviser; nor wa after her arrival that evening, wh of the town clerk's adamant refu an exception for us.

"Who's the county or probate

"Judge Colin Campbell, in Hy

Fanny telephoned Judge Camp ranged to see him immediately. S an inordinately long time, and we ried. I regretted not having stopp invading the privacy of a Massa ist's home late at night. I was sp the consequences when we heard

"Oh, Fan," Gertrude called, you so long?"

"I'm sorry to have kept you up I've had the most wonderful time bells'. They are such a delightful were celebrating the graduation Peter, who received the highest enters Yale in September. Here's delicious cake Mrs. Campbell bak me the recipe too. She ——"

"But, Fanny," I interrupted, the marriage license?"

"Oh, yes, I forgot to tell you. ahead with your July Fourth wed

"You mean you have obtained to bypass the law?" I asked.

"Certainly not! We must start ceeding to ask for an order that t issued to you."

"Oh," I said, completely let d would only mean more delay."

"Not if you get me a typewriten started," she said. "Judge Ca right," she added.

I understood what Moss Hart he observed, ". . . actually Fanny helpless as Bethlehem Steel."

CALENDAR

Since the invention of credit and interest, businessmen have been struggling with methods of measuring time. Greek thinkers never reached a satisfactory way of counting days, but did establish the custom of having public heralds announce the first day of each month. From their word for "to call," calends came to designate the initial day of any month.

Roman military might vanquished the Greek armies, but the victors adopted many customs of the conquered. Among them was the announcement of legal calends—whose position governed remaining days of each month. As commerce grew extensive, it became necessary for the merchant to keep a calendar—or list of calends, with the accounts payable on each.

Julius Caesar, doubtless influenced by major financial interests, stabilized the calendar in B.C. 46 by introducing a year of 365 days. Even with leap year attached, the system was vastly simpler than earlier ones. Other segments of society borrowed the idea of the merchant's account book, and the calendar became a standard instrument of western civilization.

—WEBB B. GARRISON

se preliminaries were bel to I insisted that legal arbe made by which the s would continue to conde's personal finances. I have anything to do with . This arrangement re-orce to the close of Ger-It worked so well neither l to alter it. She received a ly allowance for pocket
I was relieved of worry t she might do with a was capable of doing ex-things was made clear g my absence at sea, she he Cape alone to spend a d Holtzmann placed five llars to her account in my ank. He gave her a check-trict instructions how to tries. She promised to reok to him when she came n. She kept her word. The rned in showed a credit well over one thousand

l you make all this money when the Cape is closed asked. She could not tell at she had carefully filled unts of the checks she had had told her to do.
she was overdrawn. She the amount of each check
.

ve us her blessing and re-ew York.
orning of the third of July that I wanted him and witness my marriage to Gertrude asked Dorothy, d maid, whom she had er from England, to at-hers were to be present at ny which the Reverend nson, the local Presbyter, had promised to perliately after midnight.
he wedding ring without njecture was not an easy lt it necessary to explain g—a two-dollar circlet of ngraved with the Navaho ymbol—was needed for a of our plays. It was this Gertrude wore almost conthat time on. One morn-she awoke to find it had k overnight—as such rings as sure that this was an
il. Not one to accept fate, ring platinum-plated to e return of the omen.
later, I persuaded her to ore conventional Cartier n which she had inscribed and the phrase: "Till s part." It is this golden ests on her finger now.

had ordered a cake from birthday surprise. At the t the cake was decorated roses and the figures of a groom. The bottom layer ds in icing: HAPPY BIRTH-p one said: CONGRATULAand white roses wreathed d two miniature flags, the Stripes and Union Jack, on either side of the bridal entiment connected with d the occasion was for-preserved the ornament ental care. The little couen a place of honor in the et. Not even Noel's slightly le in their direction whenisited us could dislodge their place among Gersured possessions or from They are still there; brave ls of that July night when torm shattered Gertrude's plans for a moonlight-and-roses wedding. The rain sent us all scurrying into my cottage. There Gertrude and I were married.

After the ceremony Gertrude sent off several dozen telegrams to friends here and abroad. The message was the same to all:

LOVE FROM MRS. RICHARD STODDARD ALDRICH. THEATRICALLY KNOWN AS GERTRUDE LAWRENCE.

My own announcements were limited to a message to my sons and the call to my mother. The boys sent a punctilious congratulatory reply, dictated by their mother, of course. And Helen added a cordial message of her own. From Barbara came another telegram of loving greetings, "in which mother joins."

I passed this over to Gertrude, whose hands were filled with the yellow sheets which boys on bicycles kept bringing to our cottage.

Gertrude read Barbara's message with evident disappointment. She said quickly, "I suppose your mother is writing us. She will want to say more intimate things than she would feel like putting into a telegram."

"Probably," I agreed noncommittally. I could not tell Gertrude about that chill silence which had met my announcement. Or the question: "Who is Gertrude Lawrence?" I congratulated myself that Barbara was in Groton and could be counted on to try to break down the family reserve. But all that I knew of my mother's character warned me that if Barbara did succeed in getting her to welcome an actress into the family it

Betty Crocker
OF GENERAL MILLS

"3 steps we take to help you get EXPERT RESULTS with everything you bake!"

Betty Crocker's 3 Steps—

1 Day after day we test Gold Medal Flour with all kinds of bakings to insure its dependability.

2 Next, we develop recipes to take fullest advantage of Gold Medal's superior baking qualities.

3 Then, all over the country, homemakers like you kitchen test our Gold Medal recipes. Use these recipes . . . so you can get expert results with everything you bake.

Betty Crocker
Gold MEDAL
"Kitchen-tested" Enriched
FLOUR
BLEACHED · ALL-PURPOSE
General Mills, Inc.

AMERICA'S FAVORITE FLOUR

"Surprise! It has a HIDDEN CRUST! Even between two layers of filling, the inner crust stays tender-crisp."

HIDDEN CRUST PIE

1 1/2 cups sifted GOLD MEDAL Flour
3/4 tsp. salt
1/2 cup shortening
3 tbsp. water
Chocolate cream filling for 9 inch pie

Heat oven to 475° (very hot). Mix flour and salt; cut in shortening. Sprinkle water over mixture, mixing with fork until dough clings together.

Divide dough as in picture. Round up larger piece on lightly floured pastry cloth. Flatten into circle. Roll 1" larger than inverted 9" pan.

Ease into pan; trim and fork edge. Prick well. Roll smaller piece into 6" circle. Place on inverted pan; prick well. Bake circle 8 min., shell 10 min., at 475°.

Pour in half of filling; top with "hidden crust." Add rest of filling. Chill. Serve topped with whipped cream and shaved chocolate.

THIS EASY GOLD MEDAL RECIPE HAS BEEN CAREFULLY TESTED FOR EXPERT RESULTS

would be by some extraordinary persuasive powers. Mother was not only a Joy, a Boynton and a Pickering; she had been for forty years the wife of Edward Irving Aldrich. Superimposed upon her own heritage of prejudices was the stern Puritanism of the Aldriches and Stoddards. What father and Uncle Sam would have said, had they not both been safely laid away in Upton, would be sure to color her thinking about her new daughter-in-law.

From Barbara, I later learned what happened in Groton. Any hopes that mother might have entertained of concealing this latest dereliction of mine from the neighbors were promptly dashed. Reporters appeared like a plague of locusts. One intrepid cameraman sprang up in the back yard and snapped away at the house until mother jerked down all the shades as if for a death.

In a back-parlor conclave the three Joys—mother, Uncle Jim and Aunt Alice—decided on a course of action before the world. They would treat my breach of tradition with dignified aloofness. Loyalty forbade condemning my marriage publicly. The early American tradition of burying the dead in the road and tramping over the grave to keep the enemy from knowing their losses still held.

Mother gave as her opinion, "We will not mention it to anyone. Naturally none of the people we know will mention it to us."

In this mother was right. My marriage was almost immediately overshadowed—in Groton, at least—by the enormity of a remark that Barbara made soon afterward at Shattuck's grocery on the day every loyal radio in the county was tuned in on the Republican Convention then meeting in Philadelphia.

"Well, Barbara, what do you think of Taft's chances?" the grocer inquired.

"I'm not interested," my sister returned. "I'm voting for Roosevelt."

The horror occasioned by this announcement spread within the hour. Mother's disapproval of Barbara's Bohemianism welled into an indignant tirade. "It seems as though you and Richard were determined to disgrace the family," she upbraided. "Otherwise, why do you come up here and talk like that? Even if you have no consideration for me, you might show some for your father, over there in Upton, with the Tafts in the next plot."

LEAVING Groton to seethe, and the Cape to lay bets on how long the marriage would last, Gertrude and I drove to New York to the comparative seclusion of her apartment. Pam, having warmly expressed approval of our marriage, declared a total lack of interest in any honeymoon but one of her own. She packed her bags and removed to my former quarters at the Hobarts'.

Gertrude was scheduled to leave for the West Coast on the fourteenth of the month. Meanwhile, daily rehearsals were called. Our time together was short and broken by many obligations. Lord Lothian had sent his congratulations, adding that lese majesty had been committed in not asking him to give the bride away. As His Majesty's representative he stood in loco parentis to Gertrude. He asked us both to lunch at the embassy.

I told Gertrude we could not go. There were no planes available for civilians without top priorities. She looked at me aghast. "Darling, we have to go. It's the same as a royal command."

And go we did, by crowded train on one of the hottest days of that July, returning at night as uncomfortably.

Letters, wires and gifts continued to pour in on us. Gertrude scanned each batch eagerly and put the letters down with some disappointment. I surmised that she was looking for the expected letter from my mother welcoming her into the family. But day followed day, and there was no letter with the Groton postmark.

There was a communication one morning from the proprietors of the Social Register. I was informed that, having married an actress, my name would be omitted from their roll of the socially approved. Grinning, I tossed the letter to Gertrude. She read it uncomprehendingly.

"What does it mean?"

"I'm blackballed," I laughingly explained. "That's what I get for marrying you."

"Can they do a thing like that? Who are they anyway? Richard darling, do you mind?"

"Do I look unhappy?" I added that to be married to her was worth being dropped from twenty Social Registers if necessary.

"It seems so silly," she commented. "If I were poor at my job, a miserable flop, or if I were drunk and disorderly, I can see there might be some excuse for thinking you had come a cropper. But I'm not. Debrett isn't fussy-minded. Think of all the Gaiety girls who are in it. And in Burke's Peerage. I would have been in if I had married Eric or one of the others. Americans are very funny in some ways. I find them hard to understand."

And then she said with a wistfulness that struck at my heart, "Do you suppose your mother feels like that? You know she hasn't sent me one word."

"She will," I promised.

SONG FOR A MARRIAGE

By MAY SARTON

Now from all mountains you come down
Radiant after those reaches of despair
Which you climbed once on courage alone,
A footstep's span from the dreadful air.
Now from interminable empty seas
Where the unwavering compass was your hope,
You land at last as radiant as those Saints who discover a mysterious home,
Where out of conflict the most difficult joys
Like poetry, like love, search and find poise.
You give us a new world. Tenderness flows
Out from your hands like some amazing news.
And in this marriage rooted deep in trust
We bless a legend we had almost lost,
The miracle of balance and of gentleness
That steadfast love may slowly bring to pass.

While Gertrude was rehearsing I put in a call to Groton. To Barbara, who answered the telephone, I said, "I've got to speak to mother. This is important."

Presently I heard mother's preliminary cough and her voice saying stiffly, "Well, Richard?"

It is impossible to recall all that I said or the pressures I brought to bear. Realizing that it was futile to attempt to argue with mother's prejudice against the theater, I did what I had never yet done with her or with anyone: I begged her, if she loved me and valued my love for her, to set aside that prejudice and to write my wife expressing her love for us both and her hope for our happiness.

"You will love Gertrude when you know her," I said.

"That remains to be seen," was her reply.

"But you will write?"

"I will think about it, Richard."

With that I had to be content.

Now I, too, began to watch the mails. I was counting on something in mother which I believed was stronger than what she considered her "principles." This was her love for her only son. Inarticulate as she was in expressing it, even rigidly trained ag might be called effusiveness—as trained me—I had no reason to deep well of love that lay beneath h If I had tapped that as I had mea hoped I had ——

Two days later I handed Gertru velope addressed in mother's old spidery hand. It contained this lett

Groton, Massach
Thursday, July 1

My dear Miss Lawrence: When I Dennis last summer how little I drea should be closely related to you som

I can't realize it at all, but I hope t better and be charmed as everyone s Richard thinks you "very remarka hope when you return to New York come to know you.

I am sure you and Richard, havin interests, will enjoy a very happy and future.

Yours, with my be
MARY P.

"It isn't very warm, is it?" Ge slowly. " 'Dear Miss Lawrence.'. . hopes to 'be charmed as everyon be.' . . . And the signature. Why c have said 'Mother'?"

"Because she's a New Englande "And she is nearly eighty years old attended Lawrence Academy letter posed to be formal, dignified. My f ters to her were signed, 'Your lovin Edward Irving Aldrich.' She would shocked by any other signature again," I advised. "She says, 'Wit love.' Take it from me, if mother she meant it. Up to the hilt. She isn of the people we know who toss er around like confetti. And don't g that because New Englanders seer standoffish and reserved, we don't and love deeply too."

An impish grin suddenly lighted features. "Like those old Cong deacons buried in the Cape Cod c she said. "I explored one of them. old boys had three wives and at l children."

"That should have warned you," "Dear Miss Lawrence, I am sur married me."

GERTRUDE had never met my sons now eleven; David, nine. At my re came to lunch with us at the apartr came dressed in blue shorts, so sc painfully polite, so agonizingly s knew without asking that their m stepfather had drilled them in th considered proper to such an occa Gertrude, whose way with childr broke through all barriers, made way.

The boys were quite different in a and in temperament. David, still c rosy, made friends readily and foun stantly entertaining. He was soo easily about a new pet he had a canary which he had named Henry

To the not unnatural inquiry, " replied gravely, "Because he is my

"Of course," Gertrude breathe is a very friendly name."

But though David responded t vances Dick remained miserably alo too tall, too thin, too grave and too sive. He was an embarrassing replic at his age.

It may have been this striking re that stirred some atavistic impul causing me to adopt toward Dick t my father had used toward me. H and unhappy withdrawal from the tion at the luncheon table irritated sonably. I found myself booming Father used to boom at me when h failed to do him proud. When his sh hand could not manage the serving he dribbled chocolate sauce from iteroles which Gertrude had ordere cial treat for children, on the table a my annoyance was loud and harsh.

I felt Gertrude step, not too ligh foot.

A few minutes later, Gertrude re pointedly that I had to read a pl the office. Her hint was not too

...e to make friends with the boys. ...et ...ned a furious game of cassino was ...es. After the children went home, I ...ere ...de how they had all got along. ...fa ...ously. Your boys are darlings, ... I ...vid has a twinkle in his eye that ...ve ...re going to have fun together." ...wl ... about Dick? Could you break ...hi ...hyness at all?" ...a ... I are going to understand each ...ry ...ell," she replied. "Bless his stout ...ur ...If you will keep Edward Irving ...ot ...of the picture, everything will be ..." ...ic ...othing more. I left it at that. As ...nt ...n, I became aware that the re- ...tp ...etween Gertrude and Dick was ...na ... strong and deep. She played no ... ...e and David were companions in ...no ...conspirators in adolescent prac- ...es ...layed on the rest of us. But with ...e ...med to have some special under- ... ... he grew older he slipped into the ...er ...cort whenever I was not there. ...ha ... happened that afternoon of their ...tir ... I did not know until twelve years ...it ... fore Gertrude died. ...as ...with me on the Cape during her ...lic ... from her arduous role in The ...d ... We had agreed to have no visitors. ...s," ...Gertrude said. "Us" meant the ... ...urse. Dick had been one year in ... ...ce. He arrived suddenly at The ...fo ... few days' leave before going to ...Or ...ne of the days, I found him in his ... ...ting his private possessions in or- ...as ...t filled with torn-up letters seemed ...atu ... praiseworthy intention to leave ...ni ...ting correspondence behind. ...s? I asked, indicating the closely ...sc ...os. ...e. ...nd Gertrude." ...ad ...written him—during the years he ...Ch ...te and, later, at the University of ...— ...ters which served to give the lad ...ol ...elonging to her and to her busy, ...g ...orld. The letters, fond, merry and ...no ...g of replies, had kept him as- ...h ... love and understanding. ...I everything for me when I was ...in ...until I learned to make friends," ...d ...nply. "You see, she always under- ...at ...was nervous as a kid, and shy. She ...ia ... had always been afraid of loud ...in ...hat when you would shout at us— ...d ... shout a lot, you know, dad; Ger- ...g ... you over it—I became more ...ec ...nd shy and awkward." ...d ...hen Gertrude had discovered this. ...v ... first day." ...h ...old me what had happened at the ...m ...hen I went downtown. ... I ...vid occupied himself with a pile of ...ie ...Dick wandered into the library. He ...no ...g by the desk, looking at a letter ...re ... stamps, when Gertrude came in. ... ... if caught in something wrong, he ...I ... letter and hung his head.

..."...ike stamps?" she inquired gently. ...g ... you those and lots more. I get ...fr ... all over the world. I'll save the ...a ... send them to you if you wish." ...ad ...ried to thank her, but the words ...ic ...ome. In their place came tears. ...e ...It was unmanly to cry. I was ter- ...ri ...ed." ...et ... he felt Gertrude's arms around ...e ... s crying too. Presently she whisked ...o ...e bathroom, and washed his face ...'s ...e found himself telling her about ...o ...noises and all the rest. ...w ...'t tell," she had said. "It will be a ...is ...etween you and me." ...ur ...port then established had never ...I. ... ...ow she's never been one to care ...u ...," Dick said. "When David and I ... ...pate she was always sending us all ... ...ngs we weren't supposed to have. ...ic ...nt a roast chicken, from some ho- ...a ...een delayed on the way and it was ...Ve ...ad to bury it. Another time there ...el ...hone call. She was at the inn in the ...a ... she wanted David and me to skip ... ...ve lunch with her. She hadn't time ...e ...o to the school, because she was ... ...newhere that night. I couldn't find David so I went alone. We had a jolly time. A senior was there that day with his family and he saw us. Afterward he stopped me; he'd never noticed I existed before. 'Who was the slick chick I saw you with?' he wanted to know. I wouldn't tell him she was my stepmother. I said, 'Oh, just an actress I know from Broadway.' I told Gertrude and she loved it."

I remembered her saying to me long before, "Dick and I are going to understand each other."

I saw her off on the train with Jack Potter, whom I had briefed to look out for her; then I returned to the Cape and the problems connected with the imminent arrival of Tallulah Bankhead, squired by a pet monkey. In those familiar surroundings, and with the duties of my job, my marriage began to seem as improbable as a dream.

Gertrude's letters, dashed off between performances, seeing old friends in Beverly Hills, attending war benefits, and selling British War Relief emblems in a department store several hours every week, made me feel that she was on a merry-go-round.

I might have thought myself forgotten in this whirligig, but for an occasional penciled note, "I am missing you more every minute what are we to do? Mrs. A." Or a telegram, "SUCH A GLORIOUS DAY AND I HAVE A MATINEE BUT I WANT YOU TO GO TO THE BEACH AND GET PLENTY OF SUN."

Even more flattering in its implications was the handsome photograph of herself which arrived one day with the note:

This is for your office so that all those producer-struck ootzie-wootzies will know you have the most beautiful and dangerous woman for a wife, so HANDS OFF.

Her concern with the fateful march of events in Europe continued:

Today I am tired and could so easily be depressed. The news is bad. Still, things aren't going as well as Mr. Hitler thought. England isn't France. There is something in good old Shakespeare's Henry the Fifth, I think, about small showers lasting a long time and sudden storms of short duration. Look it up. It's Act II. . . . Bless you for being you. Please always be just the same, and love me.

We had been married two weeks and our relationship was still new and in the making. Now Gertrude was gone and I had no expectation of seeing her for another five months. It was very disturbing.

Many a husband has to leave his bride after the briefest of honeymoons, especially in time of war. But then it is the man who goes into a life of exciting variety and action while the woman waits for him to return. In our case the usual procedure was reversed. I remained at home, tied to an accustomed—even humdrum—job. Meanwhile Gertrude entered upon a life of constant and stimulating change; she would renew her old ties of friendship and camaraderie with people I did not know; she would live in a world which I could not share.

It was not the ideal way to start a marriage.

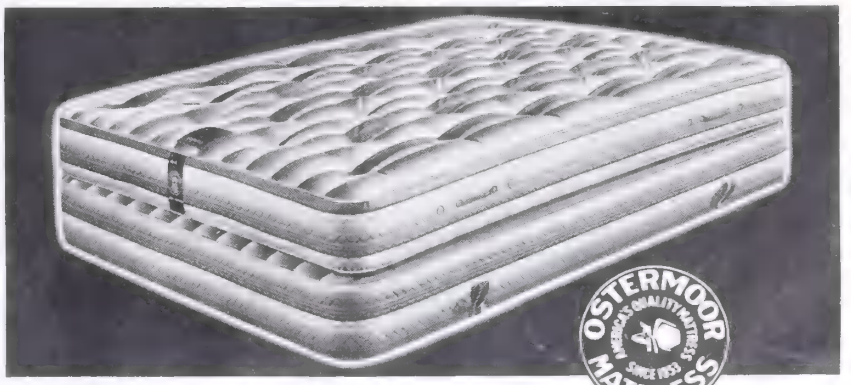
No. The unconventionality of the situation could not but affect me. So, too, subtly and entirely against my own better judgment, did the amused comments on my anomalous status, the raised eyebrows, the questions: "When is Gertrude coming back? Or, isn't she?" The references to "Myth" Lawrence and to my wife's reputed tendency to change her mind without notice came to my mind. I grew irritable and morose.

This condition was not relieved by the knowledge that Gertrude had reached San Francisco, a city which had long ago taken her to its warm, impulsive heart. San Francisco was in the throes of the Fair. It was inevitable that Gertrude should be swept into the publicity and the promotion of the enterprise. A Gertrude Lawrence Day was held, at which she, escorted by the mayor, did the honors.

Worried that Gertrude might be doing too much, I wired Jack to keep an eye on her. His reply:

DOING MY BEST BUT YOU KNOW GEE

did not allay my anxiety.



EXTRA CASH . . . Can be yours for part-time work. Write for details.
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
335 Independence Square Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania

SELL Christmas Cards FOR 3¢ EACH
PRINTED WITH SENDER'S NAME

Make $67.50 Next few Days for Yourself, Your Church, or Club
I send you everything you need, free. Order Blanks, complete, simple instructions. And as samples . . . free of charge . . . I include . . .
28 Different CARDS—FREE!
No charge now or ever. Just send name on postcard.
Fresh, new exclusive designs in Religious, Humorous, Artistic, and Business Cards. People expect to pay 15c to 25c each without name imprinted! You take orders at just about 3c each with name. No wonder friends flood you with orders and profits. I also send on approval, boxes of cards and gift wraps which you can sell right away! Big season now in full swing.
GENERAL CARD CO., 1300 W. Jackson, Dept. 40-J, Chicago 7, Ill.

OSTERMOOR
America's Quality Mattress since 1853

For over 100 years the name Ostermoor has stood for the utmost in sleep comfort.
OSTERMOOR & COMPANY, Inc.
Chicago 16, Illinois Bridgeport 4, Connecticut

Consequently when I was wakened one night shortly after three A.M. by the ringing of my telephone, my immediate thought was, Something's happened to Gertrude.

But it was her voice that came over the wire. "Are you all right?" I demanded.

"Of course, it isn't me . . . I. It's the children. Richard, you've got to do something," she told me.

I asked what children.

"Noel's," she told me. "Of course they're mine too ——"

I sat down on the edge of the bed and took a firmer grip of the receiver. My wife's voice was going on in a rush of quick phrases:

"We're so distressed. . . Noel has been here with me all evening. . . . We don't know what to do. . . . Those babies can't stay in England, with the blitz. . . . We had planned to evacuate them . . . our arrangements were made till your Government stopped it and now everything's tangled in yards of red tape and ——"

"Gertrude!" I had to shout to stem the flow. "What is all this? Your children and Noel Coward's? How many children?" I wanted to know.

"Fifty-eight . . . no, only fifty-seven. But, Richard, those helpless babies . . . and the bombs. . . . We've got to save them. I told Noel that you would think of a way ——"

I had never met Noel, but his name figured so often in Gertrude's conversation that I had developed toward him the instinctive jealousy that every husband feels for a man whom his wife knew before she met him. I repeated my query: "What do you mean—your children and Noel's? I want a straight answer."

Ultimately I got it. The children—by final count fifty-seven—were inmates of the British Actors' Orphanage at Chertsey. For a number of years Noel Coward had been president of the Actors' Orphanage. Gertrude was a director and a vice-president. She had never mentioned this to me. No doubt this lapse was due to our hasty marriage and Gertrude's starting on tour. At all events, my wife into my lap fifty-seven orphans

"Richard dearest, promise m wind all that red tape in Wash you tell me you were a Son of Revolution? That ought to hel

Through the ensuing wee "babies" figured predominantly to work. Though we had as y cover them, the necessity of thei Chertsey, close to London, gr imperative. Hourly radio repo kept Gertrude in a state of acu ery night she telephoned. Wha When could the children be put When? When? When?

It was useless to remind her t in England was jammed w émigrés waiting for places on the the convoys put out into a sea U-boats.

Gertrude soon infected me anxiety. I could not rest until I v to report that her "babies" wer specified British port of embar the American consul had prom orphans board the SS America ing in the next convoy.

Just as the evacuation of the successfully under way came news that the convoy had been ships had been sunk. Whether American Legion was still unkr

Gertrude was then playing west. Her tour of many one-nig exhausted even her apparently strength. All her letters spoke o realized at once that the news from her, at least until we had mation of the children's fate.

I wired that I would join h I would bring the architect's plar we proposed building on the Ca which she wrote in every letter. Colorado and we spent a ha studying the plans. Naturally I s the reported attack on the conv

One evening, as we came in Palace, I was handed a telegra stood at my elbow. When I ma into my pocket, she demanded, you open it?"

With a sinking heart I tore op envelope and read:

CHILDREN SAFE THANK GOD FA

When I returned to New Yor Coward. He was busily engage tions for the children's recepti appeared exceedingly eager tha should become friends. And eve that he should be impressed tha love match. Talking to Noel, I ob did not know how I could hav trude if things had been different.

He regarded me quizzically. brave man—marrying Gee."

I said, "I happen to love her."

"I love her, too, but she terrif so devilishly clever at getting wants."

I said that I wondered someti had married me.

"So did I," Noel said with frankness. "When I saw her in S I asked her. She said, 'Because I man who never yessed me.'"

He smiled again. "Keep it up you can."

ALEC WOOLLCOTT's wedding Gertrude was a canary, Franklin. admiration of our recently re-elec was intense. With less than one m Gertrude's return from tour and in Lady in the Dark—one week costumes, fittings, hairdresser; th the lines, songs and dances and fo another pet was something we d Gertrude's dog, Mackie, surve arrival with the dour disdain I fel his power to express. However, David, our Siamese cats, displaye interest in Franklin. They would beneath the cage staring up w gleaming eyes while their tails m back and forth.

BEEN GOOD TODAY? CLAIM THIS REWARD—

Ice cream with Pineapple

Sundaes topped with canned Pineapple—like ice cream and sherbets made with Pineapple—have exciting flavor. Desserts, salads, bakings and meat dishes . . . the more canned Pineapple in your eating the more you'll like all that you eat. Keep a kitchen "PINEAPPLE SHELF" well-stocked with all 5 forms of this tropic fruit. Reach often for the flavor Nature stores only in canned Pineapple!

CANNED TROPIC-FRESH

Nature's most refreshing flavor

Pineapple Sundaes

sing with Flavor! Spoon golden Crushed Pineapple over vanilla or Pineapple ice cream. Or sprinkle each ice cream serving with Pineapple Tidbits. Marvelous for dessert or any refreshment occasion.

Pineapple Sodas

perk up a party! In each tall glass put a big spoonful of Pineapple ice cream. Fill glass about ⅔ full with Pineapple Juice, mash and mix slightly. Drop in another spoonful of ice cream, then add chilled sparkling water to fill.

PINEAPPLE GROWERS ASSOCIATION, San Francisco

to hand it to Franklin; unruffled, he . The rest of us, however, lacked his ce. After five days of strain Gertrude our nerves by beseeching Barbara to cats home with her; a good turn for was grateful to Franklin.

canary's name caused Gertrude some gs. She was aware that I did not share Aleck's and Barbara's enthusiasm for 's policies and personality.

him something else," I suggested. "I ppose he knows his name."

studied the canary thoughtfully. "I hink we can change his name," she ook, Richard. Who does he make you f? Those very bright eyes. And that ckward tilt of his head. . . . Doesn't he to be looking through pince-nez down gated chin? You'll just have to put up e name, darling," she decided. "After your President."

d never occurred to me that one bird look unlike other members of its I could distinguish between a robin hrush, naturally. But that one canary t an identical replica of every other was a new idea. On my way to the hat morning I found myself stopping a pet shop. In the window, canaries d appealingly. One was a large puffy is round, small, beaked head was sunk his shoulders. There was something and aggressive about him which was ned by the bald patch on top of his f his beak had held a thick cigar——

d the shop to deliver the bird to Ger- On the card I wrote, "Call me Winnie." rude was entranced.

look back over the first year of our ge I am conscious of a strong animal In marrying Gertrude I had married s as well as her devotions, enthusiasms r extraordinary capacity for interesting in a hundred different things. Hazel, oted theater maid, expressed it, almost : "I'll tell you about Miss Law- -she's always into something."

o the very opening night of Lady in the hanges were made, scenes cut and re- ; each change necessitating more re- ls. Even after the opening, during the run, more drastic cuts were called for. de's calmness in the face of all these re- , her capacity for work and her vitality, d me. Her constant concern was to play e magnificently, and no amount of work yond her until every scene was perfect. magnificently she played the Lady in rk has become part of the history of the .

r the opening, Ira Gershwin, his mother Gertrude and I got into a car to drive e theater to the Ritz. We were all limp. de had tight hold of my hand. I felt the ng of her body, the quick rise and fall breath. As usual when she was most moved, she was silent.

ll, mamma," Ira exulted, "what do you w? Have we a hit?"

ooks like it," Mrs. Gershwin conceded. stuteness was proverbial. George and d always listened respectfully to Rose's n; especially in the matter of investing how. Now Ira could not resist teasing d you wouldn't put any money into it. lo you feel now?"

right."

hat do you mean—all right? We have a ven't we? It's good for years on Broad- Everybody will make a pile of money." e made a noncommittal gesture. be."

hat do you mean—maybe?"

you didn't have Gertrude Lawrence, have you got? Nothing. I don't take such risks."

AT with her tour and bringing the new o Broadway, it was February and a full months after our marriage before Ger- and I could be said to have accomplished rocess the British call "settling in."

were still occupying her penthouse on 54th Street, but we had arranged to into another in the same building which ore suited to our needs and within my t. This would not be available until September. Knowing how much Gertrude loved space and country walks and how important these were to her well-being when she was working very hard, I proposed leasing a house on Long Island. The estate was only an hour's drive from town. The trip in to the theater and back each night would not be tiring. And we would have our Sundays and Mondays together, in beautiful, restful surroundings. Gertrude fell in with the plan. The winter on Long Island was to be our belated honeymoon.

Ballybrook Farm belonged to Mr. and Mrs. Henry Alexandre. Gertrude had been entertained there with the Duke of Windsor and his party when, as Prince of Wales, he made an American tour seventeen years before. It was a spacious and homelike white house, built in Colonial days, exactly the sort of country house Gertrude loved. The grounds were extensive and wooded, handsome even in winter. Mackie, in the new gold collar from Cartier's which his mistress had lovingly wrapped and tied on the Christmas tree for him, inspected the shrubbery and expressed approval.

The two went for daily brisk runs through the gardens while I pleaded business letters to dictate or scripts to read. Gertrude said regretfully that I was not the hearty, sports-loving type she had hoped for. My size had deceived her. But though she pretended to have accepted these deficiencies of mine with graceful resignation, actually she never stopped trying to turn me into a tennis-golf-squash-playing champion swimmer, skier and surfboat rider.

Another ideal which I obdurately refused to live up to, and which died hard, was that of a leisurely pipe-smoking country gentleman. It did no good to point out to Gertrude that I was not a smoker. In several trips to Dunhill's, she laid in all the equipment calculated to lure me into becoming a pipe addict. Pipes and handsome jars filled with the most expensive tobaccos were placed within reach of all the chairs I showed any tendency to sit in. For years she periodically emptied and replenished the tobacco jars, with pathetic hopefulness. "If only you would become a smoker, it would be so much easier to know what to give you," she would sigh when Christmas or my birthday drew near.

She longed to see me in perfectly fitted tweeds, pipe in mouth, gun under arm, strolling about our estate. Not that she ever wanted any living creature shot; but the gun was an indispensable part of the picture. The stroll over, she would have liked me to lounge in front of the open fire, wearing the needle-point slippers which she was busily making for me, and a Sulka silk dressing gown. I found one hanging in my closet one day as a hint.

She was always trying, openly or by subterfuge, to get me to "eat up." My predilection for ice cream and homemade chocolate cake in preference to French soufflés, hollandaise sauce and lobster mousse she condoned as a hang-over from childhood. But my steadfast refusal to become a morning tea drinker she took as a personal affront. If I discouraged some impractical scheme of hers or failed to share one of her sudden high enthusiasms, she would fling at me, "What can you expect of a man who fills himself up with cold milk?"

One part of the estate we both avoided. This was the road leading to a large, empty carriage house. There was a forbidding gloominess about the building which was sufficient to make me shun it even if I had not known its tragic associations. Several years before our tenancy the carriage house was the scene of the suicide of a beautiful actress. But as the tragedy had occurred when Gertrude was in England there was no reason to believe that she might know of it. I hoped none of our guests would enlighten her, and I warned several of them against mentioning it. Apparently none did, because her delight in the estate, her eagerness to return to it every night, continued through the five months of our lease.

Ours was not a selfish honeymoon. Pam would come to see us, sometimes bringing her young Doctor Bill. They planned to be married after his graduation that summer. Gertrude already was deep in plans. Old friends frequently came down. Only matinee days were strictly guarded. Then I went to town early while Gertrude breakfasted in bed on tea with milk and raisins soaked in lemon juice. A vocal teacher had once told her this was good for her throat. Before she left for the theater she might have some yoghurt and honey.

After she reached her dressing room Hazel would telephone Sardi's to send over whatever light food Gertrude wanted for lunch before her matinee. Her dinner, also light, came from Sardi's, too, and was eaten in her dressing room. After the night's work she would be weary and ravenous. At such times there was nothing she enjoyed more than Beef Tartare—chopped raw beefsteak mixed with chopped green onion and a whole raw egg with which the stars of grand opera replenish themselves after an exhausting performance. With this she would drink a tankard of Canadian ale.

I would watch her put away this hearty—and to me repulsive—bloody provender with awe bordering on horror. As I was one of those brought up to regard any meat that shows a tinge of red as unfit for human consumption ("Take it back to the kitchen!" father would roar at the terrified waitress if a single drop of ruddy juice oozed from under the stroke of his carving knife. And to my mother, "Why do we keep that woman in the kitchen, Mollie, except to cook?"), it came as somewhat of a shock to discover that the exquisite, ethereal creature which was the public's idea of Gertrude Lawrence could put away a meal I had hitherto associated only with ponderous Siegfrieds and Brunhilds and the drivers of transcontinental trucks.

Sundays were set apart for the family. When we first talked of renting the Long Island place, Gertrude said, "We can have your boys with us. They'll adore it. And it will be so good for them to be in the country."

When I said I would like this, she proposed to meet Helen in town and talk it over with her. So it came about quite naturally that Helen and Gertrude should discuss amicably matters relating to my sons' welfare and happiness. All of us were determined on one thing—the boys should never feel pulled by one set of parents away from the other.

In anticipation of the boys' visits, Gertrude never invited friends for weekends. She planned menus of their favorite dishes, provided games and gadgets to entertain them. Pam and Barbara and Harrison were always welcome, and turned up sometimes together.

MORE than once I caught my sister looking at me quizzically to see if I enjoyed these stay-at-home Sundays which were so different from the life I had lived since coming to New York, and curiously—though pleasantly—reminiscent of our Sundays at Northfield as children.

Though I sorely disappointed her in refusing to play the country-gentleman role she saw me in, Gertrude persisted for a long time in playing the role of devoted little English wife despite my efforts at discouragement. I would find she had spent a morning rearranging the contents of my bureau drawers and my closet. According to her ideas of arrangement, not mine. I would look for a suit or an overcoat and not find it. Gertrude had decided it should go to the cleaners, or to the tailor for repairs. Any man knows this sort of thing can provoke a quarrel out of all proportion to its importance. After a few such experiences I laid down a law: no one was to touch my clothes and personal possessions but myself. I had never had a valet and I had never wished for one. Still less did I want my wife to wait on me.

The order held until I had to go out of town one day on sudden notice. I rang up to tell Gertrude I would be home to pick up my bag and drive to the airport. When I arrived, with fifteen minutes to spare, I found her in a swirl of tissue paper, packing two large suitcases with enough clothes to see me around the world. I hate unnecessary luggage, and tissue paper stuffed into my clothes infuriates me. Besides, this tissue paper was perfumed.

I have a bad habit when I am upset of raising my voice. It was formed in young manhood when both my father and mother became somewhat deaf. It was this—although I was then unaware of it—that frightened Dick and increased his nervousness. Before I could stop myself I was shouting at Gertrude, "What do you think you're doing?"

She started as if I had shot her.

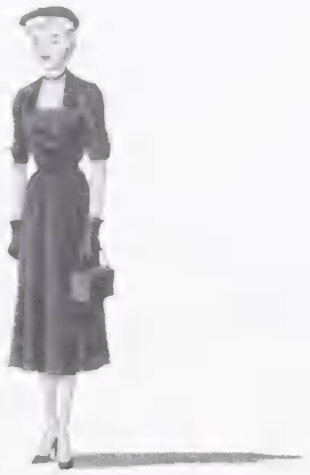
"Why can't you leave my things alone?" I stormed. "I've told you I hate anybody messing around with my possessions."

She burst into tears, and threw herself face down on the bed.

At the risk of missing my plane I sat down and drew her into my arms. Trying to make her laugh at herself, I remarked, "The bed is drenched with your tears. If you cry any more, you'll drown us both in the puddle." As I had hoped, Gertrude began to giggle. Presently she sat up, sniffed, wiped her eyes on my handkerchief and said resolutely, "All right. I've learned my lesson. I'll never do it again."

And she never did.

I knew I was forgiven when in the midst of a business conference the next day I was handed this telegram:



DEAR MR. A WHEN YOU'RE AWAY MY LIFE IS JUST A MUDDLE SO FOR YOUR PLAY HERE'S A HIP HOORAY SINCERELY MRS. PUDDLE

Our quarrel over the gun took longer to heal.

Among the chief delights of Sunday for Gertrude were the newspapers abounding in advertisements. She went through them page by page, scissors and pencil in hand. Whatever caught her fancy—and how easily it was caught—was clipped, and a note made for one of the girls at the Holtzmann office who did errands for her. At first I was appalled by the number of things—gadgets for the kitchen, the garden, the house; a cocktail tray that played Drink to Me Only; boxes and bags for closets; china, glass, linen—she was ordering. Then I discovered that a conspiracy existed between her maid and the Holtzmann office. None of the orders for expensive items were sent to the shops. This was found to be practical because Gertrude seldom remembered after Monday what she had thought indispensable on Sunday. If she did wonder aloud why some object had not been delivered, Dorothy would offer to call up the Holtzmann office and inquire about it. This was always effective in ending Gertrude's interest in the matter.

"I forgot all about our date, Freddy, but if it'll make you feel any better, I had a wonderful time, anyway."

It was part of her agreement with the Holtzmanns that she would make no purchases, except those paid for out of her allowance, without their O.K. But sometimes she would evade this and order things sent C.O.D. to Mrs. Richard Aldrich. To forestall this, I gave orders that no C.O.D.'s were to be accepted.

One day Gertrude confronted me in a high rage. "Who gave orders that my purchases were to be returned?" she demanded.

She had seen an advertisement of a rifle which struck her as exactly what was needed to lure me into sportsman's tweeds. She wrote Abercrombie & Fitch to send the gun C.O.D., planning to give it to me for St. Valentine's Day. When it failed to arrive, she rang up the shop and made inquiries, only to be told that two attempts had been made to deliver the rifle, and in each case it had been refused.

It took me some time to make her see—longer to get her to admit—that she was quibbling with an agreement which was in existence before our marriage and which she had promised me to observe.

"Well, you've done yourself out of one present and a lot more," she said finally. "Always Right Aldrich."

The name, coined in that moment, became her retort whenever she resented what she felt was my interference with her pet projects.

PRESENT giving was an unfailing delight to her. You could no more keep Gertrude from showering gifts on everyone she knew than you could keep the sun from shining. Every holiday became an opportunity to send messages and presents to those she loved. Until our marriage I had been unaware of Valentine's Day, St. Patrick's Day, Halloween, and so on. Now they and the greater feasts were marked on my calendar. I turned up at the Hobarts' one February fourteenth with a heart-shaped box of candy. My sister looked at me with such astonishment that I said quickly, thrusting the box at her, "It's Valentine's Day."

"It's the millenium," Barbara retorted. "I knew Gertrude Lawrence was wonderful, but I never knew how wonderful till this minute. If only Father and Uncle Sam Aldrich could see you now!"

When Gertrude was on tour her zest for giving and sending presents mounted. Every mail brought packages from every city she in. Seeds, plants for the garden, gad the house flowed in until I would send tory wire to Jack Potter to try to ke trude in bounds. Whenever she oper new play she would say to him and t "Don't tell Richard or the Holtzma make a list of all the stage hands a families, particularly the children. grandparents." She kept a list of the b of the stage crew and she never forg When members of their families were their children graduated from schoo was supposed to tell her in order that sh send appropriate gifts.

SHORTLY before Easter that year when driving in to her matinee she saw a baby ducklings outside a market n Queensboro Bridge. She made her c stop while she bought two. She held her lap the rest of the way and then them over to Hazel to care for until s home that night.

I was away in Chicago. As a greetin return Gertrude planned to have th swimming happily in the fountain. U nately, the weather did not play in v scheme. The ducklings were rescued before the water froze fast around the

I arrived at the house late, just bef trude was expected to return from the When I switched on the light in my ba I was greeted by excited quacks and spl The two ducks were very much at hon tub. Someone had thoughtfully arra them a beach of bath towels and pro mass of revolting mushy vegetable ma

"Niggling," she termed my objectio showed a lamentable want of scienti osity. Didn't I want to study ducks?

"No," I retorted, adding that ther comfortable suite at the other end of th dor which either the ducks or I would that night and thereafter. Gertrude c cide which of us was to make the mo

"No rabbits," I adjured her as Eas nearer and her plans for entertaining progressed. "And if I come home an baby lamb in my bed I'll send it to the This business of pets has to stop some I told her.

Despite my protests, the pets increa

First there was Bounder, a half-grow berant English sheep dog, one of a litt Hart raised on his Bucks County far the canaries saved us from one or se Wally's kittens. When Barbara tele that the Hobart ménage now include purebred Siamese, I saw an acquisitiv in my wife's eye. I reminded her quick duty to Winnie and Franklin. Besides she said in persuading Barbara to take that there was a market for pedigreed She wouldn't want to do Barbara o good thing.

"Darling, it was a lovely honeymoon trude said, when we drove away. Her p closed the night before and we were for the Cape for ten weeks' holiday.

YOU AND YOU ALONE may some day be forced to select the family cemetery plot and a monument of marble or granite to grace it. Far better if this decision is made jointly by all concerned while all are here. Suggest that in consideration to you, your family take this step now. You will all experience a tremendous sense of satisfaction for knowing your love has been given eternal expression. Your local monument dealer-member of the Monument Institute of America will gladly assist you. In the meantime, mail the coupon for our valuable booklet, "Help At a Time of Sorrow."

You can rely upon the advice and counsel of the Monument Dealer who displays this Emblem.

MONUMENT INSTITUTE OF AMERICA

HELP

MONUMENT INSTITUTE OF AMERICA, INC.
282 Delaware Avenue Buffalo 2, N.Y.

Send me a copy of "Help At a Time of Sorrow."

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ Zone_____ State_____

L-8

OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATTERNS ON PAGES 42 & 43

Vogue Design No. 8396. Coat; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 8407. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 8400. Suit; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 8395. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 40. 75c.

8396 8407 8400 8395

nything you would have had ked.
." She breathed deeply. "But at we're leaving Ballybrook, I as terribly worried you would ate the place. You know that e house ——" retorted, "that I have married rful woman in the world: one something and not tell it."

d my mother had met at last.

ing was propitious. The net ff silence on the part of each her was mentioned.
as accustomed to make a short to Uncle Jim and Aunt Alice Perry Street. The three Joys g separated for long. Though ed New York, considering it Boston, which, in its turn, she oton, she conceded that it ofdvantages in the way of cond missionary meetings.
to have mother spend the first sit at Ballybrook Farm, where ldriches would meet in favor-ces and—I dared hope—dis-in each other to respect and ve. On this occasion, however, to stay with Barbara.
ested that mother should see ttince of Lady in the Dark and age to meet Gertrude after the ve misgivings about the choice place. Still, I thought that she ssed by the regard in which ld by her audience. With diffi-to secure a pair of seats in the ich she was to use with Uncle

, since these were "house for Gertrude, she learned of ts a day or so before the perot think that even she was fully t moment of how much she her to like her.
on, she became increasingly t the impression her performke on her mother-in-law. In wondered and worried about n the second act—"Jennie"— ressed Lady in the Dark loses ns and sings with the abandon queen.
Uncle Jim arrived early. She disapprove. With the best of d worn her favorite dress and fixed for the occasion.
se to the stage, the two elderly dered by the glare of the lights the orchestra a few feet away.
in went up on a scene which ast-talking, wisecracking staff York magazine, mother was ed. She reacted by fixing her head with impassive dignity.
lly mystified by these theatri-llowed suit.

maying picture that met Ger-she looked across the foot-an a little upset, she made a directly to mother and Uncle nother's face for a sign of apr appeared. Gertrude became vous. Her usually spontaneous became subdued and self-lapping of hands at the end of made Gertrude realize what . Her audience had "gone her futile attempt to get a re-other, she was disappointing others who crowded the the-tion acted on her like a bracer.

woman—even her husband's red with all those who had tertained? She could not let

From that instant her mood again, she became the star in-ughter-in-law. When the mo-
"Jennie" she slid off her swing he number with a verve that nce tingle. The performance h.

I had hoped to meet mother at the end of the performance, but I was delayed. In my place, Jack Potter brought the two visitors backstage, and the two Mrs. Aldriches, each in her own way equally frightened, met face to face.

Gertrude greeted them and asked, "And how did you like the show?"

Uncle Jim was the first to speak. His comment was, "I didn't hear a word of it."

Gertrude, who prided herself on her diction, hid her disappointment. She turned to look inquiringly at mother. "And did you enjoy the play?"

Mother hesitated briefly before she answered, "The music was pretty but I didn't quite get the play's message."

The conversation was at this impasse—which Hazel was attempting to surmount by offering the guests some champagne—when, fortunately, I arrived. I headed Hazel off and hustled mother and Uncle Jim into a taxi and to tea at a quiet restaurant, explaining that Gertrude had to nap before her evening show.

Away from the strangeness of the theater, mother confided to me that she found Gertrude "quite vivacious." As for Uncle Jim, it was some months before he told me he would like to see the show again. "I didn't hear a word, that first time, because the battery in my hearing aid went dead!"

Kircher, the astronomer, having an acquaintance who denied the existence of a Supreme Being, took the following method to convince him of his error. He placed a handsome celestial globe in a part of the room where it could not escape the notice of his friend, who, on observing it, inquired whence it came, and who was the maker.

"It was not made by any person," said the astronomer.

"That is impossible," replied the friend.

"You will not," said Kircher, "admit that this small body originated in mere chance, and yet you contend that those heavenly bodies to which it bears only a faint resemblance came into existence without author or design."

On the following afternoon—Sunday—Barbara had invited all the family to tea. Gertrude dressed with ostentatious demureness in a tailored navy-blue suit and a small plain hat. Her only ornament was the British War Relief emblem which she wore constantly and proudly in those days. A similar emblem was pinned to my lapel.

I saw mother's eyes go to it in the first moment of our meeting. And from it to the gold wrist watch and seal ring which had been Gertrude's Christmas gifts. "What has come over you, Richard?" she asked. "I never saw you before blazing with jewelry."

I started to draw off the ring for her to examine the Joy crest engraved on it. Gertrude had conspired with Uncle Jim to get the design for Cartier's. Mother stopped me. "You are entitled to wear that. But that badge on your coat. It would be better to remove it."

To placate her I unfastened the emblem and was about to drop it into my pocket.

"Richard"—Gertrude's voice rang out—"if you take that off I'll never forgive you." She turned to mother with the mien of an affronted Britannia. In her deepest, most resonant tone she said, "You and Richard may be entitled to wear your family crest. The coat of arms of England is my crest, and I wish no other. I wear it with pride. And I expect my husband to do so too."

Mother was effectively silenced. I refastened the emblem. Barbara asked hastily who would take milk and who preferred lemon.

Characteristically, Gertrude instantly regretted the explosion. To atone, she began explaining to mother that the "badge" was that of the British War Relief organization, of which she was an officer. To prove that wearing it in no way contaminated my standing as a Son of the American Revolution, she informed mother that B.W.R. was headed in the United States by Mr. Winthrop Aldrich, "one of your distant cousins."

This remark brought back to my mind a comment reputedly made at the time of our marriage by one of the cleverest of Gertrude's circle of friends: "Gertie got the wrong Aldrich. She thought she was marrying Winthrop." If Gertrude had not known it then, mother was quick to inform her fully at this moment. Though an Aldrich only by marriage, and strongly convinced of the superiority of her own line of Joys, Pickerings and Hartwells to the Aldriches and Stoddards represented by father, mother was too loyal a daughter of the Commonwealth not to share the sentiment of her husband's family, which was that the Aldrich who deserted the Massachusetts Bay Colony and the strict tenets of Puritanism back in 1650 or thereabouts, to become a dangerous liberal with Roger Williams and the Rhode Island Baptists and Quakers, was a renegade whose descendants, no matter how prosperous and illustrious, could not be considered the equals of our simon-pure Massachusetts stock.

THE rapport which I had hoped would be established between my mother and my wife stubbornly refused to sprout. Each of their meetings resulted in a draw. I was relieved when I saw mother off on the twelve-o'clock, bound for Groton. Though she pointedly made no reference to Gertrude, she managed to give the impression that she felt members of her family residing in New York did not do her proud.

Uncle Jim had formed the habit of dropping into my office on his way to or from the nearby Yale Club. His prestige there had gone up appreciably since he became known as the uncle-in-law of Gertrude Lawrence. The climax came when Dr. George Vincent, president of the Rockefeller Institute, warmly congratulated him on the social step upward his nephew had made by marrying Gertrude. He told Uncle Jim that Gertrude was a person of great importance in her own country.

"You might tell that to mother," I said to Uncle Jim.

He took me at my word. When he went up to Groton he expatiated so fervently on Gertrude's intimacy with the great and the royal that it had its effect on mother. She had also been worked on cleverly by Mrs. Henry B. Joy, who made it clear she felt that the Joy family had been honored by Gertrude's alliance with it.

Uncle Jim's barrage was just a little too much for mother's pride to stand without feeling affront. When Gertrude and I drove over to Groton from the Cape, mother had scarcely opened the door to us than she was at pains to tell Gertrude that I had grown up playing with the nicest little boys and girls in Boston. Whatever my connections in New York might be, in Boston and Brookline I knew the Best People. She had seen to that.

"How nice," Gertrude observed. "You see, I never had any playmates, or much time to play. I had to work. Oh, it was work, even if it was dancing and singing in pantomime. And I knew it. I knew the fifteen bob the manager paid me every week meant bread and tea and sausages for mother and dad and myself. At home I was expected to work too. Mother wasn't for letting me get above myself." She held out her strong, capable hands. "I had to do the brights, and clean and black the grate every day. If you think your son has married a fine lady, you're greatly mistaken."

Gertrude may have found the New England character difficult to understand, but quite inadvertently she had said the very thing that could not fail to win its approval. That someone accepted by princes of the blood should also glory in lowly honest labor, and not be ashamed of a humble origin, satisfied mother's ideas of aristocracy which were founded on the ideals of Concord's Sage.

From that moment the thaw set in.

"Let's make it a family summer," Gertrude had said.

Her hunger for a family, for the feeling of belonging to a secure group in which the personal relationships were firmly established,

WELL-GROOMED PEOPLE GOING PLACES
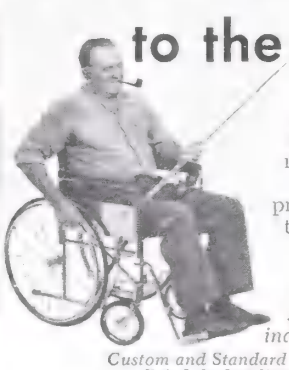
IN PURSE OR POCKET
CARRY ACES

What a convenience! Easy to carry, take little space. Same wonderful quality as larger Ace Hard Rubber Combs for home use. Same wonderful protection for hair and scalp because sharp ridges are polished away, every tooth is sm-o-o-othly rounded. Individually packaged; many styles, for all the family. Moderately priced.

American Hard Rubber Company, N.Y.13.



ACE®
HARD RUBBER
COMBS

SMOOTHER • STRONGER • LAST MUCH LONGER

E & J WHEEL CHAIRS

add the will to the way

Owners are proud to be seen in their modern E & J chairs . . . prouder yet of the activity it helps them enjoy . . . comfortably . . . safely . . . independently!

Custom and Standard folding models
E & J dealers listed in phone "Yellow Pages"

EVEREST & JENNINGS, INC.
1803 Pontius Street, Los Angeles 25, California

FREE! Sunshine Christmas Sleigh

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER: We'll send you colorful five-piece Christmas Sleigh ABSOLUTELY FREE, with complete details and approval samples on how to MAKE BIG MONEY selling famous exclusive Sunshine Christmas Cards . . . best sellers you offer at big profits. Write today for Free Sleigh and details

SUNSHINE ART STUDIOS, Inc., Dept. LH-8, Springfield 1, Mass., Pasadena 3, Calif.

(East of Rockies, write to Springfield office.)

CORNS

Removed by Mosco, also Calluses. Quick, easy, economical. Just rub on. Jars, 35¢, 60¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co. Rochester, N. Y.

MOSCO ★CORN★ REMOVER

was strong. It revealed how unsatisfied she was with her former butterfly existence.

I had agreed. We rented the same large house at Dennis which Gertrude had had the previous summer and moved up—pets, servants and two British boys from the Actors' Orphanage.

"I chose the brothers Ernest and Christopher Gifford because they are the same age as ours. It will be good for them to play together and get to know each other. It will be an experiment in Anglo-American friendship. Like our marriage," Gertrude said.

Our first week on the Cape was dedicated to Pamela's wedding. The house was filled with a mist of bridal white, flowers, presents, sentimental music and young love. I gave my stepdaughter away, and Gertrude played Mother of the Bride in silver gray by Hattie Carnegie and a medley of tears and smiles which only April could rival.

Gertrude's love for Pam was never entirely freed from the anguish she had suffered during the child's infancy. Prematurely born and always frail, Pamela had come into the world just when her parents were finding it impossible to continue their life together. An entry in one of Gertrude's early diaries reads: "When the shouting is all over, my child is all I have." A gold-framed photograph of Pamela as a four-year-old with enormous dark eyes, clinging to her mother, always stood on the table beside Gertrude's bed. It went with her wherever she traveled. A duplicate stood on her dressing table in the theater. After Pam was married a photograph of her as a bride flanked each of the others. They were beside Gertrude when she died, the last things her eyes rested on.

OUR neighbors in Dennis were the Hydes—Dr. Fritz and Dr. Harriet. Theirs was the first house I took Gertrude to after our marriage. The warmth of their reception, the generous opening of their family circle to take her in—not because she was a celebrity, but for herself—won Gertrude's heart. It did much to atone for the chill which emanated from Groton.

As soon as congratulations were over, Dr. Harriet demanded, "Now where will you live?"

I said that Gertrude had fallen in love with the Cape. We planned to build a summer home near Dennis. The problem was to find a site.

"We will give you a piece of our land," Dr. Harriet said at once. "It will be our wedding present. Come on, we'll walk around the place and choose a location."

On a low hill overlooking a richly colored expanse of cranberry bog Dr. Fritz said gently, "I've often thought a house here would be perfect."

"Build here," Dr. Harriet told us. "It's yours."

The Hydes generously let us have two and a half acres; which we insisted on paying for. Later we were able to add to our holdings until we had twenty-five acres. Before Gertrude left on tour that summer of 1940, we had retained Howard Blivens as our architect and had deluged him with any number of conflicting ideas of the kind of house we wanted. As it took shape through 1941 Gertrude bestowed on it a number of names, trying them out before we actually took possession. Ultimately, the name that stuck was "The Berries."

The Hydes hospitably gave us the freedom of their beach. There Gertrude swam, sunbathed, ran races with the boys and the Hyde grandchildren. There, every day, she carried her little portable radio and would lie for hours lulled half asleep by the sea wind, the sun, the sound of the waves and the ebb and flow of a succession of soap operas. Her tolerance for this sort of entertainment was extraordinary. It was one of the things about her which I never thoroughly understood. Finally, I put it down to her insatiable desire to help people. I believe she felt that by listening to the recitals of these mournful heroines of the air waves she was actually doing them a kindness, helping them solve their problems.

She was thus occupied one day and sunbathing on the deserted beach with no more than a towel over her midriff when one of the Hyde grandsons arrived at their house for his vacation. He had heard that Gertrude Lawrence was at Dennis and he announced his desire to meet her. It would be something to boast about when he went back to school.

"She's probably on our beach right now," Dr. Harriet told him. "Go down and you'll find her."

The lad departed. He was back remarkably soon, and his face was very red. "Well?" his grandmother inquired. "Did you see Gertrude Lawrence?"

"I sure did," he stammered. "All of her."

Gertrude's adoption of Cape Cod began in earnest during our Family Summer.

The English boys were lodged at a house near ours where they were available whenever my sons came over from Camp Monomoy. If the first ten minutes after the four got together were quiet, that was the only time between daylight and dark that was not full of shouts, laughter, the banging of doors, the barking of dogs and the wails of the two Siamese cats who arrived with Barbara and Harrison to round out the Family Summer.

As I look back to it my keenest memory is of noise. Every morning I escaped gladly to my office at the Playhouse. But Gertrude loved it. The fatigue of the winter dropped from her. Every morning she was the first one up, singing gaily, planning the day's events—a picnic on the beach, a ball game, surprises and practical jokes.

Only one thing caused her to frown—my steady refusal to play baseball with her and the boys.

"But it's so good for you," she insisted. "You need the exercise."

Bounder, the sheep dog, was larger, shaggier and more ebullient. His readiness to forgive was not the least of his disadvantages as a house pet. He accepted punishment as an inadvertence on your part which he generously forgave and forgot at once. Whipped for what Gertrude would call "mistakes" on a rug, he would leap upon you with delighted barks and lick your face. This overflow of charity Mackie found slightly sickening.

But it enchanted my young cousin, Bunny Lee, a granddaughter of Mrs. Henry B. Joy, who had begged Gertrude to find a place for Bunny and her dramatic aspirations at the Playhouse that summer. Bunny jumped at a chance and did her share of scene painting, prop gathering, and other odd jobs. She lived with the other apprentices, but she managed to spend a lot of time at our house following Gertrude around worshipfully and falling hopelessly in love with Bounder.

She encouraged him in his efforts to get Mackie to forget his years and his decorum and to play with him. This was bad enough. It was worse when Corinne Turner arrived bringing a particularly obnoxious, badly hennaed Pekingese named Evie, for whom Turner had an affection just short of idolatry. Turner—and the omnipresent Evie—had been added to the household because Gertrude decided Turner would be benefited by a month on the Cape and because, with the enormous number of accidents and illnesses that can happen to small boys, it was provident to have a trained nurse on tap.

Mackie's dislike of Bounder was surpassed only by his hatred of Evie. The Pekingese pursued him with unholy zeal. When, driven beyond endurance and good breeding, he would snap at her, her shrieks echoed across the bog. She would hide under a shrub or wallow deep into the sand in order to spring at him when his thoughts were on higher things. I began to sympathize with Mackie.

BOUNDER took all these skirmishes as a game to which he was invited. He would come loping across the lawn and hurl himself upon the hysterical Evie, rolling her over and over with his huge paws until her cries brought Turner to her rescue. Mackie would seize on this opportunity to vent his hatred of both by sinking his teeth in Bounder's hind leg.

This sort of thing going on almost continually was nerve-shattering. When it moved indoors and took place under the dining-room table while we were supposedly eating a pleasant lunch en famille, I asserted myself.

"No dogs in the dining room," I ordered.

"You can't shut Mackie out," Gertrude protested. "He has always gone wherever I go. If you put him out, I'll go too."

"Well, Mackie if you insist," I conceded. "But Bounder goes. And Evie."

She agreed to this. The two outcasts were dragged by their collars out of the room, leaving Mackie looking insufferably smug.

It was no comfort to hear the dry comment of Matthews, the English butler: "When I was in service with the Marquess of Dunbarton, His Lordship never sat down at table without three wolfhounds beside his chair."

The arrival of Barbara and Harrison with the Siamese cats was not opportune. Far from feeling inferior among so many dogs, Wally and David throve on competition. They baited Evie and would stalk her until she shrieked more agonizedly than ever. Between these sorties, they turned their attention to the canaries. Franklin's former dulcet notes and Winnie's low chuckle grew shrill enough to pierce one's eardrums.

I had reason to suspect that the boys egged the cats and dogs on, deriving a fiendish pleasure from the perpetual fracas. A remark dropped by my younger son indicated that the older of the two English orphans, instructed by Matthews, was making book on events.

I issued my ultimatum: "Either those dogs stay out of the house altogether, or I do."

"There is no need for you to lose your temper, Richard," my wife replied with an access of dignity I found infuriating. "It is a bad example for the boys to see. If you have no regard for your own sons, please remember that I am morally responsible for the English children. What impression will they take back to England if you go on like this?"

There came a night of full moon when Bounder set up a wail which pleased him so much that he kept it up. The banshee quaver stirred a Gaelic chord in Mackie and he joined in. Upstairs Evie screamed maniacally.

I leaped out of bed shouting, "This finishes it. Either this wild-animal show moves out of here or I take the next plane." I threw on my clothes, got out [illegible] drove over to the inn at Falmou[th] finished out the night.

Next day at the Playhouse, Bunn[y] into my office. She was beaming. "[illegible] Richard, what do you think?" sh[e] "Cousin Gee has given me Bound[ary]

"Wonderful."

Encouraged, I strolled over to [the] Gertrude lay on a long garden c[hair] triously knitting. A beautiful and[ful] spread over the place like the [wings] gigantic dove. She did not seem [to] see me. She said, "You know you[r] coming the end of this week. Even[ing] be perfect and peaceful. I've told th[em] are not to play close to the hous[e] are to have a picnic lunch on the [beach] day. Harrison and Barbara have [to] look after them."

LIKE A WORN PATH

BY DAVID RIDGLEY

Like a worn path
Dusty and firm between the dry grass patches
Lit dimly by old brightness from the sunset
Is the old recollection I have of you.
Whenever my mind seeks a moment's freedom
I turn without thinking down that path and walk
Until the tall trees suddenly unveil the river
And the river shatters the trees in thousands of leaves.
The long sun blanches the windward slants of the ripples, Bleaches the old rock ledges carved by the swift water
Slowly with an invention beyond thought,
Makes green the wave shadows and the dark tree shadows
That linger, moiled and allayed, near to the shore.

If I should think, I'd take some other path,
Being ashamed to follow that one still,
But it comes too readily to my feet, being made
Not by my will but love's young helpless feet.

SHE knitted half a row before [she] still in a light conversational tone[,] sending Evie down to board at Do[g] And in case your mother has a pi[ty] cats, the vet here is going to keep Barbara goes back to town."

"So the zoo is reduced to Mac[k] canaries?"

"Poor Mackie," Gertrude si[ghed] scratches himself and his nerve[s] much upset. Your Helen Mahone[y] ably been feeding him scraps in th[e]

My Helen Mahoney was the co[ok] had engaged the summer before [Ger]trude was on tour. She was the one [in] the household who was not of G[ood] lection. Gertrude respected her [for] her character, and Helen though[t] "Mrs. Aldrich," but there was [no] doubt that she considered me the [best] was—and still is—a great comfort [to]

"If you would stop feeding ri[ght] Mackie at the table ——" I was [in]terrupted Gertrude cut in: "Exactly, darling[,] sent him down to Doctor Zepp t[o] Evie left an hour ago in the station[wagon]

From the terrace where the birds [were] came Winnie's contented chuck[le] "With no pets around I'm afraid I [shall] going to be lonely for His Lord[ship's] hounds."

Gertrude eyed me. "I had a [talk] Matthews," she said. "I told him [that] mother is here everything is to be [done] New England way. He can forget [Dun]barton for the rest of the summer.

"Poor Matthews! How did he t[ake] it?"

"Not too well at first. I had to [explain] him that Poopsie Dunbarton wasn't [coming] to me. He used to have a weakness [for] girls. Three wolfhounds beside his [chair] have been quite restful after what [with] his lap the last time I set eyes on [him] lapsed into Cockney. "A fair cau[se] sie was. In dressing rooms."

"Bunny is right," I affirmed. "[She's] wonderful."

The grin vanished as swiftly as it [came] wife lifted her face. Her eyes [were] bright. "Darling Mr. A. Promise [me] thinking so, forever."

"Everything in the New Engl[and] Gertrude repeated a dozen times [a day] as she made ready for mother's arr[ival]

Mother was to arrive late o[n the] afternoon. Gertrude's preparatio[ns for] visit centered on the Sunday-mor[ning] fast. As she had not taken me int[o] dence, I was as amazed as moth[er] bara when the customary fruit and [cereal] followed by a platter of smoking-h[ot] and another of hot fried cranberry [muffins]

To those who are unacquainte[d with] specialty of the Cape, let me say t[hat] are triangle-shaped and about th[e size] doughnut. Two rich crusts hold [cooked] berries and sugar. The pies are fr[ied] fat and served very hot, sprinkled [with] dered sugar. If you have been out i[n the] hours, two or three cranberry pie[s] come adjunct to a cup of coffee. Bu[t] have just risen from a good night's course following fish balls they a[re] overgilding the lily.

"Where did you get this idea?" I de smiled sweetly from her end of "Darling, you told me about them

You said you used to love them when Dickie's age. And your father al-them on Sunday mornings."
true that occasionally we had the special breakfast treat, when we went pe for a holiday.
don't have to eat them," I warned ld like one," she replied firmly. "And sh ball."

t you afraid you'll have indigestion?"
nterposed.
o I can take a soda mint," mother
rtly.
k me that the senior Mrs. Aldrich g her best to meet her daughter-inay.
reakfast, seeing no papers about, I atthews whether the chauffeur had wn to the village for them. I was in-hat, by Mrs. Aldrich's orders, no ere to be brought into the house on I sought out Gertrude in her room, was dressing to accompany mother oys to church.
's the idea—no newspapers?" I de-minded me that I had told her this at my home when I was growing up.

we want your mother to be happy lon't we? And she won't be if things at she is used to."
it's time she got used to some other
," growled.
le regarded me with disapproval. I she was playing the role of a proper land wife and daughter.
u coming to church, Richard?" she er that I would drive her and mother oys to church and leave them there.

s going down to the village for the would spend the morning very reading them in the garden. But as on to her, I would gather up the ing evidence and hide it before mother from church. I did not add that I having a conference with Helen to discover what, if any, bits of local trude had added to Sunday dinner.
n worked out very well. The garden tfully quiet. Dr. Harriet had offered he churchgoers home so I had time ny papers and to carry them off to oom before the family assembled for nner.
ore this was announced, Matthews with cocktails. I enjoyed Gertrude's he glanced fearfully at my mother, ned suddenly.
just another Cape Cod custom," I ntly. "Like fish balls and the cran-
, no one has to take one unless he I enjoy a drink before my dinner sually have one I see no reason for otherwise."
tulations," Harrison said.

t point dinner progressed happily.
mother sought me out. She ap-htly shamefaced as she asked me if I could find her a Sunday paper.
the habit, she confessed, of taking York Times upstairs with her on ternoon when she lay down.
your father did not approve of s on Sunday," she said. "But I have ttle lax in late years. However, I althe church notices first."
the paper and tucked her up on her
t. d," she said, "don't tell Gertrude,
wouldn't want to hurt her feelings.
ried so hard to make everything or me. And if she does not read the s on Sunday there is no reason why ffend her principles. Too few young e principles these days."
ertrude has principles," I assured may not be according to the Groton t there's nothing wrong with their wer."
d," she said. "When I first saw her y I was very much upset. I did not u could want such a woman as your now that I know her better, and I have seen her with your sons, I feel very differently."

I bent down and kissed her. She seemed surprised.

"Why, Richard!" she said.

"Just some of Gertrude's influence," I told her. "Have a good time with your Sunday reading. And if you'd like a tabloid, maybe I can find one."

Gradually the household reverted to its normal ways. Mackie completed his cure at Doctor Zepp's and returned to us. Without Evie to incite him, he was his usual dour self, paying no attention to anyone but Gertrude.

The boys took up baseball practice again and mother was invited to umpire when Dr. Harriet was busy elsewhere. She told me that it was the happiest summer she had known since our summers at Northfield. Nothing revealed mother's fixed intention to get along with her daughter-in-law so clearly as the way she accepted Gertrude's name for her—Mother Mary. To Puritan ears it was somewhat disturbing at first. But mother was determined not to hurt Gertrude's feelings. She grew to cherish the name. In later years, when Gertrude spoke and wrote to her simply as "Mother," she would sign her letters "Mother Mary."

The boys were leaving to join their mother, and Christopher and Ernest returned to their school. Mother went back to Groton. Gertrude and I, for the first time, were alone.

"Isn't it heavenly!" she sighed. "I do love your boys, Richard, but I must say the peace and quiet are wonderful. How do you feel?"

I said that I felt that I could do without the sight of a boy for a long, long time.

We sat quietly waiting for the moon to rise.

Presently Gertrude sighed again.

"The stillness, darling," she said. "Of course it is heavenly. But isn't it a little too still?"

(To be Continued)

New miracle way to "cream" your coffee!

PREAM

Imagine! A delicious 100% dairy product in powdered form that stays fresh without refrigeration!

Not a substitute! Pream is a true dairy product — made entirely from fresh, sweet cream and other milk products—powdered for your convenience. Nothing is added!

Never sours! Never "turns." Because it's in powdered form, you don't have to store Pream in your refrigerator. It keeps indefinitely while sealed! When opened for regular use, Pream stays fresh tasting to the last spoonful.

Saves over ⅓. One container of Pream goes as far as 2 half pints of coffee cream . . . yet costs you so much less!

Instant dissolving! Just put a spoonful of Pream on top of your cup of hot coffee or tea. Stir to blend . . . and enjoy! Get Pream at your food store today!

SEND FOR FREE RECIPE BOOKLET— 37 wonderful new short cuts to flavor using Pream! Mail name and address to Sally Ross, Pream Test Kitchen, Box 959B, Columbus 16, O.

Richer-tasting iced coffee! Put Pream on top of hot or warm coffee, before you add ice. Pream doesn't dilute coffee.

Iced or Hot— the new way to "cream" it is to Pream® it!

©1954, M & R Dietetic Laboratories, Inc., Columbus 16, Ohio

TUSSY...

THE INSTANT DEODORANT

Instantly stops perspiration odor... checks moisture!

Works fast... no waiting to dry! It's the modern speed deodorant; starts to work at once. Checks perspiration moisture. Stops odor and keeps it stopped all day long. Actually suppresses odor-forming bacteria.

You don't become immune to its effects! Month in, month out... year in, year out... every day you use it, it protects your daintiness.

Beautifies underarm skin. It's a cosmetic! It's a lovely cream deodorant made with a face-cream base. Makes skin softer, smoother, and prettily presentable in bare arm fashions.

Tussy Cream Deodorant is safe for normal skin and the most delicate of fabrics. Won't dry in jar. Only 50¢ and $1.

Carry a Tussy Stick Deodorant when you travel. $1. Prices plus reduced tax.

TUSSY cream and stick deodorants

LILLIAN BASSMAN

"Everybody thinks m naturally curly," says broth, who gives herself permanent every two The secret? "I use pin-c manents to get a soft curl. Actually my hair straight and coarse." F has her hair cut and By starting with fresh e avoids a frizz. She pins permanent as she or sets her hair, placing t forward curls at temp ears in just the spots wh will be combed out. her hair is cut in layers quires a million tiny cu the front and sides, but is assigned to the back

Beauty Prescription filled by Journal girls

They bring out their best features, cope with the handicaps and brighten every corner of the JOURNAL Workshop. Here are some of their favorite beauty tonics!

BY DAWN CROWELL N
Beauty Editor of the Journ

If your problem is an oily skin, Robinson can help you clear it up. Tl of her routine is that it is a routine faithfully no matter what. Here it is: my face each morning with a bland s warm water, rinse with cold, towel d a brisk patting with a cotton pad s with skin astringent. I follow with tip application of a colorless beaut which acts as a protective base betw skin and make-up, and helps preve from clogging. And last, a light film cake make-up applied with an imm sponge." Dottie uses her astringent day freshening, repeats her morning ing routine after work and again bef time.

"I'm a washout without eye make-up," admits Joan Metcalf, whose colorless lashes and brows are the "penalty" she pays for her beautiful reddish-blond hair and fair skin. To make her eyes seem bluer, bigger, Joan brushes brown mascara on her upper eyelashes. By using a barely moist brush she achieves a dark-lashed look that fools everybody "except my husband—but he approves!" Eyebrows take shape with the use of a medium-brown pencil which she applies in short, outward strokes. For "evening eyes" Joan draws a fine line of black eyebrow pencil across the upper eyelids close to the lashes. Final touch: the barest blend of flattering blue-green eye shadow.

ist fteen pounds without really diet-ay Audrey Meredith, who also lost in her waist and feels better at her t w ght of 115. She continued to eat ve balanced meals each day, making ate for the extra sweets and starches sit for her excess padding. Her re-re acements: clear soups and salads en g sandwich luncheons; skim milk bl ilk; raw vegetables (carrots, cel-di es, green peppers) for between-no s or candy; one pat of butter (inf t or three) for her slice of bread or po to. Unable to drink her coffee A rey is proudest of her twenty-d ner "dessert"—coffee with a tea-of igar, a tablespoon of skim milk.

"I need color to give me a lift," says olive-skinned, dark-haired Mary Margaret Conte. Pimento reds, clear, sharp greens, plaids with coral or turquoise blue are her favorites. Often she adds touches of stark white: a boutonniere of fresh carnations; shortie gloves; chalky necklace or earrings. She applies make-up with a deft touch, using a lipstick brush to curve the outer corners of her lips into the slightest suggestion of a smile . . . an eyebrow pencil to give a gentle upward curve to the ends of her eyebrows. Hair ribbons, bands or combs draw her smooth hair up and away from her face. For night (and for her husband!) Mary Margaret rolls up her page-boy (two rolls each side, one in back) on five linen hankies in her most becoming colors!

e e beauty tricks that save time!"
ta n Wilson, housewife, mother of ts commuter. Her favorites? 1—Her ad ho has a knack for trimming her d lping with home permanents; 2—il lish drier that cuts the waiting t lf; 3—the paint-a-curl prepara-ta uickly give her Workshop hairdo v ok (the colors—blond, silver or co e in liquid or powder form and are ly n a tiny brush—they all wash out);
r cotton disks, the size of a silver t come impregnated with cleansing a skin freshener—a quickie way to p the middle of muggy days; 5—the e nd toilet waters that come with v push-button atomizers and take se nd to fill the air with fragrance!

A flawless, pink-and-white English complexion is a beauty possession Corinna Cunliffe brought with her to America. How does she keep it dewy fresh despite our seasons of scorching sun, steam heat, blustery winds? "I use a little softening cream or lotion every day everywhere—face, neck, elbows, heels, hands. To keep my skin clean I scrub it each night with soap and water, or use beauty grains mixed with water. But I always follow with a softening cream." In the morning Corinna awakens her skin with a splash of icy-cold water, towel dries and uses just the lightest film of tinted creamy make-up base spread evenly over face and neck. Next a creamy lipstick, and a cream-base powder.

I dreamed
I was a cigar store Indian in my maidenform bra®

Knock on wood ! I'm the loveliest maiden in a Maidenform, ever . . . the luckiest girl in this home of the braves. No wonder I'm the wow of every pow-wow !
My fabulous curves are no pipe dream . . .
Maidenform makes this dream come true !

The dream of a bra: Maidenform's Chansonette* in nylon taffeta, acetate satin, or broadcloth . . . from 2.00

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. CUSTOM MAIDEN FORM BRASSIERES TO FIT

GARNISH EACH GLASS OF LEMONADE WITH A FESTIVE "FRUIT KABOB" BEFORE SERVING!

Lemonade's so easy with FROZEN LEMONADE
from Sunny California

Pure California lemon juice already squeezed for you!

Just open a can . . . add water . . . serve! Rich in Vitamin C! No carbonation! No artificial flavor or color!

NOTHING quenches thirst like lemonade, and now even a small child can make a full quart in seconds with Frozen Concentrate for Lemonade. It's the same pure-fruit beverage you'd get if you squeezed fresh-picked California lemons yourself. It's so good . . . so good for you . . . and so economical, too! Costs less than 4¢ per six-ounce glass. Buy a half-dozen cans at a time, and always keep a frosty pitcherful in your refrigerator.

LEMON PRODUCTS ADVISORY BOARD, Los Angeles, California

THE SCRAMBLED HOUSEWIFE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 96

she announced gaily, returning. "He always calls me from New York three times a day. When we bought this house two years ago, we had to wait for a phone, and I missed his calls so much I used to walk to the candy store in the next block every day at noon, no matter what, so that I could talk to him at least once."

When they were married, in the summer of 1944, Bill, newly discharged from the Air Force, had no job. "Both his parents and mine kept telling us 'Wait!'" Dorothy remembers. Her own parents are Italian, and her heritage includes the clear, warm-toned skin, silky dark hair—and a temperament that leaps from woe-is-me laments to the gayest of moods, allegro. As she went on talking, her gray-green eyes, behind her glasses, sparkled. "Between us, we had six hundred dollars in war bonds, so we cashed those and went ahead. All you need to get married is nerve! We spent our wedding night at the Waldorf. The room cost thirteen dollars, and we walked around examining everything in it like a couple of hicks. Then we went downstairs to—I think it was the Peacock Room, and ordered chicken-salad sandwiches, but we were too excited to eat more than one bite." She added in a pleased tone, "We wasted more darn money that night."

A MONTH later, her husband started work in the responsible job he still holds, and the Canners seem to have been wasting more darn money, both happily and unhappily, ever since.

"But not so much the first year," Dorothy says now. "I went on working as a secretary till I was six months pregnant, and our apartment was only forty-five dollars, and we paid cash for Lynne. The trouble started when we wanted custom-made slip covers and draperies that cost a hundred and fifteen dollars. Bill wanted to take it all out of our savings—we even had savings—but I said, 'Oh, no, honey, it's easier to pay in installments, just eight dollars a month.' That was our downfall."

As if on cue, there was a violent crashing sound. "Phyllis!" Dorothy shouted. No answer. "She'll drink a sip of milk and then toss the glass in the sink. She won't ever eat at meals, then she helps herself to anything in the refrigerator, takes one bite, and throws the rest in the garbage can. Lynne's almost as bad. One day she loves peas, the next day she acts like they're poison." She added moodily, "They take after me in their eating habits. I don't have much appetite." (She weighs 109 pounds and is 5′5″ tall.) "It's so hectic around here in the mornings Bill and I never get more than coffee, and the kids eat catch-as-catch-can."

Although the Canners spend $185 or more a month on food, this, too, is on a catch-as-catch-can basis. "I never know till afternoon what I'm going to have for dinner. Then I'll call up and order," Dorothy said. "If I went myself, I'd have to take Phyllis and the baby, and that would be bedlam, and I wouldn't even have the car, because Bill uses it for work." (It's a 1946 sedan that cost $650 secondhand.) "He'd gladly market for me Saturdays if I'd make out a list, but I never get around to it. Anyway, he likes the best cuts of meat, so he's not too economical either. And even if I get to a store, I'm never satisfied to get just what I need, I go on and on buying other things."

Two years ago, they heeded the lure of a "food plan" radio commercial, and acquired the $560 freezer that now sits in the basement like a cold, empty white elephant. "We were going to buy a new car, because the old one's falling to pieces, but I had big ideas about how I'd save money buying food ahead and freezing it. The salesman came to the house, and he said there would be no time payments, that it didn't go through a bank. He said if we didn't have the money one month, we could pay the next. It sounded so wonderful we bought the freezer. That smart, smooth salesman had no figures at all to show us. He just said the girl at his office would type up the papers. But the very next month came the time-payment book, and everything was just the opposite from what he'd said it. We called the company to complain. They said, 'Oh, that was a new salesman. he got a little mixed up.'" Her expres said "Look who got mixed up!" She "I never get the time to freeze anyth

They still owe on the freezer, wa chine and storm windows. Payment $17,500 house have jumped rece $101 to $106, including property tax thy exclaimed, "I should be dissatis I have a lovely modern ranch house

Yet when you admire the handson pine cabinets in the gleaming kitche tensely, "But they ought to be wa mark on the spotless pastel-colo throughout the house, and she tells the woodwork needs scrubbing. Bef married I used to be a fuss-pot, but so much to be done that I start on like fixing a sandwich for lunch—th middle of that I stop and clean the says I worry too much about the lit and not enough about the big ones doesn't worry enough about anythin wasn't for his good disposition, w sunk. He almost never gets mad at sometimes about money."

Asked if debts were the chief o their marriage, she looked surpris call that an obstacle!" She added "No, I'm the chief obstacle. I have zation."

At this point, Phyllis appeared long, silvery train of aluminum re foil. "Phyllis, that costs money!" exclaimed.

"I know," Phyllis cooed sympa unrolling another few yards of foil, pling it busily.

Her mother said, "But when she enough to be quiet, then Bill and I crazy. No matter what child gets sic of giving it aspirin or something an to see, we panic and phone for the When the baby had a cold recently, one week's house calls was $30. H tion fees ($5.40 deducted from each cover surgical and maternity bene not my teeth! I never just need a f always a hundred-dollar tooth."

Current bills include butcher, g department-store charge accounts, children's clothes. Bill hasn't had for two years. Dorothy bought one $2.98 cotton dress this past year. pairs of shoes for the kids—that seven dollars at one whack," she s school jackets for Lynne and couldn't call that extravagant." She tioned happily that for Lynne's eig day they had bought her "an ext Bill got a good buy through a friend dollars, and it was on wheels. I t would keep the kids out of the li nights, but then we wheeled it int room; and if you ever want real lu ought to have a TV in your bedro can lie back and watch—m-m-m-m

LYNNE, arriving home from St. Lu chial school, in nearby Whiteston you, "Once I got a weekly allowa cents, but not after they gave me m set." She's a sturdy, friendly little taffy-colored hair, who shows yo source of income by wiggling a l tooth. "That'll get me a dime." She's Scout, and in grade 4-B now. "W real ink!"

"Lynne, your shoes are muddy!" exclaimed. "How did you get that

"Oh, boys!" Lynne said. "We playing nicely, but boys never like nicely, so they came and threw m She didn't explain how the monstr mud slingers happened to aim o shoes. While she was changing clothes, Dorothy mentioned that L marks semester before last (a 78 av reflected her dislike of school, bu she's adjusted and happy, with B-p Parents must sign each complete homework. "And if Bill says it's ynne to copy it over, then she brings nd I sign."

returning, tells you gaily, "When I me and my friend across the street e neighbor's mailbox and took the l tore them open and threw them all y said, "I came out and there were checks from the neighbor's bank flapping all over our lawn! I die kids do something like that. I feel as ny fault, as if I'm the one doing it."

ed about her five-year-old son Billy, first grade at St. Luke's, on a noon-shift. "He's the most affectionate of ants you to show you love him. If I hug, he thinks it's really something.
ent to a school entertainment, who ee but Billy sitting down front in the n, hugging and kissing the little girl
. I was sort of startled, but I guess s way of saying 'I like you.'" ked sad, suddenly. "Five minutes
t them all in bed, I start thinking, was I so mean to them? Tomorrow ferent.' Then I wake up tired and d it's the same thing all over again."
brightened as she described how her gets up at night with the children.
er about it than I am. And he does ne shopping for their clothes." She a pagoda-print slip cover. "He even this fabric. But he always seems to t he wants, and I can't ever make up
." As she went on enumerating her extracurricular chores—doing weekry, washing dishes, putting the child—she looked rather dumfounded.
t I add it all up, I'm amazed!"
ou picture to yourself a drudge or a den type, the brisk-moving, pleasant-d Bill dispels this illusion cheerfully.
g on his German ancestry, he says, n be a stubborn Dutchman." He is weighs 135 pounds (his top weight and he has an outsize good humor ng Canner chaos. "When Dorothy k about finances, our sessions are e to Obscurity. But I say why brood?
s been a hustler. I've been earning s six and sang in the Flushing Episr where my dad was sexton. When tight I go out and grab an extra job."
nings as an investigator are on a fee he five to ten cases he interviews and orts on daily. His semimonthly pay fore deductions, range from a high o a low of $107 when business is h fall. "But instead of planning he cut, we just don't," Dorothy said.
we start getting calls about unpaid such moments Bill leaps into the st year he made $100 selling plumbes evenings and weekends; he also rt time at Macy's through Decem-arned $125, half of which he spent rehouse-worn upright piano for Christmas surprise, her favorite date. "Every time she'd see anybody piano, she'd say how much she one," Bill explains. "So now what ver? She's forgotten all she knew ic, and she plays every piece as slow al march. Me—I play better with cooks better, according to Dorothy hildren. His pièce de résistance is The last time Dorothy was pregnant, whim for lobster and I had to pay rs and twenty cents for two. In one is a luxury, but I figured it was a ical necessity." They got a run for ney by letting the lobsters crawl e kitchen, to entertain the children.
!"

d them stuffed, with a butter sauce."
y remarked, "And he puts soy sauce thing—even on steak. He can't stand much, he thinks they're too gooey.
I made a beef stew, he even put soy that!"
g is her pet hate. "But if I were doing et place, then I'd like it." As she prener that evening, Lynne and her blond brother dashed into and out hen hollering in mutual fury: "He my program. . . . No, she pushed away and ——" At almost automatic intervals, Dorothy yelled, "I've had about enough! Do you want to be sent to bed?" When the baby, in the next room, roared in anguish, Dorothy called, "Lynne, what's Phyllis doing to J. P.?"

Lynne's voice was casual. "Oh, she just fell on top of him and then sat on his legs."

In spite of these constant distractions, you sit down to Dorothy's own specialty, a magnificent lasagna: wide noodles baked in layers with ricotta, Mozzarella and Parmesan cheeses, and Italian sausage. It's typical of Dorothy's warm generosity that she'll go to lavish trouble because a visitor has never tasted homemade lasagna. You notice she watches her husband's face eagerly as he takes a first bite. "What do you think, honey?"

"Could have sat a little longer," Bill says judiciously, "but the seasoning's very good."

As the four young Canners contribute their own brand of seasoning to the meal, and bedlam seems to hit the ceiling and bounce, Bill says, "Some families call this the dinner hour, but I call it the Ulcer Hour. I work hard all day, I eat lunch at a counter in ten minutes, and I say I'm entitled to one decent, peaceful meal a day." In a softer tone, he goes on, "But I realize it's not easy. Some nights I come home and Dorothy's looking so done in I tell her, 'Oh, go play bingo. Go out and live. Live dangerously!'" He and his wife laughed. "But I also tell her it's the stimulus of frustrated women—that silly dumb gambling game."

Dorothy said quickly, "Not that it's an obsession with me. You should see some of the women! They get so worked up we kid them and say, 'Put your guns on the table!' Honest, I think they lose ten dollars a night." She admitted that her husband thinks the four or five dollars a week she herself loses bingo-bango would be useful to help pay bills. "And once he got so fed up he kept going off to Three-D movies, so I had to stay home; and anyway, I hate Three-D. We used to get a sitter and go to a movie together, but not since I started bingo." (She started before her fourth child was born.) "When we first dated, we went roller-skating at a rink. My mother had been very strict with me, but after she met Bill, she let me go out all I wanted, and not even get in by ten o'clock."

"So maybe she regrets it now," Bill said, grinning.

"Dope," his wife murmured fondly.

She grew up in Bayside, Long Island, in the hospitable Giacone household that included her Italian-born father and mother, a younger sister and brother, grandparents, and "lots of company all the time." Because of Mr. Giacone's late working hours as a chef (now at the Hotel Hildebrecht in Trenton, New Jersey) he had almost no time with his children. "But Monday was his day off and he'd take us fishing," Dorothy said. "He's the sweetest-natured man you'd want to meet. And what a cook!" During the depression, Mrs. Giacone went to work as a dress finisher, to augment a cut in her husband's salary, and she has worked ever since. "She'd call up and order groceries because she had no time to market," Dorothy said. "She's a very good cook, too, but she didn't want my sister and me in the kitchen. Nothing we did was right. But my mother and I get along fine—when she tells me I'm wrong, I pay no attention. And she always takes time off to keep my kids when I have a baby."

Talking about the strictness, Dorothy remembers, "I wasn't allowed to go to high-school parties, but I was captain of the softball team, and I took horseback riding lessons, and piano." She graduated with B grades. "And maybe the old-fashioned kind of discipline was better," she said slowly. "I see young boys and girls now—they smoke and stand around on street corners; already I worry about our kids, hoping they'll never be like that."

It was on a street corner that seventeen-year-old Dorothy Giacone first met Bill, at a neighborhood bond rally. "But I was with my mother, and a girl friend introduced us." Bill had graduated from Flushing High School with B-plus grades, and was working in the Long Island Star Journal's advertising department, at $40 a week. He says, "I was nineteen, smoking a long cigar, making like a big wheel. I asked Dorothy to go to a bar—sophisticated stuff—and I didn't even drink!"

Neither did Dorothy. Mrs. Giacone had tactfully gone home early, but her influence lingered on. "I was afraid she'd hear about it if I went to a bar. When all the rest of the crowd said they were going, Bill felt sorry for me, so he took me into a drugstore for a soda."

"And was she aloof!" her husband says now. "I could see she was a nice kid, but I didn't go home that night and moon and moan over her. I slept like a log."

He had, however, taken the precaution of inviting Miss Giacone to accompany him to the Paramount the next afternoon, with a group of friends. "That was a Saturday," Dorothy explains, "and I was working part time at a store besides going to secretarial school, but I didn't want to tell Bill no, so I got my kid sister Rosalind to go with him in my place, because we look so much alike."

"Was I confused!" Bill exclaimed. "I'd thought Dorothy was such a shy, quiet type, but that second date she never stopped talking. She did everything but recite the entire Declaration of Independence!" (Sister substitute Rosalind, barely sixteen, was endeavoring loyally to be as effervescent as she thought older women were, on dates.) Bill went on, "So I thought to myself, 'Maybe the first night was an act, and this is how she really is—heaven deliver me.'" Fortunately, he saw double in time; when he took home the date he thought was Dorothy, the real Dorothy met him at the door. "What a night that was," Bill wound up, exhausted even in retrospect. "I thought I'd gone nuts."

NEXT MONTH

YOUNG AMERICA
WRITES ITS OWN STORY

Scudder Parker tells about his wife Bets and his four children—about a long search that led to a 136-year-old Vermont farmhouse—and about some unusual livestock named Faith, Hope and Charity. You won't forget

OUR WORLD IS A GARDEN

By SCUDDER M. PARKER

HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES
in the September JOURNAL

From then on until he went into the Air Force, three months later, he concentrated on the older half of the sister act—on and off skates. They were engaged before he went overseas, as a sergeant aerial gunner, to serve in the China-Burma-India area. In the late spring of 1944, he received a medical discharge, after successful therapeutic treatment for an injured arm. During his absence, Dorothy worked as a secretary for the traffic manager of publishers Street and Smith, wrote to Bill every night, and "saved money like a son of a gun," from her salary of first $100, then $140 a month. With part of this cache, after Bill's return, she bought a street-length white crepe wedding dress. "It was really supposed to be a high-school-graduation gown, but that's all I could find." With it she wore a flowered hair bandeau, and a corsage of yellow roses. The small family wedding, on June 17, 1944, was in the rectory of the Blessed Sacrament, "because Bill wasn't a Catholic, so we couldn't be married in the church. It was supposed to be a double-ring ceremony, but the priest forgot Bill was to get a ring too. Finally we reminded him, so the priest went back and did that part over again."

After the ceremony, the Giacones and Canners had a wedding dinner at a restaurant: "Fruit cup and chicken—the usual menu," Dorothy said. Their next stop, the Waldorf-Astoria, was more of a change. They then spent ten days at Maplecrest, a honeymoon resort in the Catskills, and came back to a $51 furnished 1½-room apartment in Flushing. When they moved to the 3-room upstairs apartment in the Giacones' house, their families' wedding presents—dinette set and bedroom furniture—set them up in fine style. "The only big fight we ever had" came a month or so after they were married. "It was a beautiful Sunday afternoon," Dorothy remembers, "and I wanted to go to the beach or something, but Bill just sat pasting our honeymoon snapshots into an album. He wouldn't budge. So finally I said, 'If that's the way you feel, I'm leaving you.'" She stayed away two hours, picturing her remorseful mate pacing the floor, wringing his hands. "So when I got back, there he sat, still pasting! That struck me as so funny. Ever since—we get mad, we raise our voices, it's over in two minutes." She gave her recipe for happy marriage: "Act like you're not married. Bill and I still hold hands."

Lynne announced eagerly, "They lie on the couch together watching TV, and she puts her head on his shoulder. They even kiss in bed."

Bill said dryly, "Your mother and I are very good friends, all right."

Dorothy, smiling, remembered that as a token of friendly esteem Bill bought her a black lace negligee and gown for their first Christmas. "But by then Lynne was on the way, and I've hardly ever worn it yet." They had planned not to have any children for five years. "Because first we wanted a house and car," Dorothy explains. "So at the end of that time we had two kids and the house and the car!"

The $10,750 house, which they bought on a veterans' down payment of $550, with $80-a-month carrying charges, was in a large Beechhurst housing development. Dorothy talks nostalgically of her neighbors there. "Everybody was in the same boat. We all had kids and did our own work, and we'd help each other out, and keep a pot of coffee on the stove day and night, for friends dropping in." The Canners painted and plastered, to convert the attic into two bedrooms. "But by then we had Phyllis. Every time we'd move to get more room, we'd get another baby and be crowded again."

They sold the house for $13,300, getting almost enough in cash for the $5500 down payment on their current home, which was being built by a contractor-uncle of Dorothy's who owns several lots in the area. While they waited for it to be finished, they lived for five months with Bill's married sister, sharing expenses for food and utilities. "And never one cross word between us in all that time," Dorothy says gratefully of her in-laws' hospitality. Bill talks with equal affection of the Giacones. None of Dorothy's family has ever pressured him to become a Catholic. His wife says, "I'd like it if he did, but he doesn't feel the urge and I'd never force him."

He seldom goes to church, perhaps in reaction to his long enforced child labor as a choirboy. "I'm religious; I say my prayers every night—but at home." Dorothy goes to Sunday-morning Mass at St. Luke's, taking Lynne and Billy.

Bill has agreed that all their children will go to parochial schools. Discussing what qualities they most wanted their offspring to develop, Dorothy said in a desperate tone, "Obedience!"

Bill frowned. "Obedience isn't a quality. I'd put honesty and responsibility first." He went on, in a baffled tone, "I'll admit we're never consistent in disciplining our kids, but this generation is always supposed to be going through phases or stages. It wasn't like that when I was young. I respected my parents." (His mother died two years ago. His father, now retired, lives with Bill's sister.) "I'd turn over almost every cent I made to my folks. Maybe that's why I give my kids too much, wanting them to have more than I did, but then I get sore when they act spoiled."

Neither Lynne nor Billy has regular chores around the house. "Lynne's too fresh now, she says 'No' or 'I won't,'" their mother said. "Billy's too slow and mopey. He takes hours even to dress. Once they insisted on doing the dishes together, but they both ended up drenched. It's more bother than help." Bill described affectionately how Lynne tries to help in the mornings, by frying her own egg. "And if one third of it lands in the pan, she's lucky!"

VISITING? CALL LONG DISTANCE FIRST

EXPECTED guests are doubly

When you're going to stop and visit out-of-town friends, it's a good idea to telephone ahead.

You'll enjoy your trip more knowing they'll be home. Your welcome will be all the warmer because you're expected.

Long Distance is the convenient, friendly way to make plans or confirm them. And the cost is small.

LONG DISTANCE RATES ARE LOW

Here are some examples:

New York to Philadelphia ...	40¢
Cleveland to Louisville	75¢
St. Louis to Houston.....	$1.10
Miami to Indianapolis.....	$1.35
Boston to Los Angeles.....	$2.00

You save time when you Call by Number

These are the Station-to-Station rates for the first three minutes, after 6 o'clock every night and all day Sunday. They do not include the federal excise tax.

Bell Telephone System

Don't wonder. Don't worry.
Call today and be sure.

Phyllis heralds the dawn by leaping out of bed in the room she shares with her sister, and galloping from sleeper to sleeper, rousing them to a far-from-good morning. Bill brings his wife coffee in bed, gulps a cupful himself, and is backing out the car by 7:30, to drive the eighteen miles to New York. After Dorothy feeds the baby, she makes a halfhearted effort to get some food into the others. Her husband said, "She buys eight or nine magazines a month, and reads all the articles on child rearing, and once she read that a hot cereal is a must for growing bones or something, so she was a demon on giving the kids cereal. That lasted about five days."

"I read so many different opinions I get all mixed up," Dorothy said humbly, looking young and bewildered.

Whatever reading she does is snatched in midafternoon, while her two oldest are still in school. "Sometimes I get a whole hour to sit down, but Phyllis almost never takes a nap." She does two or three loads of laundry a day, in the automatic washer in the basement, and remarked, "Billy's the only one in his class who wears a white shirt, but he's so cute dressed up." Displaying the portable mangle that was a present from Bill, she said coolly, "I never look at it—I don't know why." When she tackles ironing, "then I often have to let the dishes and other things go." She cleans one room at a time, "then I shut the door fast so the kids can't wreck it as soon as I finish." Theoretically, they keep their toys in the basement and play there. "But by late afternoon the living room's a mess again, and then I break my neck to get it neat before Bill gets home."

Bill tells you, "I'm like Dorothy. I believe a house has to be very, very clean and orderly." He cited his wife's conscientiousness about her home and children, and her thoughtfulness, as the traits he admires most. On a tour through the three bright, immaculate bedrooms, he shows you proudly a beautiful hooked bedside rug Dorothy made. His own hobby is painting presketched landscapes in oils. He also painted and shellacked all the woodwork, built an under-the-stairs closet, and hopes someday to partition off the basement, with a workroom to hold his cherished tools, and a playroom with linoleum floor.

His only overnight separations from his family have been a few weekend hunting trips. Discussing vacations, he said simply, "Where could we go with four kids?" He and Dorothy agreed they'd love to go off by themselves, but soon after this Bill said, "Life without kids would be very shallow," and Dorothy added, "Once we left them all with my mother overnight, and Bill and I came home and the place seemed so deserted and lonesome we hated it."

On summer weekends, they play badminton at the Giacones', and take the children swimming. Bill built a barbecue grill in the small back yard, and described genially the family outdoor feast they had there, "with beer, and an accordion, and everybody singing." They almost never have friends in for dinner. Every other Friday evening, Dorothy goes with her sister-in-law to "a club of girls, where we eat from eight to eleven, all kinds of refreshments, and just gossip. But we plan to do something worth while soon, like a charity."

At this, Bill remarked, "Well, you'r ing there on your stomachs."

Along more active civic lines, in th ban community of 4000 population, has gone out fund raising for the Gir and the polio drive, even when she ha the baby along. Bill is a member of Defense; after a disastrous storm at H Beach, he spent all one Sunday pump flooded cellars. "And when we rode rescuing women in a rowboat, boy, w grateful!"

ALTHOUGH it might sometimes look t sider as if the Canners need a bit of themselves, Bill says confidently, "We real obstacles." He's enthusiastic at work, and hopes to become manager trict office. He thinks the thing the need most is a budget. (Last year, the up about $1000 in the red.) "But after went on, "we're only family wh trouble with mo raising our kids

"It's most fault," Dorothy again.

Lynne, who ready listened t list of these reproaches, su announced in a ing voice, "My can do anything world. She ca delicious thing she can drive th and she takes ca when we're sic she can play and ——"

"She can't piano," Billy with deadly ma

"Well, no," admitted. "B mother can do else."

With so much faith behind harassed young of four can lick problems, and m who knows?—e up lifting a pian

And so, togeth psychiatrist Dr. Hohman and making Editor ret Davidson, th ners launched program of Facing facts first time, Doro Bill realized th to trim expenses and for a long before they'd be in the clear. Their jitt their finances had affected their fami tionships. The children were complet of hand, Dorothy was pounds under and did all her housework the hard w Monday, March 15, she and Bill b six weeks' course of lessons in h straighten out their difficulties.

SIX WEEKS LATER P.S. As we go to pr is Dorothy's own latest report on the C New Look: "Things are already entir ferent. I'd say they're at least 100 p better! We'd got in such a rut of bad but now that we've been helped on th track—it's amazing what we can do, little system and patience. I don't fly handle nearly as much. I feel so muc energetic, since I've been eating right, even have friends in, evenings. I nev bingo any more—and I don't miss it because I'm interested in so man things. The kids each do small jobs the house, and already seem to have sense of belonging. You should see empty ash trays and pick up newspap

For details of this heart-lifting ch and the new bounce in the Canner bu see pages 100 and 102.

STEAM-ENGINE WHISTLE

By MINNIE HITE MOODY

Listen, my grandson—just beyond the hill
It lifts its lonesome voice and wails once more.
A sound with heartbreak in it, tired and shrill;
A sound a million boys have heard before,
And in the nighttime they have raised their heads
Just as you're doing now, and felt a strange Wonder catch hold of them in their safe beds,
Till the sound sped far off and out of range.
It was a sound to part the buffalo grass
Long years ago; a sound with history in it.
Baltimore, Kansas City, Donner Pass. . . .
Listen, my grandson, listen for a minute,
And then remember always, if you can.
It will be gone forever, when you're a man.

Now you can whip up a flaky, tender Pie Shell faster than ever before

Spry makes the difference!

Here's All You Do!

Put 7 tablespoons Spry in mixing bowl. Add 3 tablespoons boiling water, 1 teaspoon milk. Whip with fork until mixture is smooth and thick like whipped cream. Sift 1¼ cups sifted all-purpose flour and ½ teaspoon salt onto Spry mixture. Stir into a dough, work with hands into a smooth round. Roll between waxed paper into circle ⅛″ thick. Fit pastry into 9″ pie pan, prick, flute rim. Bake in very hot oven (450°F.) 14-19 minutes.

You'll be amazed at the time and trouble you save when you use pure, digestible Spry in "Water-Whip" pastry. And you'll get flaky, tender piecrust every time or we'll return your money.

For a cool summer pie, fill cooled, baked shell with cubed cantaloupe, cherries; top with whipped cream. For more, easy Spry recipes, drop a postcard to Lever Brothers, 390 Park Ave., New York 22, N. Y.

Spry makes just about everything you cook taste better!

New! a shampoo that Silkens your hair!

So alluring—so enchanting... this silken shimmer for your hair!

Just one shampoo with New Drene and your hair—

yes, yours—will shine like silk, feel like silk, act like silk!

This is a New Drene formula—

so Mild you could shampoo every day!

JOURNAL

SEPTEMBER
1954 · 30c

THE MAGAZINE WOMEN BELIEVE IN

PUBLIC LIBRARY
Northern Calif.
AS20 SA

WHY DON'T THEY LIKE US ABROAD?

Forum: World Opinions on U. S.

HAROLD STASSEN • CHESTER BOWLES

JOHN J. McCLOY • WALTER ELLIOT • ALFRED MAX

•

COMPLETE NOVEL

SHE SHATTERED WHEN SHE WALKED

By VIÑA DELMAR

Was she second choice with her husband?

•

11 PAGES OF FASHION

•

THIS MARRIAGE COULD NOT BE SAVED

Garry Moore invites you to try All-New Ipana ...on this special Ipana-Tek bargain offer

STAR OF "THE GARRY MOORE SHOW"—CBS-TV NETWORK, MON. THROUGH FRI.

New flavor! New cleaning! New anti-decay WD-9!

ll new Ipana and Ipana A/C now on sale contain nti-enzyme WD-9 (Sodium Lauryl Sulfate)

PRODUCTS OF BRISTOL-MYERS

"NEW IPANA is new all the way through," says Garry Moore. "I like it better than ever—and I'm sure you will, too."

Here's why Garry is so sure:

- Wonderful new minty flavor - - the 2 to 1 choice of men, women and children who tested it.
- Twice the cleansing foam—deep-cleans between your teeth, where tooth and breath troubles usually start.
- Destroys most decay and bad-breath bacteria with WD-9. Just follow package directions.

Why not try new Ipana now? Save 37¢ on the finest tooth paste and finest tooth brush you can buy. Look for the special combination at your store. Supply limited—so hurry.

I dreamed I was a living doll

in my maidenform bra

Maidenform bra in embroidered broadcloth. Also in starched broadcloth or embroidered taffeta . . . from 2.98

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. MAIDEN FORM BRASSIERE CO., INC. MADE BY MAIDEN FORM

Journal

Contents

September 1954

Journalities

…is a R for Love on page 36 that …works—at least it does for the …ne. The author, DREW FROST, operates an antique shop and farm near Wilmington, Vermont. The farm produces hay, maple sirup and cats, she says. She doesn't say whether she herself has used her own prescription for love, but she has a glorious shade of red …that probably necessitates an …ly different set of rules.

…Frost

…r from MORGAN L. KANE, JR., …llustrated VIÑA DELMAR'S novel, …littered When She Walked (page 34): "I am an artist by accident. In 1938 a baseball buddy in my home town of Painesville, Ohio, agreed to hitchhike to Cleveland with me to see the Indians play if I would take my drawings to the Cleveland School of Art and ask for a …arship. They gave me one. After …l I spent three and a half years … the Air Force, then got a job … advertising illustrations in Chi… We later moved to Darien, …necticut. My eight-year-old, Jef… and my five-year-old daughter, …ie are my favorite models. Val …een a cover girl six times. I have …xtremely charming wife, Kay, …was also kind enough to write …etter."

…Kane

…ROGOW, a man who knows a great …about childbirth (It Happens All …Time, page 38), reports he was born in an ambulance in Washington, D. C., in 1919. He is the father of two small children, a boy and a girl, and his hobbies are reading, eating and doing the rumba—"not all at the same time." Other relevant information: "I live …work in a brownstone house on … 78th Street in New York. I … a study painted bright red with …elf full of models of prehistoric …als from the Museum of Natural …ory."

…rogow

Novel Condensation Complete in This Issue

SHE GLITTERED WHEN SHE WALKED, Viña Delmar . 34

Stories

PRESCRIPTION FOR LOVE, Drew Frost . 36
IT HAPPENS ALL THE TIME, Lee Rogow . 38
KATHERINE (Fourth part of six), Anya Seton . 48

Special Features

"THERE WAS A CHILD WENT FORTH," Dorothy Thompson . 11
DR. SPOCK TALKS WITH MOTHERS, Benjamin Spock, M.D. . 23
TELL ME DOCTOR, Henry B. Safford, M.D. . 31
GERTRUDE LAWRENCE AS MRS. A (Third part of five) . 40
Richard Stoddard Aldrich
WHY DON'T THEY LIKE US ABROAD? . 46
THIS MARRIAGE COULD NOT BE SAVED, Dorothy Cameron Disney . 51
HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES: WE STARTED LIFE OVER, . 141
Scudder M. Parker

General Features

OUR READERS WRITE US . 4
UNDER-COVER STUFF, Bernardine Kielty . 16
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY, Gladys Taber . 21
MAKING MARRIAGE WORK, Clifford R. Adams . 26
SCHOOL DAZE (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Ruth Imler . 28
FIFTY YEARS AGO ■ JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN . 33
THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE, Harlan Miller . 50
ASK ANY WOMAN, Marcelene Cox . 78
THIS IS A BLAMER, Munro Leaf . 123

Fashion and Beauty

COLOR IS THE FASHION, Wilhela Cushman . 42
THE COSTUME LOOK, Nora O'Leary . 52
THE TOUCH THAT COUNTS, Ruth Mary Packard . 54
BEAUTIFUL BUYS FOR FALL, Wilhela Cushman . 56
MIX-AND-MATCH WINTER WARDROBE, Nora O'Leary . 146
"I NEED TO BRING MYSELF OUT," Dawn Crowell Norman . 162

Food and Homemaking

ALL SET FOR SEPTEMBER, Ann Batchelder . 58
LINE A DAY, Ann Batchelder . 62
"WHEN I ENTERTAIN," Nancy Crawford . 84
CORINNE GRIFFITH'S COOKBOOK . 104
YOUNG HOME-BUILDERS, Margaret Davidson . 148 SEASON'S BOUNTY TO CAN OR FREEZE, Bets Parker . 150

Architecture, Gardening and Interior Decoration

HOUSE WITH AN "IN-LAW" WING, Carol L. Mercado . 98
PLEASURE AND PRIVACY FOR $99, Richard Pratt . 110
ROOM FOR THE FAMILY, Henrietta Murdock . 152

Poems

FAIRY TALE, Dan G. Hoffman . 14
OLD AND NEW, Margaret G. Mielke . 67
TRUE VISION, M. M. Parrish . 80
FOR KATE IN SEPTEMBER, Helen S. White . 91
WHO LOVES SHALL BE BETRAYED, Jean Todd Freeman . 103
THE CHILDREN AT MIDNIGHT, M. Jean Craig . 113
BIRD WATCHER'S SONG, Georgie Starbuck Galbraith . 126
LOVE POEMS IN THE CHINESE MANNER, Dorothy Harriman . 136
BACK COUNTRY, Elizabeth Coatsworth . 168

Cover Photograph by Wilhela Cushman

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of this issue with which it is to take effect.

Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1954 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S., U. S. Possessions and Canada—1 Yr., $3.50; 2 Yrs., $6; 3 Yrs., $8.50; 4 Yrs., $11. Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America (except the Guianas)—1 Yr., $4. All other countries—1 Yr., $7. Remit by Money Order or Draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Vice-President and Director of Research; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

RED CROSS
Cotton Balls

For applying antiseptic

treating skin irritations

cleansing cuts and scratches

For { first aid use / beauty care / baby care

sterile

Johnson & Johnson

No connection whatever with American National Red Cross

Town & Country Shoes

auburn beauty

...wonderful red-head brown, a burnished calf that sets off every fashion color this Fall. It's new, it's this year, it's a wise choice. Ask to see it. Be sure to wear it in Town and Country Shoes, famous for quality, value, fit.

COUNTRY CLUB

MOBILE

DOUBLE DUTY

SUNBURST

WUNDERBAR

Town & Country Shoes

TOWN & COUNTRY SHOES, 8.95 TO 10.95 THE PAIR. MATCHING T & C BAGS, 5.00 TO 10.95 PLUS TAX.
WRITE US, TOWN & COUNTRY SHOES, EMPIRE STATE BLDG., NEW YORK FOR NAME OF STORE NEAREST YOU.

Our readers write us

Crime-Comic Action

Royal Oak, Michigan

Dear Editors: Objectionable crime-comic books have disappeared from newsstands in Royal Oak, Michigan. Led by the publisher and editors of the Daily Tribune, who were aroused by Dr. Fredric Wertham's article, What Parents Don't Know About Comic Books, in the JOURNAL, this pleasant suburban community decided to investigate. Could the crime comics Doctor Wertham described be found in Royal Oak?

Reporters went to newsstands all over the city to survey the shelves. Their purchases shocked them into immediate action.

Pictures and sequences on the front pages of the Daily Tribune alerted the community. The editors turned their findings over to the Advisory Committee on Publications and notified P.T.A. presidents.

The committee studied the findings and asked the City Attorney's office to draw up an ordinance banning the sale of crime-comic books. In less than two weeks it was presented to the City Commission. One week later it was unanimously passed and took immediate effect.

Royal Oak citizens realize, however, that keeping objectionable crime comics off the stands takes more than a law. It requires the co-operation of dealers and wholesalers. In their area these people were willing to co-operate. However, publishers may change titles and formats to get publications back. This is where local P.T.A. groups function. Besides exerting constant vigilance over newsstands, they ask parents to pledge themselves to censor their own children's reading and make good reading fun.

On the basis of Royal Oak's and other outstanding communities' experiences, here are a few suggestions:

1. Marshal your facts. Don't rely on lurid examples of crime literature some other community has found. Purchase actual samples from your own newsstands. Present the evidence to the entire community. If you cannot enlist the co-operation of a newspaper, take your findings to elected officials, P.T.A. groups, service clubs and church organizations. If no crime comics are being sold in your town, give your local dealer a sizable vote of thanks for voluntarily protecting your children.

2. Investigate local ordinances to see if you already have restrictions on obscene literature. If not sufficient to outlaw crime comics, have them amended.

3. Use existing legal opinion in preparing an ordinance which will withstand the test of constitutionality. Study the report of the New York State Crime Comic Commission and the statutes of other cities.

4. Set up an enforcement agency. And remember that each citizen is responsible for seeing that officials are aware of violations.

5. Support action to suppress crime comics at your state level.

Sincerely,
MARY C. PADGETT
MARION MALONE

▶ Outstanding work also originated in Johnstown and White Plains, New York; Bentonville, Arkansas (now a state-wide P.T.A.-sponsored movement); Wessington Springs, South Dakota; Brooklyn, New York; Providence, Rhode Island; Hartford, Connecticut; Cleveland, Ohio; and by Mercer County, New Jersey, American Legion; Jewish War Veterans of Massachusetts, Miami Optimists, California Congress of Parents and Teachers, National Council of Y.M.C.A., Texas Baptists, Philadelphia Citizens' Committee on Juvenile Delinquency, Catholic Women's League of Canada, to n only a few of the many movemen under way for fall. ED.

Message to the Troops

Ashton

Dear Mr. Gould: I like to rere JOURNALS, so I recently ran a letter in the January, 1953, issue "Army Philosopher" and ad "Dear Bruce." It was signed "W His dad liked it, too, so I tho would be a good thing to send youngest son, Billy, who has beer Army just since January. Here Billy wrote about it:

"When I got your letter, n showed the clipping to the first se He read it and showed it to the c our C.O. As a result there is a graphed copy in every barracks."

Isn't that something? Sincere M.

"That's My Daddy!"

Brooklyn, Ne

Dear Editors: My daughter Ju very proud of her father's paintin "That's my daddy," she called t one who would stop on the bri Mutual admiration.

watch him. I keep a copy of this near the oil painting. Sincere ADELINE S

Speaks Her Piece

Fair Oaks, Ca

Dear Editors: I have a young h who works hard and comes h night tired. I also have three you demanding children, aged one, t five. We live on a small incom little left over for any of the thin sidered "glamorous." Our life use quite hectic, more tears than la with a "tough row to hoe" attitu

I say used to be, becaus Dietrich's article in last Ja JOURNAL changed all that. I read self and then read it to my husba both agreed that she was a pretty cooky. And since her "rules" based on material things, as s your readers seem to think, we t we might give it a try. Therefore up a whole new system of living. now "new people" having more living than we ever thought possi

Here is how it works for us:

I jump out of bed with one tho mind: to get at my day's work an done so that I can have time to nice evening for my husband. (the secret: forgetting oneself and ing about pleasing the one you lo getting at my work early I have afternoon free to take a shower ready for the home-coming. I bathe the children after dinner, they get their bath when I do,

CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

ew! a shampoo that

Silkens your hair!

So alluring—so enchanting... this silken shimmer for your hair!

Just one shampoo with New Drene and your hair—

yes, yours—will shine like silk, feel like silk, act like silk!

This is a New Drene formula—

so Mild you could shampoo every day!

A PRODUCT OF PROCTER & GAMBLE

Your Second
(so much prettier) Skin!

Umm-mmm—what a complexion! It looks all yours—only prettier than it's ever looked before. Because this silk-textured powder clings close as your own skin . . . never flakes, shines or streaks. And there's a Cashmere Bouquet shade that's twin to your skin—whether your basic skin color is pink, ivory, olive or any tone in between!

Conover Girls Pick Cashmere Bouquet

"All our Conover students use this silky Cashmere Bouquet Face Powder," says the Beauty Director of the Conover School. "We teach them to pat it on lavishly, press in well, then brush off the excess for a velvet finish."

Candy Jones (Mrs. Harry Conover)

7 Cover Girl Colors 29¢ plus tax

cashmere bouquet
FACE POWDER

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 4

after dinner it is a simple job to pop them all in their sleepers and into their beds by 7:30. When daddy is home, he is king; it is amazing how well children fit into this pattern once they realize that their daddy is special and needs special consideration after working so hard. Say what they like, a housewife's job is a lark compared with battling the business world for enough to keep a family well these days.

Now a lot of women will be wondering just where and when a little consideration comes in for mother. And I say a mother gets more than her share, not only in seeing her little family running smoothly thanks to her, but also through the fact that one kind deed and bit of thoughtfulness most always gets a return by the receiver. Somebody has to start the cycle, and since it has always been the mother who sets the tempo of the house, it is her job to start things rolling in the right direction: toward thoughtfulness, peaceful living and, above all, a happy husband.

My heartfelt thanks to Miss Dietrich. She is a wise woman indeed.

Sincerely,
(Name withheld by request)

Can You Top This?

Lake Worth, Florida

Dear Editors: Nearly a year ago we had some correspondence concerning Korean children.

I became so interested that since that time I have knitted the following:

3 afghans
12 children's sweaters with sleeves
41 pairs mittens
2 pairs socks
5 baby sweaters (or shirts)
4 caps.

Just thought you would like to know one person's answer to the appeal you made. Sincerely yours,

ANNA E. POLLOCK

▶ A recent letter to the Editors from American Ambassador's wife, Mrs. Ellis O. Briggs, stresses that socks for likely-to-be-frostbitten little feet are now most desperately needed of all in coming bitter weather. Reader Pollock has already volunteered, so we dedicate Journal Operation Sock Knit to her. Use any standard children's sock directions. Knit in horizontal stripes or plain, in sizes to suit your supply of wool. Mail to Mrs. Ellis O. Briggs, American Embassy, APO 301, c/o Postmaster, San Francisco, Cal. ED.

Needs Boyproof House

Whittier, California

Dear Editors: I need a "boyproof" house! Unlike "Old MacDonald" on his farm, I have "here a boy, there a boy, everywhere a boy, boy."

We have one nine-year-old of our own, but that's only the beginning. My husband is the local Cub Scoutmaster, with a pack of 68 boys; I am a Den Mother, with 8 little guys in our den. Out of 16 children in our block, 14 are boys! Now, we also have a five-year-old daughter, but she thinks she is a Cub Scout, too, as she is as busy with the hammer and nails as the rest. If I seem to be complaining, perish the thought. I love them, see, and we have more fun than anybody!

However, I also am a woman, and I love ruffly things. A house furnished in wrought iron and linoleum would leave me cold. I go for early American type of furnishing, with lots of ruffles, organdy curtains and gadgets.

So—what, if anything, should I do? If I remain cozy but soiled, the boys won't care; but what will my husband's boss and his wife think when they come to dinner? Sincerely,

MRS. RAY HOLLADAY
(Just one of the boys!)

▶ Cubs, consulted, at first felt Journal was a "sissy" magazine. Hearing President Eisenhower had been "written up," they recanted and happily agreed to appear. ED.

It Wasn't Our Karen

Larchmont, New York

Dear Editors: Our daughter Karen's story appeared in the August, 1952, issue of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. Nearly two years later, we are still receiving letters applauding. I do wish to point out, however, that at no time did we ask for or receive any assistance from the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults.

In order to eliminate considerable misunderstanding, I should like to state also that Karen has never been a poster child for any organization, nor has she ever made any personal appearance or appeared on radio or television.

Sincerely,

MARIE KILLILEA

Time for a Change

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Dear Editors: An attractive, not-so-young, single friend tells me that her mother looked up from her book the other night and remarked succinctly:

"Ruth, whatever it is you've been doing wrong all these years, it's time you stopped!"

Isn't that more or less the theme of Doctor Popenoe's new course—and of our new JOURNAL feature, How to Be Marriageable? Cordially,

E. HORTON COLE

Can't Can Annie!

San Felipe, Chile, S.A.

Dear Editor: Some time ago a fellow clubwoman arrived from the U.S.A. She had been there long enough to acquire an accent for her Spanish and a hundred-word vocabulary in English, in which yes, no, hot dogs and Coca-Cola were the main courses. Well, she spoke at one of our meetings, and mentioned the cooless lives Americans lead.

This Enlarged Mind went on to say she bought her food canned and heated it before serving, as these are American ways. Now then, where does Ann Batchelder come in? Does one buy the canned Ann Batchelder menu and just uncan it, and there it is, complete with lace mats, candlesticks and glassware? I held my tongue, of course, as I am one of Anita's fans and have cooked many a dinner by her directions—which is, naturally, why I still have a husband who thinks highly of me. In fact, when my stock has no market value, I just fish out any JOURNAL and retire to my kitchen for a moment, so when dinnertime comes and goes—pop! there is my husband in a fur-coat-buying mood again.

Yours sincerely,

MARTA BULUES DE TORRES

Who wouldn't be "boy crazy"?

You'll love the luxury of this facial-soft tissue

Newer, Nicer ... the softer tissue modern women prefer GENTLE AS FACIAL TISSUE...

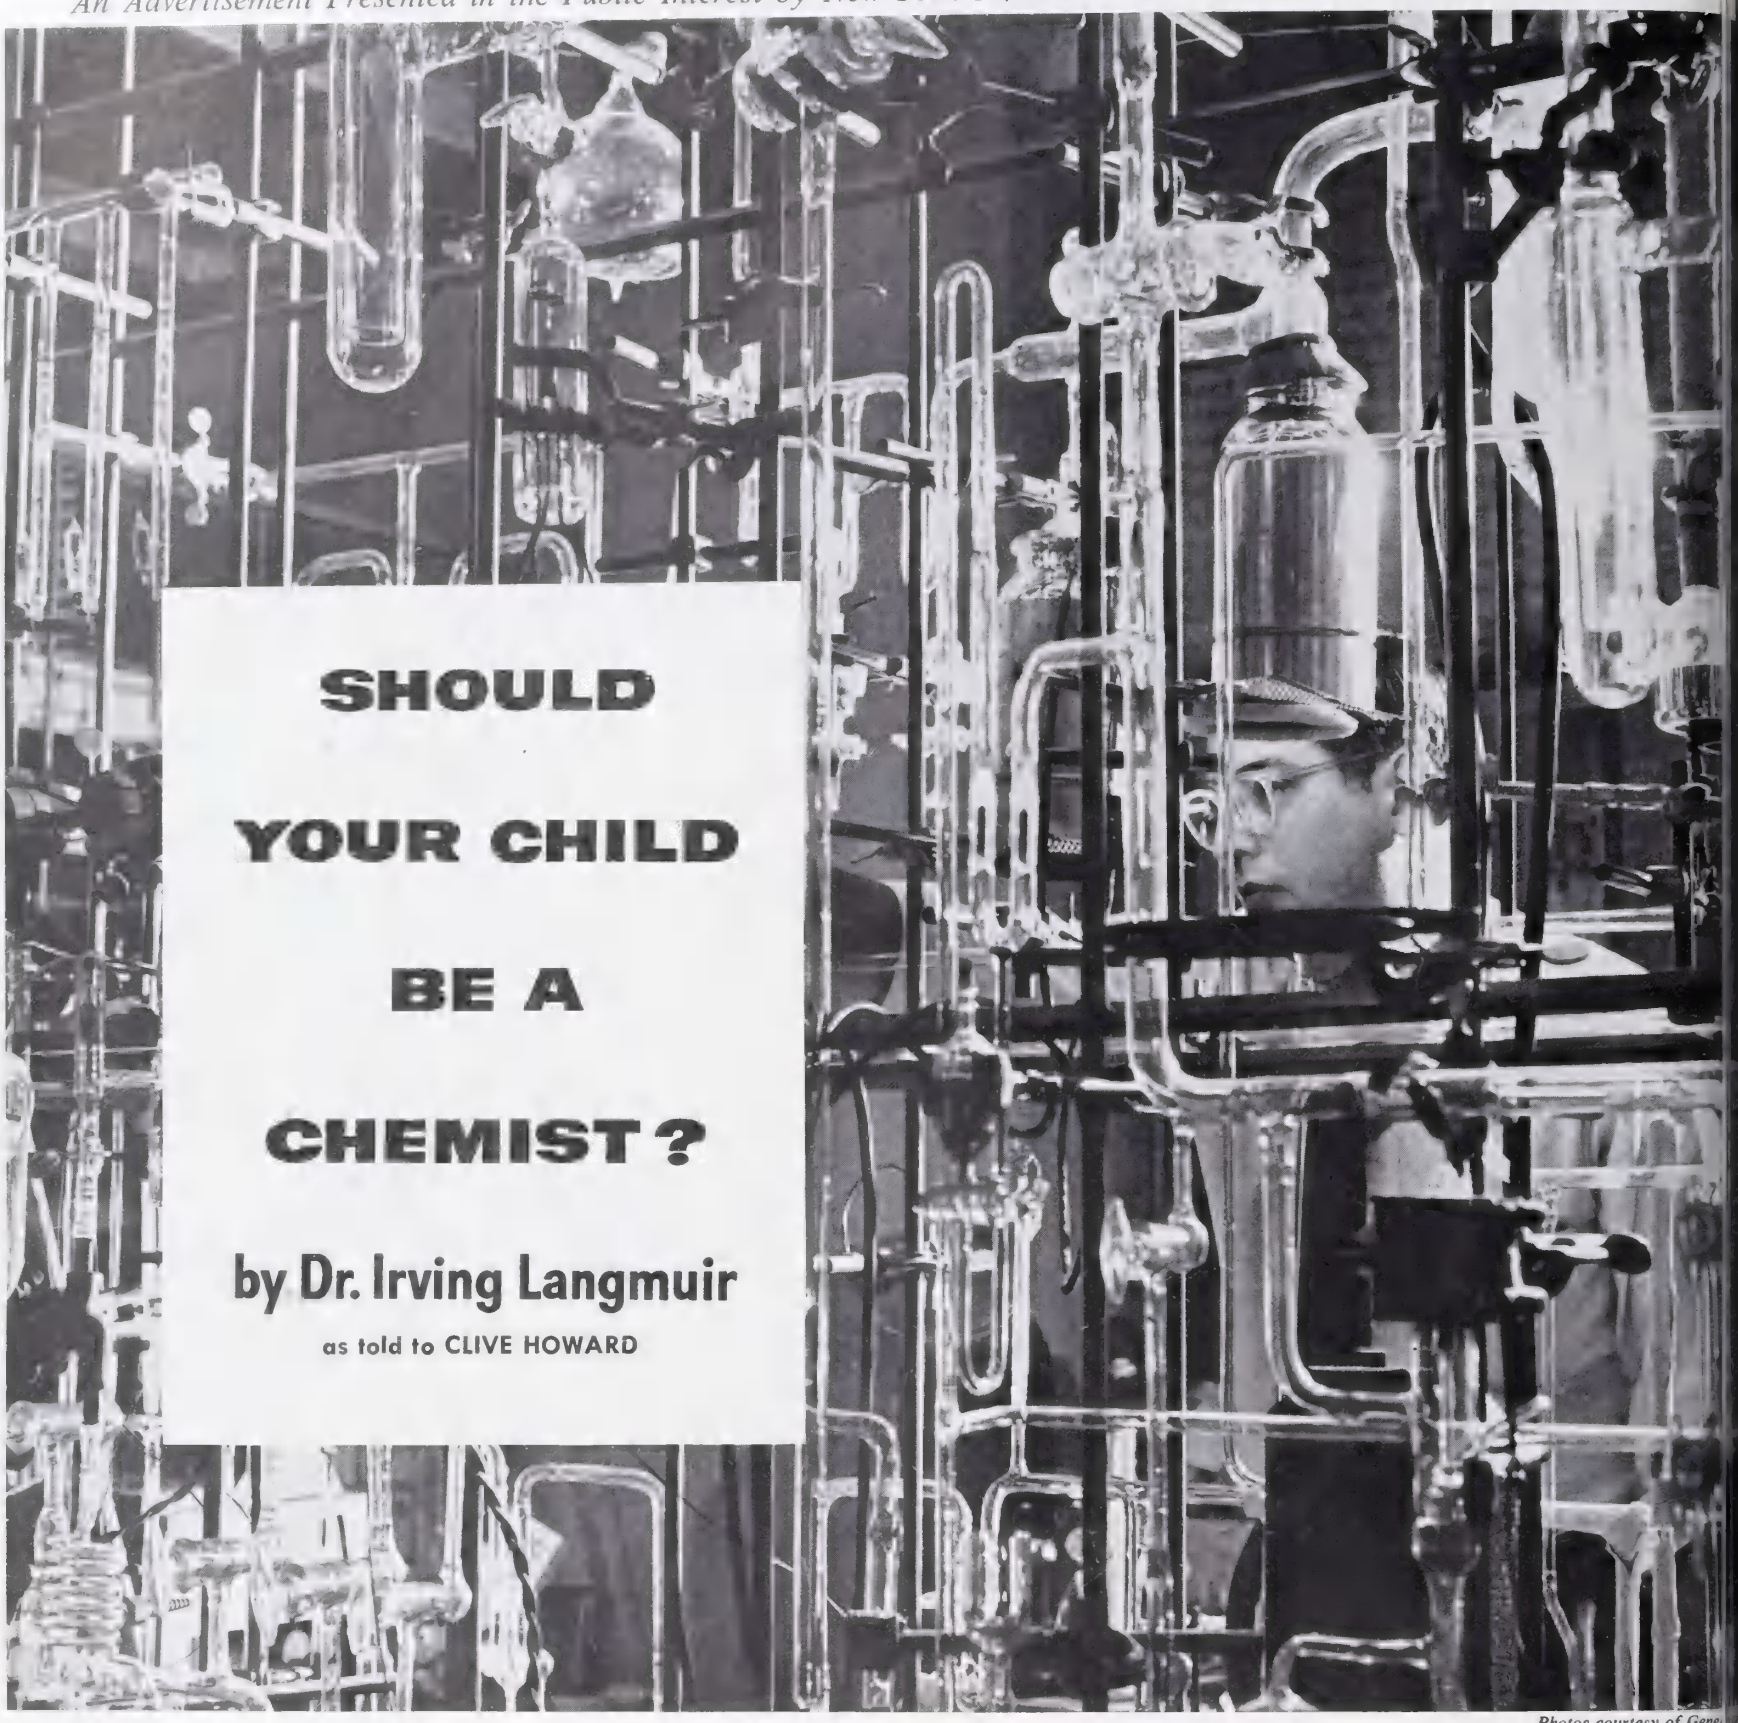
TWO SOFT THICKNESSES, FIRM AND STRONG

In today's up-to-date bathrooms you usually find this newer, nicer kind of tissue. Soft-Weve is wonderfully soft, unusually strong because it's made with two thicknesses—just like your facial tissue.



For the greater comfort of your family and guests be sure to provide this softer tissue in your own home. It's a luxury they will appreciate . . . another great Scott paper value that everyone can afford to enjoy.

Softer because it's double

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

An Advertisement Presented in the Public Interest by New York Life

SHOULD YOUR CHILD BE A CHEMIST?

by Dr. Irving Langmuir

as told to CLIVE HOWARD

Photos courtesy of Gene

WE LIVE in the Age of Chemistry. Looking back over a lifetime as a chemist, I see wonders such as no man dreamed of when I was born. Looking forward, I see even greater and more exciting marvels.

Ask the old chemist what he would like most in the world to be and he is almost sure to tell you: "A young chemist."

The young men and women entering the profession of chemistry today are fortunate persons indeed. They will be close to the hub of all the scientific magic that is conquering and remaking our world. They, as much as anyone else, will be the architects of man's future fate —his life from cradle to grave.

If your child shows an interest in chemistry, you need not even ask that question which bothers some parents, namely: Are there any opportunities left in my child's chosen field? The nation now employs 65,000 trained chemists—and badly needs more of them. The expansion of chemistry has been and continues to be so great that graduates leaving college today with degrees in chemistry are assured of jobs immediately, at about $350 a month to start. They can expect to advance as rapidly and as far as their individual talents and ambitions dictate.

There are two chief branches of the profession. On the one hand there are the "pure" chemists, who specialize in the laboratory work, the research. On the other hand there are the chemical engineers who turn the research chemist's discoveries into the actual machinery of industrial production.

Both these fields have certain requirements in common. To begin, we must ask: Can anyone become a chemist? No; it would be unfair to hold out this hope. Chemistry is no career for the merely average student. It is for the boy or girl of greater than average aptitude —whose record in elementary and secondary school shows an ability to master difficult college work and then continue on through a lifetime of constant l

It is not for the young person who finds alge geometry puzzling or boring. An expert chemist be an expert mathematician, but a good workin edge of its fundamentals is essential. A far m portant test is whether the youngster really likes his knowledge to some problem or other.

What are the other qualities that make for su chemistry? First among them, I would list cu not about people but about things; curiosity ab ural phenomena and what causes them, a drive all there is to know about how a thing is put and how it works and why.

Enthusiasm is just as important. Once the c curiosity is focused on a problem, he will nee siasm to carry him forward to an answer. If he tackle the problem with real enthusiasm, the are he may not find the answer.

nted these basic qualities, young men and women ny different talents and dispositions can find a e place in chemistry.

thinker, the dreamer of new things, the young of daring and independence, may want to become rch chemist. This to me is chemistry's great ad-
e. It requires the same sort of spirit and self-ncy that make men climb mountains or explore ntinents. Indeed, the best research chemists are plorers and pioneers of our day, the men who find reatest pleasure in pushing beyond where anyone er been before. They need courage and patience great faith.

doer, the "practical" person, the young man who e pulsation of the industrial plant and the thrill ally making a product—this person may prefer al engineering.

nd large, the chemist works in the laboratory, mical engineer in the plant. But there are infinite ons in each field, so that no chemist need stay at congenial task. To understand why, one must or a moment about the history of chemistry.

in my own lifetime, chemistry has changed and ed beyond belief. Around the year 1881, when I rn, chemistry had little effect on the man in the
The old chemical industries, such as those which oap, paper, glass, leather, paints and ceramics anged but little for many years. The cement and es industries were just beginning to show signs th.

a difference today! In the morning we lift our rom a foam rubber pillow which was merely oil round until a chemist transformed it. We shower mpoo, using a detergent some chemist created, a curtain of plastic which another chemist in-
We dress in a suit of laboratory-made or laboraproved cloth—and then go downstairs to eat a st of food grown with the help of the chemist.

ield of the chemist and chemical engineer is al-limited; it involves almost everything we do and ng we touch. The young person entering chem-day can take his choice of dozens upon dozens ranches.

ion? It relies upon light-weight aluminum and ium processed by the chemist, and upon the y associate director of the General Electric Research ory in Schenectady, New York, Dr. Langmuir has con- serve there as consultant since his retirement in 1949. lies of surface chemistry (as in photo above) won the rize for him in 1932. Dr. Langmuir is now busy on what ders one of the most far-reaching enterprises of his widespread weather modification through cloud seeding.

Here a biochemist prepares bacterial cultures as part of his studies on the chemical damage caused by radiation. Knowledge gained in these studies will find many applications in this atomic age.

high-octane gasoline which he creates from crude oil.

Clothing? Rayon, nylon and all the other new fabrics are products of the chemist. It is chemicals that give cloth its "body" and make it shrink-proof. Chemical dyestuffs—many of them distilled from a black lump of coal—provide a myriad of beautiful colors.

Foodstuffs? The whole fertilizer and insecticide industry, upon which modern farming depends, are the province of the chemist and the chemical engineer.

Medicine? The miracle drugs which have wiped out the threat of so many diseases—sulfa drugs, penicillin, aureomycin and streptomycin—all are products of the chemist. So are the synthetic vitamins which help preserve health. Our present amazing life expectancy comes largely out of the test tube.

Nuclear energy? Our national security, our future power resources and our increasing knowledge in other scientific fields—geology and biology, for example—will depend in large measure on progress in nuclear chemistry. This new and growing science offers the most challenging of opportunities to chemists today and promises even greater ones in years to come.

And so on, almost without end. Most of our modern industry and transportation require the services of the chemist in one way or another. Today's chemical engineer can take his choice of industries. And yet the Age of Chemistry is just beginning—and for the chemist who prefers laboratory research the greatest discoveries still lie ahead.

Many new wonders lie in wait for someone to come along and perform them. Chemistry will create almost countless new materials and vastly improve the old ones. There will be tremendous, earth-shaking discoveries. For all the spectacular accomplishments of the great laboratories, there is still so much uncovered ground that an individual chemist or a small group with simple apparatus can still make important additions to our store of knowledge.

So vast is the field of chemistry, as a matter of fact, that many young people studying it today will wind up in positions far removed from the laboratory or the engineer's slide-rule. Many of the chemical industries and their offshoots are beyond the ken of the non-scientist; they often have trained chemists as executives and in their key office positions, their market research, their purchasing departments and their publications. I know one chemist who was sent to law school by his company, because they had to have a lawyer with a specialized knowledge of chemical matters.

There is also a great need for teachers of chemistry in our universities and high schools. And it is quite possible for a man trained in chemistry to move successfully into another profession. I sincerely believe that chemistry—with its emphasis on logic, on accuracy and objectivity—is a fine education and preparation for almost any career.

True, the road to success in chemistry is not easy. Yet it is not more difficult than in most modern professions. The young person contemplating a career in this field should take a chemistry course in his secondary school, plus physics if possible, as much mathematics as he can and a foreign language. He should then be prepared to study four years in college, for either a Bachelor of Science in chemistry or a degree in chemical engineering. Considering the growing complexity of the subject, he may find an extra year or more in graduate school well worth while.

After college, on any job he may happen to take, the chemist will be learning new things while he works. Indeed the ability and eagerness to learn during all one's lifetime are essential to the successful chemist.

The future of the graduate is boundless. Some of the young people who are today contemplating a life's work in chemistry will become inventors of marvelous and profitable new products. Some will become presidents and executives of the big chemical companies. Some will be the builders and operators of great, new plants.

Yet many chemists find that their real reward is often something more than money. When a man creates an insecticide that wipes out malaria, a fertilizer that bids fair to end starvation, a wonder drug that laughs at pneumonia—or when he makes any of the theoretical discoveries in pure science that make these practical applications possible—or when he helps build the plant that brings these things to the public—then he knows what happiness means.

nylic

HOW TO HELP YOUR CHILD PREPARE FOR ANY CAREER

Whether your child is a toddler or in his teens, you are the keystone to whatever career he is to build. Your task is to inspire, guide and make possible. In the course of building his career many people will make contributions: teachers, researchers, specialists of many kinds.

One specialist—and his training and devotion to duty earn that title for him—is your New York Life agent. It is never too soon to enlist his aid—for he can help you to make sure that the future you plan for your child will become a reality.

Booklets available on other careers

This article on Chemistry is one of a continuing series on career opportunities for young men and women. Thus far, similar articles have been prepared on Newspapering, Law, Medicine, Accounting, Teaching, Architecture, Aeronautical Engineering, Public Service and Farming. Each is available in booklet form and will be sent to you on request. You'll also find additional help in our free booklet, "The Cost of Four Years at College." Just write:

NEW YORK LIFE
Insurance Company
51 Madison Ave., Dept. 10-J, New York 10, N.Y.

The New York Life Agent in Your Community is a Good Man to Know

THE TENTH OF A SERIES OF ADVERTISEMENTS PRESENTED TO HELP GUIDE AMERICA'S CHILDREN TO A BETTER FUTURE

There are 18 Gorham patterns to choose from. Shown: (A) "Rondo"* (B) "Camellia"* (C) "Golden Wheat"* (D) "Melrose"* (E) "Lyric"* (F) "Buttercup"* (G) "Strasbourg"* (H) "Fairf

Before you pick your sterling pattern, look under SILVER in the Encyclopædia Britannica

Did you know Gorham* is the only modern manufacturing silversmith represented in the Encyclopædia Britannica? Look under SILVER in the volume marked SARS to SORC. See who's in there with Cellini and his fabulous golden cup, and other masterpieces of the gold and silversmith's art.

Now, why do you suppose the Britannica picked Gorham to show you modern silver at its best? For one thing, you see in modern Gorham the same imperishable deep glow that characterizes a silver chalice, for instance, dating back to the Crusades.

Like the treasures of the past, the glow you see in Gorham comes from deep inside. It's a glow no surface finish can fake because it begins with the fineness of the silver itself. (Fineness, in this sense, means pureness, freedom from foreign matter.) All the sterling Gorham uses is of a fineness that exceeds the Government standard for sterling. Then, this finer sterling is worked to give it solid strength with a deep glow that years of daily use can't dim.

If this suggests to you that all sterling is not the same; that there's more to choosing flat silver than picking a pretty pattern, ask to see this Gorham Sterling with the deeper glow when you visit your jeweler. We believe you'll find it's Gorham you really want to own.

Budget payment plans are available. Pri single Gorham Sterling placesetting of 6 p cluding knife with Gorham's exclusive seamless handle, start at $27.50, Fed. Tax

Gorham
STERLING

AMERICA'S LEADING SILVERSMITHS SIN

*TRADE MARKS © 1954 BY THE GORHAM CO PROVID

Ladies' Home Journal

Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould, Editors

Executive Editor, Mary Bass

Managing Editor: Laura Lou Brookman

Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Barbara Benson, Glenn Matthew White, Donald Stuart, Ruth Imler, Tina S. Fredericks, Helen Everitt, Peter Briggs

Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd, Ruth Mills Teague

Editorial Associates: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Elizabeth Goetsch, Nancy Crawford, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland, Rosemary Jones, Nelle Keys Perry, Adrina Kayaian

Assistant Editors: Victoria Harris, Alice Kastberg, Virginia Price, Dorothy Anne Robinson, Jean Todd Freeman, Elizabeth McFarland, Eileen Sharpe, Albert Serwazi, Dolores Knapp

Editorial Assistants: Lee Stowell Cullen, Patricia Martin, Aileen Dowd, June Schwartz, Gretchen Wehler, Babette Brimberg, Joyce Posson, Nancy Terry, Flora Casparian, Betty Jo Ramsey, Constance Holland, Helen Schofield Lukacs, Alberte Wright, Simone Smith, Betty Coe Spicer, Carol Mercado, Elizabeth Hart

"Water Mill," by Albert Cuyp (1620–91). Black-and-white chalk, and wash, 7¼"x12⅛". Collection: Charles Fairfax Murray.

"There was a child went forth"

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

There was a child went forth every day,
And the first object he look'd upon, that object he became,
And that object became part of him for the day or a certain part of the day,
Or for many years or stretching cycles of years. . . . WALT WHITMAN

In the November, 1953, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL Dr. Fredric Wertham, an eminent psychiatrist with much experience in dealing with antisocial children and youth, blasted the reading matter offered in this country to minors, and asserted that it was a chief contributor to juvenile crime, in which the United States has the wretched misfortune to lead the world! He named as chief offenders certain types of "comic" books—"terror," "horror" and "bloody"—depicting crimes in detail.

Doctor Wertham's is not an isolated opinion. State legislative committees are investigating the matter, as is the Federal Government. The FBI had previously come to the same conclusions as Doctor Wertham. But the article in the JOURNAL and the book he later published attracted, I think, the largest volume of national attention to this subject.

Since then individual parents and P.T.A.'s, clergy of all persuasions, the American Legion, clubs and fraternal organizations have called for measures to halt distribution especially to minors of this sort of "literature."

The outstanding fact revealed in the public hearings and debates is the unanimity with which the evil is recognized as such.

A great part of the "comics" appealing to violence, lust and sadism, along with "pocket" books of the same character, are displayed for purchase in drugstores. The "drug" store, with its soda fountain, snack bar, school supplies, and often thousands of other articles, useful or amusing, for sale, has become the rendezvous for millions of young Americans. Here, today, in what one might call the chain of national youth clubs, youngsters are able to purchase for a few cents "literature" that is pornographic by any description.

Pictures and verbal expressions calculated to excite lust and the criminal expressions of lust—sadism, prostitution, rape and sexually inspired murder—have always found a market. But this vicious trash's public was formerly limited; it was produced for men and women already in, or half in, the criminal classes, addressed to the already filthy-minded and violent. It was not obtainable in places frequented by the young and innocent.

The National Association of Retail Druggists has gone on record against the sale of any such printed matter to minors. No retailer can be compelled to accept the trash for resale. The new New York State law, effective since July 1, 1954, therefore amends the penal code to prohibit "tie-in" sales, forbidding "any person, copartnership or corporation," to make as a "condition to a sale or delivery for resale of any paper, magazine, book, periodical or publication, matter reasonably believed by the purchaser or consignee to be obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy, indecent or disgusting."

The New York law, passed after extensive hearings and investigations, also makes it a felony "willfully to sell or offer for sale or to deliver to a minor any book, pamphlet, magazine or printed paper principally made up of pictures, devoted to the publication and exploitation of fictional deeds of violent bloodshed, lust or immorality, so massed as to reasonably tend to incite minors to violence or depraved or immoral acts."

Legislation pending or passed in other states indicates that the great majority of Americans believe it necessary to take legal measures to halt the distribution of mental and psychological poison, especially to minors. Such opposition as there is—except from the initiators and profiteers of the traffic—arises from the traditional fear of censorship, apprehension that the strictures may be "an opening wedge" to suppress "free speech" and all works that deal with crime, sex and violence, regardless of their literary merit.

The legal approach does, indeed, pose a problem of CONTINUED ON PAGE 14

Main Dish Salads

HEARTY, HANDSOME... AND MIGHTY TEMPTING

dressed by KRAFT

HERE's a group of salads you'll turn to both for family meals and for parties. They are hearty salads . . . substantial main dishes . . . and so handsome and delicious that they "make" the meal.

Their goodness, of course, depends very largely on the dressing. But that's no cause for worry . . . you're sure to please your public with dressings made by Kraft. Kraft's famous Family of Dressings includes the all-time, unrivaled favorite—Miracle Whip. It includes three delightful French dressings . . . spicy Miracle Sandwich Spread . . . and the finest of mayonnaise. A really wonderful choice!

So pick your salad dressings from the Kraft shelf at your grocer's. No fuss, no bother, and compliments for sure!

Cheese Fluff Salad

Make the "fluff" with Kraft Mayonnaise . . . and give a choice of Casino or Miracle French for the artichoke heart and tomatoes.

Tongue Pinwheel

This hearty meat and vegetable all-in-one gets its zip from Miracle Whip heaped in pepper rings.

Golden Glow Tuna

Hard-cooked egg adds the "golden glow"; Miracle Sandwich Spread gives it "come on".

Baby Lobster Cardinal

Only true mayonnaise at its finest— Kraft Mayonnaise—will do for this elegant salad.

There's a just-right KRAFT DRESSING for every taste...try them all

MIRACLE WHIP—Far and away the most praised, best liked, of any dressing for salads is Kraft's original creation, the one and only Miracle Whip. See what Miracle Whip Salad Dressing does for old favorites like coleslaw and potato salad!

KRAFT MAYONNAISE—True mayonnaise at its finest—made of the very choicest ingredients mixed satiny smooth in Kraft's own exclusive beater. You will love the delightful flavor and luxurious richness of Kraft Kitchen Fresh Mayonnaise.

MIRACLE SANDWICH SPREAD—You're missing a good thing if you've never used spicy Miracle Sandwich Spread on salads. Made of Miracle Whip, sparked with pickle relishes, it's a fine Thousand Island type dressing.

CASINO FRENCH—New Casino has a most intriguing flavor—somewhat sweet, somewhat garlic-y—especially fine on fruits. It takes twelve different seasonings, in most precise proportions, to get that special flavor! Try Casino soon.

KRAFT FRENCH—Creamy-thick so it doesn't separate, Kraft's is the most popular French dressing ever offered for sale. If any of your family, especially children, think they don't like French dressing, surprise them with Kraft French.

MIRACLE FRENCH—Robustly seasoned with onion and garlic, Miracle French is the liveliest of Kraft's three French dressings. Try brushing it on meats before you broil or bake them, and to marinate the potatoes for potato salad.

KRAFT OIL—You who make your own French dressing will appreciate this wonderful Kraft "all-purpose" Oil. Your recipes will win even higher acclaim because Kraft Oil blends so well with other ingredients for satin smooth results.

KRAFT
THE NAME THAT MEANS
WONDERFUL SALADS

Kraft Salad Dressings are also available in Canada.

"Coffee-break"

with

Mary Margaret McBride

One of the nicest things about coffee is the way it encourages friendliness. The lovely aroma just seems to bring out the best in people. A really good cup of coffee is so wonderful. it's fortunate it's so easy to make. Anybody can be a coffee expert—and honestly, everybody ought to be.

The best possible way to brew coffee is to follow the simple directions of the Coffee Brewing Institute. Use one Standard Coffee Measure, or two level tablespoons, of your favorite brand of coffee to each ¾ measuring cup of fresh, cold water. This makes one serving. Be sure to time your coffee brewing exactly. After you've found the perfect timing for your coffee maker, stick to it. Coffee should never be boiled, and it should be served as soon as possible. If necessary, keep hot by placing the pot in a pan of hot water or on an asbestos pad.

If you don't have a Standard Coffee Measure already, just write to the General Manager of the Coffee Brewing Institute at the address below. The Measures are made of brightly colored plastic and they're just the right size to keep in the coffee package or your canister. The Coffee Brewing Institute asks that you please enclose a dime to cover costs.

Incidentally, you'd be enchanted with a coffee plantation when it bursts into bloom. For miles. the trees seem snow-covered—and the blossoms smell like jasmine! But they're so fragile that almost any bad weather can ruin the crop. Fortunately, this doesn't happen very often. and we get a beverage that can't be matched. There's really nothing like a cup of good coffee.

The Coffee Brewing Institute, Inc.

551 Fifth Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 11

definition and discrimination. But it does so in all fields. The "noble experiment" of attempting to prohibit the sale and consumption of alcoholic beverages only created bootleggers and lawlessness. But its strongest opponents never argued that the sale of alcoholic drinks to minors should be permitted. Childhood and youth must by nature be under the supervision and guardianship of their elders and of society. The legal restrictions are both positive and negative. They must go to school until a certain age. They may not drive an automobile until a certain age. There is an "age of consent" below which they may not marry, and under which the performance of adult sexual acts is a crime if committed by an adult with an underage companion and a delinquency if committed by the underaged with each other.

Such laws are made to protect the young, society, and even the race itself. The premature titillation and excitation of the sexual urge, and its mental association with violence, lechery, filth and obscene speech, are calculated at worst to produce sex maniacs, the terror of any society. Such an atmosphere develops adults whose sexual life even in an apparently "respectable" marriage will never be normal. It divorces the sexual instincts from tenderness, consideration, protectiveness, respect—the emotions which turn sexuality into love. The sexual urge sublimated in love is the most creative force in personal life and human society. Reduced to its primitive and brutal urges and expressions, it is the source of personal and social degeneration.

ADULT values and behaviors are conditioned, often beyond repair, by the experiences of childhood and adolescence, even when these experiences have long faded from consciousness. The unconscious or subconscious plays in most people, perhaps in all, a far greater role than the conscious. The observation which heads this article was known to all the world's great teachers, religious and otherwise. All the great poets, dramatists and novelists, long before modern psychiatrists made scientific demonstrations of its validity, knew this too.

Everything that impinges on the senses of a child registers something consciously or unconsciously, helps form his tastes, interests, ethics, affirmations, inhibitions, social attitudes. The characters of persons and societies are formed by what they instinctively feel to be good, beautiful, attractive, worthy, or evil, ugly, revolting, contemptible.

The susceptibility of children to suggestive sensually received influences is especially acute at puberty and early adolescence. This period is, in itself, one of physical change, sometimes violent, universally marked by personality changes. The previously quiet child may suddenly become animated; the previously gay and extroverted child, secretive and morose. The "good" student may suddenly become unable to concentrate, or the "backward" child suddenly display unsuspected talents. The imagination, during this time, is exceptionally active.

The child at puberty is in the grip of unfamiliar urges that no amount of scientific sex education can, of itself, help him to control. How he (or she) will react depends upon the sensibilities and susceptibilities that his previous education and environment have engendered, and on the influences that come into his life at this time.

If, now, there is put into his hands—by the exchange of a dime, a quarter or fifty cents—a tract glorifying he-man killers, exciting lasciviousness, depicting monstrous horrors, ridiculing decency and honesty, the harm done is incalculable, even if it results in no overt acts, and even if, at last, it is overcome by other influences.

POLICE have records of juvenile crimes committed as exact replicas of those depicted in crime "comics," and often with weapons obtained on mail order from ads in the same books. To my mind the authors, publishers and distributors are direct accessories to the actions they provoke, and should be legally charged as such. And to say that such corruptive literature can not legally be halted without endangering free speech is to admit that our courts cannot exercise sound judgment or act to prevent crime. The publications in question are purely commercial products without the slightest claim to any distinction, ethical, aesthetic or intellectual. The issue is not the right of free speech, but the right to peddle mental marijuana for money. For that matter, there have always been, and must be, restrictions on free speech. It is restricted, for instance, by the laws of libel and slander. It does not include, as a Supreme Court ruled, "the right falsely to cry fire in a crowded theater," or to incite to violence.

And the gentlest of all great teachers, Jesus, spoke the stern and terrible words, "Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." But He also spoke an affirmative: "Suffer little children to come unto me."

Some critics of crusading parents blame the parents for putting the responsibility on the traffic, saying they ought to be able to control the reading of their children.

They can certainly contribute to the alleviation of this problem, but they will not all do so, and all children, including those with irresponsible or even evil parents, must

CONTINUED ON PAGE 171

FAIRY TALE

By DAN G. HOFFMAN

There were giants in those days.
Sheepcotes were enchanted castles,
Dragons snored in every cave,
Dwarfs skulked under thistles.
In the high towers, damsels
Spun, to assuage their solitude,
Robes fringed and crimson-tasseled
For knights. In the dark wood
On stallions all caparisoned
In iron clankery and peacock feathers, Courageous beyond comparison
They sallied in all weathers:
Forth they rode to smite wild giants,
Behead roused dragons, outwit dwarfs,
All, all their hearts' allegiance
As proof to the towered beauties brought.
I tell their stories in these days (Gawaine, Sir Kay the Seneschal),
And watch your eyes' wide wonder praise
All those who loved so true, so well;
And when you nod, I close my book
And smooth your coverlet's greensward
And think what trials Gawaine had brooked,
What perilous gantlets dared,
Old scribes had amazed their wits to tell
Such courteous might, such passionate grace,
Had he before the tall tower knelt
To seek love's favors in your face.

Fall Fashions in Food

By Betty Crocker of General Mills

"Hello there!" What do you best about Fall? The crisp weat The smell of burning leaves? maybe you're like an old frien mine who said Fall always remi her of ginger bread baking in the oven and cider cooling on the porch. Guess we had her in r when we developed our Betty Cro Ginger Bread Mix. It's so easy so country-kitchen-good that can bake one up any time.

Take a look across the page at of the many ways you can serve B Crocker Ginger Bread:

1. Just squares of hot ginger bread split and spread with cream chee and chopped ginger.

2. Here's another. Plop a litt mountain of hard sauce on a h ginger bread square, then grate fre orange peel over it.

3. This is one of my favorites- again, just a square of hot ging bread, but in between and on to quick-prepared lemon pudding.

4. These "zoo" cookies are so eas a child can bake them. Follow t easy package directions for roll cookies. Use animal cooky cutter

Fall is "company-coming" t too. When folks sort of move indoors and get ready for a sea of hospitality and good eating. Th when I like to think all of our B Crocker cake mixes are most ap ciated by the homemaker hos because she knows her Betty Cro cake will be perfect—every time. see General Mills uses the same ingredients you'd use yourse Softasilk Cake Flour, fine va flavoring, and rich shortening.

So bake up lots of high, ligh lovely Betty Crocker cakes and h a joyous Fall.

Try these and all my good cake mi

Betty Crocker Chocolate Devils Food
Betty Crocker Yellow Cake Mix
Betty Crocker White Cake Mix
Betty Crocker Honey Spice Cake Mix
Betty Crocker Angel Food Cake Mix

Betty

PERFECT*? Yes, we DO mean perfect be the judge. If a cake you make with a Crocker Cake Mix is less than perfect, Betty Crocker, Box 200, Minnea Minn., and General Mills will send money back!

Four fine ways to serve one fine Ginger Bread rocker says: I guarantee—perfect* cake every time you bake cake . . . after cake . . . after cake!

CLOROX® makes linens more than white... it makes them sanitary, too!

Yes, for real whiteness more women choose Clorox than any other product in its field . . . for Clorox effectively removes dinginess, stains, even scorch and mildew. Still more important, Clorox does a better job of protecting health . . . for no other home laundering product equals Clorox in germ-killing efficiency!

And Clorox bleaches your white cottons and linens, brightens fast colors, removes stains, deodorizes and sanitizes whether you use it in hand laundering, in a conventional machine or an automatic washer. What's more, Clorox, a liquid, contains no gritty particles to damage your washer, or your wash.

Stained sink spoiling your kitchen? Make it bright with CLOROX! Many stains that ordinary cleaning won't remove from sinks, drainboards, and other kitchen surfaces disappear quickly with Clorox on the job. Clorox also deodorizes, disinfects . . . provides a type of disinfection recommended by hundreds of public health departments. See the Clorox label for answers to many housecleaning problems.

When it's CLOROX-clean . . . it's SAFER for family health!

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

"I'm so bored! There's never anything to do around this house

A READER of Irish books who has, besides, an Irish name can be reasonably sure of having a fine time in Ireland. Two of us went there this summer and we fell in love with the country and the people. We didn't kiss the Blarney stone or visit the lakes of Killarney, and we didn't hear an Irish tenor the length and breadth of the land. But we did hear the most beautiful voices in the world, and never a cliché. The expected word never comes forth from the lips of an Irishman.

If you've a proper Irish name you should have no trouble at all in finding your kin, for names persist through the centuries in Ireland as nowhere else in the world. The common name on the Aran Islands, for instance, is Conneely. Connemara is the land of O'Flahertys—"from the ferocious O'Flahertys, good Lord deliver us." Galway is the city of blue-eyed, long-lipped Lynches, and a statute still bears the legend that "the O's and the Mc's are forbidden to strut and preen themselves in the streets of Galway." Westport is the town of Morans; and Louisburgh, of O'Malleys, most of them claiming descent from the famous lady chieftain, Grania O'Malley.

How the O'Malleys should all bear Grania's maiden name we couldn't understand, but we didn't blame them. It was she who swept into the presence of Queen Elizabeth Tudor—it was back in those days—and quite confounded that imperious female. The Irishwoman wore a gown of tawny satin with a train "three ells long," and on her famous knee-length red hair she wore a great black hat. When she removed her furred gloves, she unbuttoned the bodice of her gown, to the wide-eyed amazement of the bewigged English court, "to let all see that she was clad underneath in full plate armor from neck to toe." Grania was taking no chances.

•

When I got back from my travels, the pile of books awaiting me was mountainous. Something was there for everybody.

For humor there's I'D RATHER BE KISSED, by F. Hugh Herbert, the diary of a sixteen-year-old gi mother has a lot more sense an standing than my father ab crummy age of mine." . . . "I thi comes a day in a young girl's l she would rather have a sheer than the collected works of Wolfe, no matter how good a w wants to be." By the author of T is Blue.

Also funny, for any baseball can read and who can take a littl with his game, is THE YEAR TH KEES LOST THE PENNANT, by thor aptly named Douglass Wo

For the history-minded there WHITE AND THE GOLD, by Costain, which will surely be every literate Canadian and sh read by the many among us in th try who know so little of our nea dearest neighbor.

For biography there's ALE DUMAS: A Great Life in B André Maurois, who will rivaling Dumas himself in the nu written works.

An important deeply religio which depends not on inspiratio a closely studied passage of his its interpretation is JESUS A TIMES, by Daniel-Rops. As t will be of the most profound sat to all who believe in the divinity so will THE ROAD TO MEC Muhammed Asad, be to th believe that "there is no God and Mahomet is His prophet." thor is an Austrian Jew who long came a convert to Islam.

THESE WERE THE WOMEN, Ormsbee Whitton, is a colo rade of outstanding American between the years 1776 and 18 necessarily outstanding for thei though many of them were, b significance in their time. Take Griffiths, who ran a shop on wharf, became the mistress o

CONTINUED ON PAGE

PERFECT CHOCOLATE PIES IN HALF THE TIME!

1. Deep, dark and delicious. A creamy chocolate filling in a ladyfinger crust!
2. Takes only minutes to cook . . . and what flavor!
3. Every package of Jell-O Pudding and Pie Filling makes a superb pie . . . enough pudding for 4. Try some. Soon!

Vanilla
Chocolate
Butterscotch
Lemon

Ready for the Big Day

Wherever there are schools, wherever there are children . . . they'll be going back in Stride Rites! And there's a style, size and width for each of them. Let Stride Rite quality and fit . . . known all over America . . . help protect all the young feet in your family. See your Stride Rite dealer before the Big Day . . . he's thoroughly schooled in fitting young feet!

THE STRIDE RITE SHOE

Green Shoe Mfg. Co., Boston, Mass.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 16

cratic John Hancock, and eventually ran off to England with a Tory. Or Madame Lalaurie, who held black slaves in frightened captivity on the top floor of her very elegant New Orleans home, back in the 1840's. Or Ellen Jewett, mysteriously murdered, whose case was thoroughly exploited by Horace Greeley in his weekly, The New Yorker. There are also Lucretia Mott, Amelia Bloomer, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Lucy Stone and a dozen others. An appropriate sequel to Mrs. Whitton's earlier book, First First Ladies, a study of the wives of the early Presidents.

Paris Original, by Alexandra Orme, a novel about the fashion world in Paris, written by one who has worked in that milieu, quite captivated me. The heroine (like the author) is a transplanted Polish girl, living on an occasional hard-boiled egg and roll in a shabby Paris bedroom. But it is not the grim story you'd think. In fact, it glitters. It has the fashion world to start with, and for good measure a well-rounded all-Slavic love story.

"Sure, it looks French. So does a beret."

There's a slender book of poems by Eunice LonCoske whose poetry frequently appears in these pages: These Rugged Hills, about her own Pennsylvania country.

Roads From the Forts, by Arvid Shulenberger, is the new-type Western, historical background realistically treated in the up-to-date A. B. Guthrie and Conrad Richter style. This is the story of two soldiers in the year 1857 who get a seven-day pass from a lonely fort on the upper Missouri, and meet up with two Indian girls. It gives an honest view of the Indians' problems, and makes no attempt to whitewash our noble pioneers.

As exciting as any whodunit is Finger Prints, by Douglas G. Browne and Alan Brock—an account of fifty years of crime detection that you can't put down.

And last of all, for nostalgic New Englanders, New England Cookbook, by Eleanor Early. Remember cottage pudding? Scalloped oysters? Sunday-night suppers without any delicatessen supplies?

•

Along with the books, I found on my desk a long-playing-record album, Sweet Dreams—ten gentle old songs: All Through the Night, Sweet and Low, Brahms' Lullaby, Cradle Song and others, softly sung by the Norman Luboff Choir. It was designed to put children to sleep, and may well do so. All I know is that I went to sleep first—deliciously.

You both rest easy when he goes Pullman

Ask him to Go PULLMAN

Comfortable, Convenient and

He can have a "Rent-a-car" wai for him if he asks the ticket age

COPYRIGHT 1954, THE PULLMAN COMPANY

Hum Time in Carter's

Drowse-about "Sundowns" from Toddlertown

Yawn-soft Carter cotton knits keep little sleepy-timers cozy all through dream time! Carter's has original Jiffon® necks, and Nevabind® underarms that won't chafe or bind . . . ever. Carter's thoughtful extra: new non-skid plastic soles on "Safety-Step" sleeper make small feet sure. Time-saving for mother, light 'n' gentle "Sundowns" sleepers (like all Carter's knits) stay nursery-sweet without ironing. They're Carter-Set®, too . . . will not shrink out of fit.

Starting clockwise with librarian

ROSEBUD GOWN with elasticized wrists. Pink, yellow, blue on white. 1-6 yrs. $2.95. 8-14 yrs. $4.00. Matching pajama. 2-6 yrs. $3.50, 8-14 yrs. $4.00.

"SUNDOWNS" ONE-PIECE SLEEPER. Snap-fastened. Elastic drop seat. Reinforced feet. Blue, pink, yellow, green, red. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 yrs. $2.50.

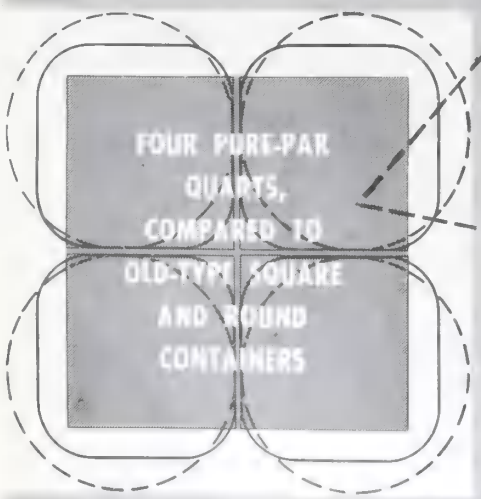
JIFFON-NEVABIND GOWN with Handy-Cuffs. White, yellow, pink, blue, green. 3-6 mos. $1.50.

ROSEBUD "HIBER-NATER." Sleeping bag with Handy-Cuffs, Nevabind sleeves. Zipper front. Pink, blue, yellow on white. One size, grows to 3 yrs. $3.95.

"SUNDOWNS" SLEEPER with "Safety-Step" feet. Non-skid plastic soles kept in place with elasticized ankles. 2 pc. with new Snap-Lastetop "Gro-Feature." Blue, pink, green, yellow. 6 mos.-4 yrs. $2.50. Without "Safety-Step"—$2.25.

The William Carter Company, Needham Heights, Mass.

Best Carter's makes fine underwear for the entire family



© 1954, The W. C. Co.

want MORE refrigerator space

PURE·PAK milk cartons give it to you !

Today's refrigerators are marvels of spacious convenience. You can make yours even more spacious with Pure-Pak milk cartons! Old-type square containers take 36% more space. Round ones take 77% more. With Pure-Pak cartons you can keep larger milk reserves with no additional space. Ask your milkman for milk in Pure-Pak.

Pure-Pak
DETROIT, MICH.
YOUR PERSONAL MILK CONTAINER

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

"I know of no happier sight than a yardful of cockers in the cool sweet evening light." Teddy, Hildegarde and Jonquil.

rain falls with clean driving force, gible wall of dark silver. George s like a deep-sea fisherman as he hes in with water falling in sheets his sou'wester.

's the line storm," he says.

e pond brims to the top of the over, cascades into the brook. The incredibly fresh as we dash out he mail. Beautiful is the color of countryside: dove gray of sky, coal of tree trunks, silver of rain ling into a kind of twilight for the d.

e hearth fire seems especially snug the teakettle whistles merrily. I lly don't think a teakettle ought istle shrilly—I always jump at the ing note—but that is the modern of knowing the water is boiling. tea must be made with boiling r, in a freshly scalded teapot. I like steeped about four minutes; and g. Tea well made is very comfort-

ry, very thinly sliced bread and r is the best accompaniment for When counting calories, however, wafer spread with cottage cheese ellent. For a company tea, there gary warm teacake fresh from the or cinnamon toast bubbly with r and cinnamon—or tiny hot bis- with white-clover honey.

nversation at teatime should be uil, I think. Not the time for l problems or controversial issues, time to rest the spirit, remember ant things. Everyone needs such a and a cup of hot tea goes with it. er the storm, the world is polished. ight is so golden we feel we have really seen the sun before. The red zinnias shout with color, the on the dark earth make little of violet and deep rose. We are in spell of perfect weather now, day luminous, every night brim- with stars. Picnics at noon, sup- y the fire at night, a good com- ion.

e fall chores go on apace. Jill s at the pine chest we got from Fox, for it is much nicer to redo rniture in the sun. The chest has blue casein paint on it, which is s hard to get off. A neighbor advised a soda solution before using paint remover, as soda dissolves the casein. I am sunning blankets and airing the fall coats which soon must be used. The kennels need a good going over, the dogs are due for shampoos, the woodpile must be replenished and kindling stacked in the woodshed. There is something so secure about a neat pile of firewood.

I dare say Jill and I seem odd at times. When Jill bought white wool in spring, the clerk wanted to give her a heavy twist. "No," said Jill, "the birds won't like it." The clerk looked startled (nesting material was not her field). And when Jill bought the butterfish and the man wanted to clean them, she said casually, "Thank you, no. It's for the turtles." (The turtle trap was empty.) The boys at the market were surprised at the cartons of peanut butter we kept buying until that one was solved—they just couldn't see how we ate so much. Birds, said we.

Now we ought to explain that the boxes and boxes of soda we keep buying are for that old pine chest!

As summer wanes, we cherish the mild dreamy days, soft with blue haze. Goldenrod and chicory dazzle the eyes, asters and mums bloom, the garden is rich with peppers and eggplant and tomatoes and cabbages. Summer still walks the lanes, but the frosty slipper of autumn is just behind.

Corn chowder ladles pleasantly from the old tureen for early supper. I make it by slicing an onion thinly, browning in 1 tablespoon butter or margarine, then add seasonings lavishly, then 1 cup boiling water and 1 cup diced potatoes. This cooks until the potatoes are tender and then I add 3 cups milk and 2 cups scraped corn (partly cooked). When this blends into a good simmer, I add a teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce, paprika, and top the bowl with chopped parsley.

Another favorite is Elizabeth Feldman's onion stew—and this is easy as can be. I make a cream sauce, allowing 2 cups per person to be served, then fry sliced onions in butter or margarine until golden. I allow 1 medium onion

CONTINUED ON PAGE 118

Make your own drapes!

Decorator Drapery Fabrics

only $1 a yard

Free instruction booklet. Pleating tape, traverse rods, pin hooks available.

Carabao Shantung Weave Fabric $1 a yard (pictured above)

We have sold over half a million yards of this wonderful fabric. Cross dyed to give a dramatic two-tone textured effect, you can't see through it although light comes through. Perfect for panel or draw drapes, can be lined. Grey, Beige, Lime, Rosedust, Turquoise, Cocoa, Gold, Mint Green, Hunter Green, Seafoam, Celadon, Red, Off White. Send for swatches, information.

Carabao Nubby Weave Fabric $1 a yard

A new dull-finish fabric with exquisite texture when the light comes through. Thoroughly tested, hangs beautifully in draw drapes or panels. Subtle decorator colors. Turquoise, Spruce, Seafoam, Lime, Leaf Green, Light Beige, Fawn Beige, Rosebeige, Tearose, Cocoa, Ice Pink, Rosedust, Ashrose, Natural, Straw, Gold, White, Grey. Send for swatches, information.

Carabao Textured Weave Fabric $1 a yard

A monotone textured fabric for draw drapes, panels, one of our customers' favorites. Eggshell, Lime, Wine, Beige, Leaf Green, Grey, Gold, Brown, Celadon, Red, Lemon, Ashrose, Hunter Green. Send for swatches, information.

Carabao Sheen Weave Fabric $1 a yard

An interesting new fabric—please send for swatches to see how lovely it is. For draw drapes, panels. Red, Celadon, Brown, Eggshell, Gold, Hunter Green, Beige, Lime, Wine, Driftwood, Ashrose, Lemon, Leaf Green.

Carabao Metallic Print Shantung Fabric $1 a yard

Printed with gleaming, non-tarnishable silver and gold. Hand washable, for draw drapes, panels. Hunter Green, Dusty Rose, Gold, Grey, Copper, Seafoam, Beige, White. Send for swatches, information.

Custom Made Drapes

approx. $1.50 a yard

We will custom make drapes to your window measurements from any of the above fabrics, lined or unlined. Send for complete information, directions for measuring.

Send 25¢ for swatches of all colors of all five fabrics.

Money back guarantee

CARABAO
SPECIAL PRODUCTS COMPANY

950 COLUMBUS,
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
DEPT. KS7

Send for complete information, prices, directions for measuring.
CARABAO SPECIAL PRODUCTS COMPANY, Dept. KS7
950 Columbus Avenue, San Francisco, California
Send me information. ☐ Enclosed is 25¢ for swatches.
(please print)
Name _____
Address _____
City and State _____

OUR FIFTH YEAR OF SELLING DIRECT BY MAIL

IVORY SNOW

Safest possible soap for baby's things...for yours, too

. . . for everything you wash with special care . . .

by HAND OR MACHIN

99 44/100% PURE[1]

FOR DIAPERS. . .

and baby clothes, there's no soap like Ivory safe Ivory Snow. It leaves them far softer than detergents or strong washday soaps, free from deposits that chafe baby skin. And, it's granulated for efficiency!

LINGERIE

stays lovely far longer with Ivory Snow care. It pampers colors, keeps white nylons so white, leaves woolens so softly fluffy, too. Ivory Snow is the safest possible soap you can buy for fine hand washables.

NICE
MACHINE WASHABLE

like bedspreads, curtains, blank thrive on the special care they g with Ivory Snow. It's the only so both Ivory-safe and in the efficie granulated form you prefer to u in your washing machine.

The only soap both IVORY-SAFE and GRANULATED for efficie

Dr. Spock Talks with Mothers

Parents have rights, too, and they ought to have a chance to enjoy them. If you let yourself be intimidated by a determined baby, he only becomes more unhappy—and more determined.

By BENJAMIN SPOCK, M.D.

LAST month I talked about the going-to-bed type of sleep problem in infancy, in which a baby learns to stay awake later and later in the evening and makes his mother carry him around all those hours. But the baby with this kind of sleep disturbance, once he finally does get to sleep, usually stays asleep.

The other type of sleep problem in the first year, which is less common, is the waking-in-the-middle-of-the-night kind. The baby with this disturbance usually allows himself to be put to bed, at night and at naps, with no fuss at all. This is fortunate for the parents, who can have a few hours of peace in the evening. But then he wakes, perhaps at ten or twelve, and cries hard to be picked up. When up, he may be satisfied for a short while with just sociability with his parents, or a late snack. But soon he's likely to demand to be carried about, and becomes real cranky if the parent doesn't get busy. Any attempt to put him to bed makes him furious.

The mother is pretty tired and keeps trying to put him to bed every ten or fifteen minutes. However, it's usually an hour or more before he's so fast asleep in her arms that he doesn't wake right up when laid down.

When such a problem is in the early stages, the baby wakes only once a night; but as the months drag by he is likely to develop a second or even a third wakeful period each night. This is exhausting for the baby. He usually doesn't sleep enough in the daytime to make up for what he loses at night, so he's apt to be somewhat irritable all day and may have a cranky appetite. Such a problem is doubly exhausting to the parents, who have no chance to take long naps in the daytime. The parents also get more and more irritated. It seems as if the more they accommodate the baby, the more demanding he becomes. The worst situation is when the father learns to sleep through the night (and is permitted to by the mother) and then asks the mother cheerfully in the morning, "How did it go last night?"

Whereas the going-to-bed type of problem usually develops insidiously out of a case of three-month colic, the waking-in-the-middle-of-the-night kind most commonly starts abruptly. The mother reports that her baby always slept soundly before. One night he woke crying as if in pain. In one case it turns out that the pain was caused by an acute ear infection. In another case she can only guess that the first waking was probably caused by painful teething, since this is one of those babies who suffer all day, too, when their teeth are on the way. Whatever the cause of the first waking, the mother naturally was concerned and comforted him until he eventually fell asleep. The next night he waked again. This time there was less evidence of pain, but he loved the comforting and the walking anyway. As the weeks went by it became clear to the mother that this had become simply a habit of wakefulness and of demanding to be walked. Though she saw that this was the case, the knowledge didn't help her. Her baby was so insistent and angry and noisy about it that she couldn't find a way to break the habit.

These mothers, like the mothers of going-to-bed problem babies, tend to be of the highly conscientious type who would do anything under the sun for their babies, reasonable or unreasonable, and who rarely if ever stop to consider their own needs or comfort.

Such problems are also fostered by living in thin-walled apartments or fussy grandparents' homes, where neighbors or relatives get cross with the mother if her baby interferes with their sleep. Still it's the conscientious, sensitive parents who get into these jams. The thicker-skinned parents don't mind letting the neighbors or the baby's grandparents fume for a night or two while the baby is trained back to not expecting company at these hours.

These problems, like those I discussed last month, can most often be cured in a couple of nights. The mother only needs to be convinced that it's kinder to the baby in the long run to teach him that there is nothing worth waking up for at night. She only needs the courage not to go in to him at all when he starts his usual crying. There's usually twenty to forty minutes of fierce crying the first night, five to fifteen minutes the second night, and then blissful silence all night long.

I've learned not to be discouraged when a mother says she has tried letting her baby cry—even for an hour or two—but that it didn't work. She has usually gone in every ten minutes to try to comfort him with words and a pat on the shoulder. This only makes a baby who's expecting to be taken up more angry.

Failure occurs also when the parents sleep in the same room as the baby. All my experience has shown that you can't make a baby with a sleep problem go back to sleep by playing possum yourself (pretending to be asleep). The sight of the parents appearing not to hear him only stimulates him to yell louder. The baby must be sleeping in a room where he doesn't see anyone, at least temporarily, until he has learned to stay asleep. If there is no separate bedroom for him, it may be possible to put him to bed in the kitchen after an early supper for the parents, or in the living room (while the parents spend a couple of evenings in their bedroom), or in an older child's room, letting the latter sleep in another room, or with a neighbor, for a few nights.

Sedatives, which usually don't make a dent on a baby with a going-to-bed problem, may be quite helpful in getting over the hump with a waking-up problem, provided the doctor thinks the justification is sufficient and prescribes the dose.

How can a baby who has been in the habit of having a couple of hours of wakefulness and walking every night, for many months, suddenly learn to stay asleep? I don't know. I imagine that babies, like grownups, half wake a number of times each night, to change position and get more comfortable, and then fall deeply asleep again. When a baby finds that if he wakes up all the way he can always get his parents up and play a tense game of tug of war with them for an hour, I suppose it encourages him to wake up. When he finds that there's nothing but darkness to wake up for, I imagine he can quickly learn that it's not worth while.

Anyway, it's good for conscientious parents to remember that they, too, have their rights and ought to have plenty of chance to enjoy them. If they let themselves, out of a sense of duty, be intimidated by a determined baby, he only becomes more demanding and unhappy. And the parents can't love fully such a child. In fact, they can't help actively disliking him at times.

Since parents with a problem of any kind with a child soon lose their sense of perspective (even when the parents are professional people in the children's field) I want, as I did last month, to add some cautions at the end: Before you decide your baby has this kind of sleep problem, or try any of these suggestions, consult your doctor to make sure he agrees with the diagnosis.

I have been discussing a chronic type of sleep disturbance, in demanding babies, under the age of a year. There are other types of sleep disturbance, especially over the age of a year, that are caused by fears and which require a quite different and reassuring type of treatment.

If my baby who had always been a good sleeper suddenly woke and cried at night, I wouldn't hesitate to go in to him to find out what was wrong and to comfort him. I wouldn't begin to worry about a sleep problem until a number of nights had gone by and I saw that a pattern was beginning to develop.

DI PIETRO

Spock says: "The most skilled author can't make up a conversation half as amusing or heart-warming as what any small child says any old time."

The MELODY The ADRIENNE The VANITY begins with your beautiful new

AUTUMN I

RED CROS

Summer has been fun. But isn't it exciting to look forward to such pretty new fall clothes! And even lovelier than ever, your new Red Cross Shoes are styled in Autumn's prettiest moods. Soft, graceful pumps. Delicate, airy sandals and straps . . . finely tailored, walkable suit shoes. And how wonderful to wear! Each new style is Fit-Tested on the living, walking "twin" of your own foot. See them now . . . while the selection is endless. For these are the shoes that will be drawing admiring glances to the feet of millions of smartly dressed women all over America.

The CONTOUR The LIDO The DAMITA

The United States Shoe Corporation, Cincinnati 7, Ohio. These shoes are manufactured and distributed as Gold Cross Shoes in Canada by B & L Shoe, Ltd., in England by Son

The ARLENE

The CHATEAU

AMERICA

SHOES

The MASQUERADE

The RAMBLER

Largest selling brand of fine footwear in the world.

Styles from $8.95 to $12.95

THIS PRODUCT HAS NO CONNECTION WHATEVER WITH THE AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS

d Cross Shoes" (Aust.), Pty. Ltd., in South Africa by Eddels (S.A.), Ltd., in New Zealand by Duckworth, Turner and Co., Ltd.

SUITS RUFFOLO BROS

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS, P
Pennsylvania State University, Department of Psyc

Making marriage work

Try analyzing yourself instead of your marriage. You may be surprised.

Restless Young Wives

THE problem of the confused young wife who after six or eight years of marriage thinks she is in love with another man comes frequently to my attention. Typically, her husband is several years older, hard-working, successful and devoted to his wife.

They have neither financial problems nor serious differences concerning religion or in-laws; her friends consider him a model husband. She admits his good qualities, describing him as courteous, considerate and responsible. But he is also conventional, staid, conservative; she says he isn't stimulating or exciting. The very security of her life removes the challenge she craves, and she is bored.

On the surface the marriage appears successful, but the marriage counselor senses the trouble as he learns more about the wife's personality. Curiously enough, a wife like this is almost always either an extreme introvert or an extreme extrovert. Typically, she has no children or only one; either she has a job or plans to return to work when the child reaches school age.

She says she is moody, nervous, easily hurt and frequently lonely. She and her husband have little in common, and she doesn't find him sexually attractive. She doubts she ever loved him, and is convinced their marriage was a mistake. The counselor is not surprised when she declares she is in love with another man.

Often the key to the situation is that her husband is too undemanding. Through his love she dominates him as she probably did her father. The other man, in contrast, dominates her. The challenge of the unknown, the drama, and perhaps an increase in her sexual feelings (not uncommon in women around age thirty) convince her that at last she is in love with the right man.

If the other is free to marry her, she will probably seek a divorce. If not, the affair is likely to dwindle away, and may soon be followed by another. Whatever the outcome, she will not solve her problem until she realizes that her restlessness and discontent arise within herself. Her husband's yielding and his protective nature, though admirable, have aggravated her difficulties; these qualities have sheltered her from the realities of adult life.

Emotional immaturity is a serious personality flaw shared by many young wives at the time of their marriage. Fortunately, many of them overcome their handicap before it leads to an unhappy climax. If they consciously recognize the problem, they may adopt a corrective program; or they may simply do their honest best from day to day. Either way, success depends on unwavering determination to become a good wife. Every effort and action based on that determination is a step toward the goal. In fact, the attitude itself is a sign of approaching maturity.

The sooner the resolution is adopted, the greater the prospect of success. The wedding day is none too soon.

The restless wife who has the courage, the insight and generosity of spirit to analyze herself instead of her marriage can still hope to avert disaster despite dangerous floundering which has brought her to the edge of destruction. Here are suggestions for expressing resolution in action:

- Fulfill duties to husband, home and marriage ahead of all other; discontinue activities that interfere. Marriage is a career itself; a job does not relieve a wife of household responsibilities.
- Cultivate housekeeping skills. Efficiency will relieve tedium, cut down drudgery and free time for other activities.
- Plan your social life to include individuals and activities adapted to your husband's tastes,

ASK YOURSELF: How Well Do I Know My Husband?

In answering these questions, circle the "?" only if you can't be sure one way or the other. Your answers should be based on your personal knowledge and observation.

Do you know positively what:

1. Color he thinks most becomes you? Yes ? No
2. Are his three favorite desserts? Yes ? No
3. He wants to do when he retires? Yes ? No
4. Kind of vacation he really likes? Yes ? No
5. His true religious views are? Yes ? No
6. Trait he likes most about you? Yes ? No
7. Habit of yours most annoys him? Yes ? No
8. First attracted him to you? Yes ? No

Do you know positively whether he:

9. Likes or dislikes your friends? Yes ? No
10. Loves or doesn't love you? Yes ? No

Do you know positively why he:

11. Is fond of his best friend? Yes ? No
12. Likes or dislikes certain relatives? Yes ? No
13. Is or isn't proud of you? Yes ? No
14. Does or doesn't like to talk to you? Yes ? No

Credit two points for each "No," and one point for each "?" answer, nothing for "Yes." If your score is four or less, you either know your husband very well or think you do. A score of five or six is average, but with a score of seven or more either you are not observing your husband as you should or you and he have very poor communication. Spend more time with him, watch his reactions to what you say and do, and you may get better acquainted with him.

as well as yours. Excursions off the beaten path may be hazardous.

Just as every human being is unique, so is every marriage. The similarities are as remarkable as the differences. Every marriage conflict arises from elements present in many other marriages. The circumstances and situations may be bizarre, melodramatic, glamorous; or commonplace and (to the outsider) utterly trivial. Cases unlike in detail nevertheless follow a similar pattern.

If you are restless despite the security your husband provides, the standards he respects and the love he bears for you, you may be bored with yourself. But a man like this will do his best to help and encourage you. With him beside you, you may still grow up to be a happy wife.

Finding a Home

IN looking for a place to live, most people consider the obvious factors: income, space needed, the convenience for shopping, business and schools; and the comfort, appearance and condition of the building. Realizing that they shouldn't spend too much on rent, people don't know what too much is in their budget. Here are some decisions you should make in advance of home hunting:

The rented room. A room for one person should be at least two thirds as large as a room for two. A single room should be at least 80 square feet; a double room, 120. Six and a half feet is the minimum acceptable height. Window areas should not be less than 18 square feet for a couple or 15 per cent of the floor area for each person.

The apartment. Though a one-room unit with kitchenette and bath is adequate for one person, a unit with a separate bedroom is preferable for a couple. Be sure the lease is clear about payment for utilities, responsibility for repairs and maintenance, and renewal terms.

The house. It is usually wise to rent for a year before buying a home in a new community. In buying or signing a long lease consider present and future needs, and the probable trend in property values in that area.

Probably the greatest single mistake made in renting or buying a house is spending too much. Be prepared for unexpected costs; and guard against the natural tendency to spend more in furbishing your own home than a rented property.

No more than 20 per cent of net income should be spent on rent, including utilities and upkeep. In buying, 20 per cent must also cover mortgage payments, taxes and insurance. Fifteen per cent is maximum for a room without cooking facilities.

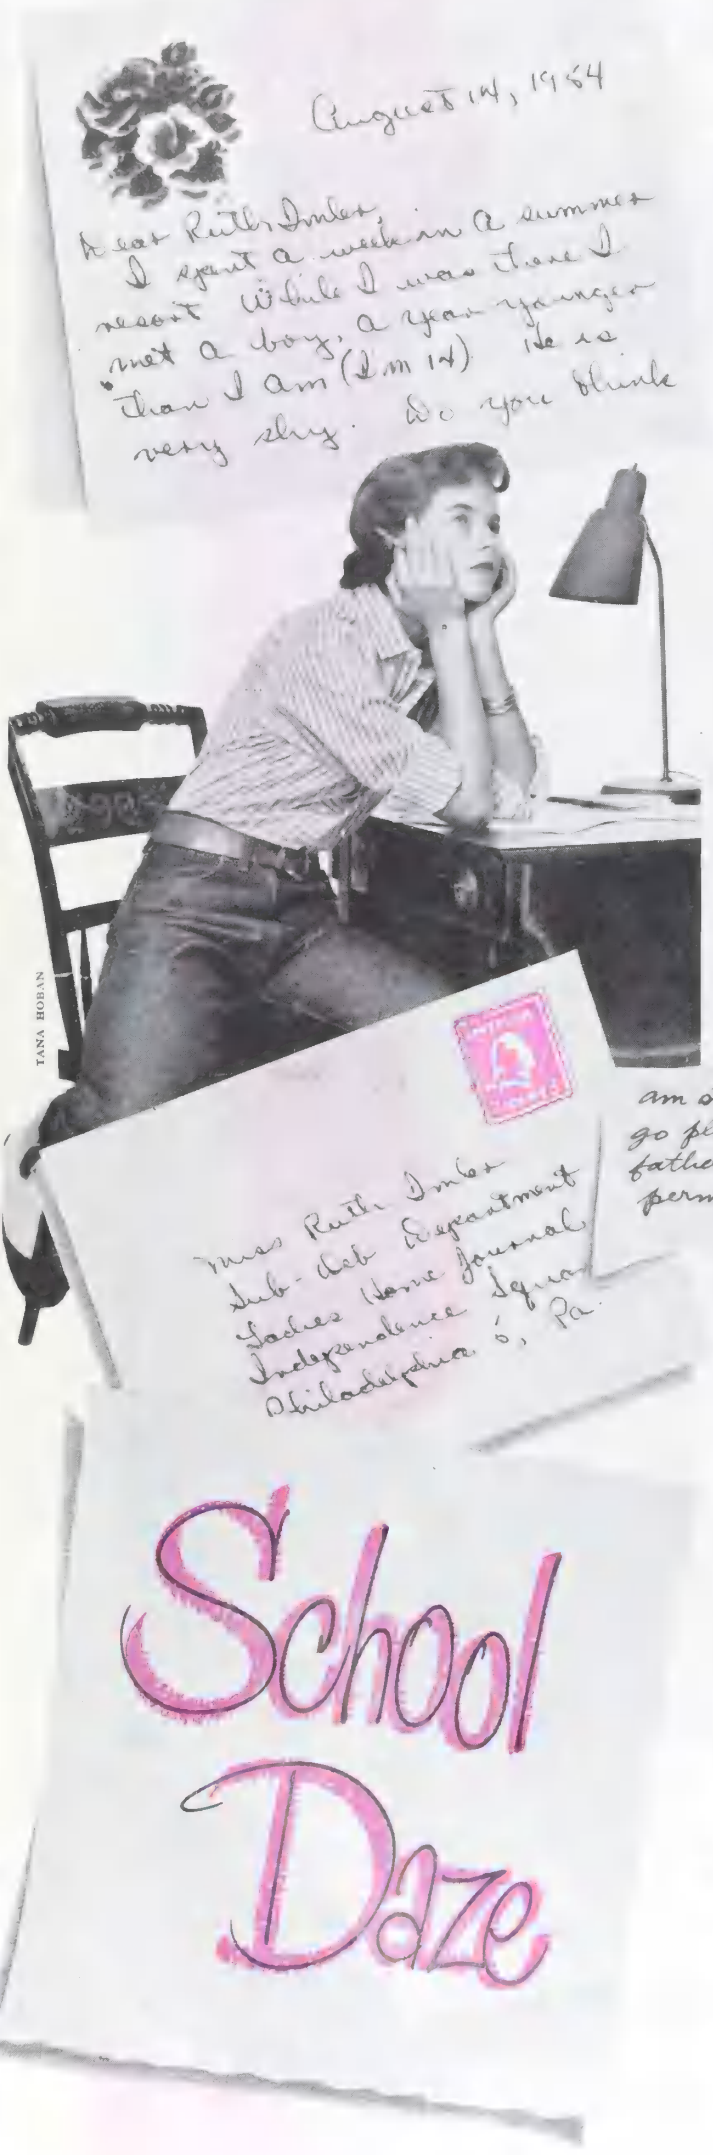
Do You Agree?

How many children does the average young married couple want today?

Three, in contrast to two fifteen years ago.

Everybody's Talking About...

Revlon's 'LOVE-PAT'



the miracle makeup with the face powder finish

1.25 plus tax
'Love-Pat' in its own spill-proof compact.

You puff on powder and makeup all-at-once! Instantly your complexion takes on new radiant color, a new younger look! Once you've tried this new way of powdering your face, you'll never go back to loose, spilly powders. Actually, 'Love-Pat' does a complete makeup job...no base needed! It can't spill, puffs on in seconds, clings hours longer than powder. 8 genius shades that won't streak, won't turn orangey on your skin!

compact makeup blended with Lanolite... 3-ways-better than Lanolin itself!

DEAR Ann, and Mary, and Louise, and Peggy and . . . all of you who write to me about your problems. I'm so pleased that you feel I may be able to help you solve them, and when you write again to tell me that "it worked"—I want to kick off my shoes and dance, and often do! (Even though I don't really believe in problem solving by mail at all!) A letter is so frustrating when I'd like to talk to you for hours. But since I'm discovering that most of us have problems that are similar to those lots of other girls have, or all girls have, I'm almost reconciled to letters; besides, you're convincing me that it is possible to get you started problem solving yourself, and that's most important. Fine books, excellent pamphlets and professional people are standing by to help you, too, so ——

Should a girl date a boy who is a year younger? Yes, why not? I also think a girl should date a boy who is an inch or two shorter. For how can a girl tell which boy she's going to like best, unless she gets to know a good many of them? Maybe Fred will turn out to be just another nice guy who thinks enough of her to want to take her out. Good. Nice guys mean nice times, and the more a girl dates, the more she values nice times over height and age. You'll see when you try it!

But suppose you did have a date with a dream man and you wonder if he'll ask you out again. What then? Here's a bit of good advice from a Sub-Deb booklet, HOW ABOUT A DATE? "Even if he should take someone else out next week, it's no reason to feel that you didn't click on the date. One date doesn't mean you're going steady. And if he has fun on his one date with you, he'll be around for another. Give him the chance to ask you out again by being friendly when you see him around school." This booklet also gives good points on what to do if you don't know many boys.

If you're shy (now who isn't?) when you're around boys, or never know what to say, you may want to read HOW TO OVERCOME SHYNESS and I NEVER KNOW WHAT TO SAY. Both are Sub-Deb booklets.

Dear Miss Imler,
I am 5'4" and ver thin. I am very self-con scious about it. I eat plenty but I don't gain Is there anything that nd Although I am still in grade school, I want to go places like everyone else, but my father won't let me unless I beg for permission

WHAT a perfectly heavenly problem—from a chubby girl's point of view only! Of course it's discouraging to eat a lot and still stay thin. But are you eating the right foods? Foods with vitamins B and D in them are not only good for you but they stimulate your appetite. So eat quantities of yeast, liver, whole-grain breads and cereal, milk, intensely green leafy vegetables, fish-liver oils and eggs. Eat sweets, too, but always after meals so that you won't spoil your appetite for the essentials. Then underline this suggestion on your schedule: get more sleep. Give your body time to build up in those extra hours of rest.

Worry, tension and frantic living often lead to underweight too. Laugh as often as you can—try harder—and decide not to battle every day. And while you're waiting for the rise in the scale, you can use "tricks" to make yourself look heavier: try wearing clothes in warm vibrant colors like red, orange, yellows and their shades and tints, for instance.

But if you're too heavy? Booklets COUNT YOUR CALORIES and FACTS ABOUT FIGURES may help. And if you have complexion troubles? Perhaps MIRROR MAGIC or LET'S BE LOVELY will —— You have to wear glasses? Look into GLAMOUR FOR GLASSES. . . . Can't do a thing with your hair? Then THE WAY YOU WEAR YOUR HAIR is for you. . . . Clothes-closet blues? Read CLOTHES CHECKUP!

THE letter writer, who says she's "twelve going on thirteen," unfortunately doesn't list the places she has in mind. To the movies—after dark? To a skating rink or public dance hall—without a date? Or just to go out on dates?

What are the "rights" of a teen-age girl? Should she have to ask her parents' permission to do the things that "everyone else" is doing? I think so. Don't go away furious—reread that sentence. I said ask, not beg, and there is a difference.

From my years of experience as a daughter I've learned two things. The first: no matter how old you are, your parents always worry about your reputation, your health, your success and your happiness! The second: a daughter always wants the love and respect of her parents! So, whether you are ten or many times that, you'll want to work out a good way of asking them for the very thing they want most to give you: happiness.

If a girl can prove she's sensible—the parents' way of asking her not to cause them any worry—she can have a lot of fun and freedom. It isn't easy, but here's a beginning:

A parent's worry: my daughter's reputation. A daughter's solution: 1. Give parents chances to find out how nice your friends are (have nice friends, of course). Invite both girls and boys home after school and/or give a party before you ask to go places with them. Parents are less likely to object to a party if you plan it yourself, keep it going with good games, and clean up afterward. 2. Work out a get-home time with them and stick to it. (At first it'll be too early, but if you keep a good record you can usually ask for another half hour and get it.)

A parent's worry: my daughter's health. A daughter's solution: 1. Don't ever wash your hair just before you go to bed. 2. Get up in time to eat a good breakfast; eat it. 3. Don't make plans for every night in the week. 4. Don't beg to stay up late to watch TV or do homework that could have been done earlier.

A parent's worry: my daughter's success. A daughter's solution: 1. Develop the sterling quality of being polite to their friends. 2. Give parents something to brag about: she takes care of her own room, she irons all her blouses, she manages to save 50 cents a week, she usually does the dinner dishes, and so on.

A parent's worry: my daughter's happiness. A daughter's solution: 1. Tell your parents it's important to your happiness to become socially poised, to be active in and outside of school. 2. Take the time to show the folks that they're important to you: go to the movies with them occasionally, plan a family picnic, ask their advice on clothes, grooming, studies. 3. Share your happiness with them, as well as your complaints! 4. Hint that you'd be happier if they were more active in the P.T.A. (If they are, they'll learn more about the "new" ways of dating, etc., etc.)

If a girl worked only half as hard as this at decreasing her parents' worries about her, she'd be able to approach them as an adult, not a child, because she's acting more like one. Maybe this sounds too simple to you. It is a difficult problem and I hope girls (and boys) with parent problems will also read our booklet ACT YOUR AGE. It'll give you lots of ideas on improving your family relations; and also suggestions for ways to avoid having to "beg favors" of girls, boys, teachers, older people, or even of yourself. But that's another entire page!

What's your problem?

No matter how trivial it is—and I hope it is—if it gives you one sleepless night or keeps you from being the fun-loving, busy, growing young woman you deserve to be, you should do something about it. And September is the perfect month to do it: you have a new notebook, new classes, classmates, teachers, perhaps a new fall suit and a new gleam in your eye, so why not be a brand-new person too?

If you think I can help you, please write. Your letter will never be printed, you know. Also, about the booklets mentioned on this page: Send 10 cents* for each one that you want, and request it by name, to Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania. Write today.

Pennsylvania residents please add sales tax.

THE SUB-DEB edited by Ruth Imler

New!

RICHER LATHER! INSTANT RINSING! SHINY-CLEAN HAIR! YET THIS NEW SHAMPOO NEVER, NEVER DRIES YOUR HAIR!

New Woodbury Shampoo

FOR BEAUTIFUL HAIR-DOS RIGHT AFTER SHAMPOOING!

Naturally, you expect a shampoo to clean your hair and scalp. And New Woodbury does that, but with this difference. It never, never dries your hair because a special ingredient protects your natural hair oils. Your hair will shine with cleanliness and be beautifully behaved right after shampooing. You won't have to wait days for it to settle down. New Woodbury lathers extra well, even in hard water. And it rinses out easily and quickly, too. There's no need for a special rinse. We honestly believe that you cannot buy a better shampoo at any price. Yet you'll find New Woodbury costs much less than any other quality shampoo. This is possible because so many people buy it all the time. And right now, the big $1.00 size is just 59¢. See how proud of your hair New Woodbury Shampoo can make you!

So precious in a sweater... the soft luxury of Vicara®

ZEIN FIBER

EVERYTHING YOU WANT in a sweater... lasting good looks, singing color, luxurious softness, easy care... all yours with Vicara, the luxury fiber that improves the blend.

VICARA makes a sweater easily washable... no shrinking or stretching, no bothersome blocking. Vicara is anti-static... there's less pilling and matting. Vicara is forever comfortable because it's absorbent... Sweaters never feel cold, clammy or sticky. Around the clock, around the family... you'll find that sweaters you love to live with star the luxury of Vicara... softest fiber known to hand. And at such pleasant prices, too!

The golden Vicara hangtag identifies luxurious apparel made of Vicara at fine stores everywhere.

Vicara, the luxury fiber, is a product of Fiber Division, Virginia-Carolina Chemical Corporation, 99 Park Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

MUNKACSI

Tell me Doctor

Editors' Note: There are many questions which women would like to ask a trusted physician, but there is not always the opportunity. In a continuation of this series, Tell Me Doctor, Doctor Safford will answer some of these questions which have been sent to him by readers. The questions are all real but the names are fictitious.

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

write an article about endo- ris. There are so many women ora about this ailment. I'm sure ny ould appreciate your help as ch I would."

p ent was a young married woman er e twenties who explained that she se ng relief from a menstrual disturb- over ten years she had experienced rm cycle. Recently this regularity had me oken, the flow frequently being ssi and always accompanied by pain. Ab t this pain," said the doctor. "Is it ve fter the menstrual flow has been bli d?"

No On the contrary, it begins several s b re I menstruate and continues all ug There are about ten days every th hen I am no good to myself—or ne se."

Yo said you have been married four s. I ve you any children?"

No ve never been pregnant although I e a ays wanted children—and have erta n any means to prevent pregnancy."

Tha s about the reply I expected. Now uic ke to make an examination."

he ocedure appeared to require an un- al a ount of time. While he was making exa ination the doctor continued his tio ng:

Bef this prolonged menstruation be- di ou notice any unusual symptoms, a temperature rise, profuse vaginal har or a constant pain in the lower om ?"

No othing like that. I just began to pa ful and extensive bleeding—and it bec getting worse."

Yo re quite positive that you did not a egnancy which was interrupted for cau at all?"

Qui What would it mean if I had, tor w try to explain it back in the con- ng om."

fe moments later, in the doctor's of- the atient said anxiously, "I hope you not ing to tell me that I have a cancer."

No the doctor replied quickly. "I do nel e that we are dealing with a malig- y. ou appear to have a definite case of me osis."

nc netriosis? I know that the lining of ute is called the endometrium. Do you mean that I have a diseased endometrium? My sister had that. She just had a curettement, and it cleared up right away."

"I am afraid this is going to require more than a simple curettement. I made a very careful pelvic examination, and found that your uterus is displaced backward. This is a common-enough condition, but in your case it is complicated because the uterus is firmly fixed. I was unable to move it at all."

"What does that mean?"

"It indicates that there must be dense adhesions holding it fast."

"What would cause these adhesions?"

"The most common cause is pelvic inflammatory disease, which in turn is caused most commonly by accidental abortion which has not had proper care. You have assured me that you have never been pregnant. You would not misinform me, would you?"

"Of course not, Doctor. I know I have never been pregnant—I only wish I had."

"You also said that you had not had any of the symptoms ordinarily connected with pelvic inflammation; so we will eliminate that. In addition to the tipped, fixed uterus, my examination indicated more than one puckered nodule deep in the pelvis, together with a single cyst about the size of a walnut on the left side. These, plus the painful and prolonged menstruation, after years of normalcy, point definitely to endometriosis."

"You haven't told me what causes that, Doctor."

"I am just beginning. You know, of course, that normally every month the endometrium is sloughed off from the uterine interior and expelled vaginally. Suppose it did not all follow this route. What would happen? Where would it go?"

"Why, I suppose it would go anywhere it could—into the tubes, perhaps, since they would be the only other openings."

"Precisely. And from there?"

"Why . . . I suppose it could reach the inside of the abdomen."

"Correct again. In that case these would be wandering cells, finally coming to rest, and capable of continuing to function. In my judgment this is the cause of your trouble."

"But what made the cells wander?"

"The earliest theory was that of direct implantation of endometrial tissue by forcing back menstrual blood, containing fragments of endometrium, through the tubes. This theory has never been disproved, although a newer idea is that endometrial cells are spread through the lymphatics. There is a

CONTINUED ON PAGE 83

rd's new book, The Intimate Problems of taining several chapters which have not the Journal, has been published by Haw- , Inc., 70 Fifth Ave., New York 11, N.Y.

Bring back the blush with new DuBarry Bloom!

Shades of Victoria—the blush is back! You see this glow-of-cheek on the radiant, new crop of American beauties and think, "how pretty!" Nature? Vitamins? No—DuBarry Bloom!

Bloom is a wonderful new kind of color for your cheeks, so creamy-light in texture that it spreads quickly and softly as a blush! No blotching or streaking. Never any hard, artificial "rouged" look. And the pretty blush that Bloom gives your cheeks is so fresh and natural, no one would ever dream it's "put on"!

Bloom, $1.10 plus tax

Sounds like magic, but Bloom comes in just one shade and gives each her own prettiest color glow!

P. S. If you're 30 plus, start using new DuBarry Penetrating Balm with Hormones at night (wear it under your make-up by day) and watch it work wonders in moisturizing and smoothing your complexion. This fabulous beauty treatment is a magical blend and balance of vitamins, hormones and lanolin that works under, through and on the skin to give it the moist, full look of youth. Not the least bit greasy—a perfect joy to use!

Penetrating Balm, $2.50 plus tax

DUBARRY BEAUTY PREPARATIONS

by RICHARD HUDNUT of Fifth Avenue

reflecting daylight to evening excitement...

KAY . . . Smartly stitched and set for a season of unlimited daytime duty. Perfect with tailored and town wear. Elasticized.

Vitality SHOES

famous for fashion and fit

$10.95 to $12.95

style—again Vitality reflects foremost fashion news in an outstanding round-the-clock wardrobe of dress, street and casual shoes quality—finer leathers and exacting workmanship reflect Vitality's standards and assure exceptional shape-retaining qualities comfort—many elasticized pumps for perfect instep fit; and all feature Vitality's famous narrow heel which shapes to your heel value—all this—yet so reasonably priced you can afford a whole wardrobe!

CHIQUITA . . . Perfect choice for those who love the flattery of a sandal! Lovely with full skirts; with dressmaker wools.

Vitality Shoe Company
Division of International Shoe Company
St. Louis 3, Missouri

CLARETTE . . . Elegant shell shaped to compleme silks and taffetas. Doubles nicely for street wear Elasticized.

NADA . . . One of the smartest tailored shoes you Perfect with tweeds, skirts and sweaters. Elasticize

CHARMAINE . . . Braid on suede details an excitin open toe pump. Nice with sheer wools. Elasticize

GARMETTA . . . Beautifully detailed afternoon Stunning with Fall's shimmering new fabrics. Elast

Vitality wanderlust SHOES (low heels, flats and casuals)
from $8.95

BARTONA . . . Smart, comfortable low heeled! slip into it for countless hours of at-home or wear! Elasticized.

Journal About Town

Gossip about people you know, Editors you like, and what goes on in New York

Fifty Years Ago in the Journal

THE first mounted policemen appeared in New York in September, 1904. One of them arrested a woman for smoking a cigarette on Fifth Avenue, even though she was in a car. Candida, running on Broadway with Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, started a rage for George Bernard Shaw in America. Tin Pan Alley, impressed with the Wright Brothers' success at Kitty Hawk, came up with a new hit called Come Take a Trip in My Air-Ship.

The September, 1904, JOURNAL, "the 250th number," exhibited a $1000 prize cover by Maxfield Parrish, a poetic-looking boy blowing "castles in the air" with soap bubbles.

"No calls are permissible from a woman upon a man, unless strictly for business purposes," rules the Lady from Philadelphia. "Clergymen are the greatest victims of women who, under some pretext, are constantly frequenting a pastor's study."

This issue featured The Twelve Prettiest Children in America, personally chosen by portrait painter Walter Russell from thousands of photographs submitted to the JOURNAL. The artist traveled to each winner's home to paint the portrait of the lucky boy or girl. Of the twelve handsomest children in the U.S.A., three were from Ohio.

"If your English ivy seems to have lost all ambition, feed it with raw onions," advises the Gardening Editor.

"Autumn Clothes: The amount of material now necessary for a gown is so great that it is difficult and cumbersome to handle, and also expensive. From eighteen to twenty-four yards of taffeta are needed because of the immense fullness of the new skirts, sleeves and bodices."

Writes a reader who calls herself Troubled: "I have just lost an uncle and cannot afford to go into mourning. What shall I do?" Answer: "Wear a four-inch black band on your left arm above the elbow."

Fashion: "For gymnasium work, the schoolgirl wears a loose blouse and full bloomers coming to just beneath the knee with black stockings."

"Ruffles will be worn this winter on coat sleeves."

It wasn't part of her assignment, but Suzanne Szasz (right) had a lot of fun helping Bets Parker (page 148) paint, do other household chores.

ONE reason why all the How Young America Lives people look so natural in their pictures is that JOURNAL photographers always make themselves right at home and become part of the family. Besides helping Bets Parker, of this month's family, to paint her fence, with Bet's husband, Scudder, taking their pictures, Suzanne Szasz helped with the cooking, did the dishes while Bets changed her clothes, and helped plant potatoes. We asked Suzanne if that was all. "Oh, no," she said. "We stacked wood one whole morning, and I would have stayed to help them clean house, but we decided to go fishing instead."

The President's parakeet has learned to say, "I like Ike."

At the Workshop conference here that resulted in Why Don't They Like Us Abroad? on page 46 of this issue, Laura Lou Brookman, who is a very interesting doodler herself, suddenly became aware of the fact that most of the conferees assembled there were doodlers too. Harold Stassen, she noted, scrawled very large patterns just in lines, of houses, trees, animals—then carefully tore them up. Joan Younger drew faces. Mrs. John J. McCloy patiently filled in the pattern on her paper napkin. Chester Bowles drew melon-shaped figures and filled them in solidly. Alfred Max drew long jagged lines, like lightning flashes, then blacked them in with clouds. "And what did you draw?" we asked Laura Lou. "Oh, I was so fascinated to see how keenly attentive the doodlers were to the discussion, and how quick they were to come into it, that for once I didn't doodle."

Louella Shouer and Gladys Denny Shultz were comparing presidential appetites, as observed by them at various banquets they'd attended. Truman, Mrs. Shultz had noticed, ate sparingly, while, according to Louella, Eisenhower always cleaned his plate. Whereas, once at a dinner in Des Moines, Gladys put in, Roosevelt took second helpings of everything.*

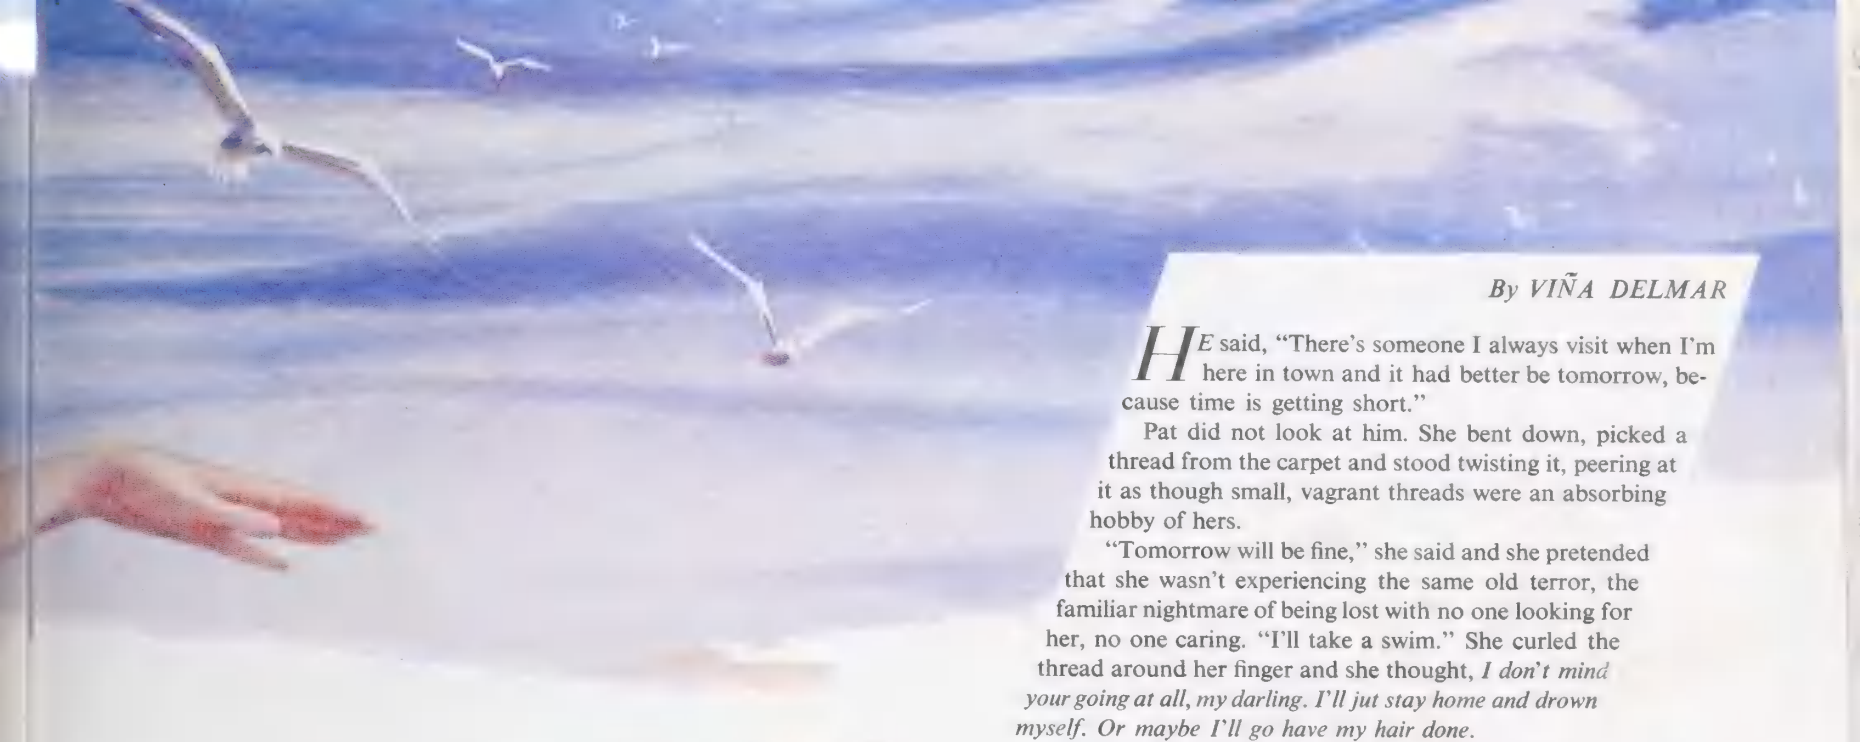
Lunching with Patricia Martin the other day in Philadelphia, Janet Whitney said that while her novel, The Quaker Bride, was running in serial form in the JOURNAL, she'd stood at the ticket window of the bus terminal trying to get the attention of the girl inside, who was deep in a copy of the JOURNAL. At last the young lady looked up. "Oh, I'm sorry, but my JOURNAL just came and I was so interested in The Quaker Bride I didn't even hear you. Are you reading it? It's wonderful!" "No, I'm not," said the gratified author. "But I do happen to know how it comes out. I wrote it." That of course brought on the excited question, "How does it come out? I just can't wait to know"—but right then Janet's bus was called.

Alberte Wright was telling us in Philadelphia about a young man of eight over there who retires in injured dignity to his room whenever his plans are frustrated by his parents. Seems he has a sign he then hangs on a hook outside his door which says: DO NOT ENTER WITHOUT KNOCKING. DO NOT EVEN KNOCK.

In the United States, women own about 65 per cent of the wealth, spend 85 per cent of all money spent in a day, outnumber men voters by almost 2,000,000. . . .

Just back from visiting the JOURNAL Sub-Deb Club in Paris, Betty Jo Ramsey has been telling us about these 12-to-14-year-old daughters of American career Army men stationed in France. One day they met at the American Embassy and were given hot-fudge sundaes, Cokes and two grilled cheese sandwiches apiece. Betty Jo asked them what they liked best about living in Paris. "We can have art classes in the Louvre," one said. "Because our school's official playground is the Bois de Boulogne," said another. One liked it because her family's French maid, who worked weekends at the Moulin Rouge, was teaching her the cancan. And when Betty Jo asked another if she'd been to Versailles, the youngster said, "Sure, that's where the lizard crawled up our art teacher's back!"

American Sub-Debbers in Paris are eager for club news in Journal: left to right—Joan Ridlehuber, Jane Ridlehuber, Jeanine Hiers, Carol Touser.



WIDE WOR

Pat looked at the child of Lisa Kerrigan
and she was stunned by the thought that came to her.
"Oh, no," she said to herself,
"I'm not that crazy!"

Pat had lost
Bill twice.
First to the legend Lisa, now to this enchanting child.

ILLUSTRATED BY MORGAN KANE

She Slittered when she walked

By VIÑA DELMAR

HE said, "There's someone I always visit when I'm here in town and it had better be tomorrow, because time is getting short."

Pat did not look at him. She bent down, picked a thread from the carpet and stood twisting it, peering at it as though small, vagrant threads were an absorbing hobby of hers.

"Tomorrow will be fine," she said and she pretended that she wasn't experiencing the same old terror, the familiar nightmare of being lost with no one looking for her, no one caring. "I'll take a swim." She curled the thread around her finger and she thought, I don't mind your going at all, my darling. I'll jut stay home and drown myself. Or maybe I'll go have my hair done.

"Swim today," Bill said. "I want you to go with me tomorrow. You and the kids too. . . . What are you so surprised about? Haven't I dragged you all over town exhibiting you to old schoolteachers, senile relatives and anybody else who'd look?"

"This I can't deny," she admitted.

"Then don't think for a minute that you're going to get out of going tomorrow."

"All right. I won't think of it. Not for a minute."

But why did he want to take her? Wouldn't he rather see Lisa Kerrigan alone? Perhaps he wasn't going to Lisa's. He hadn't mentioned Lisa. Lisa had been mentioned only by the small tormenting voice that always whispered a warning when Lisa was in his thoughts.

"We'll go after lunch," he said. "It's not a long ride out there."

"Out where?" It was natural to ask the question, wasn't it? He hadn't said where they were going and it would be nice if just once the small voice hadn't known what it was talking about.

"Names of places wouldn't tell you much around here, honey. You're a stranger in paradise."

"Still I'd like to know where we're going."

"Cherry Hill. There. Does that mean anything to you?"

"No," she said. But it did. She had heard of Cherry Hill. Oh, how she had heard of Cherry Hill!

"Well, I guess I'll go see what the kids are doing," Bill said and he walked out of the room.

I know what the kids are doing, she thought. And so does he. They're playing catch with his father, and they can be seen and heard from this window. He walked out because he doesn't want to talk to me about Lisa.

Only once had he been willing to talk about Lisa. She thought back to the night when Bill had asked her to marry him. He had been willing then to speak of Lisa. No, not willing, perhaps, but at least ready.

"In case you're the kind of person who likes a synopsis of what's gone before," he had said, "I'd better tell you that there was a girl back home."

She thought with bitterness of how happy she had been that night, how confident, how half-witted. She had said to him, "This installment has all new characters in it. What good would a synopsis be?" She had been in Bill's arms and she hadn't CONTINUED ON PAGE 118

Copyright, 1954, by Viña Delmar

ILLUSTRATED BY Jon Whitcomb

I felt pretty efficient.
Rules 1, 2, 3, 7 and 9 in ten minutes.
This looked like a cinch.

Rx for Love

By DREW FROST

IT had been one of those gray days of April rain in New York, a hard rain that beat down on the pavements, boiling the dirty water in pools at the curbs. I felt cranky, grubby and disheveled, and my conscience was bothering me. It said to deliver the silver chalice Father Bristor had left to be repaired. But the weather said it was a fine night to read in bed with my hair tied back under a pink bow; a plate of apples and cookies on the night table. All along I suppose I knew my conscience would win, because Father Bristor had said he must have the chalice that night.

I got out my old raincoat, tied a scarf over my head and took the bus uptown to 73rd Street. Then I ran under a dripping umbrella to the lighted parish house at the end of the block. Walking in, I found Father Bristor addressing a group of women. He motioned me to an empty chair in the back row. I plopped down and yanked off my boots. I was annoyed to be hung up by a meeting.

"My friends," Father Bristor was saying, "I announced on Sunday that Dr. Kenney Blake would talk to you on Men and Marriage tonight. I am sorry to have to tell you he has been called to the West Coast, but he has turned over his notes to another eminent psychiatrist, Dr. Jacob Pendergast. He should be here any minute."

My word, I thought, I should have gone to bed with a book. And why does everybody glue the word "eminent" to psychiatrist? Eminent psychiatrist. Utterly charming. Veteran newspaperman. Crack regiment. Vicious circle. High glee. High dudgeon. Utterly fabulous. The whole darn New York lingo. Eminent nuts. I jerked off my damp coat.

Father Bristor took out his watch and looked at it, and while I was thinking how groomed to the teeth everyone looked but me, the door opened and Doctor Pendergast breezed in, pretty groomed to the teeth himself, and, if not eminent at first glance, at any rate a dreamboat.

"This," I muttered aloud, in the back row of collapsible chairs, "is for me."

The woman next to me leaned over and looked at me closely. I smiled and looked at Dr. P., who was laying aside his gray wool raglan topcoat and gloves. Then he reached up and pushed his eminent wavy hair back tight from his forehead. He did it with both hands, and it looked like a characteristic gesture. Then he folded his arms and started to count us under his breath, giving each one a good look, hat to shoes.

"Good evening," he said finally. "I see twenty-six of you have been kind enough to come out tonight in the CONTINUED ON PAGE 105

All she needed was Ten Easy Lessons, sixty days—and a man.

"ARE you sitting down, George?" Wilma said over the telephone.

"No," said George. "I am floating in midair, as all lawyers do at three o'clock in the afternoon."

"Sit down, George," said Wilma. "Or hold on to something. I have a red-hot flash for you."

"I've fastened my seat belt. Flash away."

"Listen, George," said Wilma. "Do you remember yesterday I suddenly decided I wanted to eat an egg for breakfast and I never before in my whole life could stand the sight of eggs for breakfast? Remember that?"

"How could I forget it?" said George. "There you were, and there was the egg. It was a scene worthy of the brush of Leonardo da Vinci, the great egg painter of the Renaissance. You put a little salt on it. You lifted your fork, and then ——"

"George," said Wilma, "the reason I wanted that egg is that I'm pregnant."

There was silence for the space of about fifteen seconds. Then Wilma said into the phone, "Are you there, George?"

"Gork," said George.

"Are you all right?"

"Harrasch," said George.

"What's the matter, George?"

"There seems to be something wrong with this phone," said George, returning to English at last. "I had the impression at this end that you said just now that you were pregnant."

"Pregnant is what I am," said Wilma.

"This is impossible," he said. "I demand a recount."

"It's true," Wilma told him. "Doctor Franz checked twice. He suspected as soon as I told him about the eggs for breakfast."

"Medical science has certainly come a long way. I suppose if you ate two eggs you'd be having twins?"

"Changes in the body make the tastes change," said Wilma. "Doctor Franz explained it."

"Doctor Franz has a lot to explain," George said. "Now don't start moving the furniture or anything. I'm coming right home."

"Don't worry about me. I feel fine," said Wilma. "I'm just bewildered, that's all."

"Do you need anything?"

"Yes, bring a dozen eggs."

When George got home it was five in the afternoon, time for Polly's bath, dinner, storytime and bedtime. With the sensitive radar of the eighteen-month-old, Polly divined that the two big people in her life were eager to be putting her away for the night, and she chose this particular evening to fight like a panther every step of the way. It was not until eight-thirty that Polly got her last drink of water and her last kiss, snuggled up with her Teddy bear, and closed her lashes over her hazel eyes.

Afterward George and Wilma sat in the living room, side by side on the sofa. Wilma was a big-boned girl, not cover-girl pretty, but she wore her old housecoat with a certain dash, and a touch of lipstick brightened her broad, intelligent face. Now, feeling the need for physical contact with

CONTINUED ON PAGE 154

by Lee Rogow

ILLUSTRATED BY HARRY ANDERSON

It happens all th

"I am the only man," said George, who became a grandfather without being a father."

One child is enough, they decided...
but that was when they had none

ime

GERTRUDE LAWRENCE AS "Mrs. A"

By RICHARD STODDARD ALDRICH

To them – as to millions – war brought parting and heartache. But it also brought deeper understanding.

"As the bombs dropped closer, Gertrude talked faster and faster about our home on the

IN company with several million other American husbands and wives, Gertrude and I were spending a quiet Sunday afternoon at home when the broadcast report of the attack on Pearl Harbor ended one phase of our life together and rang up the curtain on another.

By the beginning of the new year I had been commissioned lieutenant in the U.S. Naval Reserve and was getting used to the uniform, the service idiom and giving and acknowledging salutes. I had turned my share of the firm's responsibilities over to my partner, Dick Myers, while I reported daily to Headquarters, Third Naval District, 90 Church Street.

I was fortunate my duties permitted me to remain at home for the time being. However, my schedule and Gertrude's allowed little time together. In order to keep hours, I had to be up shortly after six. cordance with her British ideas of a duties, particularly the wife of a man form, Gertrude insisted on getting up same time to get my breakfast. This the fact that Lady in the Dark had re early in the autumn, which meant that seldom in bed before one A.M. Her car was thoroughly heart-warming, but suggested that she could not carry on duous role and her many activities on sleep, she took offense. As a last reso ported that my superiors had instituted fast conferences downtown at which ance was compulsory. After that, G slept while I slipped out of the house

Copyright, 1954, by Richard Stoddard Aldrich

From London, Normandy, the Marianas, she wrote repeatedly, "Be sure to tell me all about everything at home."

SIGNAL CORPS PHOTO

Asked how she always looked glamorous, even in marine jungle garb, Gertrude replied, "It's my false eyelashes."

She sang for servicemen at bases around the wor times so near the front her voice was drowned by eping up my morale."

gstore. And I was seldom home just before she left for the theater.
uring those months of our Box and nce that Gertrude took to writing and leaving them about the apart-e I would be sure to discover them.
ey were a far remove from the roessages which the young Orlando o Arden's oaks for Rosalind, they ertrude—merry, impudent, tender,

t phase of her character was very e fore. The instant that I appeared in uniform I lost my status as some-e care of her, and became someone welfare she felt responsible. I came itter-cold evening to find a sheet of per CONTINUED ON PAGE 87

ting for USO tour, she worked as ambulance
-raid warden, canteen hostess, cranberry picker.

Oceans apart, all during the long war years, Lt. (later Comdr.) and Mrs. Aldrich each carried this picture, taken just before he went overseas.

DOROTHY WILDING

Geranium-red jersey by Hattie Carnegie has the easy-sheath silhouette and open neckline. The cloche is navy velveteen; shoes, gloves, navy suède.

Trend coat in brushed wool by Charles James h fitted yoke, dropped shoulder, pleats in bac

COLOR IS THE FASHION..

Red, the color of a scarlet tanager or a child crayon, is the fashion. A whole palette of blue sapphire and turquoise brings up exciting pos bilities. Mauve to mulberry is in again, day a night. Even the "neutrals" have a new tan smoky grays are worn with other gray tones accented with flame; spice and ginger colors a lovely with topaz jewelry. We are in a fu scale, long-term color cycle. If you'd adore a r dress or suit, think of it as one of your main c tumes, not just an extra. The prettiest dinner dr of your life may be a pastel satin—pink with gray wool coat, blue with a blue tweed. Twe jersey and satin are the fabrics to live in. Suits spare and lithe and their skirts easy to walk Many dresses are softly bloused, have fluid plea The sheath is not strictly fitted. This kind fashion—easy and exciting at the same time- right for the way we live. By WILHELA CUSHM

Fashion Editor of the Jo

ER PRIGENT

Ensemble in spice and bittersweet shades—coat in shaggy wool lined with taffeta, dress in wool jersey, by Samuel Winston. Beaver felt by Elizabeth Marks.

Double-breasted coat dress of gray wool with wide neckline and side width in the skirt, by Ben Reig. Topaz mocha gloves, fur bag by Walter Katten, side-visor hat.

COLOR

IS THE FASHION

Cinnamon-brown wool town dress with leopard ascot accenting the low-cut neckline; leather buttons and belt. By Ben Reig.

Checks and plaids are suit fashion. This scarf suit by Derby is worn with fur-felt cloche by Elizabeth M

Dress and short-jacket costume is trimmed with Persian lamb, worn with Persian-lamb beret. By Hattie Carnegie.

ethyst velvet dinner-and-theater dress has wide kle, box pleats, by Christian Dior—New York.

ROGER PRIGENT

Norfolk-jacket suit in true-red jersey with silver buttons and chiffon scarf by Jane Derby, matching beret. Bag by Richard Koret.

Fashion's lovely contradiction—a tweed coat over a satin dress by Jane Derby. Worn with a blue necklace, satin gloves and a little velvet hat.

MRS. JOHN J. McCLOY:
Censorship of our free libraries abroad was a tremendous blow to our prestige.

BRUCE GOULD:
Americans are not unusual, I suppose, in believing that all their actions are for the best.

CHESTER BOWLES:
We don't remember that two thirds of the world is colored.

Why don't the

Is distrust for America increasing?

Why do we receive so little gratitude—and so much criticism—for the dollars and industrial know-how we send round the world?

We see ourselves as the major pleader for world peace, yet other countries fear that we may involve them in war. Why?

Distinguished experts—each with special knowledge of a troubled area of the world—tell our millions of readers some whys of anti-Americanism abroad.

Is there a growing feeling of antagonism toward America abroad? Why do people in Europe and Asia criticize us so severely? Is there something wrong with our personalities—or our policies? What should we do to be better liked and more trusted? Or does it hurt only our national pride if we are disliked abroad?

To try to get firsthand authoritative answers to these questions, the JOURNAL invited experts on four areas to meet with its editors. Those present were: Walter Elliot, distinguished member of the British Parliament and wartime Cabinet Minister; Harold Stassen, able Director of the U. S. Foreign Operations Agency; Chester Bowles, whose achievement as U. S. Ambassador to India was outstanding; Mrs. John J. McCloy, perceptive and charming wife of the former U. S. High Commissioner for Germany; and Alfred Max, brilliant editor of the French magazine Réalités and head of the French Gallup poll. Bruce Gould, JOURNAL editor, opened the meeting; Margaret Hickey, Public Affairs editor, acted as chairman; Laura Lou Brookman, managing editor, and Joan Younger, writer, fired questions during the panel discussion from which this article was condensed by Miss Younger.

MR. GOULD: Americans unusual, I suppose, in believin their actions are for the best.
we feel, that people criticize us are just out to do good in th
And yet we definitely are gett very vigorous criticism abro our friends and allies, as well our enemies, and so-called ists." What we want to find day is why. And what peop tude toward our country is. A if possible, some of the thing do about it.

MISS HICKEY: Let's st whether our concern is justi Elliot, you come from a nation had more than a century leadership; how important do world opinion of our actions

MR. ELLIOT: It is not as i as you think. Everyone playin ing role like yourselves mus to be unpopular. England wa unpopular when she was p leading role.

You arose to power by an e land march across this beauti nent, and occupied the who Now, negotiating to build air secure toe holds in other coun

X:
e si there is the Iron Curtain,
th other the Dollar Curtain.

WALTER ELLIOT:
We look upon you as seeking expansion of power.

MARGARET HICKEY:
We don't believe we are out to get anything—except world peace.

HAROLD STASSEN:
It is when we depart from our own ideals that we get into trouble.

ke us abroad ?

nderstand why people don't wel- vo with open arms. We arose to k cking about in ships. We yo can establish and maintain a po ion from a foothold or even no You don't have to occupy ol world so as to be secure in it.

S ICKEY: Is that the way nd es us? No different from the ta s of the British Empire? We f gland then as an acquisitive, al mperial power which was out sc ething. But we don't believe t to get anything at all—ex- o peace. Are we kidding our- t n, in your opinion?

LIOT: Well, I think perhaps x erate the acquisitive char- ti of Britain; but then, every- th ks that other countries are o on them. And it is true, I tl you have no territorial am- nd it is true that England did.

S ICKEY: But you do think th countries look upon us as g pansion?

LIOT: Well, they certainly p you as seeking an expansion ve You have, I think, got rid of ol phrase "Colossus of the " hich was South America's way of describing your dominance in this hemisphere — but I think that the fear South America used to have of your power is felt by the rest of the world today.

MISS HICKEY: How does France feel about this, Mr. Max?

MR. MAX: It seems to me very vital that Americans should be liked if they want to carry on effectively their policies. In Latin—or Celtic—countries like France, people are very emotional and their policies are made up of not only their real interests but also the way they feel about things. A vote can be swayed on the spur of a moment by somebody coming in with a very emotional statement. If at any point the French had a feeling that they did not like Americans or American policy any more, they might become neutrals—or even turn to the other side. It is very important in France that you are liked.

MR. BOWLES: I think a clear distinction should be made between liking individual Americans and liking American policies. In Asia I found that individual Americans are generally liked if they are likable people—but when the conversation turns to America's policies there is often sharp criticism.

MR. STASSEN: This discussion confirms an impression of my own about how the world looks at us—that people abroad tend to compare America to their previous experiences with other countries.

But our country is not trying and has no intention of trying to take the position in the world the British had as empire builders—or the position France had under Napoleon. If you are going to exercise your authority by those methods, it is true it doesn't matter whether you are liked. But if we are able to do successfully what we are trying to do, then it is tremendously important that we be liked.

MISS HICKEY: You think good will is a part of our aims?

MR. STASSEN: I certainly do. We are trying not to be the leader but to participate in a leading role with other free people in what might be called a democracy of nations; we want each individual nation to make its own decisions, but try to have the sum of all decisions moved toward economic progress, toward political stability, toward conditions of peace.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 164

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE PANEL DISCUSSION

PEOPLE OF OTHER COUNTRIES LIKE US BECAUSE THEY THINK WE:

- are not class-conscious;
- are honest and direct;
- have "go-ahead";
- want to learn about the rest of the world;
- give every man a chance.

THEY DISLIKE US BECAUSE THEY THINK WE:

- are "overgrown children," noisy, braggart;
- are hypnotized by fear of communism;
- treat them as "poor relations";
- are against wrong rather than for right;
- draw the color line;
- may drag them into war.

He raised hi

Katherine

By ANYA SETON

IV THE afternoon before St. George's Day, 1376, all Kenilworth Castle, cleansed and garlanded for the festivities, waited for the duke to come. Katherine sat on a sunny stone bench in the inner court, lending an indulgent ear to the shouts of the children as they romped through the courtyards. She was dressed in the gown he preferred: an amber tunic beneath a clinging sideless surcoat of apricot velvet, furred with ermine. A thin topaz-studded fillet encircled her high-arched forehead. Her hair was perfumed with costly ambergris he had appropriated for her in some hastily abandoned castle on his great march through France, three years ago.

That march had been a foolhardy deed of courage, spectacular as any his brother, the Black Prince, had ever achieved, and yet in the end there was loss, not gain. When John returned, his dream of conquering all France and then Castile once more postponed, he found himself the target of an angry, puzzled England. There was unrest everywhere, and dissatisfaction. A new and wilier king sat on the French throne, and the once-great English king was senile.

Yet now there was a truce with France, negotiated by the duke at Bruges last year. The thought of John's months at Bruges brought sharp pain to Katherine, though it was a pain to which she was accustomed. John had taken his duchess with him to Flanders and there Costanza had been delivered of a son—at last. But the baby did not live.

Katherine crossed herself as she sat on the bench in Kenilworth courtyard. My sons live. She glanced up to the windows of the nursery chamber. A shadow passed behind the clear tiny panes. That would be Hawise or one of the nurses, tending the infant Harry in his cradle, or fetching some toy to distract little John. Healthy rosy boys, both of them, golden as buttercups with their father's intense blue eyes.

A high, jeering singsong shattered the peace of the courtyard. "Scaredy cats! Scaredy cats!" That was Elizabeth, of course. Katherine jumped up and hurried through the arch to the base court. Though the duke's younger daughter was twelve years old, Elizabeth's reckless enterprises still had to be restrained before they led her and the younger children into actual danger.

This time Elizabeth was hopping on one foot upon the slate roof of the stable and clinging to

CONTINUED ON PAGE 64

Copyright, 1951, by Anya Seton Chase

Married at fifteen to boorish Sir Hugh Swynford, Katherine was soon left alone to manage Hugh's impoverished estate, while he—knight in the retinue of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster—was away on campaigns. The duke and his lady, Blanche, had come to Katherine's wedding, and she still remembered her strange agitation when the duke kissed her, the bride. Katherine named her first child Blanchette, for the duchess. Months later, the duchess was stricken with plague. Leaving her own household in care of her sister Philippa—wife of Geoffrey Chaucer—Katherine nursed Blanche until her death. John and Katherine knew now that between them was a bond stronger than life itself. She would always love him, but the thought of her child and of her marriage vows gave her strength to refuse him the love she longed to express. She returned to Kettlethorpe, but the duke could not forget her—their destinies were linked. Soon a marriage was arranged between John and the Infanta of Castile, strengthening England on the Continent. John, on campaign in Bordeaux, yearned to see Katherine once more before his marriage. He sent for her, ostensibly to join her husband. Unknown to Katherine or the duke, his servant poisoned Sir Hugh. John took Katherine away to a secluded estate where they could be alone. He gave her his ring, and pledged that, though he must marry the Infanta, he would love Katherine till death. He asked her to become governess to his daughters, thus establishing her in a secure position in his household. Her love for him clouded with bitterness at his coming marriage and regret at loss of her good name, she at first refused. But when she learned that she was to bear his child, she knew that she had no choice but to accept.

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

o gh to strike her.

"What right have you to question me?

Katrine, get out of my way."

There's a Man in the House

by Harlan Miller

What vexes an overstuffed father is to park his dessert in the refrigerator for a midnight snack, and then to look for it later and find his ravenous son and heir has eaten it all.

Some men win heroic and glorious triumphs; I'm content that, after five years of subtle hints, I've persuaded my ladylove to sidetrack her Bryn Mawr-type chignon for a horsetail hairdo.

I'm afraid it'll take another thousand years for motorists to become as courteous on the concrete cow paths as they are in a living room or club. Meanwhile, it's far easier to be courteous on a divided four-lane highway.

"After dawdling diligently with bridge, mah-jongg and canasta," confesses Betty Comfort, tossing two thirds of her morning mail into the wastebasket, "I'm more convinced than ever that envy is the Number Two indoor sport, ahead of any of these three."

A friendly schoolma'am gives me a valuable tip: If you see adults treated rudely or impatiently by modern youngsters, they're the parents; but if the teen-agers are ultrapolite, the adults must be semistrangers.

I've been enlightened by some collegians weekending next door that on the campus "hanging a pin" isn't quite tantamount to an engagement to marry. . . . What I can't quite figure out is, exactly what does it involve or signify?

Since I sounded off about teen-agers' illegible handwriting, I've been bombarded with samples of legible handwriting from Oregon, Maine and intermediate schools; 53 examples from Manhattan, Illinois, alone. But usually teacher writes better than pupils.

As summer ends, I find myself conceding that the b.w. produced in her garden iris and columbine as lovely as orchids; peonies and dahlias as exquisite as $6-a-dozen roses. Thus she compensates for costly flowers I once sent her.

This newfangled "demand feeding" for modern babies, I learn, alters sleeping habits of pa and ma. Once upon a time pa said, "You take the two-A.M. feeding and I'll take the six-A.M." Now it's always the turn of the lighter sleeper at any hour who first hears baby.

For a while I was disturbed by a display of pink pants for men at a downtown clothier's. But when I walked my family style consultant past that window one evening, my temptation was quickly allayed. "How ghastly!" she said.

My neighbor in the white brick mansion takes a quiet pride in displaying his son's Exeter Academy diploma in his den. "It covers up the bare spot," he says, "where I never hung the college diploma I never got."

"There are rough diamonds in public life," concedes Peter Comfort, chopping his TV set to smithereens as the Army-McCarthy hearings concluded. "I might endure 'em for a two-day fishing trip, but not in the Senate for six years."

Our town's grads and grooms of 1929 brag because they either (1) graduated from college 25 years ago or (2) got married 25 years ago, or both. "We're the waifs of 1929," they boast, and for their 25th reunions and silver anniversaries they buy the best of everything, even when it's bad for 'em.

"My youngsters have none of the childish traits you mention, but my husband has."

I'm still offering Junior $10 for the first set of tennis he wins from me. He strokes harder than I do and covers more ground faster. But he overestimates the distance from the net to my base line; clouts the ball as if it were 49′ instead of 39′.

"These stamps might be worth something someday," explains the farsighted lady in the house with three porches, who stacks her old letters in the attic. "They might turn out to be the bulk of our grandchildren's inheritance!"

In dulcet tones a big air line offers to fly me to Rome and back on the installment plan, $65.40 down and $54.41 a month. Shucks, most Americans could save the first four installments on souvenirs and the next four by not overeating.

What's become (asks the autocrat of our luncheon round table) of that American hero, the strong silent man? "In the shindig on TV the loquacious American senatorial male," he observes, "made female chairmen seem terse and taciturn by comparison."

I've resurrected my collegiate raccoon coat (complete with leaky metal flask in one pocket) and readied it for the football season. I may even wear it to the Notre Dame game unless my adored one wants to use it as a lap robe.

Friends of ours recently took their eighty-year-old mother (and mother-in-law) to Europe for a jaunt through England and Spain. She's grown old graciously, and I'd wager she was our best ambassador since Ben Franklin.

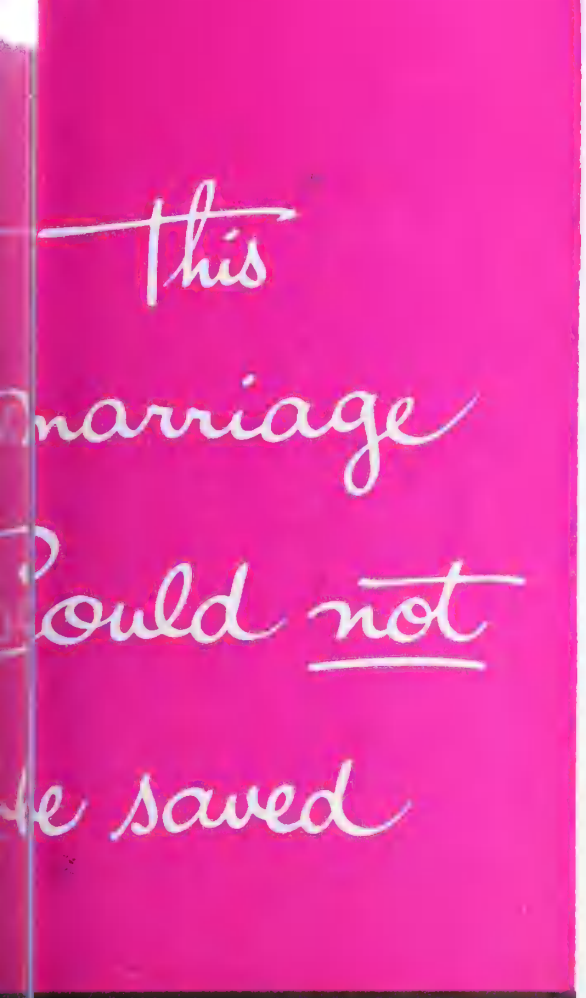
At our last junior-high lawn fete, I served as field judge for the seventh-, eighth- and ninth-grade high jumpers. Such duty is its own reward, not to mention four kinds of meat loaf and the coconut cake at Home Room 111's picnic table.

I've noticed two cozy traits most foes of the UN or world gov't enjoy in common: they don't travel much and they seldom read a book. Why should they? They know the answers by instinct.

To my chagrin, I found myself strolling downtown in yellow socks, with my pants cuffs a little high. I could see the yellow reflection in store windows and feel startled eyes on my ankles. So I beat a retreat, marveling at the sang-froid of teen-agers in white socks.

Egad, another triumph! My ladylove finally admits that cold broccoli and asparagus have less sex appeal than any other leftovers. She agrees to reduce the surplus of these dainties.

We overheard two men at the club discuss their operations and trips to Mayo Clinic. "I've been there twenty-seven times," said one, "and my wife says I'd go there to get my toenails trimmed."



. . . When my daughter concedes that even if she inherits only my red hair that's something,

. . . Or Junior quotes verbatim some silly thing I said when he was only six,

. . . And I discern that our youngest treats me as an equal, if breezily, which couldn't be more flattering,

. . . Or my ladylove reacts like a flattered girl when I tell her she wears slacks better'n anybody else in town,

. . . Then I mourn for America's millions of bachelors and bachelor girls, and hope Secretary Oveta Culp Hobby may organize a marriage agency as part of social security.

ESTHER BUBLEY

SHE: "I want to live with and love a man who will tell me where to head in. I admire masculinity and force."

HE: "Maybe I am too calm and self-centered, but I can't turn myself into a character like Dena's father."

Marriage counselors do not persuade anyone to get a divorce, or not to get a divorce. They help the client to think through the subject and see all sides of it. He must realize, as many do not, that divorce does not solve many problems but often creates new ones. Since people who have been married for some years have a heavy investment in the marriage (particularly when children are involved), and since the chance of success in a second marriage, if one can be made, is 50 per cent less than in a first marriage, no counselor will encourage a client to look on divorce as an easy and permanent way to avoid all his difficulties, especially when most of them are in his own personality. Of 25,000 persons who have come to the American Institute of Family Relations for help, most had at least contemplated divorce. We have been able to help 80 per cent of them to make their marriages successful instead. The counselor in this case was Mrs. Carolyn Sichel. PAUL POPENOE, Sc. D., Director.

Dr. Paul Popenoe

DENA TELLS HER SIDE:

"THERE is another man now," slender, red-haired Dena said to the counselor. Twenty-nine years old, smartly dressed, she nervously tapped her cigarette against the ash tray. "I want to enjoy love and companionship and human warmth before I'm too old to care. I don't want to be like my parents, dragging out the marriage and their lives in coldness and indifference.

"It's true Kevin and I have three children, but I am convinced all three will be better off if their father and I go separate ways. Kevin has no time, no energy to give to a family and a personal life. A man like Kevin—completely wrapped up in his work and his ideas—shouldn't be married at all. Certainly he shouldn't have a wife like me.

"I'm not bitter toward my husband. Nor do I intend to alienate our children from him. My lawyer says the court will grant me the custody of Ellen and the twins, but I'm requesting that Kevin be allowed visiting rights of his choosing. I feel sure Kevin won't visit very often or for very long. Our children will soon drift out of his mind. The process has already started. Kevin and I have been separated since July—he is now living in a hotel—and at first he picked up Ellen and our twin sons early every Sunday morning and took them to the zoo or the planetarium or did something special with them. The last two Sundays he didn't appear at all. The boys—they are only six—were miserably disappointed.

"My husband," said Dena, "is an aeronautical engineer, and his career is his whole existence. Kevin is like one of those machines that walk and talk and perform tricks, if you press the right buttons. When things were going well at the plant Kevin sometimes used to mumble a few words to me and the children. Most of his upper-echelon thoughts, which he seldom attempted to clarify, were wasted on us. I went to college myself, but I majored in music. If I happened to sit down at the piano with the youngsters—I'm teaching Ellen and her brothers to play—Kevin immediately disappeared into his laboratory workshop. Six months ago he put a soundproof door on the workshop so we couldn't disturb or get at him.

"Kevin is neither a good father, a good husband nor, in my book, a good person. Where nice, kind, ordinary people are concerned, Kevin just isn't among those present. My friends and our neighbors bore him and he shows it. His friends congeal me. The only company Kevin considers worth while is that of other engineers—scientific people like himself who live in the stratosphere, not in this world. I'll admit the wives of some of Kevin's friends seem to get along with their husbands all right. Their backgrounds and educations are different from mine. Hortense is a math major; Ruth is a chemist; Sue is an engineer herself.

"Suppose I describe a gay evening I spent last June with Kevin and his crowd. The party was at Sue's house. Two tables of bridge were set up, and since I can play cards I hoped I might have a little fun for once. Directly after the first hand was dealt—I had just bid two spades—Kevin began talking to Tom, Sue's husband, about some improvement he's trying to figure out in the design of an aeronautical switch. All four of the men laid down their cards, got up, left the tables and shut themselves in Tom's workshop. It was Kevin who led the retreat. I was stuck with the other wives, who tried to be polite to me but who obviously would have preferred to be in the workshop themselves. At midnight Sue dragged the men out for sandwiches and coffee. For the next hour all seven, including Sue, Hortense and Ruth, chattered away about performance tests, endurance tests, retooling machinery, and so on, while I ate sandwiches and felt like a zombi. When Kevin and I finally reached home, he remarked it had been a good party. At that point I got hysterical. I assure you my husband had no idea why. He wasn't even interested. He was still thinking about that aeronautical switch.

"After eleven years of existing in a vacuum, I think I'm entitled to start living. Let me tell you about Alex, the man I want to marry." Her brown eyes glowed and her face lighted up. "Alex isn't as smart as Kevin, for which I am thankful. He is a warm-blooded human being! Alex and I have interests in common, jokes to laugh at, a few things to talk about. No doubt we will quarrel and have our differences. It won't matter. At least I will feel alive. Kevin merely tolerates the human race. Alex and I like and enjoy people. We are both interested in music, in little-theater work, in community projects. In fact, we met eight months ago in a neighborhood little-theater group. We didn't intend to fall in love; it just happened. Alex is crazy about children—he has a four-year-old son himself whom he misses terribly; his wife, from whom he is legally separated, has the custody—and I know he will be good to Ellen and the twins.

"Martyr's clothes don't suit me," said Dena. "If I stay married CONTINUED ON PAGE 112

"I've bought my last bushel basket of roses, and I simply cannot stage a big emotional reconciliation scene."

Camel hair and wool blended into one of the loveliest coating fabrics and matched to an equally lovely dress weight. Vogue Design No. S-4537, 12 to 40. The slim dress buttons in the back. Design No. 8422, 12 to 20.

THE COSTUME LOOK

in fabrics designed to go together

FABRICS have never been lovelier, never more co-ordinated than they are this fall. In the "dyed to match" group, you will find wonderful dress weights and fleece coatings, lightweight flannels matched to Shetland tweeds. In the co-ordinated group you will find soft muted tweed coatings with lightweight dress fabrics, flecked tweeds with jersey or velveteen to pick up the color of the predominant fleck. Our five costumes show a variety of line and many new and effective details . . . a slightly larger collar, a gently bloused back, and your choice of an easy or a slim skirt.

By NORA O'LEARY
Pattern Editor of the Journal

Soft muted tweed coating in a slim straight coat, Vogue Design No. 8247. The dress, whose collar goes prettily over the coat, has skirt with easy fullness. No. 8416.

Black-and-white tweed accented by black velveteen in figure-flattering princess coat. Wear over velveteen sheath, top with bright hat. Vogue Junior Design No. S-3588.

Delightfully new version of the gray flannel classic. Gently bloused back is accented by button detail; skirt and jacket button down the front. Vogue Design No. 8371.

A slim flannel dress is topped by a jacket in a dyed-to-match Shetland-weave coating. Lining and collar in beige Orlon fleece for warmth. Vogue Design No. 8404.

PHOTOS BY DERUJINSKY

Other Views, Sizes and Prices are on page 116

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) These patterns will be sent third-class mail. If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5c additional for each pattern ordered.

© VOGUE

The big hat with the floppy brim has a new kind of flattery, by Hattie Carnegie. Worn with golden-fox scarf and yards of pearls and colored stones.

Wear a fur necklace with a wool dress or suit and ca tweed bag. The suède afternoon pump is gold-trimmed calfskin one is basic. Blue and amber crystals go with br

ACCESSORY TREASUR

THE TOUC

Bright red silk hat by Mr. John matches the jersey blouse the lining of Nettie Rosenstein's black wool bolero suit br with soutache. The pin and earrings are antiqued rhinest

Polished graphite-gray calfskin pumps and a bag to match are new touches w red costume or with head-to-foot gray. The red suède bow pump for "at hom about town with red or gray wools. Note: satin scarf, hand-wrought silver jew

ROGER PRIGENT

e ignon hat of tulle with a silk-and-velvet
e. y Hattie Carnegie, for dinner and theater.

The toes of your black suède slippers wear rhinestones or decorated bows. The satin belt is a fashion in blue. Suède bag, rhinestone clasp.

Rose of fashion is on your hat this fall. This velvet one by Lilly Dache is worn with the simplest black dress.

HAT GIVE YOUR WARDROBE

T HAT COUNTS

By RUTH MARY PACKARD

e ump with the easy heel is a city-and-country casual, te d with a calfskin bag; wool-jersey gloves. Leopard rf nd purse go with these accessories and wool costume.
ee calfskin pumps combine well with beiges.

e j et is the best-loved hat of the year. This bright angora by Hattie Carnegie pa hed by ropes of blue beads and blending suède gloves. Worn with black dress.

BEAUTIFU

The JOURNAL has gone shopping for you. Each selection is an importa current fashion that will be as "good as ever" for many seasons. Why? B cause of their excellent fabrics, good workmanship and prevailing simpli ity. You will find these costumes in cities and towns, large shops and smal Every woman will vary them to suit her own needs. BY WILHELA CUSHMA

Fashion Editor of the Journ

In a year of tweeds, this tweed suit is a special delight for its city-and-country wearability, its great fashion and its price, $39.95. The big floppy-brimmed hat by Elizabeth Marks is high fashion, too, for only $8.95. Tweed colors are green, blue and red, misses' and petite sizes, by Vincent Draddy.

ROGER PRIGEN

This suit is a heather-blue wool jersey and you could wear it any where in the world: $49.95, by S. Augstein. Accessorize it with blend ing blues and grays, a velvet beret, $10.95, by John Frederics. Als in heather brown, aqua or gray mixtures, misses' and petite size

This dressmaker tweed suit becomes a dinner costume because of its bare-top matching camisole: $49.95, by Murray Silberstein. The satin beret is John Frederics, $10.95. The suit comes also in turquoise, avocado green, red and gray, in sizes 8 to 18 and junior sizes 7 to 15.

BUYS FOR FALL

A gay worsted-flannel suit is the most universally becoming and useful fashion that exists. This one has a fully lined jacket, is proportioned for misses' and petite (average-height) sizes, also in brown; $39.95, by Vincent Brady. Accent colors are endless. Brushed felt hat, Elizabeth Marks, $8.95.

Satin-collar dress, important one-piece fashion with the two-piece look, in bright red, blue, green or oxford gray, $12.95, sizes 8 to 18, by Henry Rosenfeld. Wear it with a knitted hat, $10.95, by John Frederics, or velvet beret or cloche, big pearls or gold jewelry.

WRITE TO US AND WE'LL TELL YOU WHERE TO FIND THESE FASHIONS IN YOUR LOCALITY.

ALL SET FOR SEPTEMBER

A SEPTEMBER DAY—a school day, a workday. Are you with me? Well, Horace, lend me your old stub of a pencil. I'm goin' to copy a few receipts.

Western Meat Loaf

Mix in a large bowl 1 pound ground beef, ½ pound ground veal and ½ pound pork-sausage meat. Add 2 beaten eggs, 1 onion, chopped, 1 tablespoon salt, ¼ cup Worcestershire sauce, ¼ cup prepared horse-radish, 1 teaspoon dry mustard, ¼ cup chopped green pepper, 1 ripe banana, peeled and mashed, 2 cups soft bread crumbs, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, 1 tablespoon chopped celery leaves, a pinch of savory and a pinch of rosemary. Mix well and shape into a loaf in a shallow baking pan. Bake, uncovered, in a moderately hot oven, 375° F., for 30 minutes. Lay 6 strips bacon on top of loaf and bake 15 to 20 minutes longer, until bacon is crisp.

Baked Cheese Tomatoes

Select 6 medium-size firm ripe, or nearly, tomatoes. Scald, then immerse in ice water to cool, and off will slip the skin with a little help and no cutting. Cut a slice off the top and scoop out the center pulp. Turn the tomato upside down to drain. Melt 4 tablespoons butter or margarine. Add ½ cup finely minced onion. Sauté until the onion is transparent, but not brown. Blend in 3 tablespoons flour. Gradually add ¾ cup milk and ¾ cup light cream, 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, ⅛ teaspoon dry mustard, ⅛ teaspoon nutmeg and a dash of Worcestershire sauce. Cook until thickened. Add 1 cup grated Cheddar cheese and ¾ cup soft bread crumbs. Arrange the tomatoes in a shallow baking pan. Sprinkle the inside of the tomatoes with salt and pepper. Fill the tomatoes with the sauce. Sprinkle the tops with 1 cup buttered soft bread crumbs. Bake in a moderately hot oven, 375° F., for 15 to 20 minutes.

Potato Croquettes

Cook 4 large or 6 medium-sized peeled potatoes in boiling salted water. Drain and rice them, or put them to the mortar-and-pestle ordeal. Anyway, get them whacked up so they wouldn't know themselves in their own back yard. There should be 3½ to 4 cups. Whip them up with 3 tablespoons hot milk or cream, and 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Add 2 well-beaten egg yolks, 1 teaspoon grated onion, 1½ teaspoons salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper and a touch of nutmeg. Taste to see about the seasoning. Spread the potato mixture out in a shallow pan or tray. Chill the potato mixture until very cold in the refrigerator. Shape into thin finger-length croquettes, not quite as fat—but fat enough—as a chicken ditto. Roll first in fine cracker crumbs (need about 4 cups), then in 3 beaten eggs, beaten not too much, then in crumbs again. Chill until ready to fry. Fry in deep hot fat, 370° F., a minute or two, until golden brown. Drain and keep hot until ready to serve.

Zucchini with Garlic Butter

Wash and slice 1½ pounds zucchini. You know what that is. Dark green with light stripes—about six or eight inches long, like a lawful trout. Cook in a small amount of boiling salted water until tender. If you aren't in a hurry, steam it.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 170

By ANN BATCHELDER

STUART-FOWLER

MENU

Western Meat Loaf
Baked Cheese Tomatoes
Potato Croquettes
Zucchini with Garlic Butter
Mixed-Vegetable Salad
Homemade Rye Bread
Chocolate Velvet with Coffee Cream
Coffee

(Planned for 6)

Someone you love lov

so Campbell's make 4 g

CAMPBELL'S CHICKEN GUMBO

Here's downright good eating. Chicken with a Southern manner, accented with tomatoes, okra, celery and feather-light rice. Like vegetables with your chicken? Then do buy Chicken Gumbo!

CAMPBELL'S CHICKEN NOODLE

Noontime, nighttime, schooltime, playtime . . . here' that everyone loves. Oodles of noodles and chunks in golden chicken broth—that's our good Chicke hicken...

icken Soups!

CHICKEN GUMBO | CHICKEN NOODLE | CREAM OF CHICKEN | CHICKEN WITH RICE

CAMPBELL'S CREAM OF CHICKEN

l how a good soup when you sip it. This one's smooth with country cream, blessed with tender chicken, crisp celery, gh ully seasoned. Yes . . . it's a superbly satisfactory soup!

CAMPBELL'S CHICKEN WITH RICE

It's a gentle, soothing sort of soup—tender chicken and fluffy rice, slow-simmered in a golden, good-for-you broth—a soup you'll buy for baby and for grandma and everyone in between.

EAM OF CHICKEN

CHICKEN WITH RICE

Simply wonderful—wonderfully simple . . . any time Campbell's Soup

By ANN BATCHELDER

Line a Day

JOERN GERDTS

Country road beside a flower-strewn hill.

1 Cold hors d'oeuvres will come as endlessly marching in a parade as "twinkle, twinkle little star"; and as you search out a little number when the tray comes around, you just as easily wonder "what they are." And one often overlooked is a bowl of chopped hard-cooked eggs in a sauce of ⅔ mayonnaise and ⅓ heavy cream, whipped, beaten together. Add chopped parsley, salt, pepper, grated onion and a wishful thought of fresh thyme, chopped fine. Spread on thin rye toast.

2 Another spread for crackers or toast worth reaching for: To a 3-ounce package of cream cheese add 1 tablespoon cream, 2 teaspoons bottled meat sauce, 2 teaspoons minced onion, 2 tablespoons poppy seeds, salt and pepper to taste. Make it ahead of time so the poppy seeds have a chance to show off their flavor.

3 Brisker weather calls for bigger and better breakfasts. The youngsters have their minds on arithmetic. You can put two and two together, too, and come up with an answer to what's new for breakfast.

4 Read on. Try this on the Johnnies and Janes: Cook farina with bottled apple juice instead of water. Add a little sugar and butter or margarine before serving and watch the future vice-presidents go for it.

5 Two soups are sometimes better than one. In this case they are for my taste, and I hope yours. Heat together 1 can condensed tomato soup, 1 can condensed onion soup and an equal amount of water. Serve with grated cheese and toast, if it pleases you.

6 Roast leg or shoulder of lamb has always been improved in flavor by the presence of garlic, that you will agree; and I think you will agree with me, too, that this treatment of the proverbial roast lamb lifts it into the top-drawer class:

7 Crush 2 cloves garlic. Mix to thin paste with 1 teaspoon curry powder, ⅛ teaspoon ginger and 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Rub into the roast, which has first been rubbed with salt. Into the oven with it to roast to a succulency.

8 To make herb butters to season fish dishes or to serve with broiled or sautéed fish, choose either one or a marriage of two pleasant leaves. For instance: parsley and basil, or thyme and marjoram. Second verse now:

9 Having ½ pound butter or margarine, softened but never melted, work into it with a fork the chopped and stemless leaves, until the taste is revealing and intriguingly satisfying. Herb butters are to a superior dish what a summer rain is to a lagging fountain.

10 Fresh or dried tarragon is the most versatile of all the herbs. Like the boy who can play most instruments in the band, tarragon can play ensemble, solo, or take any part. And give its name to a special vinegar besides. You can buy tarragon vinegar, but you can just as easily make it by adding 4 teaspoons dried or 1 cup minced, fresh tarragon to 1 quart heated cider or red-wine vinegar. Let stand 10 days. Don't overlook it and don't snub it.

11 They make this orange compote in Spain, in the orange country. Quick and easy, and as good. Peel and slice into rounds 6 large oranges of the eating kind. Place them in your best bowl. Shred the rind of 1 of the oranges (be sure all the pith is scraped off).

12 Simmer shredded rind for about 20 minutes in 1 pint water and 1 cup sugar, with a few drops of almond flavoring added at the last. Put a spoon in the bowl. Pour this sirup hot onto the bowl of the spoon, letting it flood over the oranges. Why the spoon, Katie? So your best bowl won't crack. Cool before serving. Bring on the cooky jar. Dunking is permitted. Or is it?

13 You'll be having fresh peaches and melons every way imaginable while they last, if I know you as well as I think I do. Here's a new way dreamed up for each: Melt ½ cup mint or currant jelly. Cool and fold into 1 cup sour cream. Cool and serve with sliced peaches. Don't sugar the peaches.

14 If you're melon-minded, you buy several kinds at a time. Don't get in a rut, Mabel. Not all melons are cantaloupes. Scoop a few balls from generous wedges of cantaloupe or Persian melons. Do the same with honeydew. Make a switch. Put cantaloupe balls in the honeydew pockets, and vice versa. Serve on bed of green leaves. Pretty, I say.

15 Now who would ever think that nutmeg would be good in angel cake? Well, I did; and believe me, it's right at home there. Mix 1 teaspoon nutmeg with the flour-sugar mixture before folding into the egg whites.

16 With nutmeg still on my mind, I want you to know how they serve asparagus in a swank New York restaurant. Good it is too. I can vouch for it. Serve hot asparagus, canned or frozen now, sprinkled with buttered bread crumbs and a light dusting of nutmeg.

17 When the children whoop home from school—there are still numbers who prefer mom's cooking to the school cafeteria—tempt them with this luncheon hit. Bake each of them a potato.

18 But don't stop there. Slice off top, scoop out the centers, mash with a fork, stir in 1 tablespoon milk and 1 of cottage cheese, 1 teaspoon minced onion and 1 teaspoon minced green pepper—for each potato, that is. Season with salt and pepper, and don't forget the butter or margarine—plenty of it—before refilling the shells.

19 Garnishes should please the eye, but not only. Not like passementerie on a rocker, just to be seen. They ought to be good to eat. For salads and cold meat, and for fish dishes, little jellied molds, or stuffed olives and hard-cooked eggs cut as fancy comes to you, will brighten the corners. Look elegant and are good to eat.

20 I haven't room for many dessert garnishes, but like the lace on a Victorian petticoat are such finishing touches as marrons glacés, bonbons, preserved and candied ginger, stuffed oranges, crystallized fruits and nuts. Don't forget them.

21 One more word about basil, sweet basil. So many times I have written its lovely name, so this is only a "remember me"—meaning your herb, not your Annie. Remember that it is a wonderful thing in a salad, and the tomato dish without its basil is as flat as a mute string on a fiddle. Don't forget it's easy to grow in pots all winter.

22 Making a salad from that leftover whitefish, or any kind of fish? It's indicated, as the M.D.'s say of their powders and pills, it's in the cards to mix some celery seed with the mayonnaise. It glorifies that everyday salad into a tour de force.

23 Jellied fruit salads abound on luncheon tables like the loose strife along the roadsides. They don't always, but should have some attention given to their dressings. Mayonnaise from the jar is all right, but is more right if you add a little lemon juice and some of the lemon rind for tang.

24 Some of you tell me that you're on a lose-weight campaign. With a new fall suit in mind. Always willing to give a hand, I heard about some wonderful ready-to-use low-calorie diet dressings—one an herb dressing, the other cheese. Tried and liked.

25 A beauty of a salad: Marinate chopped hard-cooked eggs and drained canned peas in some of the diet cheese dressing. Fill peeled chilled ripe tomato cups with the salad mixture. Dress with lettuce and you've got a whole-meal salad at little cost in calories.

26 Where there's fire and a broiler on the grill, there's liquid smoke—the latest barbecuing fandangle. Brush each broiler half with 1 teaspoon of this smoke out of a bottle. Let stand 20 minutes. Brush with butter or margarine. Broil as usual and season.

27 If you're not a chicken-in-the-rough fan—like yours with gravy—try a Southern trick. Stir 1 tablespoon peanut butter into each pint of gravy.

28 Almost the last fling for a cold-soup starter, so you might as well make it a good one. Fold chopped cooked or canned cleaned shrimp into a jellied madrilene. Top with sour cream spiked with horse-radish.

29 Remember the rainbow-ice-cream idea I gave you several months ago? Here's another build-up arrangement that goes over big and is easy to do. Spoon a layer of vanilla ice cream into a bowl. Cover with canned crushed pineapple, then a layer of orange sherbet, and top with crumbled dry macaroon crumbs. Dig deep.

30 Answer to query: You are quite right in trying to use truffles, Maria, but they are not used in such dishes as omelet, soufflé, crème brûlée, or fancy desserts. They are used in cheese dishes, with chicken and many other French dishes. But I'd forget the sweet things, Maria.

YOUR ANNIE.

In these 3-hour danger periods your skin "dies" a little

Your most troublesome skin problems are apt to start in daily 1 to 3 hour "danger periods," dermatologists say. This is immediately after you wash your face. In washing away dirt, you also remove natural skin protectors. Your skin takes 1 to 3 hours to re-establish its defenses. Meanwhile, your skin is "un-balanced"... open to trouble:

Dryness . . . cracking . . . "shriveling"
Enlarged pores, coarseness

Antonia Drexel Earle

A member of two distinguished Philadelphia families—Mrs. Lawrence W. Earle is noted for her casual elegance, her lovely complexion. She says, "The instant I finish washing my face, I reach for my Pond's Cold Cream. What a difference these quick creamings make in my skin! And every night, of course, I give my skin the thorough, deep Pond's Creaming."

Read how women noted for their beautiful complexions keep free of these skin problems . . .

After each washing— "re-balance" your skin—

Some signs of skin "un-balance" show up as soon as you dry your face:

A stiff, drawn-tight feel to your skin
Flaky little roughnesses

These are the more obvious signs of skin "un-balance." But in the 1 to 3 hour period that Nature takes to re-protect skin, much more distressing problems can take root. Tiny dry lines deepen. Inside moisture evaporates away. Outer skin "shrivels." Skin secretions harden in pore-openings—cause stretched pores, blackheads.

Should you avoid washing your face? "Of course not," say leading skin specialists. "But after each washing, 're-balance' your skin instantly . . ."

60 times faster than Nature

A quick Pond's Cold Creaming right after washing "re-balances" your skin in one minute—at least 60 times faster than Nature does. It restores skin elasticity. Combats dryness, flaking, and shriveling. Clears the pore-openings, and keeps skin texture fine and smooth. Always leave on a trace of Pond's Cold Cream for continuing skin "balance" under make-up.

A deep clearing at bedtime

Besides this 7-second "re-balancing" after each washing, most skins need a thorough clearing at night. A deep Pond's Cold Creaming dislodges water-resistant, stubborn dirt from the pore-openings. Keeps your skin looking glowingly fresh, young, vibrant.

Today, begin this really simple, complete beauty care with Pond's Cold Cream. Within a week, it will become second nature to you. And very soon your friends will be telling you, "Your skin is looking wonderful these days."

Among social leaders who use Pond's

S.A.R. LA PRINCESSE MURAT
THE MARCHIONESS OF QUEENSBERRY
MRS. NICHOLAS RIDGELY DU PONT
THE DUCHESS OF RUTLAND
MRS. WILLIAM RHINELANDER STEWART
MRS. ANTHONY J. DREXEL III
LA MARQUISE DE LÈVIS MIREPOIX

The world's most famous beauty formula—never duplicated, never equaled. Get a large jar of Pond's Cold Cream today. Begin giving your skin perfect care with a perfect cream—quick Pond's "re-balancings" during the day; a deep, stimulating clearing with Pond's each night. More women use and love Pond's Cold Cream than any other face cream ever made.

"We enjoyed every minute"

TO THANK YOUR HOSTESS

Say it with Flowers-By-Wire

TRADEMARK

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY
Send Flowers Worldwide
INTERFLORA

After your visit, they'll remember you as the perfect guests... when you express your gratitude with gracious Flowers-By-Wire. On every occasion, Flowers-By-Wire are in excellent taste. Delivery worldwide is guaranteed by your F.T.D. Florist... the shop with SPEEDY and the famous MERCURY EMBLEM.

Phone or Visit Your F.T.D. Florist

Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, Headquarters: Detroit, Michigan

KATHERINE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 48

the weather vane. Tom, Blanchette and the three little Deyncourts were all cramped into various positions on the slippery slates as they tried to climb to the taunting figure above them. Blanchette was crying while she teetered on a window ledge.

"Elizabeth!" called Katherine sharply. "Come down from there at once!" She ran to rescue Blanchette, holding her arms up to the child, who dropped thankfully into them. "Little simpleton," scolded Katherine, kissing her. "When will you learn you cannot and must not do all Lady Elizabeth says?" She ran on from Blanchette and pulled down the Deyncourt children.

But her own Thomas turned a sulky face and said, "Let me be, lady. I shan't go to the roof, but I shall get down as I please"—which was typical of Tom at eight. Never openly disobedient, but a headstrong boy who reminded her often of his father, Hugh.

A stableboy brought a ladder and soon had Elizabeth safe on the ground—safe and defiant. "I wasn't scared, my lady."

Katherine wasted no time in dispute. Elizabeth was forever getting into pickles from which she could not extricate herself. She went off to the castle, scuffing her feet.

Katherine walked back toward the inner court, while Blanchette skipped happily beside her. She will be prettier than I could ever be, thought Katherine, rumpling the silky curls that were bright as new-scoured copper. The little girl's eyes were gray, too, but darker than Katherine's. How strange that Blanchette, begotten by an unloved father, should still be the dearest of all her children. Was it that Blanchette was a girl and Katherine saw there her own childhood, or was it that because of John's arrival that morning of her birth, Blanchette had seemed like his own child? No use to question the mysterious alchemy of the heart.

"Here comes Lady Philippa," announced the child.

Katherine looked up to greet this elder of her two ducal charges and felt, as so often with Philippa, a touch of exasperated pity.

"Good even, Lady Katherine," Philippa said, curtsying and speaking in her whispering little voice. "No sign yet of my lord father?"

"No," said Katherine. "Didn't you think to wear the new crimson gown he sent you?" Philippa was swathed in a dun-colored robe that spared none of her bad points, the flat chest and clumsy waist.

"I—I didn't ——" said the girl, fingering her girdle nervously. "I feel so discomfited in crimson. Will he be angry with me?"

Katherine smiled reassurance, knowing that Philippa feared her father as much as she admired him. But he would not be pleased, and she would have to protect the girl from his annoyance.

KATHERINE might have insisted that Philippa go back and change, but she hadn't the heart. The ornate red dress was even less becoming than her ordinary garb.

"You're so beautiful, Lady Katherine," said Philippa wistfully. "He's never angry with you."

"Ah, but he is"—Katherine laughed—"at times. One must wait until it passes; it soon does."

Philippa pulled from her reticule a square of samite, part of the altar cloth she was embroidering. She was shortsighted and, bending her long, serious face close to the gold thread, said without rancor, "Aye, for he loves you."

Katherine started. Philippa had never said anything so frank, though a girl of sixteen could be in no doubt as to the situation; still, it had been tacitly ignored.

In the beginning the lovers had been very discreet. For little John's birth, Katherine had gone to Lincolnshire. And, the exact date of Hugh's death abroad having been left uncertain, they had fostered the assumption that this was Hugh's posthumous child.

No such assumption was po tle Harry was born. It was pla Lady Swynford had no hush duke, welcoming his new son, all pretense and bestowed on one of his territorial titles—Bea in Champagne, long since lost unlikely ever to prejudice the legitimate heirs.

Katherine had been glad whe of their relationship was no l and relieved that at the two where she chiefly stayed with Kenilworth and Leicester, al continued to treat her with obe
But there were times when son the tough shell she had grown, calm statement filled her with

SHE glanced at the girl, then who had wandered off; she s mind, Philippa?"

"Mind what, Lady Katherin father should love you? No. F you myself. You've been good father put us in your charge.
moistened her thin lips, looke Katherine, then away.

"But what, Philippa?"

" 'Tis mortal sin you live in father!" she whispered. "I'm
you. I pray for your souls."

Katherine was silent, then s hand and touched the girl's p
She walked across the courty gate that led out to the mere an where she rected the p flower beds hand on the then turned Clear on the came bugle rumble of g
She starte the entranc herself, walk ing heart to stand quietly, as w to Philippa on the first step staircase that led to the hall.

For in what does barbarism consist, if not in the failure to appreciate what is excellent? —GOETHE

Lancaster herald cantered fi arch and saluted them. The c jostling, shouting horsemen.
had accompanied the duke. I Katherine noted only the cleric robed priest, vaguely familiar,
ite, Walter Dysse.

The duke's favorite hounds ing through the arch. They l greeting and she patted thei heads while she waited.

At last she saw him on thought him comelier, more ever. Though he was now thi grown no heavier. His hair h gold to sun-bleached sorrel, b as ever; and while the squire h John jumped down from Pal easy grace of his youth.

He walked to the stairs while Philippa curtsied. The duke daughter; his eyes passed ove a faint frown, then, resting widened in a private signal of look well, my lady," he said so her hand, bore it to his lips.

"I am, now that you're here,"

"Henry," the duke called ov
"come along and pay your Swynford!"

The duke had brought his he nine-year-old Henry of Bolin vored his grandfather and nan Duke of Lancaster, rather tha parents, yet from them he hac from Blanche, a sweetly cou from John, ambition and a controlled. From them both he consciousness of rank.

Katherine smiled as the bowed before her. She seldom lived at the Savoy in a separat own retinue of squires, tutors officers.

e mounted the grand outer stair-hall which he had partially rebuilt.
on arrival at Kenilworth his first be inspection of the work done ast visit; but today Katherine saw matter was disturbing him. She r than to question. They would have until late that night.
ired to the White Chamber with his e in attendance. The guests were ith drinking in the hall. Katherine irs to fetch the keys which would spice chest. In her solar she found had come back into her service be-John was born. Hawise's present equal to the Pessoners' yearly in-the fishmonger marveled at this, his daughter had such good forcularly as her husband, Jack Mau-turned neglectful of his looms and aipse off after the Lollard preachers back full of heretical mouthings monks, the bishops and God's an of rich and poor, lord and comke is concerned about something, I Katherine, gesturing for Hawise to he bunch of keys from beside the 'Tis perhaps that the Prince of orsening and may not live the sum-more like 'tis this matter of Parliaweek," said Hawise, who had been to see her husband for Easter, and much angry talk. "The Commons age mood." She had checked her ly for the hateful things he repeated

, but this she did not tell her mise nodded. Inclination as well as kept her from interest in national was no Alice Perrers, whose greed and money was all but wrecking o they said. Katherine's only desire quietly, to keep herself and her om public scrutiny, and receive he came as any lady would her dded lord who must be often absent

s.

ant ignoring a great part of his life.
eant ignoring Costanza and that of his at Hertford Castle—Cata-nza had heard of Katherine's exist-doubt, through Philippa Chaucer. had appointed Katherine's sister as waiting women to his duchess, and a handsome annuity of ten pounds.
d been delighted and looked upon tment as just reward for the dull ardship at Kettlethorpe. That she windfall to Katherine's peculiar with the duke she accepted with sm, though seldom alluding to it.
d judge of a bargain, Philippa cont the manifold benefits now enjoyed herine's family nicely balanced off lms. And she frequently thanked Hugh had died so opportunely, "or have been shackled till doomsday umbling ha'penny husband, Kath-

's attitude had hurt Katherine; at d felt her love cheapened by it, and me mention of Hugh gave her dull emorse, strangely mixed with anxiat was in the beginning; now, when t of Hugh, there was nothing but a ght when the guests had all retired, lay waiting for her lord to come.

e was no sin, she thought stoutly, if truehearted. A hundred romances her this and, since no strict conrted her, she no longer felt the sense other Walter Dysse, the Carmelite ed with placid indulgence to her inonfessions as he did to the duke's.
ent to Mass only as an example to n and the castle folk.
m grew chill in the April dawn became. "What is it, my dear heart?"
red. "The Blessed Mother forfend t displeased with me?" —lovedy." He drew her tight against e would not speak, lest the baffled rage which fermented in his soul should sound like fear.

"My dearest, what is it?" cried Katherine again.

"Nothing, Katrine, except I shall deal with my enemies! The hellish monks and the ribauds of London Town—do you know what they think, Katrine? They think I have no loyalty to my father and my brother. They think I plot to seize the English throne. The curse of God be on the fools!"

He shut his mouth, scowling. His father and his brother—the idols of the nation, both feeble, ailing and at loggerheads. The Prince of Wales, frantic to conserve the kingdom for his son, little Richard, and to soothe the dangerous unrest of the people, had called this Parliament and caused it to be known that he would back the Commons in its attack upon the corruption around the doddering king. The prince from his sickbed looked to John for support in this. The king, too, looked with childish faith to John to spare him discomfort and uphold the divine rights of the crown. Mediator! Scapegoat! John thought violently. I bow my head to obey them both, to fight for what they each demand, and hear myself called traitor for my pains.

He breathed deeply and, turning to Katherine, kissed her. "By St. John, my love," he said in the light, tender voice he kept for her alone, "I've been tilting with a phantom. I'll cease my folly."

She understood nothing of this, except that his dark mood had passed and that in her he found comfort.

St. George's Day was a happy one at Kenilworth. The duke was his gayest, his most charming. He jousted with his knights and at night, in the Great Hall, he danced with all the ladies.

For two days and two more nights John and Katherine knew poignant joy, poignant in that it must be so brief; then on Friday morning the horses were again assembled by the keep. Lancaster herald blew a long plaintive blast of farewell. Katherine, standing on the stairs, bade them all Godspeed.

They had all mounted before the duke turned to her. She was holding out the gold stirrup cup.

"God keep you, my love," he said very low, taking the cup and drinking deep of the honeyed mead. "It'll not be long this time, I swear it by the Blessed Virgin."

She turned away and said, "Do you stop now at Hertford?" This question had been gnawing at her heart, and she had not dared voice it.

"Nay," he said gently. "I go straight to London to be ready for Parliament. You may be sure the Queen Costanza's no more eager for my company than I for hers."

She did not know whether he lied to her, out of kindness, but her heart jumped and she looked at him in gratitude. He kissed her quick and hard on the mouth, then, mounting Palamon, cantered through the arch.

On the twenty-ninth of April the king opened Parliament in the Painted Chamber at Westminster Palace. He seated himself on his canopied throne while his sons disposed themselves according to rank on a lower level. But the Prince of Wales lay on a couch. The prince was a shocking sight, swollen with dropsy as his mother had been.

King Edward held himself erect at first, but gradually he drooped and shrank into his purple robes of state. His palsied fingers slipped off the scepter.

The Duke of Lancaster sat on a throne, too, emblazoned with the castle and lion, for was he not—however far from his kingdom—the rightful ruler of Castile and León? Next sat Edmund of Langley. On the king's left his youngest son, Thomas of Woodstock, scowled at the wall. Thomas was never consulted by his father or brothers. He resented this, but bided his time in gaming and quarreling with his wealthy young wife, Eleanor de Bohun.

The morning opened with the expected speech by Knyvett, the chancellor, who droned on for three hours exhorting the Houses to grant the kingdom a new subsidy; money urgently needed, said the chancellor, for the

Why the lady's ALLERGY suddenly vanished . . .

Doctors who treat allergy frequently encounter cases that have all the elements of good detective stories.

Consider, for example, the case of the housewife who had asthma and hay fever every summer. Strangely enough, her doctor found that pollens—which usually bring on these disorders—did not cause her trouble. Tests showed that she was sensitive to feathers, particularly those of the sparrow.

In tracking down clues to this case, it was discovered that outside the patient's bedroom was a vine in which many sparrows nested. When the vine was cut down and the sparrows departed—so did the patient's asthma!

Allergies may be caused by an almost endless number of substances which, to the average person, are entirely harmless. The person sensitive to one or more of them may develop skin rashes, sneezing attacks, digestive disturbances and other allergic reactions.

Most allergies are mild, and only occasional attacks occur. However, people highly sensitive to such substances as feathers, pollens, or dusts may have attacks so severe and persistent that both physical and mental health are affected. Whether the allergy is mild or severe, it is important to find the cause of the trouble.

In doing so, the doctor asks many detailed questions which may quickly reveal the trouble-maker. When and where do the attacks occur? What kind of furnishings are in the home? What chemicals or medicines were used recently? Are pets kept in the house? What foods have been eaten lately?

Allergies due to an obscure cause—or more than one cause—generally require detailed diagnostic studies, including simple skin tests. These usually reveal the cause of the allergic condition. Once found, complete relief may follow simply by avoiding the offending substance.

If treatment is necessary, the doctor will prescribe in accordance with the nature of the patient's sensitivities. Generally, a series of immunizing inoculations are given. These may greatly relieve allergic symptoms in over 4 out of 5 of the cases provided patients maintain close and continued cooperation with the doctor.

Whenever recurring and unexplained attacks of sneezing, itching eyes, skin eruptions, digestive upsets, headache, or "wheezy" breathing occur, medical attention should not be delayed. For early treatment brings best results—especially for "hay fever" and other seasonal allergies.

While medical science as yet has no "cure" for allergy, this disorder can usually be controlled and distressing symptoms greatly, if not entirely, relieved.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company
(A MUTUAL COMPANY)
1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.
1 Madison Ave., N. Y. 10, N. Y.
Please send me a copy of your booklet, 954J.

Name_____
Street_____
City_____ State_____

peace of the realm, defense against possible invasion and resumption of the war in France. As Parliament was invariably called for like reason, the speech held no surprises and those on the dais and the benches muffled yawns.

The Commons were ominously quiet. At the conclusion they asked permission to retire for consultation. The king, who had been drowsing, sat up and quavered happily, "I knew there'd be no trouble. The people love me and do my bidding." He rose. He wanted his dinner, which would be served him in a privy chamber with Alice. His two elder sons looked at each other; John walked over to his brother's couch.

"Let him go," whispered the prince. "He'll not be needed now." He fell back on the cushions, gasping. "John, I know your loyalty—whatever they say. Conciliate them—hold this kingdom together for my son!" Tears suddenly spurted down his cheeks and a convulsion shook his body.

The convulsion ebbed into one of the swoons which had afflicted the prince for months. They carried him from the Painted Chamber and took him home by barge to Kennington.

Very soon the Commons began to show its mettle. A delegate requested that certain of the lords and bishops join them in conference in the Chapter House. The duke agreed, nor was surprised that among the twelve men named were two of his bitterest enemies—his nephew-in-law, the Earl of March, and Bishop Courtenay.

The earl, still at twenty-five undersized, had never forgiven the slight Lancaster had put upon him after the Duchess Blanche's death, when he had been kept cooling his heels in the Savoy.

Courtenay was more formidable, the most powerful prelate in the country after Canterbury. The duke's well-known views on episcopal wealth and his association with Wyclif had long ago incurred Courtenay's hatred.

In the ensuing days, the Commo attack became clear. The first mine w with the election of Peter de la Ma Speaker. De la Mare was the Earl o steward. He was also a fearless yo who wasted little time in presentin the chancellor's demand for a subsi he asked, had become of the mon granted?

The people were dismayed at the corruption in high places. They w guilty parties brought to justice.

The duke said, "Indeed if this people are within their rights. Who whom you would name, and what alleged crimes?"

The smaller fry were dealt with fi toms collector; and the London r John Peachey and Richard Lyons, extortion, monopoly and fraud. T were tried, found guilty and sent to

Then the Commons went for Lor They accused him of having helped twenty thousand marks from the ki purse and of treason in Brittany.

John lost his calm and spoke ou for Latimer had been his friend, a quite probably guilty of malvers duke considered the accusation of be outrageous. It was thereupon w but Latimer was found guilty on charges, and the duke made no fur to save him.

The indictment of Lord Latimer expected, the identity of the next q not. A collective gasp rose from t benches as De la Mare called, "Lo of Raby!"

"What's this!" cried Neville, jum feet. "How dare you churls quest premier peer of the realm?"

Eighty pairs of eyes stared back fiantly. The duke hesitated, then seems that we must hear, my Lor what they would say."

The Speaker launched forth at Commons' charges of illicit commis trivial, a matter of two marks a sac wool transaction which Neville fu nied, but he could not sustain his The next accusation, that four yea had produced an insufficient numb to serve in Brittany and then allo men to conduct themselves licentio awaiting shipment, Neville conte refused to answer.

Commons, considering that th were proved, requested that he b from all his offices, and heavily fined

This is ridiculous, thought John; insult me that they attack Nevill tightened his jaw and held his peace. for the next accusation and was reli object of their final and most viruler Alice Perrers.

THERE was truth in what they saic that she was rapacious, venal and influence on the king; that she brit forged signatures, and helped herse funds and jewels.

John had Alice summoned to th came soberly dressed and demure hidden by a veil, her head meek which did not prevent her from cast tuous, imploring glances sideways a

He had her sentence softened ment from court, and they forced h on pain of excommunication and of all her property that she would n go near the king.

"Now," said Lord de la Pole to th the day that Commons finished de Alice, "I think we're out of this sharp-toothed De la Mare's jade there's no more bite in him."

They were interrupted by a mess rushed into the Painted Chamber a ing himself to his knees before the du out urgent words. The duke rose a hand out to still the hubbub. "Lords moners all," he said, "we must ad Princess of Wales has sent from K This time there is no hope of his rall

Edward of Woodstock, the Bla died on the eighth of June in his year. The king and the duke knelt b

Pairables — a true separates fable!

new Pendleton separates story! The plot...to pick your favorite 49'er jacket and pair it with every new Pendleton slim skirt or full that takes your fancy. The pretty fashion moral...separates in colors that match or blend to your bidding into whole costumes...and so beautifully... because only Pendleton looms, designs and tailors them...only of precious pure virgin wool.

49'er Jacket 17.95;
Skirts 14.95 and 16.95

ALWAYS VIRGIN WOOL

PENDLETON

Sportswear

• PORTLAND, OREGON THE WOOL CITY

to those two he confided the care of Joan, and the nine-year-old Richard. e bishop folded the warrior's hands he still breast, John left the bedside ked into the antechamber. Princess lt beside her little son, holding him hn sank to one knee before the child. "I, John, King of Castile and León, Lancaster, do swear allegiance to hard, who art now the heir of Eng- The child's round cornflower eyes wn at his uncle's bowed head.

D turned, whispering to his mother, oes my uncle of Lancaster kneel to se you will be King of England some- e looked at her brother-in-law, and blurred eyes were beseeching. "God ohn," she said. "Who is there but you protect us, now that my dear lord e vowed to protect you, my sister," told her, "and Richard shall be ever me and before my own son."

lieve you," she hrist and His other guide us

OLD AND NEW

By MARGARET G. MIELKE

So long I have prayed, New-Testament-like,
"Lord bless my soul";
I am abruptly swung to pray the Old:
"My soul, bless God."

Jet planes have shown that giving out is filled
With power unguessed.
The time has come for us to praise, instead
Of being blessed.

The new has been completed.
Close the Book.
Open on Page One.
"Bless the Lord, O my soul, and praise the soul Of His great Son."

or Katherine, the me months were d heavy with gin Kenilworth, ree days' jour- fro London, was iso ed. Messengers t h k and forth to Sa y, and Kath- e d the comfort orie etters from the e, t she did not hin arl ment sat on un- nid ly. There were m itude of duties a angements re- ant om the Prince Wa s' death. And ki was ill, had en o his bed at ver -at-Bower. The e s virtually re- t of ngland.

he months passed, K erine lived for rec ing and writing ette . At last, at the inn g of Septem- a ssenger arrived n t Savoy and bore ful ws. The duke wrote that he could not re ndon, but it would not be improper he, governess, accompanied his daugh- of he occasion of the annual obituary vice r their mother, the Duchess Blanche. dir ted that she leave her Swynford chil- n a the two Beaufort babies with their ses nce the London air was not so health- for tle ones as that of Warwickshire. Kat ine, the two ducal daughters, Hawise a ore of household servants journeyed Lo on four days later. The Duchess nch s Requiem Mass was to be held on ter er twelfth. A week at the Savoy sec a delicious haze. Taking their cue m t ir lord, the courtiers showed no rec- iti of Katherine's actual position, but re s an undercurrent of indulgent ap- val f the lovers. Except for a few of the es no were jealous of her beauty and uld ave liked to enjoy the duke's favors ms es, she was treated with respect.

t w a happy week. One day they held a ch apêtre in the famous gardens. On an- er orning the duke ordered out his ge All seven of them, garlanded, and can- ed h tapestries, started down the Thames De ord. The duke rode in his great barge sta with his two daughters, a half dozen nis ntlemen—and Katherine. She sat on a hic oeside the duke, and dreamily watched L don banks stream by. Above the lec ouses the church spires pierced the let y like arrows, and the music of their is rly drowned out the gay songs from m trels' barge.

r w her last day of merriment.

That evening they returned as the Savoy chapel bell rang for vespers. Katherine saw at once that some new company had arrived, but she thought nothing of so usual an occurrence, except for a pang because the arrival of important guests would postpone the hour when she and John might be alone.

Suddenly her arm was clutched and she looked down at her sister. "Philippa!" she cried, staring at the plump face beneath the white coif. "What do you here?"

"My duty, naturally!" said Philippa. "The duchess is here. To visit her wedded lord. . . . Faith, Katherine," she added, patting the girl's hand, "you're white as bleached linen. You'll have to make the best of it. Show me to your chamber. I dare say I can sleep with you?"

Katherine turned and silently led the way to her chamber, where Hawise was drowsing by the fire. Hawise and Philippa greeted each other in the offhand manner of long but tepid acquaintanceship.

"This'll not be easy for my lady," said Hawise, glancing at Katherine.

"Bah! She needn't fret." Philippa hung her mantle on a perch and bent to adjust her coif in Katherine's mirror. "The duchess hasn't come for bed sport, that I'll warrant. Since she gave birth at Ghent last winter an infirmity has gripped her in her woman's parts."

Katherine turned slowly. "Then if this is true, she will but hate me the more, as I know I would."

"What whimsey!" Philippa had no use for morbid speculations. "I dare say she never thinks of you at all. By the rood, Hawise—can you not keep your mistress' gear in better order? This coffer's like a pie's nest. Hark—there's the supper horn. You must hurry, Katherine."

"I'll not come down," she said in a muffled voice.

But to such folly Philippa would not listen. Her common sense, though devoid of imagination, was not untinged with sympathy. Katherine was here, the duchess was here, sooner or later they must meet. Best to get it over.

Katherine, hastily attired by Hawise in the splendid apricot velvet gown, accompanied Philippa to the Great Hall where the chamberlain seated each according to rank. Philippa went to the long board by the door where were fed the mass of commoners. Katherine, no longer entitled to her usual seat, since all room at the high table was pre-empted by the Castilian retinue, was put among the knights and ladies. She slid quickly into place but could not raise her eyes from her pewter trencher, staring at her untouched food. At last she raised her head and looked at the high table, at the high-backed golden chair beside the duke which had always been empty till now.

MISERY washed over her. The duchess was small and young; she was not ugly as they had said. The duchess was dressed in somber gray. Katherine could see no jewels except her crown and a long sparkling pendant at her neck, which must be the reliquary she wore always.

Katherine looked from the glossy black wings of Costanza's netted braids beneath the golden crown to the dark eyes below. Even at this distance, one could see that they were large and brilliant, and they seemed to gaze out with brooding intensity from the long narrow face, even when the little head tilted toward the duke.

Katherine, watching in anguish, saw that they spoke but seldom. His face that she knew so well in all its moods was set into the stern mask which she passionately told herself always hid boredom. But she could not escape noting another quality she had never seen in him—deference. The duke and duchess ate from the same gilt salver, drank from the same hanap, and Katherine saw that he held back from each sip and morsel, so that Costanza might partake first, and that every motion of his body and the carriage of his head showed obeisance.

Her fingers ripped a hunk from the soft white bread and kneaded it like clay.

"You eat nothing, my lady?" said the old knight on her left. He looked at her curiously, perhaps with sympathy.

"Nay, sir. I—I have a touch of fever." She seized her winecup and drained it. The thick, heady vernage burned in her stomach.

KATHERINE sat and waited for the moment when she might be released. So deep was she in her turmoil that she paid no heed to an announcement by the herald. She caught its echo only because of the buzzing of the people around her. The duke had commanded that all those who had not previously been presented to the Queen of Castile should come up now as their names were called.

This, too, she thought—he wishes to humiliate me. And she steeled herself in anger. One by one lords, knights and their ladies were summoned by the chamberlain.

Then she heard "Lady Katherine Swynford." She walked stiff-kneed down the hall, her cheeks like poppies. She reached the duchess' chair and curtsied low, touching the small cold hand extended to her, but she did not kiss it. She raised her eyes as Costanza said something quick and questioning in Spanish, and she heard the duke answer, "Sí."

The women looked at each other. The narrow, ivory, long-lipped face was girlish and not uncomely but, seen close like this, one felt only austerity. The black eyes glittered with a chill fanatic light. Again Costanza spoke to the duke.

He leaned slightly toward Katherine, saying, "Her Grace wishes to know if you are truly devout, my Lady Swynford. Since you have the care of my daughters, she feels it essential that you neglect no religious observance."

Katherine looked at him then, and saw behind the sternness of his gaze a spark of amusement and communion. Her pain ebbed.

"I have tried not to neglect my duties toward the Ladies Philippa and Elizabeth," she said quietly.

The Castilian queen understood the sense of this. She shrugged, gave Katherine a long enigmatic look, then waved her hand in dismissal.

Katherine quitted the hall, walked slowly across the courtyard. I wish I hadn't seen her, she thought. Yet he doesn't love her; I know that. It's me that he loves, and it does her no real wrong—yet. I wish I had not seen her.

The Duchess Costanza that night announced to the duke that she wished to make pilgrimage to Canterbury at once. It was for this that she had come to London. Her father, King Pedro, in her dream had directed her to go, and also told her certain things to tell the duke.

"He reproaches you, my lord," said Costanza to John when they were alone in the state solar. "I saw my father stand beside me—groaning—bleeding from the hundred wounds that traitor made in him. His voice cried, 'Revenge! When will Lancaster avenge me?'"

"Aye," said John bitterly, "small wonder he cries out in the night. Yet twice I've tried—and failed. The stars have been set against us. I cannot conquer Castile without an army, nor raise another one so soon."

"Por Dios, you must try again!"

"You need not speak thus to me, lady. There's nothing beneath heaven I want more than Castile!"

"Swear it!" she cried.

"I swear it by Saint James." He made the sign of the cross. "But the time is not ripe. The country is weary of war. They must be made to see how much they need Castile. They must," he added lower, "regain their faith in me as leader."

She was not listening. "Now I shall go to Canterbury," she said more quietly. "My father commanded it. It must be that since I am in this hateful England, an English saint is needed also for our cause."

The duke inclined his head and sighed. "May God grant it, lady."

In the first years of their marriage she had not been so unpleasing. There had been moments when she showed him tenderness. Since the birth and death of the baby boy in Ghent, she had become like this, indifferent to all things but her religious practices, her strange dreams and her consuming nostalgia for Castile.

The Castilian duchess left the Savoy next morning with six of her own courtiers. She was dressed in sackcloth, her head was powdered with ashes, and she rode upon a donkey, for that was the humble beast used by our Blessed Lord.

Katherine from her chamber window watched the pilgrimage move through the gatehouse to the Strand. Her eyes shone with happy tears as she turned to her sister. "She's gone again! God be thanked she didn't stay for the Requiem Mass."

"The duchess cares for no past but her own," said Philippa dryly.

Later that morning, the Lancastrian procession to St. Paul's Cathedral was led by the duke. They were all dressed in black and all afoot. Katherine's position was between Elizabeth and Philippa, behind little Henry, who followed his father.

When our hatred is too keen, it places us beneath those we hate.
—LA ROCHEFOUCAULD

As they marched across the Fleet bridge and entered the city, the Londoners made way respectfully. Many uncovered, many of the women ducked a curtsy as the duke marched slowly past. There were cries of "Lancaster" and "The Duchess Blanche, God rest her sweet soul!"

John felt a contented glow. He thought that his poor brother had been right to counsel moderation in the handling of the Commons. "The Good Parliament," the people called it now. And the sacrifice had not been too great, barring the whimperings of the old king, bereft of his Alice. The imprisoned merchants doubtless had deserved punishment, the Lords Latimer and Neville too. The new Privy Council, which Commons had appointed to the king, was harder for John to stomach. Yet here, too, magnanimity might be shown. For little Richard's sake it might be possible to conciliate and work with even such enemies as the Earl of March.

His mellow spirit deepened as he walked down St. Paul's immense nave through the choir and to the right of the high altar, where he knelt in Blanche's chantry beside her marble tomb. His retinue filed in.

THE priests in black and silver chasubles commenced the celebration of the Mass. "Introibo ad altare Dei —— Ad Deum qui laetificat juventutem meam ——" The candles shimmered before John's eyes, a soft forgiving peace flowed over him, and with it a certainty that all would go well from now on. His enemies would melt away, success would come in war, in peace.

"Requiescat in pace ——"

The Mass was over. John felt exalted, cleansed, much as he had felt long ago during the sacred vigil before his father knighted him.

He walked down the nave. Throughout the vast church his people rose from their knees to follow. He stepped out to the porch, and stood blinking in the sunlight, not comprehending why there was a great crowd in the walled close. Again he heard "Lancaster," and threw his head up to smile at them, thinking they came to do him honor. He checked himself, seeing there was no answering warmth in the upturned faces.

"Make way—make way!" cried Lancaster herald, bustling out of the church and brandishing his baton and trumpet. "Make way for

CONTINUED ON PAGE 70

Avon brings you 13 shades in Colo
Lipstick and matching Nail Polish.

Avon Color-last Lipstick, for all its wonderful staying pow so good and doesn't dry your lips. Long-last Nail Polish co matching glamour colors and wears beautifully. So it's no that this precious pair . . . available in 13 fashionable, be shades . . . enjoys such wide popularity. Assemble your co make-up to harmonize with your coloring and your clothe the help of your Avon Representative.

von...lovely, lively, longer-lasting

TINGE PINK CHEER RIPE CHERRY CLEAR RED NECTAR

Your Avon Representative comes to your home and helps you choose these fine cosmetics.

s. Curt Gowdy, wife of the radio and TV sportscaster known as oice of the Boston Red Sox", finds the Avon shop-at-home way most convenient and pleasant. You, too, will enjoy selecting on cosmetics and toiletries for the whole family, in the comfort of your home, with your Avon Representative at your side. Avon Cosmetics, of the highest quality, are moderately priced. That's why they are so popular with women everywhere.

our Avon Representative will be calling on you ... welcome her.

CALL WESTERN UNION OPERATOR 25 FOR YOUR AVON REPRESENTATIVE

AVON cosmetics

ADIO CITY, NEW YORK · PASADENA, CALIFORNIA · MONTREAL, CANADA

Mrs. Curt Gowdy is seen selecting Avon Cosmetics with the help of Mrs. Mary E. Deverix, her Avon Representative.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 68

John, King of Castile, Duke of Lancaster, and for his meinie!"

The crowd did not move. From the midst of the rapidly swelling throng a voice shouted, "Fine-sounding titles! But tell us why we should make way for John o' Gaunt, a Flemish butcher's son!"

John stood rooted to the pavement. Katherine, with the ducal daughters, had come out on the porch and at first she was puzzled like the others. Then she saw whom the crowd was warily watching, like a great collective beast of prey. And the duke stood as if witchcraft had turned him to stone. Katherine instinctively moved nearer to him as the vanguard of his retinue began to trickle from the church.

"Aye," cried the taunting voice, "John o' Gaunt seems wonder-struck! He's not yet read the placard nailed on yonder door. Will ye not read the placard, m'lord? 'Tis on Paul's door behind ye. It tells strange tidings o' a noble lord what holds his head so high!"

Katherine's heart began to pound. She noted something familiar in the voice and stood on tiptoe to peer into the crowd. 'Tis Jack Maudelyn! she thought. She glared down at Hawise's husband with some confused idea of quelling him, when Lord de la Pole rushed out of the church crying, "What's ado here? What's this mob?" He drew his sword, shouting, "A Lancaster! A Lancaster! Come forth to your lord!"

There were startled answering cries from those who were still inside the church. The great doors were flung wide. The duke's knights and squires came running out, fumbling at their sword hilts.

The crowd wavered, then as though a cork had been drawn they poured, stumbling, scrambling through the churchyard gates, and fled.

"Shall we after them, your Grace?" cried a young knight.

The duke made no answer. H moved while his retinue surrounded

De la Pole sheathed his sword. said to the knight. "'Twould not here or on this day of mourning. Th no harm ——" He faltered as he g direct look at the duke. "My lo not been wounded?"

The duke's face was gray. Kathe him crying, "My darling—why d like that? They were but silly jape called out."

He shoved her aside, and walki the church door, shut the half hi opened. On the door, dangling fr nail, hung a square of parchment. slowly:

"Know, men of England, how y wickedly deceived by one who in plots to seize our throne. The Du caster is none of royal Edward and blood, but a changeling. For ye that once in Ghent, the Queen's Gr livered of a son that a nurse overlay her lord the King, the Queen did s another infant the same age. It was son, and he whom ye now call John This secret did the Queen confess to of Winchester, on her death bed."

The duke drew his dagger from sheath. Its hilt was enameled wit and leopards, tipped with a ruby r caster. He thrust the dagger through ment and left it there.

He turned to his bewildered co face became one only his fightin seen, as his lips drew back in a ter "They shall learn whether I am Ed born son."

That night at the Savoy uneasy s hummed. In the kitchens and cell lets whispered together, and the m in their barracks. The chancery cle chapel priests buzzed as unceasingl duke's squires, or the knights and duke had gone to Havering-at-B the king. He had put off his mourn and ordered his fastest horse to be had chosen none of his men to him, nor spoken to anyone; he alone.

All through that autumn the du Havering Castle with the old ki ceived him with delight, clung t mumbled gratitude. For the duke called Alice Perrers. He sent the men-at-arms to fetch her from h banishment.

In jewels and brocades and a wh Alice flounced triumphantly out iot. She raised her thickly painted duke.

"This is different, your Grace," "from that time at Westminster w bow to Commons and send me awa then you could not mean it." H voice caressed him, she squeeze softly.

He withdrew his hand. "Dame has changed since that day and n no man—or woman."

"My lord, I'll do your biddin thing. I've some influence in my o but I—I do beg of you one boon."

He inclined his head and waited.

She breathed sharply, her gree rowed, "I crave the head of Peter I did not like the things he said lord."

The duke laughed. "The Spea Commons already lies in chains ham Castle's dungeon. I shall deci be done with him after I deal with ters. You may go now to the king."

One by one and day by day t Lancaster reversed all the measure reform Parliament had put throug marily dismissed the Privy Counci mons had appointed. The Lords I Neville were reinstated at court chants impeached by Commons w from gaol.

The old king signed whatever son gave him, much pleased that Alice and John were now in agre

Because you love him so much— you give him your wisest care

His thinner skin really needs this softer tissue

His sweet helplessness fills your heart with love. You try to shelter him from the slightest hurt. One way to keep your baby "comfy" is to select his bathroom tissue for safe, gentle softness.

At bath time, you wash him with his own special soft cloth. At changing time, be sure to use a tissue that is equally suited to his "tender-skin" needs. The new ScotTissue is kind to his skin, yet strong and absorbent for quick, thorough cleansing.

"ScotTissue," Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

1,000 sheets over ½ more than the 650 sheets you get from most other tissues

The big 1,000 sheet roll is your best buy for the whole family —goes further, lasts longer. It's another great Scott value.

Softer than ever 2 rolls of ScotTissue equal more than 3 rolls of most other tissues

e force of the king's authority and en behind him, and backed it with ally powerful Lancastrian feudal-ons had dissolved long ago. The d scattered to their homes all over heir Speaker was imprisoned, and nd bishops who had given them v attached themselves to the win-the Earl of March and Bishop let the bishop be, for the present. ed little Earl of March was ordered country on foreign service. He red he resigned his marshalship and cade himself in Ludlow Castle.

d of October, the duke attached Wykeham, the Bishop of Win-summoned him before the new il on charges of graft and robbery funds.

norning the corpulent fifty-four-shop stood before the king, the e members of his council, facing h more bewilderment than anger.
nderstand, your Majesty ——" He efense to the king, but seeing that owned head was nodding, he the duke. "Your Grace—these y're outrageous! They deal with years gone."
were true, my lord bishop?"
Blessed Virgin, how can I remem-this time how I came by every impossible, my lord."
your memory will sharpen if you of the burden of your revenues and s," said the duke. "Holy poverty red by the clergy, I believe."
op's voice was shrill as he cried, ce, why do you persecute me?
ays shown me favor before. It can-you believe I had aught to do with erous changeling story!"
ll said that you had this secret of th from Queen Philippa on her
The duke spoke so softly the mem-ouncil strained to hear.
queen confessed no such thing,
'Tis all a lie!"
now, my lord bishop. But some-this lie. Your name was written."
Holy Trinity, it wasn't I. You must sn't I!"
shrugged. "Yet you've admitted ry is faulty." He glanced at his he trial will proceed."
ded and soon ended. The Bishop er was stripped of his rich manors fers full of gold, though his epis-even the duke could not touch.
's retinue swaggered and boasted l's power. Alone of all Lancaster's on de la Pole had reservations. He ed them to the duke and been sent Havering for his pains. On a morning in his chamber at the as gloomily letting his squire array ting costume when his page another William Appleton, and the
in.
w, brother," cried the baron, "I'm ou. How was it at Pontefract; are k?"
ne ago," said the Franciscan. "I've g with my brethren at Grayfriars. I things of his Grace."
strange!" said the baron, instantly his duke. "He but vindicates his ny noble knight!"
said the friar, "that no act of the nent has been suffered to stand, peaker is imprisoned, the Earl of shed."

that the Bishop of Winchester is virtually begging his bread from or. The duke's acts are frightening n sighed. "He no longer cares. He revenge."

not had enough?" said the friar hat placard. He knows not who put wrote it. So he strikes out blindly.

e's shown forbearance. Mind you,
here's been no bloodshed!"

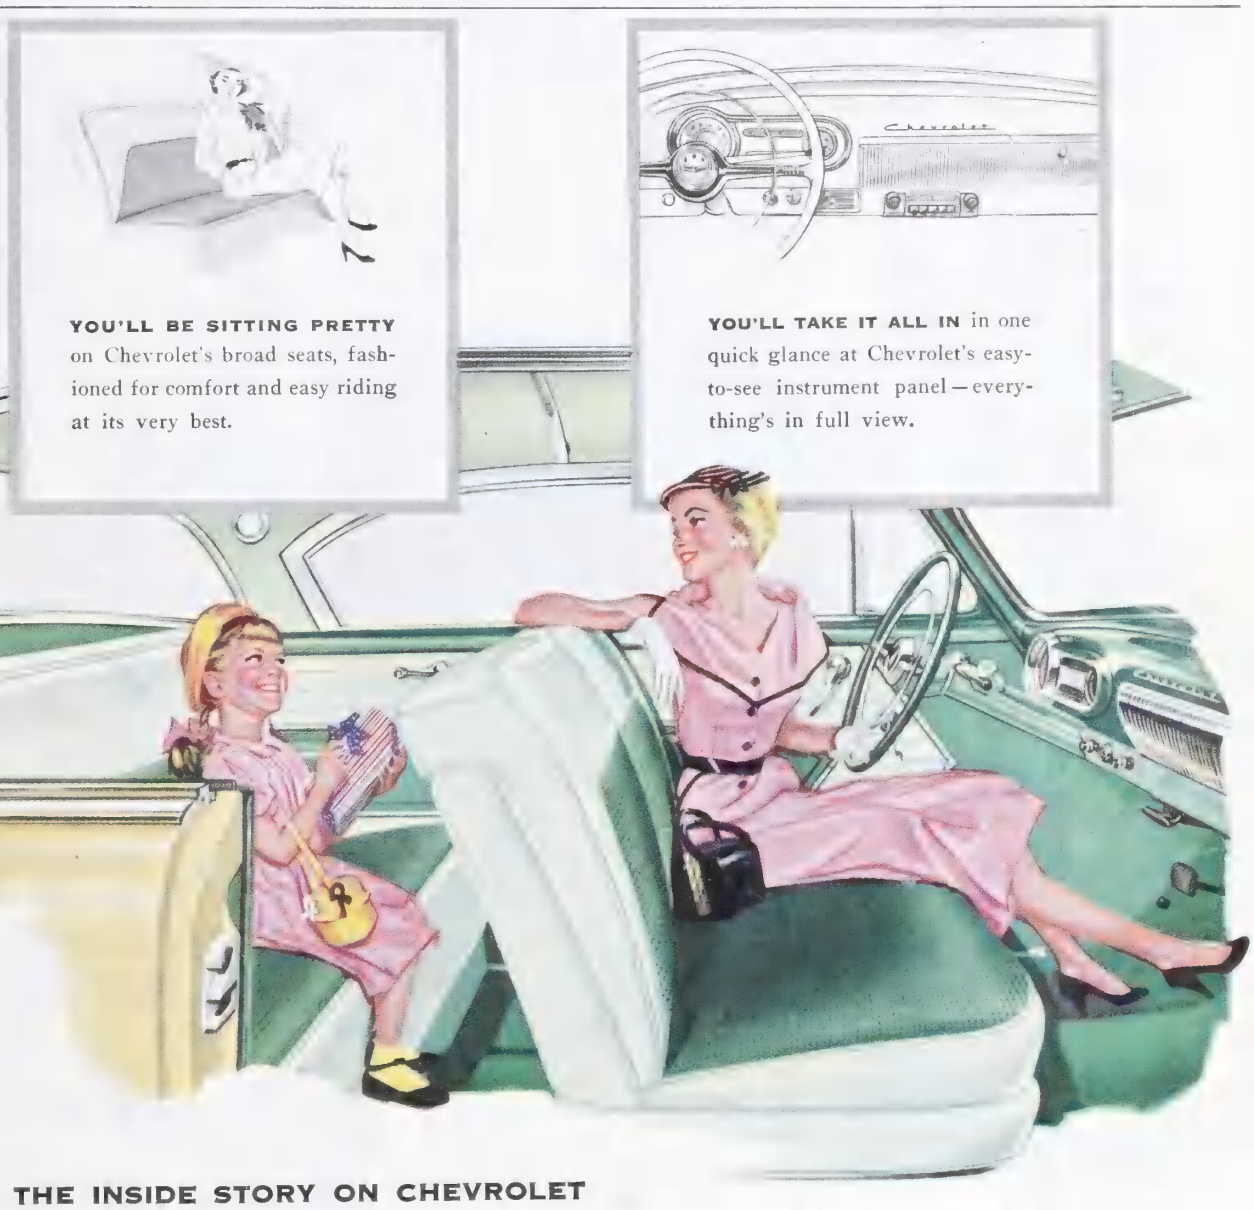
"Bloodshed!" The friar smiled faintly. "Blood is all you knights understand. But 'tis not of that I'd speak. 'Tis about that placard. I believe I know who wrote it."

"God's nails," breathed the baron, sinking back open-mouthed in his chair. "Do you indeed?"

The friar hesitated. This knowledge had not come to him through any secrets of the confessional, for if it had his lips would have been as sternly sealed as they were on another matter relating to the duke.

Shortly after his return to London he had been called to examine a sick monk at Saint Bartholomew's Benedictine priory. As he had left the priory infirmary, he had been shocked to hear drunken voices coming from the scriptorium and a bleating laugh like a goat's. He had been about to hurry past the door when the same bleating voice called out, "This one'll hang on Paul's door too. 'Tis better than the changeling ——"

Someone said "Hist!" and there was a sharp silence.



The friar walked into the scriptorium. Two black-robed monks gaped at him blankly. The third man was perched on a high stool at a desk, a quill pen in his hand, a square of parchment under it. His robes and semitonsure showed him to be a clerk. His pock-marked face instantly became bland, but his little eyes fastened on the friar with ratlike wariness.

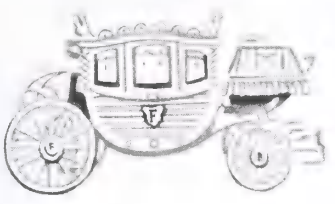
"You make merry while you inscribe your scrolls?" said the friar pleasantly, trying to edge near enough the desk to see what the clerk had written. "You treat of merry topics, Sir Clerk?"

One of the monks in confusion said, "This clerk is none of us, he but lodges here at the priory. He has lately come from Flanders."

"Nay, I'm an Englishman," said the clerk quickly. "Johan of Norvich. I but spent a time in Flanders."

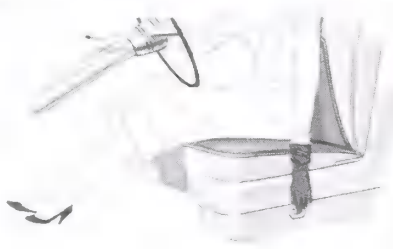
"Johan?" said the monk in surprise. "We've called you Peter ——"

YOU'LL BE SITTING PRETTY on Chevrolet's broad seats, fashioned for comfort and easy riding at its very best.



YOU'LL TAKE IT ALL IN in one quick glance at Chevrolet's easy-to-see instrument panel—everything's in full view.

THE INSIDE STORY ON CHEVROLET

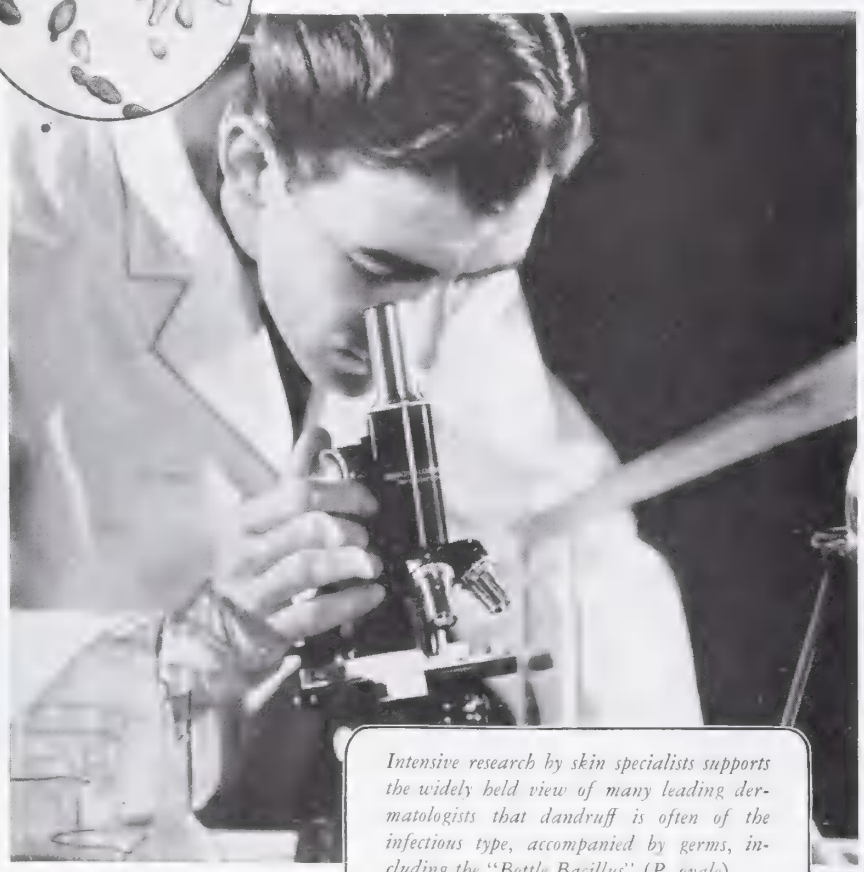


A whole new world of style and color awaits you in Chevrolet interiors. Anyone knows Chevrolet is a very handsome car from the outside, and the inside is really superb, too. It's modern in mood yet regal looking. Fabrics you'd expect to find only in much higher priced cars are lavishly used throughout Chevrolet interiors in rich harmony of color that is pleasing to the eye. And comfort goes hand-in-hand with all this beauty—making Chevrolet one car that's really a part of gracious living.

Automatic Front Window and Seat Controls optional at extra cost on Bel Air and "Two-Ten" models.

CHEVROLET

CHEVROLET EXCLUSIVELY in its field gives you famous Body by Fisher, known the world over for its style and quality.



EASIER THAN AT HOME, front windows raise or lower—front seats adjust to your liking, with only the touch of your finger tip.

Research shows

WONDERFUL VALUE OF LISTERINE TREATMENT FOR INFECTIOUS DANDRUFF!

"Bottle Bacillus" (P. ovale) germ regarded by many dermatologists as a causative agent of the infection.

Intensive research by skin specialists supports the widely held view of many leading dermatologists that dandruff is often of the infectious type, accompanied by germs, including the "Bottle Bacillus" (P. ovale).

IF YOU HAVE the slightest evidence of persistent scales, flakes, irritation . . . start now with Listerine Antiseptic and massage . . . the treatment that has helped so many. These symptoms may mean that your dandruff is of the infectious kind, calling for a real attack on scalp germs.

Kills "Bottle Bacillus"

Just douse Listerine Antiseptic on your scalp morning and night. Follow with persistent and vigorous massage.

Here is what Listerine Antiseptic does to scalp and hair: it kills millions of germs, including the "Bottle Bacillus" (P. ovale), regarded by many dermatologists as a causative agent of infectious dandruff, and at the same time alleviates itching.

Improvement in 76% of Test Cases

A series of tests on human beings revealed that 76% of the men and women who used the Listerine Antiseptic treatment twice a day showed complete disappearance of, or marked improvement in, dandruff symptoms within a month.

So, if you have any evidence of infectious dandruff, don't fool around with makeshifts. Start with the Listerine Antiseptic and massage treatment today. It's easy. It's pleasant. It's tested. Lambert Pharmacal Company Division of The Lambert Company, St. Louis 6, Missouri.

At the first symptom

LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC—QUICK!

"Johan—Peter—both." The clerk slid off his stool, and the friar with disappointment saw that the scroll was blank but for two words—"Know ye."

"Is't the custom at St. Bart's that Gray Friars haf right to nose around and question us?" said the clerk to the monks.

The Gray Friar had made some civil remark and gone, but he had been mulling this matter over in his mind ever since. He told the baron, "There's no proof. And there is much that's puzzling. Whate'er this clerk may call himself, he spoke with Flemish accent. And never have I seen malice so pure in a man's eyes. What can he have so harsh as this against the duke? But the nub of the matter is—shall I go with this tale to the duke?"

The baron pondered. "Not now. There's no proof, and the duke may be led to more blind violence. His rage is nearly slaked; 'twill die down—if nothing further happens."

Nodding thoughtfully and with relief, the friar stood up. He said, "How is't with Lady Swynford? What part has she played in all this?"

"None at all," answered the baron. "I doubt he's seen her since it started." His face softened. "Poor fair lass, she moped here at the Savoy for days and then returned to Kenilworth. Yet it seems he loves her dearly when he has a mind for love."

"A vile adulterous love," said the friar grimly, pulling up his cowl and adjusting the knotted cord at his waist. "God will scourge them for it."

Katherine kept Christmastide alone with the children at Kenilworth. The duke sent belated presents, but the accompanying note was stilted and cold, though it indicated that she should return to the Savoy for a visit with the Lady Philippa; there was an envoy coming from Luxemburg who wished to see Philippa with a view to possible marriage negotiations.

HE sent the note and the gifts by a young squire Katherine did not know. She kept rigid control of her face as she read and thought, Dear Mother of God, he has really ceased to love me or he could not write thus. I shall not go—I'll refuse. Even as she thought this, her heart began to deny it. His love had been buried, but it was still there despite the evil demon, or whatever the incubus was, that drove him. She must not let her pride strike back at him, since he had summoned her, no matter how coldly.

She turned to the young squire and said quietly, "Then we must make ready to leave for London. What are you named, sir?"

"Robert Beyville, my lady, but mostly I'm called Robin."

"Robin," she said with her sudden smile, thinking him well named. He had alert eyes, a curly brown head, and his tunic w rusty red. Altogether more pleasi than Raulin d'Ypres had been.

Katherine, Philippa and Robin for London on the fifteenth of Fe companied by the usual escort arms, varlets and baggage carts, w and Philippa's waiting women w into a wagon with their mistresse coffers.

Robin enlivened the way by telli ladies all that had been happening Katherine listened eagerly and le about the duke's activities than sh known.

ROBIN went on to say proudly ther was now sitting in Parliam member of the Commons. "For," laughing, "the duke has seen to Parliament shall be packed with h porters, so there'll be no trouble lik last spring."

Katherine spoke thoughtfully, " well with his Grace now? He ha enmities to fight against?"

"I wouldn't say that!" Robi "There's still the bishops!"

Philippa looked up. "Are you a Squire?" she said stiffly. It was onl of piety that Philippa dared diffe father's views.

Robin explained, "I but feel as V and our lord the duke. We've ha preachers' come to our home ir they're good honest men, lady."

"Welladay," said Katherine, uni Wyclif's preachers. "What is it b duke and the bishops?"

"They defy his Grace!" cried R Bishops' Convocation has dared t Wyclif for trial at St. Paul's on Th

Katherine could see no reason vehemence. The bishops were p course, but the duke was omnipote drew nearer to London she began with increasing anxiety what was r beloved's heart, and to suffer a vague jealousy—not of Costanza were plenty of designing ladies at

John was not aware that he ha Katherine. There were times when for her, but these emotions were ov by the obsession which had come t demonstration of power was a he yet continual imposition of his will appease the pain which drove him

This pain smoldered like a hidde breast, and sometimes at night it actual fiery lump. Alone in his grea he would roll in shameful distress his fists and struggling for each brea

CONTINUED ON PAGE 7

"What happened to the old Joie de Vivre?"

1954 id you ever?

By LITTLE LULU

Di you ever fish for tissues with your fingers full of "goo"
And get too many tissues – when just one would really do?

With Kleenex there's no wastefulness, no fumbling to unnerve you – These tissues pop up – one by one – save money as they serve you!

Be thrifty–Buy quality

Buy Kleenex

t, strong, completely disposable

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

© INTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS CO.

have grapefruit instead

Worth its weight in health

• Just for its wonderful taste, Florida Grapefruit juice is fun every sip of the way. You love its lively tang.

You'll also get lots of vitamin C, one vitamin you can't store up. You need plenty every day.

And Florida Grapefruit juice is low in calories. That's right—long on vitamins, short on calories—the best of all possible drinks for your slim, trim figure.

So steer clear of drinks that are calorie-rich—and when you come to think of it, most drinks are. Have Florida Grapefruit juice instead. Keep in shape!

Florida Citrus Commission, Lakeland, Florida

Can makes 4 big servings, less than 5¢ each. Keep pitcher chilled and filled

Ready-to-drink Florida Grapefruit juice in cans is a handy refresher

Luscious! Have them as is for breakfast or dessert. Have them in salads

FLORIDA Grapefruit

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 72

last he fell back exhausted. In the mornings he would awaken with increased passion to outwit his enemies.

On Wednesday, February eighteenth, he rose after a badly troubled night and angrily shouted for his squires. Parliament would open today, and he must hurry to Westminster.

Just as he was leaving the Savoy he remembered to summon the chamberlain, and told him to prepare rooms in the Monmouth Wing for Lady Philippa and Lady Swynford. The chamberlain looked startled. The Monmouth Wing was not where Lady Swynford had lodged before; it was half the length of the Savoy from the duke. The duke caught the flicker in the man's eye, and some realization of Katherine's feelings pierced his preoccupation. But nothing on earth would induce him to let anyone see him in those humiliating nightly attacks.

He flung himself on his horse and, pursued by two of his squires, galloped along the Strand to Westminster.

After the day's session, he dined in the hall with many of the lords. Later that afternoon the duke and Lord Percy rode into the City, bound for the latter's town residence. This mansion was but a few hundred yards beyond St. Paul's, and it had been decided to use it for headquarters.

En route the duke stopped at the Savoy to pick up certain of his men and Brother William Appleton. The Franciscan was to be one of Wyclif's advocates.

A bleak wintry drizzle began to fall and the streets were nearly deserted. They entered St. Martin's Lane, and the Gray Friar suddenly saw three figures in the gloom ahead. Startled, he stood up in his stirrups. There was still light enough to recognize two black-habited monks and a third shorter man in a dark cleric's robe. The three figures paused when they saw the horsemen approaching. Brother William caught the flash of something white being thrust into the clerk's sleeve.

"My lord," cried the Gray Friar, "we must catch that man!" He kicked his mule and clattered past the astonished duke. The two monks swiveled and, hiking up their robes, pelted as fast as their legs would take them toward Aldersgate. The clerk limped frantically behind, searching for cover.

The friar overtook the hobbling figure as it was about to dart into an alley and, swooping down a long arm, collared a handful of cloth.

The duke galloped up. "What's this, Brother William?"

The friar had flung himself off his mule, and plunged his hand into the clerk's sleeve. He brought out a roll of white parchment. "This is the man, my lord, who wrote the placard on St. Paul's door."

The duke started. "Bind him," he said in a strangely quiet voice.

A SQUIRE jumped forward with a leather thong and tied the clerk's wrists behind his back.

"Take him to my inn!" cried Lord Percy. "We'll deal with him there."

The clerk was rushed down the street to Percy's gate. The duke and Percy followed. The courtyard gate closed behind them. They dragged the clerk into the house and flung him on the floor of the hall.

"We'd best flog him afore he's put in the stocks," said Percy. "What's he done, by the way?" He looked at the duke, who was standing six feet from the clerk and regarding him fixedly.

The duke held his hand toward the friar without answering, and Brother William gave over the parchment.

"Bring me a light," said the duke. A varlet ran up with a torch. The hall grew still while they watched the duke read, until he raised his head and said, "This time it seems that I—John of Gaunt—for reason of my base birth am therefore without honor, so have made secret treaty with King Charles of France to sell him all England."

The duke took the torch from th bending down, held it near to the "Let me see your face!" S reached out and yanked the clerk's his stringy throat. A jagged whi from the jaw to the Adam's apple. is you, Pieter Neumann," said the "You still bear the mark a boy m thirty years ago at Windsor."

"I don't know what you mean, I am Johan, Johan Prenting of N scar is from a vound I got in Fra not what is on the parchment, it wa at St. Bart's wrote it, I've done no

"He lies, my lord," interrupt William solemnly. "I myself saw on the parchment."

"He lies," said the duke. "As lied."

"We'll hang him!" cried Lord P him out to the courtyard!"

"Wait." The duke held up his h him to some privy place, put him i I would talk to him alone."

PERCY'S men hustled the clerk where there was a small dungeon. wrists and ankles were clamped in in the wooden stocks.

The duke had followed. He wat sively while the prisoner groaned Then he said, "Leave a torch in and go."

Percy's men obeyed. The duk shut the iron door, leaned against

"You suffer now, Pieter Neu said. "But you will suffer far more die, if you don't speak truth to have you bee yourself since t Windsor Castle did steal your purse and ran a Pieter's eyes a heap of rusty fetters and he s "In Flanders."

"What broug London?"

Pieter considered quickly. He ha Flanders after stealing a gold chali abbey church, landed in Norfolk an way here, knowing there would be for his talents. He had not been dis "I longed to see England again,"

The duke's breathing quickened. has paid you to write these placar He clutched the skinny shoulder.

The clerk whimpered and twis gasped, "Courtenay."

The duke straightened up. "By said under his breath. "Would even of London stoop so low?"

"If you set me free, my lord, I another placard," whimpered Piete say that you're no changeling, tha broke off and screamed, "Ah—your nay, nay don't!" Plain in the torchl seen murder leap in the duke's eyes.

John folded his arms and le against the dripping fetid wall st you think that the king's son wou as you hung there trussed like a spit?" he asked. "Nay, 'tis not s shall die—though how you shall d yet decided." He opened the iron going out, banged the door behin shot the bolt.

Though I believe the moon is inhabited, I live on civil terms with those who do not.
—BERNARD DE FONTENELLE

Katherine and her companions the Savoy that afternoon. The c informed them that his Grace wo there this night; he was staying wit of Northumberland in the City.

Katherine followed the chambe Monmouth Wing with a dragging banishment to a part of the Savoy were truly a symbol of the way he be between them, why had he sum here?

Next day she sent Hawise to f and told him that she wished to trial in the cathedral and asked company her. She felt that she mu again, no matter what the circumsta

Robin assented blithely. His ey at the thought of escorting her any particularly to a spectacle which tement. Hawise was grimly disaprrived early at St. Paul's, but it was mmed. The largest nave in England aul's, but it would not hold all the s who wished to see their bishop uke of Lancaster.

shoved and coaxed and threatened got Katherine nearer to the Lady hey waited a long time, and the w restless; there were stampings of mpatient whistles; then high in the l's great bell began to clang.

ne craned forward and saw William , Bishop of London, appear majestically on the choir steps. He held his crozier at arm's length, and stood like a Roman general, awaiting the homage of a conquered people.

Then she heard shouts at the great door. A stocky man in armor covered by a surcoat embroidered with blue lions waved a white staff and shouted, "Get out o' the way, you scurvy knaves."

"Who is it?" Katherine whispered.

Robin answered, "Percy, with his marshal's staff. The people won't give way for him."

The Bishop of London descended the choir steps and called out angrily, "What entrance is this you make into the house of God!"

Katherine did not hear the answer, for behind she saw John. The duke strode forward and hurried to the choir steps. She could hear nothing that was said, but she saw that he shouted something to the bishop, who shouted back. The duke plunged again among the muttering people and led forward Wyclif and four friars. The priest walked sturdily with downcast eyes and the crowd fell back, for many of them had listened to him preach and many admired him. It was not Wyclif whom they feared.

Wyclif entered the Lady Chapel and the people surged forward again. Katherine's view was blocked, but not her knowledge of what was taking place, for those in front called back to others. "The duke demands a seat for Wyclif! Our bishop will not allow it!" . . . "Now Percy shakes his fist in the bishop's face." . . . "The archbishop seems to plead and try to calm them, but no one listens." . . . "Now by God's body—Lancaster ——"

"Oh, what's happening?" cried Katherine in an agony, shaking Robin's shoulders.

Robin cried, "I cannot tell. Sweet lady, I must get you out from here."

A fellow in a leather jerkin called out, "The duke threatens our bishop. He's drawn his sword—Lancaster would kill ——"

"Kill—kill—kill ——" Like the repetitions of a nightmare, a thousand voices bawled the word. There was a sharp crack of wood from the Rood Screen as the mob heaved against it. The tapers rocked in their holders. A woman screamed.

"Quick!" cried Robin. "We'll try for that door." He scooped her up and, holding her tight in his left arm, edged backward to a small recessed door. He pushed Katherine through. They were in the cloisters. From there a gate led to the churchyard and through the gravestones onto Watling Street.

KATHERINE had obeyed her squire blindly, so frightened by that roaring mob that she could not think. But on the street she clutched Robin's arm and cried:

"What will happen to him? We can't leave here like this."

"No harm can befall our duke," cried Robin fiercely. "I must get you to safety—'twere madness to stay in there."

"Yes, yes," she cried. "Take me to the Pessoners in Billingsgate—'tis near. Hurry, Robin—so you may go back ——"

He nodded and they ran together until they came to the fishmonger's house on Thames Street.

"Lady Katherine!" cried Dame Emma in amazement as she opened to their frantic knocks.

"Let me stay here," panted Katherine. "Robin, run back and see—then tell me ——" She sank onto the settle and struggled to catch her breath.

Dame Emma was too wise to question yet. She went to the stillroom for a bunch of dried sage, prime remedy for nervous upsets. She crushed the herbs and poured boiling water on them. When the brew was cool enough, she brought it to Katherine and made her drink it with the same kind firmness that Hawise had inherited.

"What's ado, m'lady?" she said then. "Is't some trouble at Paul's?" she added, for her husband Guy and Jack Maudelyn had gone to see the trial.

Katherine explained quickly and Dame Emma shook her head. "I pray me goodman keeps his wits, though I've scant hope o' Hawise's Jack—sore as a bear on a chain is Jack."

Katherine did not answer. She twisted her hands together and looked continually toward the window, hoping for Robin's return. She sipped the sage brew, she wandered about the cheerful low-ceilinged room, presently she wandered to the window again. "Robin's coming!" She opened the door and flew out to the street.

They came back in together and Katherine cried to Dame Emma, "All's well with the duke! . . . Tell—tell what happened, Robin."

The young squire laughed. "When I got back, his Grace and Lord Percy had already left the church with Wyclif. With the turmoil and the shouting, the folk got confused. Then the Rood Screen tumbled down and frightened them so they rushed back into the nave. The duke and my Lord Percy simply walked out through the dean's door, mounted and rode off toward Cornhill where they are to sup with Sir John d'Ypres. Percy's squire said my lords were cool as spring water and very tickled at the breakdown of the trial."

"There's amany won't be," said Dame Emma, frowning. "God's nails, 't sounds a disgraceful brawling all around."

Katherine slept that night of the riots at the fishmonger's. She awoke when St. Magnus' bells rang for prime and hurried down to the

UFFY® washes ies faster, easier tian anything in your kitchen now

-be se only TUFFY is tough enough to rub crusted pans, gentle enough to ash finest china and silverware

FF washes finest china . . . takes tic food faster than mops, dishrags, ge Yet TUFFY never scratches.

FF scrubs pots and pans . . .
sks ut stubborn, crusted foods that a ush. No food sticks to TUFFY.

FF washes silverware . . . digs out t t sticks in fork tines. Then FF rinses out clean, fresh as new.

gr ers ery ere

UFFY

TUFFY
scrubs yet oesn't scratch
never smells—never sours
because it rinses clean

U. S. PAT. NO. 2,601,771
THE U.S. CO., CHICAGO. TUFFY OF CANADA, LTD., TORONTO

When you select a gift, remember . . . . YOU CAN GIVE anyone A BOOK

. . . your hostess
. . . a bride
. . . a man around the house
. . . a good boy or girl
. . . parents of babies
. . . amateur gardeners
. . . a good cook or a new cook
. . . SANTA CLAUS
. . . THE EASTER BUNNY
. . . THE STORK

NO GIFT is more personal, more permanent, than a book! You enjoy the giving . . . and invariably you give pleasure, too.

Right now, just think around the circle of your family and friends. Isn't there someone you'd like to remember with a well-chosen gift? A birthday coming up, perhaps? Or a wedding? A visit from the Stork?

A book is a gracious, inexpensive way to mark any occasion. Write your name in the fly leaf and keep ever fresh the memory of the giver.

All Better Homes & Gardens books can be seen and bought wherever books are sold. If you prefer to order by mail, remit to Better Homes & Gardens, 901 Meredith Bldg., Des Moines 3, Iowa. All books are guaranteed; if the recipient already has the book you give, return it to us for refund.

New ideas in all phases of cooking, including meal-planning, nutrition, table-setting, triple-tested recipes. Nineteen comprehensive chapters. Text-and-picture directions. Tab-indexed, loose-leaf binder with gay, washable covers. Over 5½ million copies in use today. Only $3.95 (Canada $4.50).

The first complete book using extensive "how-to" photographs. Shows how to plan and to plant. Helps avoid the disappointment and expense of mistakes. At any good bookstore, hardware or seed store. Half a million copies in use. Only $3.95 (Canada $4.50) for this 520-page volume with 20 chapters and 1159 pictures.

Encourage the man around the house. This HANDYMAN'S BOOK proves there's no magic in being "handy" . . . it's just a matter of getting clear directions. Here are professional methods, spelled out in ABC's. 1-2-3-step pictures, too. Only $3.95 (Canada $4.50). 1600 repairs, improvements!

In this volume, 50 stories, fables, rhymes and lessons approved by educators for children from 3 to 8 years. Pictures throughout are reproductions of the illustrations in the famous early editions. Only $2.95.

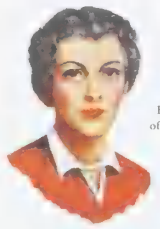
Step-by-step photographs, time tables, charts, menus aid the text in covering prenatal care, child-care guidance through the sixth year. Only $2.95. Sold at bookstores and most infants' and children's departments.

DON'T FORGET TO INCLUDE YOURSELF AMONG THOSE TO WHOM YOU GIVE BOOKS!

kitchen. The Pessoners told her the latest tidings. Bishop Courtenay himself had finally berated the mob leaders. So, one by one, they had slunk off to their homes.

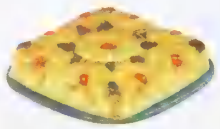
"I'm glad no harm came to the duke," said Guy, donning his leather apron. "'Twas a good night's work, in especial that we let loose the wrongfully held prisoner from Percy's inn. The marshal'll not try those tricks again."

"What prisoner was that?" asked Dame Emma.



"Some fellow from Norwich. 'Twas said he was in mortal fear o' the duke. The instant he was freed, he hared it off for sanctuary in St. Paul's."

Dame Emma sighed. "Think'ee, chucklehead, that this is the end o' London's trouble? D'ye think the duke will tamely smile and thank ye for this night's work?"



The fishmonger thrust his lip out and said stubbornly, "He should not 'a' tampered wi' our liberties. He should not 'a' set himself against the commons."

The goodwife sighed again. "Aye, commons've no friend at court these days." She bustled over to pat Katherine's shoulder. "Ye don't eat, my lady?"

"No," said Katherine, rising. "Forgive me, but I can't. I must get back to my duties at the Savoy."

Betty Crocker of General Mills

DUMPLINGS

PINEAPPLE UPSIDE-DOWN CAKE

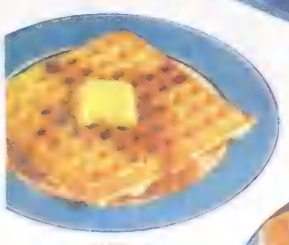
"Feel like baking today?

You can make any of these with Bisquick . . . because the ingredients that start almost all baking are right in Bisquick . . . measured and blended so perfectly it's close to magic. That's why Bisquick helps you all these ways we've pictured here . . . and why anything you make with Bisquick turns out so light and good."

Betty Crocker of General Mills

COFFEE CAKE

MEAT PIE



MUFFINS

COOKIES

VELVET-CRUMB CAKE

NUT BREAD

SHORTCAKE

WAFFLES

BISCUITS

PANCAKES

You don't even need a cookbook. Directions are all right here.

B.C.

Emma said, "Ye canna go alone. Go wi' her, Guy. She'll be safe wi' you."

The fishmonger grumbled that a load of herring awaited him at the wharf, but finally took off his apron and mounted Katherine behind him on his great bay gelding. He was a goodhearted man, and he admired Katherine's fair face, but he was increasingly convinced that Hawise's devotion to this woman was unfortunate, even dangerous.

He rode in gloomy silence until they had crossed the Fleet bridge. Then he said, "How long d'ye look to be down here, m'lady?"

"Not long," said Katherine with a cold vehemence. "I shall see to that, Master Guy."

"To Kenilworth, then, or Leicester?"

"No," she said, "to Lincolnshire, to my own home."

Guy twisted his fat neck around to stare at her. "Will the duke allow it?"

"I believe the duke will not hold me," she said, sitting stiff and straight on the pillion.

"Welladay!" cried Guy, thinking the riot had very properly frightened her into caution. "'Tis a sensible plan."

That afternoon, unable to rest, Katherine went into the Savoy gardens. It was chilly, the clipped yew hedges and shrouded rosebushes were drenched in gray mist, but she had flung a warm squirrel-lined cloak over the gray woolsey. Nor would she have felt the cold in any case, while she paced the deserted brick paths and thought of her decision.

She would leave here tomorrow. Back and forth she walked between the frosty yews and thought harsh practical thoughts. She would keep the wardships and annuity he had given her, for she owed it to his children. But she needed nothing more. She would be invulnerable again and alone, with this wicked unwanted love walled out of her heart.

Suddenly she looked down at the ring he had put on her finger in the ruined chapel in the Pyrenees. Betrothal ring. She stared at the round translucent sapphire—the stone of constancy.

Nay—I cannot, she said after a moment. She slipped the ring into her purse and sank down on a carved stone bench. The mists grew thicker and downstream the pale lemon light faded over London. One by one from its churches the bells clanged out for vespers.

The bells drowned the sound of approaching oars on the river until a barge appeared quite near the pier. An eager voice called out, "My Lady Swynford, is it you?"

She turned and recognized Robin's feathered cap and rusty tunic.

The youth jumped to the pier and cried, "I've been sent for you, my lady, to come to Kennington."

"No," said Katherine, unsmiling.

Robin was dismayed. "But, my lady—you are summoned to Kennington Palace. The Princess Joan commands in the name of Prince Richard that you shall come at once."

"Whyfor?" said Katherine. "I've never met the princess, what could she want of me? Robin, is his Grace not at Kennington too?"

"Aye, he was—locked into a chamber with Percy, I believe. Lady dear—I beg of you to hurry, the princess was most anxious."

SINCE there was now no queen in England, Princess Joan was sovereign lady and must be obeyed. Katherine reluctantly let Robin help her into the waiting barge. The oarsmen bent their backs and, pulling sturdily against the current, moved their craft upstream. They landed at the Kennington pier.

Robin led the way through a courtyard and upstairs to the Princess Joan's bower, where a waiting woman admitted Katherine, then left her alone.

The princess entered in a rush of pink velvet and a wave of heavy scent, crying, "Welcome, Lady Swynford." She held out a fat dimpled hand so loaded with diamonds that Katherine, as she curtsied, could scarce find space to kiss.

"I have come, madam, as you commanded," said Katherine.

"Take off your mantle and sit down, my dear," said the princess, while she settled her billowing hips into a canopied cha something to ask of you, Lady S
'tis a delicate matter ——"

"Perhaps I may save you emba madam, by telling you that I inter the duke's service tomorrow," said

The princess' eyes grew round Sainte Marie!" she cried. "Did y asked you here to beg you to give up Great heaven, child, it is quite the

"What!" cried Katherine sharply you are jesting."

"Nay, listen," said Joan. "Don me with those great angry eyes. I need your help." The princess rose ing to Katherine, cupped the girl's hand and gazed down earnestly.
really love my brother of Lancaster

KATHERINE looked away, and her
"He loves me no longer," she said
"He's had no thought of me in mon

The princess sighed. "I believe you she said, "and for two reasons. I li years with his brother and in many are like as two cockleshells. Edw ceased to love me and come back yet when the dark violent fits were on She shook her head and sat down a the other reason is this. Three wee held a Christmas mumming he Richard. John came, of course, others. Late that night when we tired I could not sleep for missin dear lord and fearing for the fut little son. Then I heard a strange r State Chamber which is next to where John slept. I opened the doo meaning to sho guard. Then I kn was in the gri frightful dream.
and panted and out your name Katrine!' I we and woke him, angry with me a get out. We did of it again."

To be good is noble, but to show others how to be good is nobler and no trouble.
—MARK TWAIN

Katherine said with a faint sm something to know that he think dreams. But what is it you would h madam?"

The princess, gripping the chai lently, cried, "Go to him! Go to make him stop these dreadful planning. Christ's mercy! I think h mad ——"

The girl got up and ran to kn weeping princess. "Dear lady, he is but he would never listen to me. N told me aught of his plans ——"

The princess clutched the girl's morning I pled with him. Richard pled. I even summoned the old ar John would not see him. Do you he means to do?" She shuddered.
to muster an army, his own Percy's from the north, to march on Civil war! There'll be no England l

Katherine sank back upon the heart beat heavily and her thou confusion.

"And this gathering of an army cried the princess. "He proposes t violate sanctuary—to seize some p has fled to St. Paul's, to drag hi the altar ——"

"No!" cried Katherine in horro rilege seemed to her the worst of princess had said. The right of sa God's most sacred law and to viol damnation.

"Aye," said the princess wit
"every man's hand would be a then—John will be killed and th others with him."

"This prisoner. Who is he?"

"Some knave who did write pla the duke." The princess spoke wi patience. She thought this a fooli indeed when the welfare of her sc land was at stake.

But Katherine's intuition grew some way the prisoner held the k unreason.

The bower door opened and a c in, a lad with curling flaxen hair.

cried the princess, holding out ome to me, love. Here, Lady e said as the child stood by her land's hope." She looked at pleading.
tarted from her thoughts and ard bowed to her in a courtly said, "Mama, my lord Uncle
—he's on the stairs."
ie!" cried the princess, jumping not go. If he leaves here —— n you stop him?"
whispered the girl. They went d down to the courtyard.
n brass helmet and full armor, iver gate shouting instructions opped and stared as Katherine
—"
ne of his new plans that at first lid not know her. Beneath his face was haggard, his eyes the he had always feared.
lord," said Katherine, looking his face, "I wish to see you me folly!" He jerked his mailed ord hilt. "I'm off to the Savoy.

thering, and I've other work to rawn off frowning. The prin-oy stood watching by the castle ew herself high, her chin lifted.

ait until you've talked with me.
my lord."
"
aid, unflinching, "by reason of ne." From her purse she drew ing. "This is the first thing I of you, my lord."
t the ring, and then at Kathed impatiently to Percy. "Go w shortly. Now, Katrine, what me?"
s saw that the first battle had came forward hastily. "There's te Chamber, my lord. You can Swynford there. I'll send food ou, for you've not eaten all this ed, but he walked over to the comment. The women followed, cess pulled Katherine a little help you, child," she whispered.

ntered the State Chamber and d sharply on her. "What would Katrine? I've little time."
gh to rest a bit, though, my lord.
alk to a man standing in full ghtening." She gave him a gay though her heart beat fast.
and sat down on the wide oak t to him and quickly unhooked is brass helmet and lifted it off an't eat in these," she said, un-straps that fastened his mailed ere comes Robin with wine—him take off the rest of your be quickly donned again when ve."

quire had entered with a flagon t wine to be found in the prin-varlet followed bearing a silver with eel jellies, and a steaming e gestured to Robin, for still speak.

ing a great weariness that had when he sat down. He had not ghts. He suffered Robin to un-her sections of his armor and h his great sword. Then he took ne Katherine brought him and oped, it cleared his head. "What at Kennington?" he said. "Why t at the Savoy?" considered quickly. Robin and e gone and she was preparing a She had never lied to him, nor t she knew that she must choose with care.

lways so easy to see you at the d," she said. "Nor for me to see late." She smiled, with no hint nd sat down close to him on a stool. "You look very tired; won't you eat, please? 'Tis only Lenten fare, but these oysters are well roasted."

He started to protest hotly, but instead, and to his astonishment, he said a very different thing.

"Why don't you wear the ring I gave you, Katrine?" She had dropped it back into her purse.

She answered evenly, "Because I thought that it had lost its meaning."

A quick dull flush mounted his thin cheeks. "Nay, how could you think that, lovedy! I have had matters to think of, but these matters had nought to do with women."

"Aye," she said, filling his cup, "I believe that now, my lord."

She brushed against his shoulder as she put the flagon back on the table, and he smelled the warm, flowery fragrance of her skin. His arm lifted to slip around her waist, but she moved away before he touched her and sat down again.

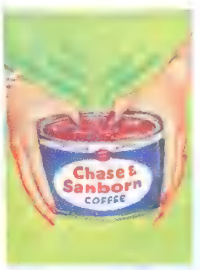
His arm dropped. He drank and then spooned up the oyster pasty, for he found that he was famished and this the first food in weeks that had had savor for him. While he ate, he felt a quality of rest and lessening of strain. He resented the thought that this easing came somehow from Katherine, who sat quietly gazing into the fire. He had forgotten, too, how very fair she was, nor did he wish to think of it now.

He picked up the gold-handled table knife and cut a slice from the bread loaf, pulling his mind back toward his purpose. They were massing at the Savoy—men-at-arms from his castles in Hertford and Hatfield. They'd be there now, since he had sent messengers at dawn.

Katherine saw that he had lost awareness of her and his surroundings. In his eyes, as they stared at the knife, the pupils had dilated so that there was no blue. She felt a shock of recognition. Somewhere there had been a child

Even a tiny difference in FRESHNESS...

makes a big difference in FLAVOR!



CHASE & SANBORN COMES TO YOU FRESHER THAN ANY OTHER LEADING COFFEE!

No matter how they're packed, most coffees are fresh some of the time. But for the extra freshness that makes such a big flavor difference, there's only one coffee you can count on —Chase & Sanborn!

It's packed differently . . . pressure packed! And only pressure packing can pack coffee right out of the roaster, while flavor's richest. Then all flavor-stealing air is replaced by flavor-sealing vapor. Pressure surrounds each coffee grain—locks flavor in! So Chase & Sanborn "Dome Top" Coffee is fresher than coffee in vacuum cans or bags.

You're always sure it's fresh—you prove it before you buy! The rounded top of the can tells how. You can't test coffee packed any other way! Today, enjoy really fresh ...really flavor-full coffee. Buy Chase & Sanborn.

Pressure Packed for fresher flavor!

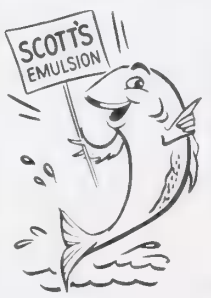
CHASE & SANBORN COFFEES ARE SERVED BY MORE FINE HOTELS AND RESTAURANTS THROUGHOUT AMERICA THAN ANY OTHER BRAND!

BUY-LINES
by Nancy Sasser

AN ADVERTISING COLUMN

YOU'RE SURE TO SUFFER SOCIALLY if you're "faced" with complexion problems . . . so resolve right now to do something about it. And the best thing I can suggest is that you get this:

FREE SAMPLE of CUTICURA SOAP . . . for I promise if you use it regularly and correctly you'll have a softer, smoother skin in just 7 days! That's because CUTICURA is the only leading soap that's superfatted . . . and it's this excess of fats over alkalies plus mild medication that deep-cleanses, supplements the natural oils of the skin . . . keeps your skin soft, smooth, supple, satiny and healthy! And to be sure you are washing your face correctly, I'll also send you a FREE booklet called "7 Days to Lovelier Skin" . . . which shows the medically recommended way to cleanse your skin. Just check OFFER #1 in box . . . and I'll send you both.



I also recommend the use of emollient CUTICURA OINTMENT at night to soften your skin and help clear up blackheads and externally caused pimples . . . and that you use "invisible", greaseless CUTICURA MEDICATED LIQUID under your make-up during the day. It speeds healing wonderfully!

COLOR ATTRACTS . . . so make your hair truly attractive by using a MARCHAND'S Rinse! That's what any beauty-wise woman should do . . . for MARCHAND'S makes your hair look so flower fresh . . . so a-glow with shimmering color and sparkling lights. It comes in 12 exciting nature-matched shades, too (including "specials" for lovely white hair!) . . . so whether you're a blonde, brunette or redhead, one is certainly made for Y-O-U! And they're all safe, temporary Government-approved colors and wash out easily . . . leaving no tell-tale stains around your hair line. What's more, MARCHAND'S Rinse removes soap film and leaves your hair a darling to manage . . . while it blends in gray streaks and banishes dullness. In other words, after a MARCHAND'S Rinse your hair shines with colorful beauty . . . the kind men admire and other women envy. Yet it takes merely minutes after your shampoo . . . and costs just 25c for 6 Rinses. 10c for 2. At all Drug and Variety Stores.

AN OUNCE OF PREVENTION is worth a pound of cure . . . which is why the wisest mothers I know are starting now to give their youngsters wonderful SCOTT'S Emulsion every day! You see, SCOTT'S helps build stamina and real resistance to colds and other Winter ills . . . because it's a powerful food-tonic nourishment that supplies natural A & D Vitamins and energy-building natural oil factors . . . plus added minerals that are often lacking in the diet! And SCOTT'S is a real body-builder, too . . . actually helps youngsters grow up with strong bones, healthy teeth and sturdy bodies. Furthermore, it's 4 times easier to digest than ordinary cod liver oil . . . another reason so many doctors recommend it. So I urge you not to put off giving your children this important protection before Winter infections set in . . . for I consider it the very best "health insurance" you can buy! Get a bottle of SCOTT'S Emulsion today . . . and "serve" it every day!

DON'T BLAME THE MAN OF THE HOUSE if your beautiful table lighters aren't working . . . get some RONSONOL Lighter Fuel and fill them yourself! You can do it easily even if you are an "all thumbs" girl . . . thanks to the revolutionary new patented "Switch-Spout" which the Ronson people have developed for the RONSONOL can. You simply flip and pour . . . flip! . . . it's closed! There's nothing to pierce or cut . . . no messy top to screw off and on or lose. And I can assure you that RONSONOL Fuel is the very finest quality lighter fuel made . . . for it lights instantly, burns cleanly, lasts longer and is pleasingly scented. It still costs only 25c . . . so if I were you I'd get two cans at a time . . . then you won't be annoyed or embarrassed by lighters that don't light. And to further insure the good behavior of your lighters, get RONSON extra-length flints, too . . . they're 40% longer than ordinary flints and give 500 more lights!

WANT TO BUILD HOTELS . . . own railroads . . . buy a bank? Well, you can when you play "Monopoly" . . . the fascinating PARKER GAME. Players make fortunes, go bankrupt and get rich quick all over again . . . as they buy and sell "real estate"! It's really one of the most exciting games I've ever played . . . so much so, in fact, that your cares and worries completely fade away in the thrill of exchanging land and utilities. That's why "Monopoly" is such a wonderful game for the family's at-home evenings and festive weekends . . . as well as a perfect formula for assuring the success of any party. But all the PARKER GAMES are marvelous . . . so I advise you to "build" a PARKER GAME shelf for yourself . . . starting with "Monopoly", "Sorry", "Clue" and "Keyword" (the best crossword board game ever!). And send for this:

PRICELESS BOOKLET . . . "How to Have Family Fun and Popular Parties with Parker Games". It's packed with tips on entertaining . . . with suggestions for special party themes and refreshments. See OFFER #2 in box.

Write Nancy Sasser, Dept. P-5, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y. for:

☐ OFFER 1 . . . FREE SAMPLE of CUTICURA SOAP and FREE BOOKLET "7 Days to Lovelier Skin".

☐ OFFER 2 . . . PARKER'S BOOKLET "How to Have Family Fun and Popular Parties with Parker Games". Please enclose 10c.

who looked like that, an uncomprehending terrified child. She searched for the memory, and when it came it seemed so incongruous that she rejected it. The reminder was of her little John. Last summer he had wandered into the cow byre at Kenilworth, and a playful calf had galloped at him, knocking him down. The child had believed the calf to be a werewolf, fitting it someway into a horrible tale a serving maid had told him.

Katherine had reasoned with her boy, had made him pet the calf, and got him to laugh at his terror, yet a month afterward the child had had a nightmare from which he awoke to scream that the calf was after him with the fangs and blood-red eyes of a werewolf, and still when he saw a calf he trembled and grew white.

It were folly indeed to make comparison between the thirty-six-year-old Duke of Lancaster and a four-year-old child—and yet in both she had seen the same intrinsic shape of fear.

The duke stirred and put down the knife. "I—I must go," he said. He stood up and glanced toward his armor.

Katherine rose, too, and took his hand in hers. "Why must you go, John?" She looked up solemnly. "Is it to kill the man who is in sanctuary at St. Paul's? Is it to do sacrilegious murder that you must go?"

He snatched his hand from hers. "How do you know that?" he asked. "And if it were, what right have you to question me? Katrine, get out of my way ——" For she had backed up so that she barred the way to the armor, and the door.

Her wide gray eyes fixed on him with compassion. "Of what, my dear lord, are you so afraid?"

He gasped, and raised his hand as though to strike her.

"No, dear," she said. "To hit me'll do no good. All these months have you not been striking out, and has it eased you? You know that it hasn't. I believe that to speak out might ease you. I love you, John. Trust me."

He listened, looking at her and then away. "No man or woman has ever thought me a coward—and now, you, who say you love me ——"

"Dearest—you're no coward," s
"I know well how you lead yo battle, and how you've risked thousand times, and yet there is that you fear."

The angry force drained from h shoulders sagged, and he said i voice, "Witchcraft . . . witchcraf must die this night, for he has ca monstrous spell." He made the cross and, turning, walked to the banquette, slumped down and rest in his hands.

Katherine, too, crossed herself.
John and sat beside him. "Who that you fear?" she said gently.

"Not him—I don't fear him," h nor seemed aware that he contra he had just said.

"What, then, is it that so troub

"Katrine, for God's sweet sake!
what they've done to me. They seek lie and slander, they doubt my—r

"Aye," she said, hesitating, "th terrible things to you, but it is b are afraid—and you have made th are the strongest, the most powe England, my dear lord, so can merciful?"

He looked at her strangely. " that—when we vowed in the chap did not keep her vow."

She tried to quiet her panic. "I questioned as steadily as she coul

"Isolda Neumann—my foster m having said it, he added, "In all I've never spoken her name." He the flagon and his crystal cup, pou rich golden wine splashed on the drank.

Katherine was amazed. She gues was circling nearer to the answer not question too much.

The courtyard clock had struck ago, though he had not heard it. I night out, and if he would but sta wine took full effect, she might y him to the rest he so badly needed

John spoke again. "The man yo the one I shall kill, is Pieter Neu was Isolda's son."

Ask Any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

ONE teacher, at the beginning of a new school year, says she feels like sending parents the following note: "Thank you for giving me your child to love and teach."

A pet can be parted with much more easily before it is named, but the moment it is christened, though it be only Sweet Nose, it becomes incorporated into family affections.

PARENTAL PROBLEM NO. 1

When the ruts have been taken out of the road, the bumps out of sitting and sleeping, the coldness out of winter, the hotness out of summer, how is a modern child going to experience a few of the bruises and discomforts which are the girders of a strong character?

Exact words of a six-year-old to her mother: "I am inclined to believe that little children should sometimes be permitted to do a few of the things they would like to do."

By the time a woman can pay a fancy figure for her clothes, she doesn't always have one.

An adolescent is usually well informed about anything he doesn't have to study.

Every family needs a listener: member who, in the wee small h hears an attic window blown op cat to be let out, a comforter slip from a child.

"Under new management" may a baby has just been born.

From a sea captain's will: "If m wants to marry again that's her ness. I never did like to cruise with mate and I guess she would not li either."

Husband: the one on the right during the wedding ceremony an the right side ever after.

Young boy, asked if he ate e thing: "Well, yes—but some thin eat more slowly than others."

The man who wonders where next meal is coming from probably a wife on vacation.

As impersonal as most letters ma personal.

Whenever I try to recall that long first day at school only one me shines through: my father held hand.

herine breathed. "And he in-ther in some way? And you, y much, have not forgiven?"
"Yes," with a peculiar quickness. is it." He had glanced off from knew.
p suddenly, swayed and caught Late," he said thickly, "must go. ur eyes—Ka-Katrine. Gray eyes k vows —— She said she'd never she did—she vowed something owed Pieter had lied ——" He d back and forth as though to ght, and stumbled a few steps.
ran to him and flung her arm
"Here, dear love, you must rest." ed again, and by wedging her ath his armpit she got him to the rone on the coverlet.
had never seen John drunk, for re temperate, but she had had nce with Hugh, and she thought er he would be very sick or sink stupor. But she was wrong.
to speak in thick disconnected e leaned over him and listened art pounded with her desperate erstand. At first she thought he that she was there, but his eyes e looked at her with recognition, eech was so slow and heavy that rcely follow the words.
he chapel at Windsor, broken d it over and over. Isolda had rling?" Katherine whispered.
.
betray you?"
away that night, though she never leave me. She died," he nter voice. "She died of plague."
struggled up on his elbow and, Katherine's white face, said with etness, "So perhaps she lied when hat Pieter said at Windsor."
ter said?"
g," he muttered, and fell back
w.
up onto her knees and, crouch-
, she cried, "And you believed ere nought but a butcher's son? believes it now! It is for this that ve to England—to yourself —— me!" She took him by the shoul-ook him. "Wake up and listen!
sh frightened child in you that As your son believes that a playerewolf!"
up bewildered. The mists cleared his mind.
d you the truth!" she cried. "Oh, ho are most like the king of all could you doubt your birth?"
ned his lips and drew a harsh d not know that I doubted it—
" His hand moved gropingly and of her skirt, then fell limp, and
d.

lept nearly the clock around.
ace bells rang for morning Mass, knock on the door of the State atherine opened the door and r to her lips.
ss stood in the passage. "Is all nispered.
so, madam," Katherine said sleeps."
hanked," said the princess. She old beads on her wrist, for she way to Mass, and she kissed the dear, if you have brought him fits of mad revenge, God will do." She went down the passage chapel, thinking it was a black Katherine could not have been of Castile instead of that cold er at Hertford Castle.
ay Katherine stayed in the State tching over John as he slept.
ught food and drink to the door,
a little. And she thought long out this secret thing that had so bled him. She thought of the r of a lie, of all evil—and she er own children, and how she had elf capable of guiding their lives e glanced toward John as he lay love for him had grown tenfold since he had trusted her last night with a glimpse of his naked soul. Yet yesterday she had been swamped with resentful pride, even with the hatred that seemed welded like the obverse of a shield to love. What then was certain? What was there that would not shift and veer at the mercy of the winds of feeling?

Then she forgot her painful questions and ran to the bedside, for John stirred and said, "Katrine?"

"My lord," she whispered, bending over him.

His eyes were clear and vivid as the sky of Aquitane, and the smile he gave was one she had not seen in long. He reached up and, pulling her down, kissed her hard on the mouth. Then he sat up and said, "Sainte Marie, what a sleep I've had." He looked at the curtained windows. "Is't dark still?"

"Again!" she answered, smiling. "You've slept the day through."

"And did I then?" He scooped his tawny hair back from his forehead and stretched prodigiously. "It seems that I was drunk last night—it seems to me, too, that I babbled much nonsense." He quirked his brows and looked at her half laughing.

"You don't remember what happened?" she said softly.

"Nay—only that you were near me, and most patient. And that I love you, sweetheart. I shall prove it soon—but not in this dismal room. We must get back to the Savoy."

He got up and walked into the garderobe. She heard him whistling, and the splashing of water. "Send for food, lovedy," he called to her, "I'm famished."

Neither Katherine nor the duke ever mentioned the night at Kennington Palace, though it had an immediate effect on their relationship. His need for her deepened, he talked to her more freely about his concerns, and he kept her with him constantly. At the Savoy, her

The Best Cooks way to QUICK MEALS

2 QUICK-TO-MAKE DISHES made more delicious with

Van Camp's PORK AND BEANS

Grilled cheese and tomato with Van Camp's Pork and Beans—ready to HEAT . . . EAT . . . ENJOY.

Stokely-Van Camp

Van Camp's Pork and Beans—rich with secret, savory sauce—in individual casseroles with onion rings.

VAN CAMP'S • THE LARGEST SELLING BEANS IN ALL THE WORLD

How would you rate this dipper gal?

☐ Shy ☐ Fun ☐ Dracula's daughter

For parched gullets, nothing beats a cold draught of aqua, country style—but who wants a cascade down his back? That's Minnie the Ha-Ha for you. Up to another practical prank. Funny? Ask Pete (of the drenched shirt)! How can Minnie's victims know that such buffoonery conceals shyness; a need for notice? Being herself is a gal's better bet. And on "those" days, comfort helps. Remember, Kotex gives softness that holds its shape... doesn't chafe!

To lengthen a stubby neck, you need—

☐ A noose ☐ Careful planning ☐ Ubangi collars

No use sighing for a swan-like look! To "stretch" a stubby neck takes planning. Mind your posture. Keep your head high, hairdo short—and choose scooped necklines: shunning scarves, strangle-bangles. Certain days, too, call for careful planning—to be sure of the right-for-you sanitary protection. Try Regular, Junior, Super Kotex. See which size suits you exactly; gives the complete absorbency you need.

Are you in the know?

Just met—what's your chatter cue?

☐ Take over ☐ Proceed with caution

Maybe you point out another newcomer, and coo: "What a creep! Hope he doesn't cut in!" He won't. Neither will the lad you're talking to—who happens to be the creep's brother! Lesson: be kind, or be quiet! You can always be confident (at calendar time), with Kotex. Those flat pressed ends prevent embarrassing outlines. And here's an added worry-saver: Kotex can be worn on either side!

More women choose KOTEX* than all other sanitary napkins

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Which of these "steadies" does most for you?

☐ Romeo & Juliet ☐ Kotex & Kotex belts ☐ Moon 'n' June

Made for each other—that's Kotex and Kotex sanitary belts—and made to keep you comfortable. Of strong, soft-stretch elastic... they're designed to prevent curling, cutting or twisting. So lightweight you'll hardly know you're wearing one. And Kotex belts stay flat even after countless washings. Why not buy two ... for a change!

lodging was changed. She was given the duchess' small solar adjacent to the State Chamber. At the high table in the hall her seat was shifted to one next the duke, and though decorum was observed by the vacancy of the duchess' place to his right, it pleased John to order made for Katherine a chair no less magnificent than his own.

These elevations naturally set many spiteful tongues to wagging, but they wagged in secret, not only for fear of the duke, but because the Princess Joan treated Lady Swynford with marked favor.

To the duke's close friends, such as Michael de la Pole, the princess did not hesitate to attribute the duke's new restraint to Katherine's influence. This, De la Pole inwardly doubted, but he was pleased to see that his lord had reverted to his normal temperament and handled the aftermath of the riots with justice.

The duke had received the frightened London deputies, and after listening to their apologies had exacted mild-enough punishment—a public penitential procession to St. Paul's—and had ordered that the unnamed instigators of the disturbance should be excommunicated. When these orders had been obeyed, he saw to it that the obnoxious parliamentary bill to curtail the City's liberties was dropped. When the people demanded a fair trial for Peter de la Mare, this was granted. In the course of some weeks the Speaker of the Commons was released and rode in triumph back to London.

Katherine was interested to hear of these various clement measures. But in the matter of Pieter Neumann's fate John would not speak to her. She ached to know what had been done with him.

She found out at last in Eastertide. The duke came to her and said, "Shall we visit the mew, sweetheart? We must see how your little merlin does."

Falconry had become a passion with Katherine, and she was as eager as the duke for her merlin to be trained, so that they might ride out to hawk in Moorfields.

Arnold, the duke's head falconer, met them at the door of the mew with the sad tidings that Oriana had some puzzling ailment. The great white northern falcon had drooped upon her perch for days, she refused raw meat.

John, instantly concerned—for his royal gyrfalcon had no peer in England—had framed a question as to her medication when he was interrupted by Brother William Appleton.

THE Gray Friar on his mule had trotted through the gatehouse and dismounted. "My lord," he said gravely, "it is done. The ship sailed from Pevensey Monday. He'll not trouble you again."

"And the Benedictine monks?"

"Have been stringently disciplined by their prior."

John sighed. "Good. You've done well, and I thank you." Turning to Katherine he said, "Wait here. I must see Oriana, but 'twill disturb the birds if you come too."

He entered the mew with Arnold. The Gray Friar made as though to leave, but Katherine cried out, "Brother William, I beg you!"

The friar paused. "What do you wish, Lady Swynford?" he said with emphasis on her surname.

She felt in his gaze some deeper meaning than the abhorrence of an ascetic friar for the sin of unhallowed love. He frightened her, but she persisted urgently. "This man of spoke to the duke, is it Pieter Neu a right to know," she added sharp

The friar said curtly, "It was mann, deported on a ship bound where he'll remain in exile—if he s voyage."

"But he was in sanctuary."

"And stayed there the allotted answered the friar. "All was don regard for the laws of sanctuary. I present at his hearing, and have ju the sentence of banishment was e

"God in His mercy be than Katherine. She spoke with sim more to herself than to the friar, William was softened.

HE spoke in a tone he had not since the night of Hugh's death. " he said earnestly, "rouse yourself too late. I believe you have the str

"Rouse m asked.

"Give up and this unc he told her.

"Aye, t earthly love' she said bitt threaten me fire, I suppo be so—but lieve it. I h she said, loo defiantly, " only in mys love."

He shook and looked sadness. "V foolishly, L ford. Disaste to teach y Nor do I fire, but in disaster!"

He stared the paving face half hid cowl.

"God be he muttered and walked a the chapel.

Katherine she waited f that the Brother W aroused in melted in spring suns ently she wa ward the barge house the water ga

TRUE VISION

By M. M. PARRISH

"We got Miss Meade," said
our second-grader;
"Gee, but she's pretty! Us guys wouldn't trade her For all the others." How soon they begin
To exercise their masculine Discrimination—I thought, amused—
With deeper merits ignored, refused.

I met Miss Meade; her face was one Of the plainest I'd ever looked upon,
And a bit severe; but when she smiled
I saw with the gaze of a trusting child;
There was nothing stern,
nothing commanding,
But only the love and understanding For little lost children she might have had.
Oh, the X-ray eyes of a tiny lad!

see an arch-shaped bit of the Than sapphire beneath the blue of the rooks cawed and wheeled toward in the elms across the river. She w to the landing.

When the duke walked up behin pier she had a lapful of violets a absorbed child, was flinging them i to watch the little purple specks away while she sang in her sweet "Oh Lenten is come wi' love to to sing hey!"

He laughed and kissed the top "Moppet," he said. "Has forgot of years and many children?"

Katherine giggled and, rising, arms around John's neck. "Mar my lord, but not yet a full bevy, pered.

The duke looked startled as h meaning. "Is it so, my Katrine? darkened and he looked down iously.

"You are not pleased?" she ask

"Aye, I shall welcome it," he tol know that. But you were sorely lovedy "

"Nay, but all will go well this said quickly. "I'm a fruitful woma bear you another brawny son."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 8

Your hair is romance...

ep it sunshine bright with White Rain

ou'll have sunshine wherever you go when you use White Rain Shampoo. For lovely hair your most delightful beauty asset. And White Rain sprinkles your hair with sunlight . . . leaves soft to touch, fresh as a breeze, and so easy to manage. Ask for this fabulous new lotion ampoo that gives you results like softest rain water. And as surely as sunshine follows rain . . .
ou'll find that romance follows the girl whose hair is sunshine bright.

Use New White Rain Shampoo tonight and tomorrow your hair will be sunshine bright!

FABULOUS LOTION SHAMPOO BY TONI

SPAGHETTI SAUCE with MEAT BALLS

2 pounds ground beef
1 cup bread crumbs
1 tsp. salt
½ tsp. French's Oregano
¼ tsp. French's Black Pepper
⅛ tsp. French's Garlic Powder
1 egg, beaten
2 tbs. shortening, melted
5 cups canned tomatoes
2 6-ounce cans tomato paste
1 tsp. salt
1 tsp. sugar
¼ tsp. French's Oregano
½ tsp. French's Crushed Red Pepper
2 tsp. French's Onion Powder
2 tbs. French's Pepper Flakes
¼ cup French's Parsley Flakes

Mix together first 7 ingredients. Shape into balls. Brown in shortening. Add rest of ingredients; simmer 2 hours; remove cover last hour. Serve with spaghetti and Parmesan cheese. Yield: 8 servings.

French's Flakes put a "vegetable garden" on your pantry shelf!

FRENCH'S SEASONINGS do something wonderful for Spaghetti Sauce!

FREE! NEW RECIPE LEAFLET "Quick 'n Easy Flavoring Tricks!"
The R. T. French Co.
9060 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.
*Name*_____
*Address*_____
*City*_____

- Now—French's brings you pure vegetable Flakes . . . only the water is removed.
- No peeling, slicing, chopping! Just spoon into soups, stews, omelettes.
- French's Onion Flakes, Parsley Flakes, Celery Flakes, Sweet Pepper Flakes—and Mint Flakes, too.

FRENCH'S SPICES AND EXTRACTS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 80

He drew her tight against him and they stood silent on the pier, watching the quiet Thames flow by.

On the twenty-first of June, the old king died. He was in the sixty-fifth year of his life and the fifty-first of his reign, and most of his subjects felt that both had lasted too long. The king died alone, except for a friar. His sons and little Richard, now the King of England, did not reach Sheen for some hours.

England mourned courteously. Edward's funeral procession and burial were conducted with doleful pomp. But everywhere eyes turned with hope to the fair boy who would be crowned on the sixteenth of July.

On the Feast of Saint Swithin, July fifteenth, Richard's procession from the Tower through the City surpassed in magnificence any civic celebration ever seen.

KATHERINE viewed the procession from a tier of wooden benches which had been erected for the accommodation of privileged ladies. The Princess Joan sat on a dais, flanked by two of her sisters-in-law, Isabella of Castile, and Eleanor de Bohun, the great heiress, Thomas of Woodstock's bride. Eleanor fussed so loudly over some matter of precedence that Katherine could hear her acid complaints from where she sat at some distance from the royal ladies, with Philippa, Elizabeth and her own Blanchette. The Swynford children had been brought down from Kenilworth for this extraordinary occasion.

The lesser earls and barons had passed by and Richard's uncles, led by the duke, appeared at the curve by Chepe Cross. In cream velvet trimmed with silver and riding a snow-white horse, John gleamed as immaculate as an archangel. His brothers, the pale Edmund and swarthy Thomas, seemed to Katherine a couple of nondescript rustics by comparison.

She had no opportunity to admire John as she wished, for as the little king approached in a blare of heralds' trumpets and the rattle of drums, the ladies surged to their feet amidst cheers of "Long live Richard!"

The ten-year-old Richard was pink and white and delicate as an apple blossom. His shoulders seemed too slight for the vast white and brilliant-studded mantle they had draped on him, albeit he sat his horse sturdily.

"By corpus, he looks like a maid," cried the irrepressible Elizabeth. "I trust he'll cease to be such a mollycoddle, now he's king!" She had scant use for Richard, who was poor at games.

"Tomorrow he will be God's anointed," said Philippa severely. "You must not speak like that of the king's Grace."

Elizabeth subsided, faintly awed.

The two Hollands came cantering up at the tail of the procession. These two young men were the Princess Joan's sons by her first husband and, beloved as Joan was, no one felt that they did her much credit, except apparently Elizabeth, who, pointing at the younger Holland, said, "There's a comely-looking man! 'Tis Jock Holland. He picked up my glove when I dropped it t'other day at Westminster. Nan Quilter," she added, "says he has more paramours than any other man in London."

"Elizabeth, you're disgusting!" cried Philippa. "Must she forever tattle servants' gossip, Lady Katherine? You must find some way to refine her tastes."

Before Katherine could speak, Elizabeth tossed her dark curls and said, "In truth, 'tis not my lady here should chide me that I speak of paramours."

Katherine felt herself go crimson and heard a little gasp from Blanchette.

"This is not the moment to discuss your rudeness, Elizabeth," Katherine said, mastering her voice with difficulty, "but I must remind you that whatever your opinions may be, your father's Grace has put you in my charge."

Philippa shook her head and said gently, "I ask pardon for my sister." Her pale eyes rested on Katherine with sorrowful affection.

"God's blood, what a fuss about nought!" cried Elizabeth. "I meant nothing." She looked up through her lashes at Katherine. "'Tis too joyous a day for long faces," she said coaxingly. "Oh, my dear lady— mayn't we buy some of those comfits beth's giddy eye had caught sight o vender.

Katherine silently drew some si her purse and gave it to the page, w after the vender. Elizabeth had beer certainly, yet bitter it was for Ka realize that she could hardly be pu stating a simple truth.

But what of Blanchette? Could know the meaning of "paramour" she gasped only because she saw tha way Elizabeth was attacking her mo

Even the duke's influence was not to procure for Katherine a good vi actual coronation ceremonies in the A pregnancy was not yet obvious. bu standing or kneeling were an ordea would have begged off from attendi that the duke wished her to be t wanted her to share with him, no m imperfectly, in this tremendously occasion.

But there was another reason b condition which had made her relu a gilt-and-velvet throne as splend Princess Joan's sat the Duchess of L holding, by right of her claim to the of Castile, a small lion-head scepter.

The duchess had arrived at the S night. In her coronation robes, a jeweled crimson and ermine, the du a handsome woman. She seemed im a dark slender majesty that domi other royal wives, even the princess peared to be an enormous mounc winkle blue surmounted by an orang hair.

Katherine's eyes filled, the peopl her wept as the glorious singing min the exultant organ and the Abbey w with beauty of sound, enclosed by t of stone.

She could see very little of what tc but in the suddenly tense, quiet ch heard a quavering boy's voice r coronation oath and when the a turned to the people and asked if th have and hold Prince Richard for t she cried joyously with the thousa voices, "Aye, we will have him!" spine tingled.

The ceremony progressed: the Ven the Litany, the Collects. Then the anointed with the holy oil and investe the ceremonial robes and the regali he was crowned and installed upon h The archbishop commenced the ment Mass, and the first of all Richa jects, the Duke of Lancaster, knelt b child to do him homage.

Richard's reign started with bright Only the most superstitious tho omened two small occurrences.

THE little boy had gone very pale Mass and homage were at last ove walked down the steps and the tra quit the Abbey. He swayed gidd stepped into the North Porch. His Sir Simon Burley, swooped the child arms and ran with him toward the h Richard still must endure the banqu Burley lifted him, one of the king's consecrated slippers flew off and n been seized by some knave in the crowd, for it was never seen again.

And at the banquet in Westmin the child complained that his he dreadfully from the weight of the cr Cousin Henry sat opposite him in hi place, since the duke and other lc riding their horses up and down t Hall, keeping order.

"Feel the thing, Henry," said pushing at his crown. "'Tis heavie iron helm."

Henry curiously reached across t to try the crown's weight, but the March intervened and snatched th from Richard. "I will hold it for you said the earl, "so that you may eat fort."

Henry shrugged and returned to peacock, of which he was very fond. a frightfully stately banquet, no dog table, and nobody to talk to but was half asleep.

y-hung gallery at the far end of l, the Princess Joan ate with the nd a few selected peeresses. She n up making conversation with duchess, who responded in llables.
erefore thunderstruck when the ing her huge black eyes, said Sweenford—es vero que zat she
in?"
her experience, did not know his, and her instinct was to pro-
e. She answered, "Why, I know it, duchess." Though she did.
ave the princess a shrewd stare er thick white lids. Beneath the her thin shoulders sketched a not inquietarme about hees . . .
he said, "excepto ——" She ously searching for words. She idly, "La Sweenford she make He forget Castile!" good thing, too, thought the began to get the drift of this as Costanza's dark glance moved down the hall and rested on Richard's little golden head. Joan had no intention of using her influence to take up the cudgels for Castile.

Costanza understood enough to realize that here was not the ally she had hoped for; a curious blankness like a mist obscured her brilliant eyes.

Poor lady, thought Joan. She was not introspective or given to moral judgments. But it did occur to her that, whether Costanza really minded or not, she was being increasingly wronged by this flagrant affair of John's with Katherine. Spurred by her ever-alert watchfulness for Richard's safety, she viewed John's liaison with sudden alarm. It would be wiser for him to be more discreet in regard to Lady Swynford. Not cast her off, of course. He could send her to one of his northern castles. There people would forget her and he could visit her in secret.

Joan decided to take up this matter tactfully in a day or so, and she had no doubt that John would see the wisdom of her advice.

(To be Continued)

TELL ME DOCTOR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 31

pot sis which is too complicated to to plain to anyone without a medigrou d.
us l ve the mechanics of the process, side what happens to these wandering nich are usually deposited within a ativ limited area involving the innerive organs, although some may fa as the navel. They come to rest y co tinue to exist amid the ovaries, ner which hold the uterus in posid th region of the rectum."
the cells are so small. Why should use trouble?" for that these act ated every by e ovarian es ven in their ha tat. They is c aracteristic en ey wander
d. at is what e t uble. They om ttached to iss , in which d to come em-d every th acquire al ivity. This pa . It also adl ions, and ly ay lead to nat n."
sai hat I have is ne reason lie your diffis b n develop-vea The early f e ometriosis era small, al-eve then they abl of causing ct are all su ct to this om iosis is fairly common. It genqu s a number of years to bring ea ain and disability, and is usually v nen above the age of thirty, al-oc ionally in women as young as th been the cause of my not being pec ne pregnant?"

pr able. Sterility is the usual story in ses
t i ne treatment I must have?"
nec sarily operative," the doctor told ldr I have X ray or radium instead?"

d.
ou not be efficient. In the first place,
b f no use unless used in sufficient c pletely to destroy the ovarian
, v ch we shall hope to avoid. In the second place, those adhesions require surgery. I found only one lesion of notable size, and it may be possible to remove that and the few smaller ones without going further. I know you want children. You are not yet thirty, and any competent surgeon would be conservative in dealing with such a case, even though it might mean another operation later. Should the involvement prove to be a great deal more extensive than my examination suggests, radical surgery could be indicated. It would be necessary in order to rid you of a condition that could become crippling."

"If my trouble should prove to be so extensive, Doctor, could you promise a cure by radical surgery?"

"My dear young lady, I would not promise a cure of *any*thing. In medicine and surgery there is nothing which can be promised. I will say, however, that I could come as near promising a cure as I could with almost any condition you might name. The continued development of endometriosis depends upon the presence of ovarian secretion. When the organs which produce this secretion are rendered inactive, the cause is eliminated and the lesions atrophy. This holds good whether the menopause is reached normally or surgically."

"And you are sure that endometriosis is what I am suffering from?"

"As nearly certain as I can be without a surgical examination. I know that you have a fixed uterus and a cyst. These in themselves require surgery if you are to have relief. What I would like is for you to leave the scope of the procedure to me to decide at the time of operation. I promise that I will exercise my utmost skill and intelligence to retain the procreative ability for you. If you feel that you can confide in me to this extent, I suggest that we proceed as soon as arrangements can be made. If you feel that you cannot, I think that you should look further for some surgeon in whom you can thus confide. Whatever you do, please do not neglect or postpone some action."

"I shall not, and I want you to go ahead."

"Very well. I think you are acting rightly."

Another article in this series by Doctor Safford will appear next month.

MODERN MIRACLE

Columbus, Nebraska

Dear Editor: After learning that Tell Me Doctor would feature the problem of being *un*sterilized, I could scarcely wait. After my second Caesarean section in 1944, my tubes were not only tied but a piece was removed from each. I had been told it would be a definite risk to have any more family. Now the mother of a daughter and a son, what more could I want?

The next five years were indeed years of "regret and remorse," as Doctor Safford states. My husband and I became convinced, through great faith and much prayer, that an attempt should be made to undo the previous "mutilation." With only my description of what had been done, a skilful small-town family doctor consented to operate, providing he would not be held responsible for success, which he doubted. The delicate surgery, by which the tubes were reinserted in new locations, took place. The joy of our doctor was second only to our own happiness when, eleven months later, an eight-pound girl was born—a modern-day miracle.

(Name withheld by request)

HOT DOG TOASTIES

8 frankfurters
8 slices sandwich bread Melted butter
French's Prepared Mustard
Toothpicks

Pour boiling water over franks, let stand 8 minutes. Spread bread with butter and mustard. Place frank cornerwise on bread, fasten opposite corners together with toothpicks. Brush with melted butter, broil until toast is golden brown. Serve with French fried onion rings.

Franks and French's are a natural summer and winter

FRENCH'S MUSTARD
does something wonderful for Hot Dogs!

- French's pure yellow Mustard blends better because it's creamier . . . smoother.
- French's rich mustard goodness does not fade out in cooking.
- Get a jar tomorrow and see what a wonderful flavor difference French's makes!

FREE! NEW RECIPE LEAFLET "10 Ways to Serve Hot Dogs!"
The R. T. French Co.
1984 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.

*Name*_____
*Address*_____
*City*_____ *State*_____

"When I Entertain"

Mrs. Vincent Villard

tells her philosophy of entertaining

to Nancy Crawford

The beef goulash here is filling (no need for a first course), the noodles buttered and dusted with paprika. "Salad mimosa" is topped with crumbled egg yolk for a mimosa-blossom look.

STUART

Mrs. Vincent Villard is an ingenious hostess who combines volunteer work for New York's Yorkville Youth Council and the English-Speaking Union with a busy homemaker's life. A loving cook, she also has a loving hand with flowers; here, arranges tiny rosebuds and daisies in an antique two-tiered glass centerpiece.

"IT always seems that my parties begin at least one whole day beforehand, because that's when I begin cooking, and getting into a party spirit. 'Do things ahead' is my formula, as it should be for anyone who wants to be able to concentrate her attention on her guests, and not on the casserole in the oven."

Katharine Villard—Mrs. Vincent Villard, of New York City—is a charming, quietly humorous person who feels that the most important qualities in successful party giving are friendliness, a love of good food, an attractive, comfortable home which seems to invite company, and a sincere desire that guests have a good time. "Dinner parties are the thing in our family; we like to have friends in and spend the whole evening with them." The Villards' dining room is large, with the dining table in the center, and three smaller tables placed at intervals around the walls. "Our dining table seats fourteen. Recently, at a party for fourteen to introduce a distinguished young painter friend visiting from Europe, I worked out what I call the three-table buffet system. The dining table is completely set up with linens, silver, ice water in the

CONTINUED ON PAGE 86

For a buffet for fourteen, Mrs. Villard serves a delicious chicken-and-sausage casserole, saffron rice with crumbled chicken livers, a salad of tomatoes and greens tossed with curry French dressing.

Why be Silver Shy?

IF YOU don't have enough good, matching silverware to serve a complete dinner... you're silver-shy!

And it's time you found out how easy and wonderful it is to own a complete set of 1847 Rogers Bros. It's America's finest silverplate... made to last a proud lifetime.

You know there are many grades of silverplate. Many are even marked "Rogers." But only 1847 Rogers Bros. brings you such rich detail of design... plus the heavy, over-all plate of pure silver... and the famous IS quality mark of The International Silver Company.

1847 Rogers Bros. forks and spoons are reinforced with extra silver at the point of extra wear. Knives have seamless hollow handles that cannot split or leak.

You can own a complete, 52-piece service for 8 in this finest silverplate for as little as $79.75, including chest. No Federal tax. Available on terms as low as $1 down.

Now honestly, is there any excuse for you to be silver-shy another day?

A product of The International Silver Company

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 84

goblets. On each of the three small tables around the room, I placed one course of the meal. One table held the first course: minced oysters in individual scalloped silver shells, all on an electric warmer to keep hot, with the plates to go under them. On the second small buffet went dinner plates, a chicken-and-sausage casserole served in the dish it was baked in, a bowl of saffron rice, and a mixed green salad tossed with French dressing and a dash of curry powder. On the third table went dessert and coffee—a casserole of crème brûlée, nesting in cracked ice on a large platter, the coffee keeping hot in an electric pot—with dessert plates and coffee cups. In this way, the meal is completely set up ahead of time. I didn't have to make one trip back to the kitchen, once dinner had started. After each course, guests take empty plates back to the buffet table, to be removed by a helper, and go on to the next.

"For the centerpiece of the dinner table, I used a shallow crystal bowl filled with some pretty shells I picked up on the beach in South Carolina, and some lovely pieces of rose quartz, with light green leaves arranged in with them here and there. (Often, for parties, I use the same shallow bowl, float two camellia blossoms in it, surrounded by a few of the leaves. Three full-blown roses with the stems cut off, or gladiolus blossoms removed from the stalks, float prettily too.)"

With three children—a son and a daughter in college, and another daughter of school age—Mrs. Villard still finds time to keep up her active work in the English-Speaking Union: she puts up overnight a steady parade of visitors from England (recently, it's included students and part of a visiting cricket team), giving them an opportunity to get to know an American family. "We have plenty of room," she says. "Often, when I get up in the morning, I've lost track of how many faces I'll see at breakfast—it could be as many as eigh They all make their own breakfasts, their own dishes, and it works smoothly." Mrs. Villard also devotes work for the Yorkville Youth Counc operates five youth centers in crowd Manhattan.

"I'm helping them compile a c which will eventually be published, going to the council. Essentially, thou says, "I am a 'private person,' in home, family and friends take up mo time. We give a small dinner party o erage of once a week. Recently, for a d eight friends, I pushed the dining ta against one end of the room, to be buffet, and pulled two of the small si out to the center of the room. I set th tables up for dining, to seat four ea pastel green cloths and silver. For littl pieces on each table, I used a cryst plate, arranged with pieces of old sil fruit that belonged to my mother, a real tangerines and plums. Guests themselves at the buffet. The main beef goulash—simple, and filling, wit serole of buttered noodles. For salad salad mimosa, which is a party fav mine because it's so pretty—crisp greens, tossed with slightly garlicky dressing, with bright yellow crumbled sprinkled liberally over the top, like blossoms. Dessert for this meal was raspberry-and-pineapple compote (a kirsch is good, if you like the flavor), s a shallow silver vacuum ice bucket. good trick, I've found, as it keep sherbets and ice creams icy cold. Th running to the refrigerator to get desse the ice compartment at the last minu can go on the buffet table at the same the rest of the food.

"To decorate the buffet table pushe the wall, I like to arrange a small b laurel leaves in a low bowl, and wire red wax flowers here and there along th The effect is very pretty, and the wax may be used again and again. Or anoth I will take three bunches of grapes, or one red and one black, and arrange th short branches of eucalyptus leaves. very look of the grapes and leaves to wonderful.

"Hors d'oeuvres? Frankly, I don't b going to much trouble. They should good—but easy. If we are having just six for dinner, I serve hot hors d'oe little squares of pastry with a piece of cheese rolled up inside, and baked til and crisp. Or I work cooked bacon into pastry, and bake rounds of this with grated Parmesan cheese, on a sheet. If there are more than six, t d'oeuvres are always cold. For instanc set up with rounds of miniature rye bowl of sour cream and a bowl of re napkins, and bread-and-butter knives spread their own. Sometimes I make sautéing thin pieces of calves' liver till thoroughly, chopping them finely wit minced onion and enough cream to spread easily. This is good on sm bread rounds too. And all our friends love raw cauliflowerets, celery an strips with a dunking sauce made with mayonnaise, two tablespoons of hors and a tablespoon of prepared mustar

Now we'll have the recipes for M lard's party menus:

MINCED OYSTERS

Drain and chop 2 quarts oysters. In skillet melt 2 tablespoons butter garine. Add the oysters and ½ cu chopped onion. Season with 3 teaspo ¼ teaspoon pepper, dash cayenne, spoon nutmeg, 4 tablespoons lemon tablespoons Worcestershire sauce an spoons thyme. Cook slowly, stirring twice, until oysters begin to curl, minutes. Add 2 cups soft bread crum eggs, slightly beaten. Remove from h well, and spoon into individual rame a saucepan, melt ½ cup butter or ma Add 3 cups soft bread crumbs and he ing crumbs, until lightly browne ramekins with browned crumbs and

tastier coffee!

—the modern coffee made especially to give you consistently better flavor than ground coffee!

New Nescafé is actually an improvement over ground coffee . . . tastier, cup after cup! Like home-made coffee, it's percolated. But Nescafé's scientific controls bring out the consistently fine flavor no home-brewed coffee can match. Then an exclusive jet process transforms this perfect coffee into gems of Nescafé. Just add water, you have delicious coffee! Nescafé costs far less than ground coffee, too. Start today to enjoy this modern coffee . . . tastier new Nescafé!

All Coffee—nothing but Coffee!

new Nescafé®

© 1954 The Nestlé Company, Inc.

…ven, 350° F., 25 minutes, or until …14.

…E-AND-SAUSAGE CASSEROLE

…e easiest with chicken bought in …whole chickens cut into serving …st as nice. I like to allow about 2 …pieces of chicken per person, so …d need 28 parts, breasts, thighs …ust the chicken pieces in a mix…up flour, 4 teaspoons salt and ¼ …pper. Brown well in skillet con…blespoons melted butter or mar…6 tablespoons salad oil. Trans…to a 6-quart casserole. To juices …d ½ cup flour, and mix. Add grad…s canned chicken broth, stirring …h. Add a good pinch of tarragon, … crushed, and 4 cloves garlic,

…hicken in casserole add about …e onions. Add two 7-ounce cans …ocktail sausages. If you want …he sausages, sauté them in the …ppings before making the gravy. … over chicken, onions and sau…er, and bake in moderate oven, … 1 hour. At the end of this time, …l mushrooms, sliced, and bake 20 …ger, or until chicken and vege…ender. Serves 14.

SAFFRON RICE …TH CHOPPED LIVER

… a saucepan 2 cups raw rice, 4 …, ¼ teaspoon saffron, 6 table…er or margarine, 2 teaspoons salt …poon pepper. Cover and bring to … turn heat low and simmer for …inutes, without stirring, or until … liquid is absorbed. Meanwhile, …d chicken livers in 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Toss rice lightly with ⅔ cup grated Parmesan cheese and the sautéed chicken livers. Serves 14.

CRÈME BRÛLÉE

Scald 1 quart heavy cream in top of double boiler. While it is heating, beat 12 egg yolks until they are very light and foamy. Add to them ½ teaspoon salt and ½ cup granulated sugar and beat again until sugar is dissolved. Pour the hot cream slowly over the eggs and stir well. Return the mixture to the double boiler. Continue to cook over hot water, stirring constantly, until the mixture coats the spoon. Then remove from the heat, add 2 teaspoons vanilla and pour the custard into a shallow heatproof baking dish. If you do not have a large shallow baking dish, use two. Chill, uncovered, in the refrigerator for 5 to 6 hours or overnight.

About 15 minutes before serving, sprinkle the top of the crème with 2 cups light brown sugar. Place under broiler about 6″ from the heat. Broil until the sugar melts. Watch it to see that it doesn't burn. The job should be done quickly so that the crème remains cold. After broiling, set it in refrigerator again until crust hardens. Serve with fresh sliced peaches. Serves 14.

BEEF GOULASH

Dust 4 pounds beef chuck cut into 1″ cubes with ½ cup flour, 1 tablespoon salt and ½ teaspoon pepper. Brown the meat in ½ cup butter or margarine in a large saucepan (5 quart). Sprinkle 3 tablespoons paprika over the meat as it browns. Add 5 cups sliced onions, ½ teaspoon garlic salt, ¼ teaspoon meat paste and 2 cups water. Cover and simmer until tender—about 2 hours. Just before serving, stir in 4 tablespoons thick commercial sour cream. Serves 8.

GERTRUDE LAWRENCE AS MRS. A

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 41

…er distinctive handwriting propped …se of holly in the hall. It read:

…ot-water bottle in your bed.
…n't remove green spread as room will …tonight when you open the window. …on stove. Remove glass top from …u will find milk in silver flask inside. …go out early to photographer. Come … I am awake before you leave. Bless

MRS. A

…raph of her in a leather case to be …n inside pocket was on my bureau …e's Day with …:

…se you have an … they will know …an you are. Bye, … Thanks for the …int 'arf a bit of

To live with women may impair a man's usefulness. To live without them, on the other hand, is bound to result in his being of no use at all.

—MARMADUKE DIXEY

…mmunications, … of her letters, …ark of special … heart pierced …rrow, followed …re. Gertrude was never one to do …alves.

…s to friends and to me were only … demonstrative in tone than her …ther, to whom the sight of a tele…early as ominous as a crape on a … became accustomed to communi… Western Union beginning "DAR…ER MARY." I do not think that it …ed to Gertrude that the messages … and read by a number of strangers … reached the person to whom she …hem. She never forgot a holiday, a … an intimate anniversary of any …ing the anniversary of our making … first falling out at Northfield, and …ly the dates of all our other recon…fter major quarrels. She felt that …se merited a special greeting and …ft.

…likely ever to forget the face of the … saluted—ironically, I suspected a …er—and handed me a telegram one February morning when I was at my desk at 90 Church Street.

No Navy wife was more acutely aware of the war than Gertrude. But for all that, she was hardly the girl to let February fourteenth get by without wigwagging in my direction. What she did not realize was that all wire and radio communication with a naval headquarters, whether personal or official, is handled by a central communications office. Except for reasons of security, the message is delivered on an open-faced office form. Thus on this morning I received this message:

AHOY THERE SAILOR ON THIS DAY MANY VOWS MAY COME YOUR WAY BUT SHOULD YOU TO OTHERS STOOP I STILL WOULD LOVE YOU CAUSE YOU'RE MY OLD POOP. REMEMBER ME I'M THAT GAL YOU MARRIED. MRS. A.

And, in the appropriate place along the margin, the telegram was littered with scribbled initials—and not a few exclamation points. My valentine had been cleared through all the proper channels.

For some time I was referred to on occasions as "Lieutenant Poop."

With the United States' entry into the war, Gertrude increased her activities to include a course in first aid, regular attendance at the Red Cross workroom several times each week, and frequent appearances at the Stage Door Canteen operated by the American Theatre Wing of which she was a founder. At the first call for volunteers for civil defense, she signed up as air-raid warden and took the course, being tremendously proud of her official helmet and badge.

She kept up her work for and generous gifts to Allied War Relief. Parcels of necessities and little luxuries in the way of sweets, tea and clothing went regularly to old friends and former retainers in beleaguered England. Later, when I was sent to England on duty, she gave me a list of "people I love" to look

Betty Crocker
OF GENERAL MILLS

"Hello, Homefolks— Have you heard the news? There's a new mix on the market—our Betty Crocker Brownie Mix. And it's just what your letters ordered—the easiest, quickest way to make the chewiest, fudgiest, good-eatingest brownies you ever tasted!

You can make 'em chewy—or you can make them soft and tender, like cake. But whatever you do, make plenty.

Got a scout troop? Or a Sunday School class? Or a young daughter just learning to cook? Turn them loose on brownies. You get perfect brownies every time with our Betty Crocker Brownie Mix—36 fudgy brownies to the package.

Do buy your first box today!"

Betty Crocker

FILL UP THE COOKY JAR! EACH BOX MAKES 36 BIG FUDGY BROWNIES!

up "and see if they need anything." The list was an indication of Gertrude's wide friendships and total lack of snobbishness. It included teashop waitresses who were among her devoted fans; a marchioness, a celebrated theatrical producer, a stage-doorman, two ultrasmart Mayfair hostesses and her stepfather—Dad, as she called him.

She never felt less than kindly toward Dad. In one respect, she and Dad were alike: both refused to make a poor mouth no matter how bitter the provocation might be. For years she had supported him. Now he was old, frail and lonely. She was tormented by thoughts of his being bombed out; perhaps maimed, pinned under fallen beams in some cellar in which he might have sought refuge. But Dad survived the blitz and the buzz bombs. He died in his sleep from natural causes about one month before V-E Day.

In June, Gertrude's play closed its New York run. She was free until autumn when the company was to start on "that familiar three-thousand-mile trek." Leaving me in New York, she went up to the Cape to supervise the last touches to The Berries, which was now ready for occupancy. Whenever I could snatch forty-eight hours' leave I traveled to Dennis to be with her. Meanwhile she and Helen Mahoney, with a handy man, had their hands full of exactly the sort of work Gertrude reveled in.

How she loved a house, and especially setting one in order! Her flair for this sort of thing was amazing, considering the other facets of her temperament. Give her a room to clean and she would roll up her sleeves, tie up her head in a kerchief and get to work with pails of water, scrubbing brush, rags and polish, singing gaily as she scoured and shone everything in sight. She could clean a room quicker and more thoroughly than any three servants.

Watching Gertrude attack a job about the house—and in the course of time she tackled nearly everything from papering a room to shingling a roof—I was often reminded of her boast, made soon after our first meeting, when she spread out her strong capable hands and said they would earn a living for her, if her acting did not. It was part of her nature to loathe incompetence, ineffectuality, dilettantism in anything. She never undertook a task, however humble, that she did not give it her undivided attention and try to do it expertly. She was never less than a professional.

Early in the war she joined a home-repairs class given by the Women's Volunteer Services. Thereafter, no portion of the house's anatomy was safe from her. She could, and did, splice electric wires, take apart sockets, putty a window sash and even straddle a gable of the roof to clean out a gutter. I accused her of clogging up the kitchen sink in order to display her plumbing skill to Helen Mahoney and me. Her denial was not convincing.

She was most dangerous when she got hold of a brush and a can of paint advertised as "quick dry," but seldom coming up to the pledge. After one or two unfortunate experiences, I learned never to step into any room in the dark. I was likely to find that she had created a happy surprise for me by installing new draperies in the Harvard colors and repainting my long-suffering furniture to match. I never could tell when she would change all the furniture around and forget to inform me until after I had scraped my shins.

She was always thinking up improvements in the way of decoration and comfort. As when she had the black-and-white-tiled floor of my bathroom in the apartment covered wall to wall with red velvet carpet. This brought about a scene, and for several days after the carpet was removed she was exceedingly haughty. She made several remarks about the disadvantages of being married to a man without a taste for beauty and luxury.

SHE had a poor idea of my usefulness about the house and often shook her head over my clumsiness with tools and refusal to improve myself in that direction. In consequence she always insisted that I did not, and could not, value the work she and our various helpers did around The Berries. "Richard is simply not a homemaker," she complained in a letter to David Holtzmann. "Like most men, he thinks the flowers grow because God planted them. He thinks the house is clean because it's in the country and not in the dirty city. He thinks things get done at The Berries because we have ladders and paints and tools, and the pixies do the jobs in the night."

Needless to say, she enjoyed herself immensely. Perhaps she felt a little ashamed because she was having so much fun while I was serving my country in the stifling city, because she never failed to tell me in the course of our daily telephone calls, "Darling, I miss you calling Gertrude! all over the place."

The new house was not her only concern that summer. Before she left town we held a consultation in connection with the Playhouse. My Navy duties would make it impossible for me to manage it. I regretted giving it up, but I anticipated that, in any case, it would prove to be one of the casualties of the war. I had advised the trustees against operating the theater. They, however, felt that there would be a great demand for entertainment during the war, and kept it going through the summer of 1942, at a loss.

The Playhouse remained dark the next summer. During the spring of 1944 when I was in Southampton, concerned only with my duties in preparation for D day, I received a cable warning me that the Playhouse trustees could no longer hold the theater for me [illegible] about to lease it to someone else.

Nothing was further from my mi[illegible] time than a summer theater. My ar[illegible] curt: "Please don't bother me. And [illegible] trude to have nothing to do with it.

Gertrude, however, was unwilling[illegible] by and watch the Playhouse that I [illegible] up fall into other hands while I was [illegible] overseas. Threatening to pawn her [illegible] necessary, she arranged with her l[illegible] allow her to put up the money to [illegible] husband's business until his return [illegible] war.

I received the news that my instruc[illegible] been disregarded with mingled em[illegible] was proud of Gertrude's loyalty to [illegible] little overawed at her technique [illegible] what she wanted to do in the face [illegible] position.

THAT summer at Dennis, the Gertr[illegible] rence Branch of the American Thea[illegible] was organized, dedicated to the ente[illegible] of men in the coast defenses and vari[illegible] ing camps on the Cape.

She became Doctor Harriet's eager[illegible] lieutenant in all that woman's patric[illegible] prises, a warm, friendly relations[illegible] lasted through the war. Every week t[illegible] bazaars, lawn parties, clambakes, co[illegible] rallies and auctions to raise funds. It [illegible] auctions that Gertrude outshone he[illegible] merely as a bidder-in, but as auctio[illegible] always returned from these jaunts wit[illegible] of purchases which no one else w[illegible] money for. The Berries broke out in[illegible] wooden windmills, sailor weathe[illegible] braided rugs, ships in bottles, han[illegible] shells and clamshell pincushions. Bu[illegible] pointed out when I remonstrated, [illegible] cause."

For all Gertrude's numerous act[illegible] behalf of American war causes, she [illegible] stanchly loyal to England. She wa[illegible] ingly touchy over any criticism of h[illegible] land, either open or implied. She f[illegible] took violent exception to some com[illegible] read in the papers and had to be r[illegible] from dashing off a letter of explosi[illegible] to the editor. A guest who made a no[illegible] fied remark about the British part[illegible] Brussels sprouts was confronted by G[illegible] stony gaze, and the dictum, "I like[illegible] sprouts."

"But they smell."

"I like the smell of Brussels sprou[illegible] trude contended stanchly.

"How can you? They smell like c[illegible] protested the visitor.

"I love the smell of cabbage."

She might have been extolling the [illegible] of Devon violets.

At the Playhouse, Bunny was a[illegible] trude's adoring Girl Friday. My yo[illegible] in's passion for the stage showed n[illegible] abating. She was back among the ap[illegible] but minus Bounder. To her intense d[illegible] had been made prop girl, a job whi[illegible] sitated driving around to the houses [illegible] ous and long-suffering friends and p[illegible] furniture out from under them to [illegible] stage. When she was asked to doubl[illegible] sound effects during performances sh[illegible] talking gravely about her career. M[illegible] came alarmed. But her fears were gr[illegible] Bunny was no more immune to wa[illegible] mance than most of her generation.

She dashed into The Berries early [illegible] ing waving a telegram and shouting f[illegible] in Gee." She faced the dilemma of h[illegible] young lieutenant in a Midwestern [illegible] camp had been ordered to repor[illegible] Francisco for embarkation to the S[illegible] cific. Unless Bunny could manage to [illegible] in Chicago, where he expected to sp[illegible] days, the chances were that the Ja[illegible] get him before she could stake a clain[illegible]

"Oh, Cousin Gee," she wailed, [illegible] do?"

Gertrude was already thumbing [illegible] phone directory for the number of th[illegible] station.

"Do?" she demanded. "Go, of cou[illegible] we'll see if we can get you a sleepe[illegible] cago. Then we'll call your mother [illegible] Hill and ask her permission."

A TRULY AMAZING OFFER!

2 PAIRS

DUPONT FIRST QUALITY • 60 GAUGE • 15 DENIER HOSE

Nylons

$1.00

REG. $3 VALUE!

PLUS 5 CENTS FOR POSTAGE AND HANDLING

EVERY TIME YOU HAVE SHOES REPAIRED WITH

Famous

CAT'S PAW

Rubber Heels, Soles, or

CAT-TEX

Wonder Soles

IT'S SO SIMPLE!

Just have your repairer attach famous Cat's Paw rubber heels or soles . . . or Cat-Tex scientific wonder soles, and get coupon good for this amazing NYLON HOSIERY OFFER!

SEE YOUR SHOE REPAIRER

ob!" Bunny's voice grew anguished. happen at the Playhouse? There props for next week to get. And telephone bell that has to be rung in the second act tonight."

y on for you," Gertrude said as call to the railroad station.

usin Gee! Would you? Could you?"

," Gertrude said solemnly. Seeing still looked dubious, she added, e to go through the script with me leave, and give me the cues."

ht and for six successive perform- rude took her stand in the wings lls on cue. When Bunny telephoned he had just seen her young man off t Coast and glory, and that they ed, she finished, "We wanted you rst to know, Cousin Gee, because it would never have come off."

's congratulations were cut short anxious inquiry: "How's my job?" for you," Gertrude replied. "We cided, Bunny darling, that nobody ell as you do it."

usin Gee, really?" came ecstatically ire. "Just wait till I tell Bill you

e road from The Berries stretched g—wild, sweet-scented and colorful ch moors. When Gertrude learned turesque but apparently waste land marketable and profitable crop of she was ecstatic and immediately o buy as many acres as possible. year our purchase of nine acres ted. Gertrude immediately joined al co-operative and set about win- r with cranberries. Bunny's pride inging was exceeded by Gertrude's Falmouth Enterprise spoke of her e of your front-porch growers. nes to cranberry picking, the glam- Lawrence wields a mean scoop."

e took out some of the bitterness ard the enemy in fighting the blunt- hoppers and other pests that threat- op. When I went up to the Cape leave I was welcomed by a sun- atched and mosquito-bitten wife, ight resemblance to the "Goddess" inson had called her in his review rice glamour?" I inquired. Which l with: "Glamour is as glamour d."

uniform saved me from being in- her land army along with the two ys, the household staff and all unwarily accepted her hospitality. ne was exempt.

oltzmann's experience was typical. sooner arrived and had not yet unpacked before Gertrude presented her with a scoop and orders to join the bog party. Fanny, a child of the city, demurred: "It's not in my legal retainer."

"It's part of your duty as a citizen to help the war effort," Gertrude retorted. "Come on. The berries are ripening and must be picked."

FANNY obligingly got into the regulation costume and joined the gang, following faithfully behind Gertrude with her wooden scoop. Presently the sight of her distinguished client pausing to scratch various parts of her body, and a pricking on her own ankles and calves, gave her an unpleasant idea. She said, "There's more than cranberries in this bog of yours, Gee. There's poison ivy."

"Of course there is," Gertrude replied.

"Well, doesn't it make you itch?"

Gertrude reached an arm around her bent back and dug viciously. "Of course I itch. But is that any excuse for not doing a job that has to be done?"

"It's excuse enough for me," her lawyer said firmly. "I'm going to find a doctor and get some shots."

Gertrude disdained to argue the point and Fanny left the ranks. When Gertrude returned to the house she found an empty guest room with a note pinned conspicuously to the pillow. It read:

Dear Goddess: Being only mortal, I am leaving your poison-ivy Olympus.

Win the war with cranberries if you must. Personally I'd feel safer in the blitz.

FANNY.

Whenever Gertrude had guests for lunch it was her custom to serve Dubonnet as an apéritif. Mother had gradually accepted this and the serving of cocktails before dinner. When she was with us two glasses filled with tomato juice would be on the tray; one for her, the other for Gertrude, whose courtesy made her choose to drink what mother took. On one of my visits I noticed the absence of tomato juice. All the glasses on the tray were filled with liquid of the true Dubonnet hue. Mother had taken one and was sipping it with every evidence of its being no novelty.

To my interested "How come?" Gertrude informed me, "It's my own invention. Blackberry and cranberry juices mixed. Isn't the color perfect? Mother Mary feels much less conspicuous. Besides liking the flavor better than tomato."

It was not only that she felt less conspicuous, I discovered when she visited us in New York during the winter and Gertrude continued her home brewing. At one Sunday luncheon at which Aunt Alice and Uncle Jim were guests, mother took her glass from the tray with complete nonchalance.

"Why, Mollie!" her sister gasped. "What would Ed Aldrich say if he could see you?"

"Doris, I'm proud of you."

meet Your fashion ideal the STYLE you want in a comfortable
LOW HEEL

SMARTER SHOES FOR NATURAL WALKING

Write for Name of Nearest Dealer NATURAL BRIDGE SHOEMAKERS
Division of Craddock-Terry Shoe Corporation, Lynchburg, Va.

the knit with the fit where you sit panties of Spun-lo

RAYON FABRIC

only about 69¢

These are the famous for comfort undies that g-i-v-e with every motion, fit without binding. Naturally absorbent, never clingy or clammy. They wash, dry quickly; need no ironing. All styles, too!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

new! baby pants of waterproof ® Spun-lo
RAYON FABRIC

Feel it, it's fabric!
Softest for baby!

So soft, light, comfy!
New everyday waterproof panties with a dress-up look! Fabric outside; waterproof inside!
No rubber! No separate lining! Won't acid stain!
Non-allergenic.
Machine washable!

pull-on style, about 79¢

snap-on style, about 98¢

INDUSTRIAL RAYON CORPORATION Cleveland, Ohio
Producers of Continuous Process Rayon Yarns and Tyron Cord for Tires

COMMENDED BY PARENTS

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Mother sipped her apéritif before she replied calmly, "Ed was first and foremost a businessman, Alice. He would have thoroughly approved of supporting a family industry. Didn't he always insist that all of us should wear Hood rubbers and overshoes? As long as Richard and Gertrude raise cranberries for sale, it is my duty to drink cranberry juice. And you and Jim and anyone else may think what you please."

Uncle Jim drew me aside to speak as man to man. "Something has come over your mother," he said. "When I think how severe she was with me when I told her I had been at a dinner where cocktails were served and that I took one and held it—not drinking it, of course—not to cause comment, she wanted to know what had happened to my principles. She actually preached me a sermon on the text 'Abstain from every appearance of evil.' What's become of her principles? It certainly has every appearance of evil. And what's more, it's meant to."

I told Gertrude later that Uncle Jim thought she was leading mother astray. "First it was that crimson silk shawl you gave her and then the black velvet dinner dress. Now it's drinking, or pretending to drink, cocktails. I can imagine Uncle Jim and Aunt Alice asking each other what that actress will do to Mollie next. They probably expect to find she's dyed her hair the next time they come to take her out to Sunday church."

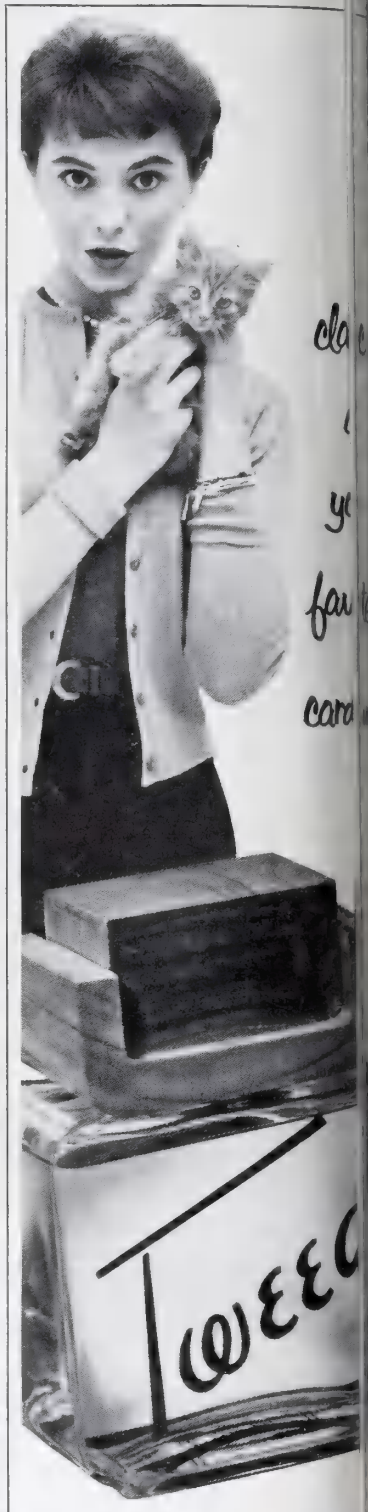
"They are just finding out things about your mother that have been true all the time," Gertrude said. "Who told me that she always loved a bit of bright color but had never dared wear it since she became a widow? She did. That's why I got her the shawl. She doesn't want to drink, but she does want to be a part of our lives. If cranberry juice will make her feel that she is, then I'll drink it to the end of my days. Do you know what else she told me? When Uncle Jim was at Yale, his roommate, George Vincent, invited her to the Junior Prom. The family made quite a to-do about it. No girl of the family had ever done such a thing. They were willing she should go, but she must not let a young man put his arm around her waist and tempt her into the polka. She sat out all the dances because she was afraid to break the family tradition."

"You aren't planning to teach her to jitterbug?" I inquired. "I wouldn't put it past you."

"Swing isn't her style," Gertrude said, and she was not laughing. "But I was thinking, after this war is over, and you open the Playhouse again, and there are lots of young people around, and Dick and David bring their friends, we could have square dancing. She would adore watching it. It would help make up for that beastly Yale prom nearly seventy years ago."

As everyone who has served in the U.S. Navy knows, a lieutenant is very small potatoes. And a lieutenant's wife, when admitted to the company of the wives of full commanders, captains and an admiral, is expected by unwritten protocol to show herself unobtrusive, quietly respectful and as shy of the limelight as an oyster of the sun.

Would Gertrude be able to do this? I wondered. Could she forget Gertrude Lawrence the star and become merely Lieutenant Aldrich's wife, sinking into the background with the wives of my fellow officers whose coat sleeves displayed no more gold braid than my own? My worry proved needless. As a matter of record, she attended several cocktail parties with me without anyone but a few of my close friends such as John Lodge and Tom Dewart, who knew her and were on the lookout for her, being aware she was the star whose singing of "Jennie" was the delight of Broadway.



Eventually, of course, her identity became known, but this was not Gertrude's doing. She had set herself to play the role of little wife and she played it consistently and, I think, with considerable enjoyment. We both realized that the era of incognita was up when we were invited to the admiral's party, an honor above my rank. The Old Man was exceedingly gallant to Gertrude even to the point of adding to his compliments on her acting a commendation of me as an officer.

"Oh, but Admiral," I heard my wife exclaim, in the tone that wooed and won thousands of fans, "Richard doesn't want to spe at a desk job at Ninety Church Str proud to have a husband who lo duty."

She conveyed the idea that I was Nelson champing to lose first an ar life on the bloody quarter-deck. Se in the course of the party I caught t eying me speculatively as if conside ticularly hazardous spot to put me

"What are you trying to do?" I of Gertrude when I got her alone the world's most glamorous widow

She chose to be offended at what my levity and a shocking want of Tweed . . . the one frag above all others . . . to anytime, anywhere

Tweed Perfume from 2.00 to 5
3½ oz. Bouquet Tweed 1.5
prices plus tax

Lenthéric
NEW YORK PARIS LONDON
Cashmere Sweaters by L me spirit, she wrote me from fter V-E Day that the struggle g won, I should pull strings to t to the Pacific, where the heat, and the malaria would be "an erience" and where I would se so many of your friends are been purely coincidence, but r remark to Admiral Andrews, detached from the work I had 0 Church Street to enter upon ard the new destroyer, USS mptly adopted the ship and her Maddox was still in Brooklyn e skipper invited Gertrude to after which she inspected every estroyer from gun turrets to

"All right, you're next." Gessford beckoned him forward to the mike. "Don't be nervous. What's your name? . . . Sennett, did you say? . . . Oh, Sinnott." He led the boy out to the audience. They were met by tumultuous applause and a few unnautical feminine squeals.

The commander's face grew stern. "Give the boy a chance to sing," he pleaded. When the room was quiet, he announced, "Mr. Sinnott here will sing a little song."

The audience reacted to that with inexplicable laughter. Quickly Gertrude made her way to the platform. She took over the mike and announced, "Our next singer needs no introduction, except to the Master of Ceremonies. Commander Gessford, I'd like you to meet—Frank Sinatra!"

Next day, the Maddox put to sea, going into the silence which cloaked ships in those dangerous days. When the silence lasted too long, we began to entertain fears—which unfortunately proved to be justified. One July morning at five A.M. when the Maddox was engaged in the invasion of Sicily, she was caught squarely amidships by a string of bombs. In sixty-five seconds the ship went under; and of the hundreds of men whom Gertrude had helped to entertain a few short weeks before, only four officers and thirty men survived.

Weeks later, Gertrude was still receiving delayed letters from boys who had gone down with the ship, thanking her for the wonderful party and telling her she was the pinup girl of the Maddox, with her photograph on nearly every bulkhead and a "blowup" of her in the wardroom. The fate of "her" ship saddened her more than any one other single event of the war. It had brought the war very close.

Gertrude's war activities did not cease when she went on tour. She had made many coast-to-coast tours, and she had friends in all the major cities en route. Everywhere she was in demand for benefits, bond-selling drives, special broadcasts, launchings and official visits and presentations to airplane plants, arsenals and shipyards. And, of course, at the servicemen's canteens.

"WERE you up in time to hear the broadcast?" she wrote me from San Francisco. "It was for the Red Cross blood bank. I see a possible 10,000 pints or more, plus my own measly one. I gave on Saturday, and I feel wonderful, though at the time I was terrified that I would not be able to fill the bottle. But it came out beautifully, a deep, dark American-beauty rose. . . ."

San Francisco, she reported, was "like an anthill . . . millions of people in steel helmets going on and coming off shifts all the time. . . ." The industry of the shipyards amazed her and commanded her respect. ". . . Just think, they turn them out at Sausalito one every seven days. One launched at 6:30 last night, and the keel for the next one was in the slips at 6:30 this morning. I toured one today which goes out in five more days. Real tankers with the lines of a battleship. . . ."

Perhaps to keep me from feeling neglected, she added a postscript: "They could do with a man like you out here."

She was now 100 per cent Navy.

FOR KATE IN SEPTEMBER

By HELEN S. WHITE

Summer fading on her face, school-bound,
Plaided and brushed, the seashore strap mark hidden,
Her voice still water-washed, she joins unbidden
The leaf and bird parade, the twitter sound
Of all September streets. Lightly she goes
So soon accustomed to the wired sky
I wonder at her readiness, who knows
She left unclaimed wide treasures that her eye Cherished and held, and brought only what hands Could take from beaches, though the infinite sands Promised a golden yield. I watched through air Leaf-scattered, window-framed, in mother's prayer—

May sun-companioned skin protect the bone
And warm her growth for winter faced alone!

new someone in the manage-Waldorf and was able to get the for the evening. Gertrude made e, responsible for the entertain-tent to stop there, she also took all the arrangements—music, tions. Word went around that "a really bang-up affair," and came practically every member x's crew turned up at the Star-what was becoming known as rence's party.
was not misapplied. She and "Doug" Gessford took turns

ang, danced and told stories;
r turns at the mike she danced n from the ship, from the skip-posed for photographs, signed oks and pictures of herself which ed for.
of Gessford's turns as M.C., he m, inconspicuous young man e behind stage, apparently wait-d on to entertain.
ou do, sonny?" the commander sed to sing a couple of songs," n said shyly.

Five days of new freedom

Every day is just like every other day of the month for women who have discovered Meds®—the safer, softer tampon. In Junior, Regular and Super absorbencies.

new deodorant miracle

Revlon's no-fade

deodorant gives you

self-renewing protection

...repeats protection over and over long after ordinary deodorants fade away!

You'd never believe such a gentle deodorant would be so effective—until you try it! Exclusive No-Fade formula checks odor and perspiration instantly...then repeats that protection, over and over throughout the day. That means you stay fresh, long after ordinary deodorants have faded away! No more underarm irritation either...thanks to Revlon's own skin-softening ingredient Lanolite that treats your underarms gently as a face cream. $1.10*

Revlon's new

Aquamarine Lotion Deodorant

only anti-perspirant with Lanolite...gentle as a face cream

*PLUS TAX

"I must fly, Angel, because I am lunching with Admiral and Mrs. Nimitz. I've been asked to christen a ship next Tuesday . . . the first time a British actress has had such a privilege. Aren't you thrilled? Now I'm becoming a real sailor's wife."

I was thrilled. But I wished I could have felt sure that she had not blithely advised Admiral Nimitz that he needed me to help him do his job.

On this tour she began the custom which she continued of sending my mother an appropriate gift from every city she played in. The gifts were always choice and chosen with a sensitive feeling for mother's tastes—the red shawl, a fichu of old Honiton lace purchased at a War Relief sale in Ottawa, a book of memoirs, "which I thought would make gentle reading for you," a piece of Sandwich glass for mother's collection, a water color, a first edition of one of the poets she admired and read.

What these remembrances meant to mother was revealed by the care with which she kept them all. Her replies, most of them written during the years I was in service abroad, and all of them meticulously preserved by Gertrude, are full of appreciation: "Always I thank you for something lovely," mother wrote a few days after Christmas that year. "Do you realize that all my pretty gifts come from you?"

Gertrude had tried to persuade her to come to New York and spend the holidays with her, but mother gently refused: "Not until Richard returns." She wrote wistfully of Dick and David, who were in Virginia: "I wonder if I will ever see them again. I don't see how ——"

The correspondence and my absence revealed the two Mrs. Aldriches to each other. Mother wrote:

My dear Gertrude: I feel an urge to write to you this morning before I go to the post office. Do you think I shall get a letter from Richard? I always hope so for the time seems so long. I have had two. In the last one he said, "I have a wonderful wife, and she loves me." Isn't that a comfort? It means more than words, too, for we New Englanders are very undemonstrative and find it hard to express our devotion. I am so used to depending on Richard that I feel lost and can't decide many things myself. You must feel the same. Yours with much love,

MARY ALDRICH.

Gertrude's tour in Lady in the Dark ended in July of 1943. She went at once to the Cape, where Helen Mahoney had the house ready for us. I had obtained leave to spend that weekend at Dennis. Both of us were glad that, in this first meeting in several months, we could be by ourselves at The Berries.

Much as we enjoyed our Fifty-Fourth Street apartment—our real home and domicile in New York, where we lived and earned our wherewithal—we had a special sentimental attachment for the white-shingled house on the Cape. "Let us know when you are going up to Dennis," Gertrude would add as a postscript to her letters. "Be sure to write me all about EVERYTHING at home. . . ."

All the religious leaders, however far apart in time and place, and however impossible it was for them to communicate and compare their thoughts, have arrived at the conviction that there is a divine purpose in life. This conviction springs as naturally from a devout mind as an oak tree springs from an acorn. It is a result of the spontaneous flowering of human thought. The seed has an instinct to grow into a plant. And man has an instinct to blossom into faith. . . . He is born, as every religious teacher has observed, with an impulse to make himself useful to his fellow men.

—HENRY THOMAS

Not only was the garden rapidly acquiring a personality but the house—new though it was—already had the look of being lived in by an active and thoroughly extroverted American family. Mackie so far forgot his thirteen years as to caper the minute he was let off his leash on the lawn of The Berries. He ran round in circles, chased butterflies and buried bones in the rosebeds. The canaries expressed their delight in getting out of the city by singing and chirping their heads off.

Our weekend reunion was the first time Gertrude and I had been together on the Cape when there was no Playhouse to engross me. It was closed "for the duration." In the village, cleared now of sight-seers and vacationists, the Yankee face—long, lean, unpertu wry—was in evidence. Several t my two-day stay I caught Gertruc me as if she were seeing me for th

She said, "I'm discovering some are your people; you belong to th to you. You're a piece of New E the characters in O'Neill's plays."

My leave was short. I had Sunday-night train in order to r Church on Monday morning. I l tucked up in bed with her little her, tuned low as she liked to have She always said she felt better for music or a voice close by when sh denly in the dark.

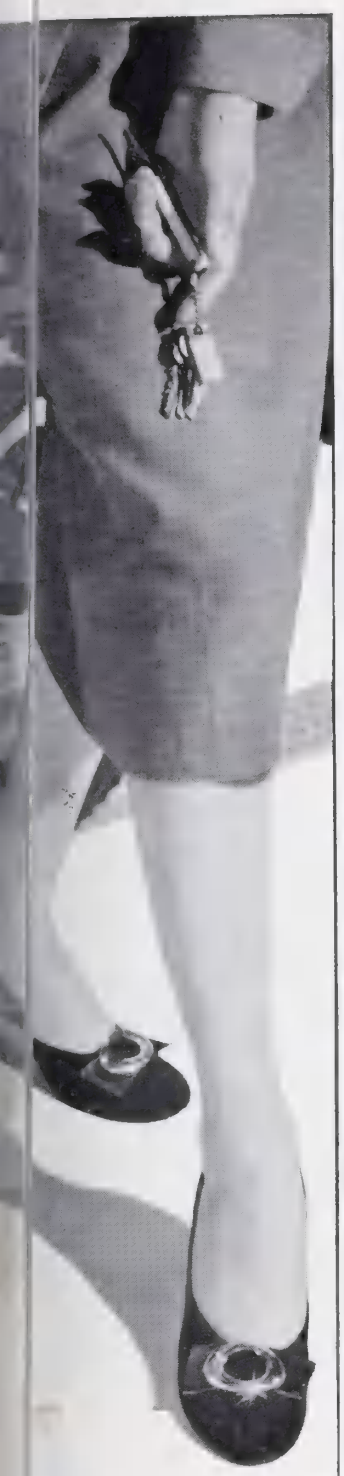
"Try to come soon again," she t we said good-by. "I miss you drea will never know how precious you

I asked her if she would like t New York and stay at the apar shook her head. "No. Even witho is home. The Berries is more our thing we can ever have in New I'm not Miss Gertrude Lawrence Richard Stoddard Aldrich. When that helps a lot; I adore it."

New York was stifling under a humidity. The train was late, whi could not apartmer shower an longed for glass of mi Central a like thousa rabbits, in row of the ride downt desk.

When I identity ca guard at th of 90 Chu thought h from it to name mea thing to glance was cious. If i seemed rid think it, I called it pi same look, intensified, I surprised of a tight little knot of my fello They stood together by an open win ing earnestly in low tones. When I knot broke apart. The conversat abruptly, to be resumed in a falsely I had the definite feeling that they talking about me. It occurred to me whether they had advance knowle was to be transferred. Or demot martialed, perhaps?

I felt awkward and apprehensive



I sat down at my desk, where the already was making insistent dem pressure of the day's business took over everything of a personal natur phone continued to ring and my me out of my office a number of ti the morning. Coming back from o absences, I found the message th Massachusetts, had been trying t Also that David Holtzmann had ca times. He asked me to ring him on personal importance. I planned to to call Gertrude in Dennis as soo free time.

At noon John Lodge, who had b class at Harvard and who was now brother officers, stuck his head in th asked if I wasn't going out for a bi told him I couldn't get away just th Say half an hour."

Instead of going on, he came in, cheerful face rather grave. "Wha doing for dinner tonight, Dick?" "I'll meet you at the club any time

I said I'd be glad to dine with would have to be late. Still he mad to go. I shot a glance at him. He lo bled. "Anything wrong, John?" I a "Well, I don't suppose you wa about it," he blurted. "And I do you. But I want you to know we al a shame."

velvet step

Other Styles
6.95 to 10.95

95*

*Slightly Higher Denver West

buckles to belittle your feet... ch for a yielding "feel"... in ede... black, brown or flight Close them now... while they're

AY FOR FREE BOOKLET:
ery Woman Should ut Choosing Shoes."

the store nearest you, write:
OE COMPANY, SAINT LOUIS

ERS OF CITY CLUB SHOES FOR MEN
R-BIRD SHOES FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

"What is?"

John was too intent following the course of his own thought to stop to enlighten me. "It doesn't make any sense. We like you, and of course Gertrude has always had top rating. Francesca can't get over it. She rang me from Westport last night the minute she heard it. It's something neither one of us thought would ever happen. Not to you. We'd have bet on it."

"What?" I demanded. "What's happened?"

John's jaw dropped. He asked, "Do you mean you don't know?"

"Know what?" I shouted.

I was aware that several officers had stopped at the door and were crowding around my desk. Tom Dewart laid a hand consolingly on my shoulder.

"We think it's a rotten deal, Dick," Tom said. "Somehow I never thought Gertrude would do a thing like that. I thought she had too much sense. And she always seemed like a straight shooter."

I pushed back my chair and stood up. I felt better on my feet. I looked at the ring of faces—kind, concerned, showing that instinctive, if frequently inarticulate, sympathy which unites males, even of quite different types, when confronted by the enigma of woman. "Look," I said. "All this is just so much fog to me. But Gertrude is my wife. If it's anything to do with her, tell it to me straight. And quick."

Tom said, "We're talking about the divorce, Dick. About Gertrude divorcing you to marry some rich Californian."

I found myself looking from one face to the next, seeking confirmation of Tom's incredible statement. The others nodded. So I had heard aright.

"Where did you hear this nonsense?" I shot at Tom.

John spoke up: "It's in one of the morning columns. Jimmy Fidler had it first. He broadcast it last night. That's how Francesca got it."

Before I could reply, my telephone rang again. It was David Holtzmann.

"I've been trying for hours to get you, Dick," he said. "So has Gertrude. She's fit to be tied."

"Oh, yes?" I snapped. "Tied to whom?"

I could think of at least three wealthy Californians, any one of whom might, conceivably, be a man Gertrude might marry. None of them had ever been at pains to hide his devotion, and Gertrude had enjoyed accepting this. She had even encouraged it. I knew that each of these men (and several others in both America and England) had a large photograph of her, especially and lovingly inscribed. I had occasionally teased her about these, calling her an outrageous hussy.

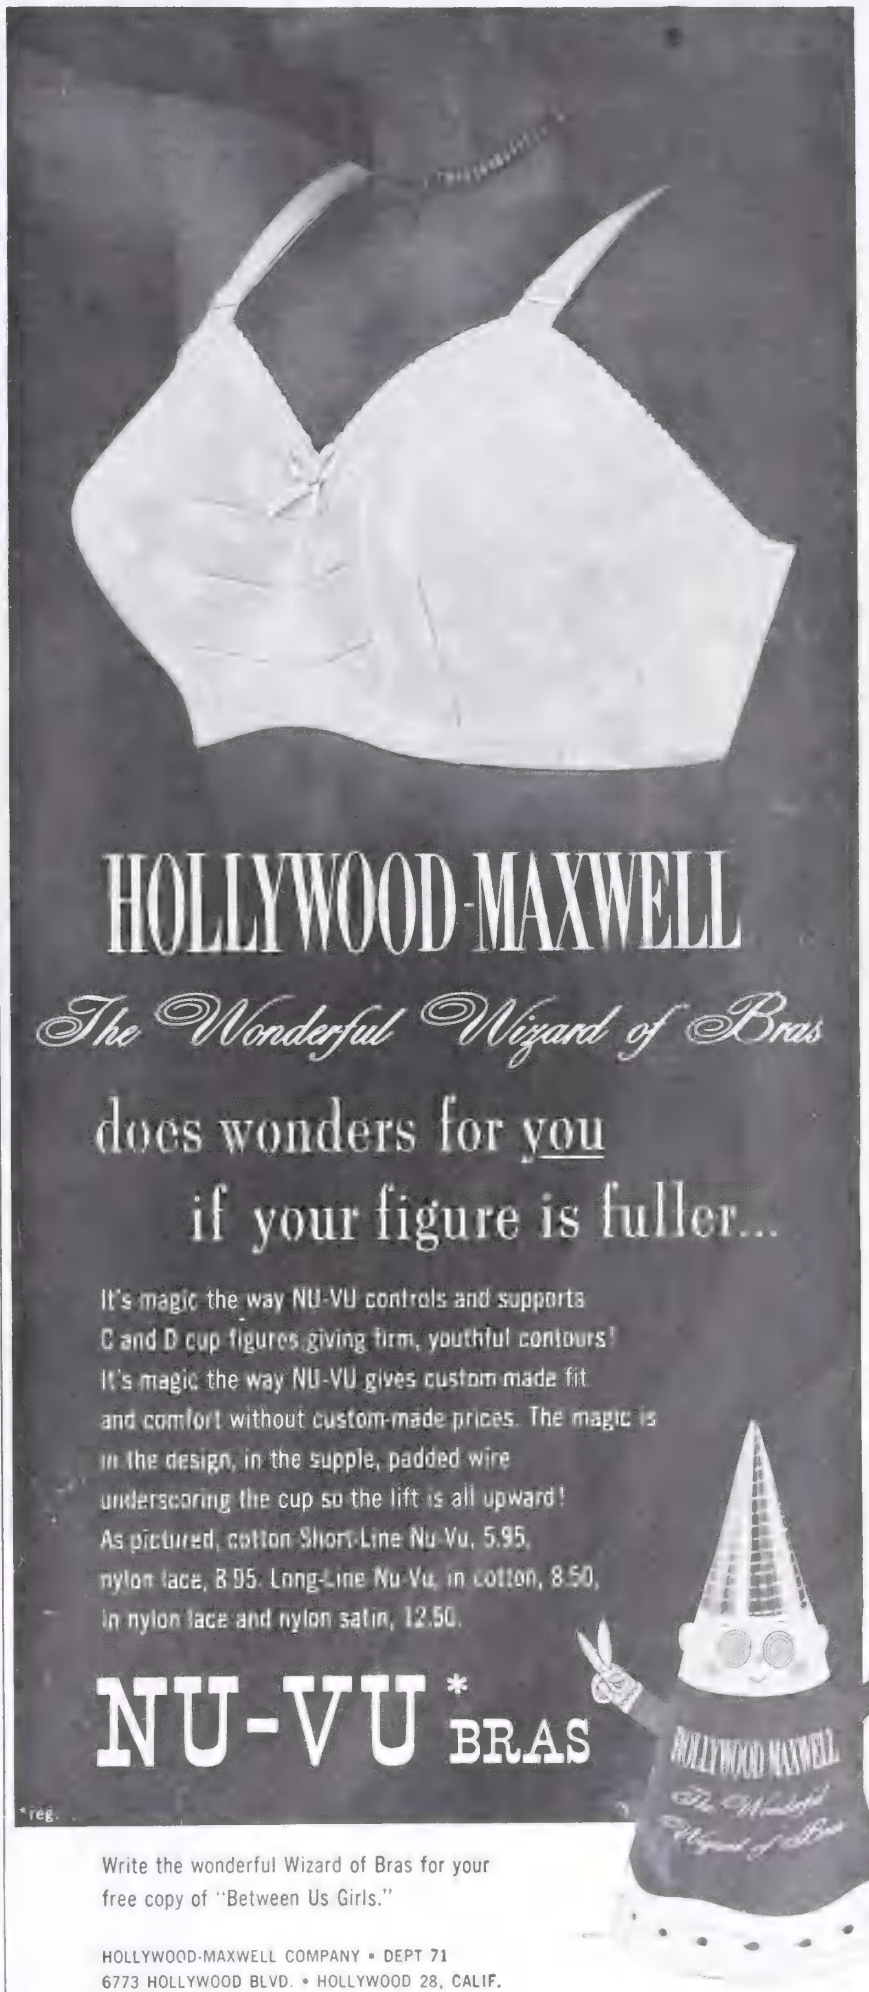
"BUT, darling, it makes them happy," she had said. "So why not? And they are all perfect dears. Besides, they are all so wonderful to me whenever I play in their cities."

I had believed in the innocence of these flirtations of hers chiefly because she was so open about them: not hiding them from me; but boasting about them, like a seventeen-year-old girl flaunting her dates. Twice she had asked me to stop in at Mark Cross and buy a leather frame to hold one of these inscribed photographs destined for a man's desk. With shameless practicality, she had said my taste would probably suit the man better than hers.

But suppose these affairs were not as innocent as I had thought them? I was under no illusion about my own powers to charm and hold a woman of Gertrude's volatile temperament. I had been through one divorce. My hopes of holding Gertrude lay in my determination not to attempt to hold her, any more than I would clench my fist around a hummingbird. Before our marriage I had promised her that she should never lose the sense of being free.

If she had turned from me to another man who offered her more than I could give, how could I blame her? During the two days we had just spent together she had been tender and loving—everything that a man could want of a wife. But might this not nave been her way of making me happy? The echo of her query, "So why not?" sounded in my mind.

To David I said, "Tell me, who is Gertrude supposedly divorcing me for?"



John's voice prompted me: "A Pasadena businessman."

"Divorcing you? Nuts!" David shouted in my ear. "Snap out of it, will you? I've had enough with Gertrude ringing me every fifteen minutes, without you going off the beam too. She's been wild since she heard the broadcast last night. There's no foundation at all for the story. When she couldn't reach you at the apartment this morning, and you weren't in your office when she called, she was sure you had heard it and were 'keeping away from her.'"

I was beginning to feel exceedingly foolish even while my resentment against the gossip-mongering mounted. I put my hand over the mouthpiece and turned to my gaping friends. "It's all right, boys," I assured them. "There is no Pasadena businessman. And take it from me, there will be no divorce."

"The American Broadcasting Company are as upset about it as we are. At least they should be," David said grimly, "after what I've just said to them. Anyway, they have offered to put on a special broadcast tonight refuting what Fidler said and apologizing to Gertrude and you. They are not going to wait for their regular hour next Sunday. They are making time available tonight."

I could not fail to accept this formal apology. But there was a further amende honorable which was due Gertrude from me for those thirty seconds in which I had doubted her. Before joining my would-be consolers in the restaurant, I rang a florist and ordered two dozen white roses delivered to Mrs. Richard Stoddard Aldrich in Dennis, Massachusetts. The card accompanying them to read: "With all my love, Richard."

Not that a message of any sort was needed; the flowers would speak for themselves. After our first falling out at Northfield I had sent Gertrude red roses, and from that occasion red roses had come to have a special meaning for us. They marked the end of a quarrel. After we were married I learned that Gertrude loved white flowers better than any others, and I grew into the way of sending her these when I wished to express how deep was my love, and my approval and admiration of her. She used to say, "Your white flowers always tell me when I'm being a very good girl."

Would she understand their significance at this time? She might. She was exceedingly astute in all the delicate phases of human relationships. Silently, I thanked God that her astuteness was more than equaled by her generous forbearance. She never expected human beings, even the human being who was her husband, to be perfect in all ways at all times. She could always allow for a human failing; believing, as part of her creed for living, that this usually was compensated by an abundance of some other virtue.

As she expressed it in her favorite phrase: "What you lose on the swings you make on the roundabouts."

Dick and David had gone to Virginia the fall of 1941 and could not be with us. They loved the Cape as much as we did and wrote longingly of the good times they had enjoyed there. Their bats, balls and books, along with the boxes of rubbish that all small boys accumulate and treasure, were there. Gertrude, in all other regards a meticulous housekeeper, would not permit anything of thrown away.

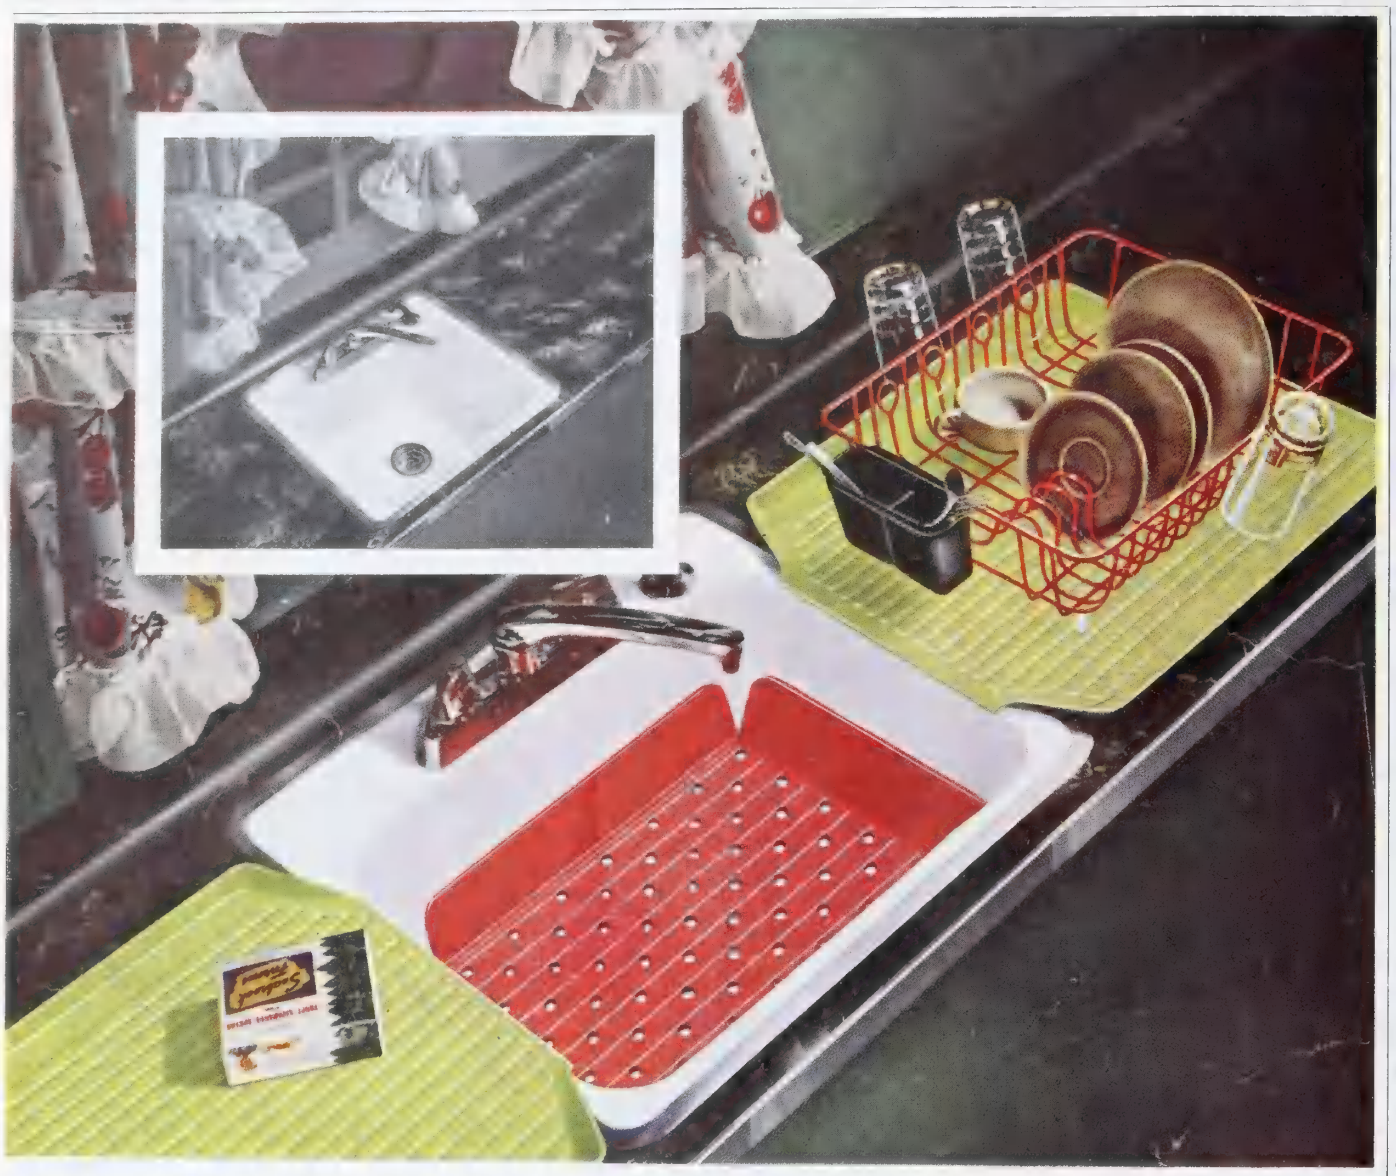
"What else do we have a store she would demand.

If anything was needed to bri and mother together, it was Ger tionship to my sons.

Curiously, Gertrude had in h mother had—the makings of a mat sensed and saluted this quality i Mother's potential matriarchy ha trated by her children's marria vorces. Now Gertrude was adroit the texture of our family life.

The relationship between the Aldriches progressed and deepene summer of 1943. Mother spent Gertrude at The Berries. The boy for some time every day. I went them whenever I could get leave.

Gertrude had again enlisted un ner stoutly upheld by Doctor Ha she was at home and not working bog, she and mother knitted stea that Gertrude needed more re seemed willing to take, mother, at me, promised to read aloud to he hours every afternoon. Gertrude a offer with alacrity. She loved be and this, I had found, was someti way to get her to relax. Though re was something I did not particula had formed the habit of readin times until she would drop aslee hours later, refreshed.



Mother, like so many of her gen an experienced and adept reader. mer, at The Berries, she read to Ge the books which had meant muc her life—the great Victorians, Brown worth and the New England wr sunset glory had illumined her ow One or two of them she had known of meeting "Mr. Emerson" at a and treasured some books, includi of Longfellow poetry, given her by the "Edith with golden hair" of Th Hour. As a young matron in Bos belonged to a Browning Circle w bers read, explored and discussed t of that obscurantist's verse. It was therefore, that she should read s shorter poems to Gertrude: "O England now that April's there Prospice, and My Star. Inevitabl Gertrude's sensitive ear and quic memory should seize and hold fa the lines.

YEARS later, when Gertrude wa wood for the filming of The Glass I flew out to spend Christmas wit evening we drove away from the lig hectic holiday mood of the motion- ony into the desert. There the air clean, dry and pungent; the sky ab and deep blue; the stars hanging with a light that seemed about to rocket.

Gertrude's head was on my sh had been silent, deeply moved by beauty. Suddenly I heard her reci herself than to me:

> "All that I know
> Of a certain star
> Is, it can throw > (Like the angled spar)
> Now a dart of red,
> Now a dart of blue,
> Till my friends have said
> They would fain see, t
>
> My star that dartles the red and th
> Then it stops like a bird; like a flo
> furled:
> They must solace themselves with > Saturn above it.
> What matter to me if their star is a > Mine has opened its heart to me,
> I love it."

I had not heard the lines since Copeland (Copie) read them to us a Schoolboys' lines, I had thought even when delivered in his spellbin But now, spoken by my wife, they w I, had the gods made me a poet,

An ordinary sink—with only $12.73 worth of Rubbermaid becomes this quiet, cheerful, time-saving beauty

You save as much as 30 minutes a day on dishwashing. That's how much these Rubbermaid kitchen helpers speed up your work, day after day.

And how quiet and cheerful it is to work at a sink like this! A Rubbermaid Sink Liner Mat to pad the bottom and sides of your sink, save dishes . . . a self-draining Rubbermaid Drainboard Tray to protect your counter top . . . and the new Rubbermaid Dish Drainer that holds more dishes than ever—even holds glasses and silverware outside the drainer.

Imagine—all these Rubbermaid Kitchen Helpers can be yours for only $12.73 . . . at your favorite housewares counter in the United States and Canada. For free folder showing all Rubbermaid products, write to The Wooster Rubber Company, Department L-34, Wooster, Ohio.

LONG STANDING COMFORT! Rubbermaid Tredeasy Floor Mat has an underside of soft, sponge rubber to help prevent fatigue, ease your stand-up jobs, rest your feet. Top surface is solid rubber for long wear and easy cleaning. $4.98.

HEAT-PROOF STOVE TOP PROTECTOR! Rubbermaid Stove Top Mat keeps your range new-looking for years . . . gives you safe extra working surface. Mat is ventilated . . . hot pans and oven heat can't damage. $2.35.

DON'T STOOP TO SWEEP! Rubbermaid Dust Pan hugs the floor, lets you keep both hands on the broom as you sweep. It's all rubber . . . protects both floor and furniture. $1.39.

Prices slightly higher in Canada

Rubbermaid® HOUSEWARE

Over sixty fine products . . . in your choice of fresh colors bout her, and about our maris, adding, as a sop to the self- that nearly always overcame empted to express my deepest ds, that Browning's "star," like ve furnished her husband a good s of eye-winking bewilderment. without Papa Barrett, Elizabeth n a bit on the exotic side for ," Gertrude observed. "And initely neurotic. Spaniels often recious old Mackie." Her voice t always did when speaking of t, who had died some six years thinking of Mackie always sad- rought the conversation around of our own marriage, which was on its tenth year. I called on her we had successfully rebutted all d given us at most two years ing post to Reno.

n a miracle from my point of can't say it's been dull, either," "Or can you?"

t "dull" was the last word which o me to describe our marriage. n too many red and blue darts

u glad?" she sighed. "I'll tell g now that I never quite dared before. When we were first mar- fully disappointed in you for a when I started a quarrel—and egan nearly all of them—all the e added proudly—"you didn't You were like a log of green fire. Absolutely no blaze. I al- d of you. I said to myself, 'If he's like that forever, I don't think I But you got the idea. You caught must admit, we've put on some rows in our day. Regular rousers, m. Like that time, in Fanny's hen you made me so furious, a lecture on my manners and off my hat and threw it in your ber?"

s not likely to forget it. In her lar, that had been "a regular difficult time immediately after I n service overseas and Gertrude from her tour of the Pacific bases, when we very nearly fulfilled Jimmy Fidler's prophecy concerning us, was a period I did not enjoy in recollection.

"The best part about all our fights has always been the making up," Gertrude went on. "You're always so sweet afterward. And I feel so purged and relaxed. And so eager to fall in love all over again. Darling, I think it would kill me if after one of our rows you were to stamp out and slam the door, the way you always do, and never come back. I would die if there were no red roses the next day."

I had long believed that she was not above promoting a quarrel with me for the sheer excitement it afforded her, and the chance to go into a big scene. Now I accused her not only of this but of doing it for the delight of making up.

"But, darling, of course," she admitted with a shamelessness that took the wind out of my sails. "I'm a woman. As well as an actress. And you can't tell me you don't enjoy it yourself, Mr. A."

I could not.

But there was another, quite different and very striking sense in which the lines Gertrude had quoted applied to her. It has to be understood for its bearing on those other, more spectacular and easily discovered qualities of her character which led many people to think her a gay, frivolous extrovert to whom society was the breath of life. The fact is that she was never willingly a member of café society. Her sorties into it were all made, so to speak, in the line of duty. Her appearances in certain smart places, with the smart set, were, to her, part of her job.

SINCE it was a job, she dressed for and acted out the role as she would any other. She played it so well she deceived all except those who knew her intimately. They knew that, without this role, she could be shy and silent.

She was happiest in a small, intimate circle, or among young people. Otherwise, she needed a stage, a part to interpret and, above all, a goal to achieve.

Knowing this, I occasionally lured her into a pleasant social evening by playing on her readiness to co-operate if this would help someone else—in this case, me. By making her feel that she was going to a dinner as my wife and as a favor to me, she would be willing and eager to go. Once there, in her effort to do

© B. A. AND CO., LTD.—"THE BEST CARTOONS FROM PUNCH"

"... and what's more, he'll remain in the cellar until he's in a more repentant frame of mind."

In a jiffy! BRILLO cleans pans bright!

BRILLO Soap Pads

Whisk off scorch, shine pans fast!

There's polishing soap right in every BRILLO Soap Pad

Sturdy metal-fiber pads— loaded with special soap! No more hard scrubbing! No more lengthy soaking! Brillo® Soap Pads zip off every bit of scorchy crust easily. And the special-formula soap that's right in every Brillo Soap Pad cuts grease fast!

Scorchy pans shine like new! Every pan you scour with Brillo Soap Pads gets a bright shine, too, because Brillo's grease-cutting soap contains jeweler's polish. And use Brillo to lift off gummy cooked-on food and grease from stove burners and ovens!

BRILLO Soap Pads (Red Box) soap-filled pads
BRILLO Cleanser (Green Box) pads plus cake of polishing soap

THRIFTIER!
5 and 12
pad boxes

Twice the shine—in half the time!

me proud, she would be her most charming, gay, warmhearted self.

As a result, everyone enjoyed her, fell in love with her, and she discovered that she liked them. Thus close friendships were developed with John and Francesca Lodge, Junkie and Dorette Fleischmann, Cassie and John Mason Brown, Mary and Os Lord, and Ellie and Tom Dewart.

She would be especially shy when she was among intellectuals, or people who spoke of world affairs. So great was her reverence for learning, that it was just such people that she longed to meet. One of her unfulfilled wishes was to meet Prof. Albert Einstein.

I am sure that the basis of Gertrude's shyness among people not of the theater was her awareness of her own total lack of formal education. Yet, although she spent no more than a few months in any school, and grew up, so to speak, backstage in variety shows and musical comedies, Gertrude had a fluent and beautiful command of the English language that would put the majority of American college graduates to shame.

Her handwriting had great distinction. She could express herself in a note, even to a stranger, with a clarity, a feeling for words and an unaffected warm sincerity that came close to genius. She made no mistakes in grammar, and her misspellings were limited to a few words which she consistently spelled in her own chosen way. Like sense, which she preferred to write "sence."

Her eager spontaneous interest in and curiosity about whatever was new to her sent her to books on an extraordinarily wide range of subjects. Everything, from conchology to cooking, engaged her at one time or another. When she was teaching a class in the Drama School at Columbia University, at the same time that she was appearing in The King and I, she had a habit of going to the campus at least a full hour before her class was scheduled. Availing herself of her instructor's privileges, she would drop in on some lecture or browse in the library.

One afternoon, I found her at home in bed, reading a thick volume of archaeology. She looked up excitedly as I came in. "Did you know there are places where you can dig history right out of the ground? Iran. And Crete, and places like that."

I admitted to this knowledge.

"Darling! You've known all this time, and you never told me? We must go and see those Greek isles, just as soon as we can!"

Not all the reading mother did was classical. One Sunday—it was a previous summer when the boys were at the Cape—a chill northeaster swept in from the Atlantic. I had put in a good part of the day going over some papers upstairs in my room. The afternoon was well advanced toward dusk when I finished. The house seemed unusually quiet; I would have thought everyone out-of-doors but for the rain and the assaults of the wind. Yawning, I went downstairs to see what was what.

Halfway down the flight I found myself looking into the living room where a log fire blazed. On the floor in front of this Gertrude sat cross-legged, with Dick and David sprawled beside her. At one side of the hearth, under the reading lamp, mother sat, book in hand. Her voice floated up to me in words that took me back nearly thirty years:

"This is the story of a bad boy. Well, not such a very bad, but a pretty bad boy; and I ought to know, for I am, or rather I was, that boy myself. . . ."

Did a stair tread squeak? Or was it Gertrude's acute sensitivity that caused her head to turn? She smiled and beckoned silently. I tiptoed in. Surprised, but I was happy to see not displeased, the boys made room for me to drop down beside the three in front of the fire.

Mother alone paid no heed to my appearance there except—or did I fancy it?—that a smile played with unusual tenderness about her moving lips. Page after page she led us through familiar Rivermouth with young Tom Bailey, Pepper Whitcomb and Sailor Ben, with Captain Nutter and Miss Abigail.

I WAS well aware that mother had not opened the volume without delivering a little introductory talk to let the boys know that the Bad Boy and their own Great-grandfather Aldrich had been cousins. And that she had crowned this triumphantly with the announcement that on his mother's side the Bad Boy was a Pickering!

Watching my sons being made aware of this part of their heritage, I thought how strange it was that they owed their enlightenment, not to me, but to the Englishwoman I had brought into the family. It was she, first regarded with a reserve bordering on distrust as coming from an alien world, who had welded that quiet, close group before the fire, and had brought me to sit with her and my sons at my mother's feet.

It does not come easy to a man like me to admit these things, even to himself. As for admitting them to Gertrude, thank God, there was no need. Understanding—quick, warm, complete—passed between us as our hands clasped.

Our plans for putting up a united family front at Thanksgiving were canceled by orders from the Navy Department. In October I was ordered to overseas duty with th forces based in England.

Gertrude was then with me i She had no play for that season, down several offers, hoping that would be made for her to go t entertain the troops, British a Meanwhile she was working re Red Cross and at the Stage D She had also signed up for a six- radio program.

She made no bones about he "luck" in getting into the Euro of Operations ahead of her.

"I HATE being a civilian," she She was sitting in the sunny bo our apartment living room sewi on my clothing, a task she had s to let her maid take over. "I kno a Navy wife," she said proudly, needle through the cotton of a with a vicious jab. "But I think me to be left high and dry on th you sail away to all the excitem my homeland you're going to."

She extorted from me a promi Dean—who was arranging show and who was one of her oldest f from her appearances as a ch mimes he directed—and "Mak the red tape and get me acros possible."

My retort that the Navy was s help stage a war, not to meddle tainment of the troops, and it that I would see or have any o contact Dean, she disregarded c

"It's being that always she said.

Gertrude h which probabl her adolescenc a diary whenev difficult, or w depressed, lon fle afraid. He vented her fr her low feeling It insisted on keeping the chin u a smile to the audience no matter were suffered inwardly. No num sang in any show was as near the own character as her song Happy Tune," in the opening scen The King and I.

A diary afforded a safe vent f It was secret. Alone at night, be bed, she could pour out on its her anxieties, her hopes and in revelations without embarrassm being misunderstood. Among th pers and cherished personal eff least five diaries, each dating fro strain, and each ending sudde when her life became too active, successful to require this kind of i

One of these, a small crim bound volume with gold tooling, on the title page: MY LIFE WITHO Pasted below is a small photogr the age of six wearing a blue sail a Buster Brown haircut, and an such unhappiness that only a wife capable of the sentimental sometimes displayed, would h from the wastepaper basket.

Wednesday, October 20, 1943 [s 11:30 A.M. this day my dear one left the homes we have made together a other millions, he and I may not be wife again for longer than either of to imagine.

It was a hard and bitter parting, lowed to go with him. But I dro and stole a look at the ship and better. She is large and very seawo looking. There seems evidence of a I came home, tried to eat, was viole then went out for air.

I shopped for this book which I i day by day while Richard is overs

I returned and asked my teleph if there had been any calls for me. Sh "No, but Lieutenant Aldrich is up

At last I reached my door, and s ing it could be true, I called his na opened and there was Richard

To make anyone believe himself good is to make him, almost in spite of self, to become so.
CHARLOTTE MARY YONGE

Smart indeed . . . the housewife who uses Oil Cloth today

smart about beauty

She likes the big selection of new Blenback Oil Cloth patterns with their rich, bright, stain-proof colors and designs baked on durable fabric. Blenback drapes gracefully without wrinkling.

smart about work

She never launders Blenback Oil Cloth, just wipes it clean with a damp cloth. No stains because spilled things don't penetrate its color coated surface.

smart about money

She's thrifty. She saves with Blenback Oil Cloth. It costs about $1.00 per table and far outwears flimsier coverings. She buys it by the yard and in ready-made sets for tables, chairs and shelves.

free! Do-it-yourself Decorating Ideas!

Send your name and address to Columbus Coated Fabrics Corporation, Dept. LJ-94, Columbus 16, Ohio

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Columbus Blenback® Oil Cloth

By the makers of Wall-Tex fabric wall coverings, Col-O-Vin vinyl upholstery, Plastolyn table covers

…other closer than ever before, laugh-
…g at the same time. At that moment
…oodness of God's mercy—Richard … thirty minutes ashore to dash to …ld so easily have missed seeing him
…and led me back home in time. We …ooked at each other, and this time
…him as far as I dared. Now he has
…e strength has been given me from
…nute reprieve. . . .

…7:15 P.M.

…ttle down in any room. No more …, just the low cry of the boats from
…each one sends a knife through my
… to love to hear such sounds, now
… be the signal which means Richard
… I long to dash to the pier yet dare
… house lest he should call me. . . .
…ple, in such a splendid world to per-
… misery and heartache. . . . Rich-

P.M

…ere in my room, just sat doing noth-
… Richard is putting out to sea. I wish …own to try to see him go but the … probably have turned me back. . . .
…hoking me . . . I'm cold and oh, so …happy, and yet I'm supposed to be …cky ones. . . .

… entries continue faithfully for
… Then there is a silence of seven
…— gap which the diarist bridges
…teristic nonchalance:

…tainly is some time since I wrote in
… the truth is, I have no life without

… is more literary than literal. Far
… no life, Gertrude had been up to …o many things that winter she had
… for the solace a diary offered. It
… she did not miss me, I am sure.
…f her almost daily letters breathed
…nstitutionally she was no moper.
…ive way of meeting any problem,
…roblem of loneliness, was to do

… letter Gertrude expressed her
…o to England. This was not solely
… as stationed there, and as she re…id, "We could have some days
…She had received from Basil Dean
…ng her to come and tour the camps
…Entertainment National Services
…). The difficulty was to get a prior-
… the crossing. In those weeks of
…ing, being disappointed, and hop-
…he returned to her diary.

… space in one flight while I awaited
…Richard what to do. He cabled not to … would arrange everything, and for … immediately. So I reapplied for the …ich goes today. I have said good-by
…y, sent everything I possess ahead,
…ything, dismissed the maids, cut my
…w I am told by ENSA that they can-
…tee everything. As the law now
…ld not leave the U.K. and my priority
…e through, so as the plane leaves to-
…nce more grounded. I have been wait-
… trip since Lady in the Dark closed
…lmost a year. Richard, meantime, has …ted, bless his heart, and moved into
…e which he now commands. I haven't … idea where they have sent him and …itten because he thought I was on my

…e ban will be lifted later, and then I
…e but as things are it would be mad-
…over for twelve weeks and find myself
… the duration. It would mean no pay,
…om with another girl or staying as a … friends. But if that is what Richard
… shall go by the next plane.
…could keep my sense of humor about
… feel utterly frustrated.
…ela and her husband came to have a
…ncheon as they are leaving for Cali-
…y seem so happy and complete, and … I realize how lonely I am and have
…lways will be until Richard is with me
… Tomorrow I shall go up to our home
…gland. I can manage to keep myself
… . . .

…ays, activity overcame loneliness.
… no entry in MY LIFE WITHOUT
… for ten days. Then she wrote

May 16th

Sudden call . . . mind made up, shall take my chance and make the trip no matter what consequences later.

Leaving for Baltimore 4:30 and for Great Britain at the stroke of midnight.

Give my regards to B'way. Piccadilly, here I come.

My first intimation that she had arrived was a trunk call from London to our base at Southampton. She promised to take an early train from Waterloo the following morning, a Saturday. We could have as much of that day and the next together as my duties as C.O. of the base would permit.

My quarters were at the Star Hotel which had been requisitioned as H.Q. for the U.S. Navy. I could not take Gertrude there as it was out of bounds for civilians. Finding an empty room anywhere in Southampton just then, when the top-secret preparations for the invasion of Normandy were engaging the Army and Naval forces of Britain and the United States, to the exclusion of all else, was a formidable task.

After much telephoning and resort to official pressure, I was able to get the promise of a room at the Dolphin Hotel. It had no private bath and was at the head of the stair landing, with the W.C. a long way down the passage, but under the existing circumstances, I felt we were fortunate.

I went to the station to meet the nine-thirty from Waterloo, which was the train Gertrude had said she would take. The nine-thirty had been canceled. There was nothing unusual about this, train schedules in those days being highly uncertain. The next train would be the eleven-thirty from London and I settled myself philosophically to wait.

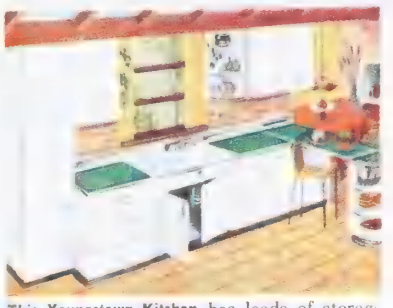
In due time it arrived and let through the gates a horde of servicemen—British, Canadian and American—and a small quota of civilians. But no Gertrude. I tried not to think of a bomb dropping on the Savoy the night

See Diana-style Youngstown Kitchens in National Home Week exhibit homes!

See the new homes that set the pace for the old !

NATIONAL HOME WEEK, SEPT. 19-26

(known also as "Parade of Homes")



Visit exhibit homes in your community during National Home Week, sponsored by National Association of Home Builders

Whether you're planning a kitchen for a new home, or for your present home, you'll find scores of new ideas in these new exhibit homes. And particularly in the beautiful Diana-style Youngstown Kitchens of lasting steel.

You can quickly make these exciting, new Youngstown Kitchen features come to life in your home—for they are easy to install, easy to buy; on F.H.A. terms, if you wish. Thousands of architects, builders, and Youngstown Kitchen dealers are equipped to help custom-plan your Youngstown Kitchen.

As little as $3.99* a week puts this Youngstown Kitchen in your home. This handsome arrangement packs plenty in little over 7 feet.

This Youngstown Kitchen has loads of storage space and work surface, and a 42-inch Diana ensemble sink. As little as $6.34* a week.

*F.H.A. terms. Plus installation

WHY A STEEL YOUNGSTOWN KITCHEN IS BEST FOR YOU:

Will not warp, rot, swell or stick • Greater strength, longer life • Resistant to moisture • Fireproof, verminproof, termiteproof • Precision built, mass-production savings • Hi-Bake enamel finishes, easy to clean • One-piece, acid-resisting porcelain-enameled sink tops • Easy-V handles . . . Handsome, easy to use • Die-made construction (no sharp corners) • Built to last a housetime

Cabinets of steel for lasting appeal

For name of your nearest dealer, consult the yellow pages of your telephone directory under "Kitchen Equipment—Household," or "Kitchen Cabinets," or call Western Union, Operator 25.

STEEL Youngstown Kitchens®

MULLINS MANUFACTURING CORPORATION • WARREN, OHIO

World's Largest Makers of Steel Kitchens

I plan to buy a house ☐
I plan to build a house ☐
I plan to modernize ☐

Please send 24-page kitchen-planning and decorating-idea book in full color. I enclose 10c to cover cost of mailing. (No stamps, please.)

Youngstown Kitchens, Mullins Mfg. Corp.
Dept. L-954, Warren, Ohio

NAME (Please print)

ADDRESS

CITY ZONE

COUNTY STATE

© 1951 Mullins Manufacturing Corporation

before. Much as I longed to see her, I could not help wishing her back in Dennis with the wide Atlantic between her and constant danger from the air. The one-thirty from Waterloo was my next hope. Meanwhile, Saturday was slipping out of our grasp. It would be teatime before I could expect Gertrude.

I was back at the station in time for the London train. This was even more crowded than the preceding ones. As soldiers, sailors and marines—all, it seemed, burdened with bulging duffel bags, heavy packs and other equipment—jammed through the gates I began to believe that my luck had failed. I'd been thinking, with some embarrassment, that I was the only American officer in Europe whose wife had come to see him. Now, with anxiety overwhelming expectation, I would have exchanged what had seemed my extraordinary good fortune for the assurance of Gertrude's safety.

These thoughts were interrupted by a series of shrill whistles and unmistakable wolf calls from the troops milling about the gate. Over the craning heads I saw my wife in her American Red Cross Motor Corps uniform making her way through the mob with considerable difficulty.

At the same time she saw me. "Richard," she called, and started to run. I ran too. Amazed, the crowd of servicemen made way for us. As Gertrude flung herself into my arms, I was conscious but proudly defiant of the stares, grins and long-drawn whistles from all parts of the station.

The Red Cross uniform, Gertrude explained later, had been an inspiration born of the desperation of finding herself at the end of a long queue of civilians waiting for places on the earlier train. Realizing that she had practically no chance of getting on as a civilian, she had hurried back to the Savoy, pulled her Red Cross uniform from her luggage, r Waterloo and inserted herself into of uniforms then lined up for the or

"It's a good thing I didn't wea plane coming across," she said brought with her a dozen fresh egg ent for Evie Williams, her former her excitement at her first glimpse she had bounced in her seat, break the precious eggs carried in her Hemingway, who sat next to her or had helped her mop up the mes grinned broadly to see her jerk her back to front, hiding the egg stain fur coat, in order to make an imp trance at Croydon.

Her time in London had been t her to have seen much of the dama the air raids. The devastation of So as we drove to the Dolphin, sh sobered her. "And you've been thr she said, several times, almost inc I told her she was liable to go thr of it herself that night or fairly so ampton was getting a lot of hamm days. Perhaps the Jerries suspecte were almost ready for the Big P tiliously, Gertrude avoided asking tions about my work or about my p with D day just two weeks off, the t mounted to such a pitch it seemed could be in the United Kingdom t hours without feeling the imminenc thing tremendous.

I took Gertrude to dinner at o wanted her to see and meet the r command, and I wanted them to don't think I'd ever been prouder that night. It wasn't exactly her be conventional sense of classically p tures. But she had something far m ing and more unforgettable than b word that comes closest to it is radia

Our accommodation at the Dolph and pleased her. It seemed the right a reunion in the midst of war. She and was interested in the blackout chambermaid had "done" before upstairs. When I came back from a the passage, I found Gertrude half in the voluminous heavy blackout ing to open the window behind then

"Here!" I exclaimed. "You can'

"Why not?"

"Because if you do, you'll hall death."

I explained that an important par ampton's defense against enemy the hundreds of smoke pots plante out the city.

"There's no smoke now," she sniffing out the window.

"No. But there will be if they c

"But, darling, we can't possibly s room without any fresh air."

"You'll have to."

"But I can't. You know I alwa have the window open."

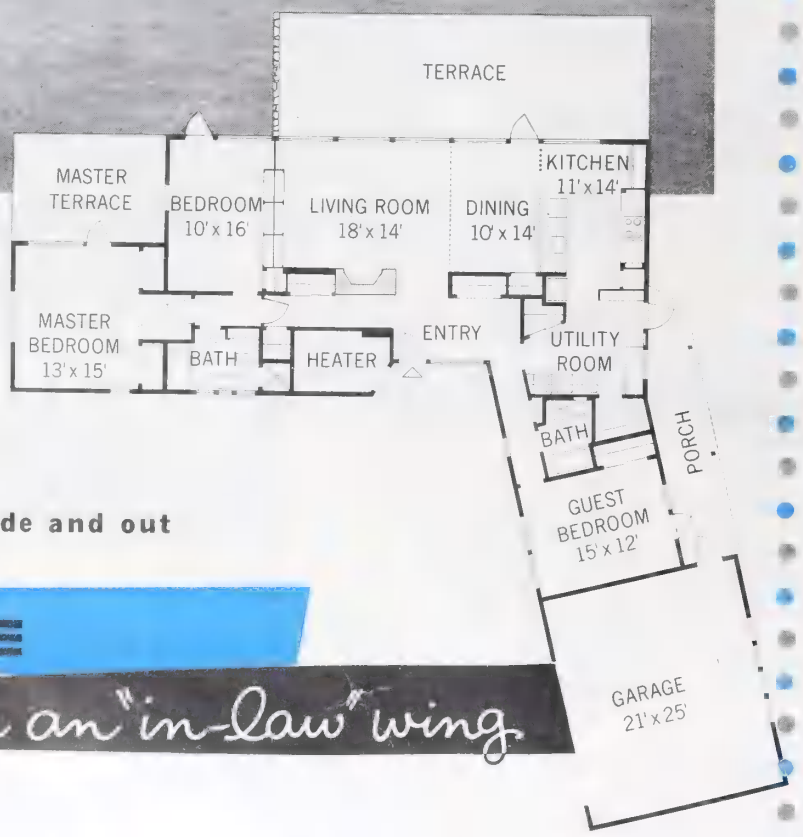
I KNEW; as most husbands know going to have our time together bickering, so I gave in. "Have it way," I told her. I told myself m would give us a night off.

I don't know how long I had b when I was awakened by Gertrud me. She was sitting up in bed, cough fumes were pouring into the room.

"Oh, Richard, get up and shut the she gasped.

"You see," I told her, padding worn carpet on bare feet to strugg blackout. I banged down the wind perhaps you'll believe me."

She looked up at me with strea "Always Right Aldrich," she whee



I fetched her a glass of water an the paroxysm subsided. "I am a o ing my own way, aren't I?" she contritely.

"You are."

But I spoke perfunctorily. The sm enemy planes. Of course they migh us bound for targets inland. And might not. I told Gertrude what w pect and asked her if she wanted t to the hotel cellar where the guest would take refuge. She said no. "N

ARCHITECT: MALCOLM GRAEME DUNCAN; PHOTOGRAPHER: RUDOLPH E. LEPPERT, JR.

A house for the whole family, apart and together, inside and out

HOUSE with an "in-law" wing

By CAROL L. MERCADO

MANY houses serve three generations under one roof; few provide as much comfort for the entire family as this small home. Three "apart" zones permit privacy for the separate activities of children, parents and grandparents; the living area is for the family's "together" times.

Zone 1 is the parents' bedroom with its terrace tucked in next to the children's room. The terrace is shielded from view by the house itself. Zone 2 is the children's domain. Their room has a long wall of built-ins for clothing and collections; the window wall faces their play yard. A door from children's room to yard keeps traffic from other areas. The children have a direct route to the bathroom too. Zone 3, the guest or "in-law" wing, has its own outdoor area, too—a screened porch, away from the noise of children's play. On rainy days, the porch is a sheltered path from garage to the utility-room entry. The family area—living room, dining room and kitchen—has a terrace running its full length. Terrace meals are simple to serve through the dining-room entry.

In this basementless house, the oversize garage accommodates bulk storage; laundry, freezer and pantry closets are in the utility room. The heater room opens to the outside for easy servicing, and has ample space for garden tools.

r take our chances aboveground ogether."
uld, too, so we waited.
ne that landed—I figured it fell docks and the gasworks—shivhin's stout old timbers, but with-e damage.
ame closer into my arms. She ainst my shoulder, "That sound so much I'd rather forget—the d the night Pamela was born.
d awfully black just then. I was the fact that my marriage was all n't the ghost of an idea what to ng, this is a thousand times bet-happens, we've had nearly four iness. I've loved every minute of
——"
hat we had a lot of time ahead of ident of it.
s not waste a single minute," she
lly. "This is better than sleeping, ly oceans to tell you. First, about ou'd want the latest news about ung Dick. David's doing well at h he says he gets high marks only time off for play. And Dick is s tall as you are—but he's thin sort of quiet."
st growing boys passed through thing for them both," Gertrude uld be to run wild on the Cape nths. I'm trying to sell our cranor. We don't use it, now that we nners, Inc. If I can get two hun-for it I'm going to spend the ng out and putting bunks in the use, then the boys can camp out can work in the bog and run on d Helen Mahoney will see that e details about The Berries. She Mackie's ashes there and buried rose garden. The little dog had ew days after I had left the pre-er. Of all our menagerie of pets, remained.

get another dog until the war is are settled again," Gertrude said of course there'll never be another Darling, do you remember him
?"
I could not forget.
nearly bit your father's friend, ster." She began to laugh. I did together, laughing. Jerry took drop another; this one was closer.

gan to talk very fast.
ving The Berries empty," she said.
ch a waste when it's so lovely at
The garden has come on a lot.
Harrison will go up, they prom-t your mother refuses to leave out mother; Gertrude had spent her just the week before. "She is e seems just a tiny bit older. She t you, naturally. But she's terri-you. She has your photograph in her desk where she writes her been looking up all your English d where they came from. She told e who was so enormous that when ar in the forest the bear was teran away. She asked me to walk the cemetery in Groton to see the nd the beautiful white iron fence

n. She doesn't like the idea that buried beside your father, in Up-t among her own people in beau-
."
had been one of mother's worries

ted Upton one day this spring," formed me, "and she had an awful e strange person has got herself ldrich property. No one seems to she is or how she got there. But . 'The intruder,' Aunt Alice calls is terribly indignant about it. She that such a thing couldn't happen Because of the fence, I expect."
se you told her I would straighten ntured.

"Of course, darling," Gertrude said seriously. "I promised her you would attend to it the minute you came home."

I did not like all this talk about cemeteries and to divert her I said I was sorry mother had been so depressed. "The visit could not have been very much fun for you."

"On the contrary," Gertrude said quickly. "She told me those things and she took me to see the graves because she feels now that I belong. It was a tremendous compliment. You're the head of the family and I am your wife. She unlocked her desk and showed me the letter your great-grandfather James Joy wrote to his wife Sarah Pickering when he knew he was going to die. It is her most sacred possession."

I realized that Gertrude was right about mother. She had taken Gertrude into the family's inmost sanctuary. I could see that the two Mrs. A's had had a wonderful time together.

"She was so very sweet, trying to comfort me about your being away," Gertrude went on. "She offered me a helpful thought to repeat in the lonely moments: 'This too will pass.'"

I remembered the quotation well. Mother summoned it up invariably in times of crisis.

"This conversation is rather like a chorus girl's tights," Gertrude said. "It touches everything and covers nothing." She began to speak of her proposed tour for ENSA. Hers was to be called the Gertrude Lawrence Unit. She had no idea where they were to go—their destinations were to be kept secret from day to day—but they would tour Great Britain for eight weeks, giving two shows or more a day and motoring from place to place. Some of the shows would be given in war plants, others for the troops.

She was interrupted by sudden heavy firing. It sounded close.

"Richard, what's that?"

"The rocket guns." I did not add that these were usually not fired unless they could be

Let them have another, Mother, they're pure NABISCO cookies!

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

New and luscious, that's SWISS CREME SANDWICH. The new filling is extra-creamy, with the most pleasing lemon flavor. And the daintier, crisper cookies have a rich, "short" texture, because we put in plenty of the purest shortening.

The one-and-only FIG NEWTONS CAKES are made only by NABISCO. Inside the tender cakes we put the plumpest, juiciest figs ever grown. We make sure all our ingredients are quality, that's why all NABISCO cookies taste so delicious.

Kids go for our OREO CREME SANDWICH in a big way, and here's why. The chocolate-y cookies are crisp to bite. In between, we spread heaping amounts of creamiest filling. And because they're NABISCO cookies —they're wholesome.

aimed directly at the target. It meant the planes were flying low overhead.

"How about going down to the shelter?" I asked quietly. Inwardly I cursed the eagerness to see her which led to her coming down. I should have made her stay in London. "I really think we ought to go."

But she refused. There would be all the others.

"I want us to be alone. Especially when we have so little time." Her hands held me tight but her voice was determinedly gay. I realized that she had accepted the role of sustaining me, fortifying me against fear. While the guns kept up their firing, and now and then a bomb exploded, she chattered on about a multitude of things—future plans: "Darling, when this is all over let's have a theater of our own. We shall call it The Commander and make ourselves some steady rentals."

She talked about people we knew—Doctor Fritz and Doctor Harriet; the Goodspeeds, who own the grocery in Dennis; and the auction held for the local church at which she had acted as auctioneer. She had made friends with Bill Stone's mother on the beach. "Do you know, darling, I wouldn't be surprised if Bill were to come round and let us have some of his beach front one of these days. He's definitely mellowing."

She interspersed these anecdotes with jokes. It was really a magnificent performance. I was sure that in the course of it Gertrude convinced herself that she was keeping up my morale, and I let her. It was a long time before we slept, and the housemaid's rap came all too soon. After a hurried breakfast I saw Gertrude off on the train back to London.

"Well," I told her, "you've had it. How does it feel?"

"For some quaint reason it seems nothing new," she replied. "Only, darling, I don't want any more when you aren't there to share it with me."

I was to see her again several times during her stay in England. We were within a few days of D day when I came out of my quarters one afternoon to find the town plastered with bills announcing the arrival of the Gertrude Lawrence Unit at Southampton's Guildhall next day. No sooner was the news out than my office was besieged with requests for leave to see the show. Very few of those who asked knew that Gertrude was my wife; this was something I had thought best to keep secret. It was known only to my superior officers and to the few men of my command she had met at mess.

I managed to catch the show and the party which the top British brass put on for her unit afterward at the Polygon Hotel. This was reserved for VIP's. Gertrude and her company were billeted there. We were very circumspect throughout the party. Dutifully, I let the admirals, captains and generals dance with her without cutting in. None of these suspected the presence of a husband. After the party, I bribed a discreet hotel porter to let me up the back stairs to Gertrude's room. I left very early the next morning by the same route.

"Just the same, that porter wasn't so discreet. Or you didn't give him enough," Gertrude told me later that day when we went for a walk down by the docks. "There was an unmistakable look in the faces of the hotel staff when I came down. The gossip is going around that Gertie and the tall Yankee commander are having an affair."

It was our private joke which we enjoyed while she remained in the Southampton area. We kept it up when her unit did a show aboard HMS Collingwood at Portsmouth. When she came on to sing "A Lovely Way to Spend an Evening" she nearly missed cue when she saw me seated among the top British brass in the front row.

"You nearly lost your false eyelashes," I teased her later, when we had a moment together.

"If they were to go I'd jump overboard after them," she said. "They're the most important part of my make-up. I can tell you, trying to be glamorous in this ENSA uniform takes some doing. Fortunately, the eyelashes take up no room and are quickly put on."

SHE put them on in a great many strange places during that tour which took her from Portsmouth to the Orkneys, from Cardiff to Canterbury. "If anyone ever again mentions this tiny little island, I shall scream," she wrote later. "Its vastness is one more of the wonders of the world when one is routed by ENSA. I am never told where we are going until I open my orders in the car. I do two shows every day, one at twelve-thirty, the other at night. Once we played to eight thousand of all the services of all the allied nations. . . . With all this motoring I now have a gait like a permanent drunk. And oh, the beds. Sleeping in one is like trying to relax on a charging camel. But boy, am I tough! When I get home I'm going to live a life of ease, smothered in perfume, soap and decent lavatory paper. Darling, I have read the latest headlines in the oddest places. . . ."

At the conclusion of the tour she spent several days in Salisbury. This was near enough our base for me to run over one evening and we had a few hours together. She was weary but determined to go on to Normandy to entertain the troops who had made the landing there a month earlier and who fighting their way toward the Beig

I did not approve of her going in which was still dangerous and wher conditions were not only uncomfo unsanitary. No resistance I could p hold her back. She crossed wit

ENSA unit to go into France, r crossing in an LST.

Her letters to me were as slow through as mine to her. Twice I

Channel and was within thirty kil her, but had no idea where her u whither it was routed. No one know. Gertrude went on, into Brussels and eventually to Antwerp.

in that city when it was still "the

when the firing nearly drowned he spite the excellent amplifiers whic

mans had installed in the enorm palast and which they had left behi their retreat.

"THE men are marvelous," Gertr

"Many have been in all the major b

Tunis. All are terribly tired. There be any applause to equal what th

Ever. It's better than all the gre

Night successes rolled into one. . .

In October, just two months afte left for France, one of my fellow of

"I think I ought to tell you, Dick rumor going around that Gertrude has been taken sick and is being br to England."

I verified the rumor by telephone headquarters in London. Yes, a

The unit was exp that day. Miss had been taken werp. How ill s

what the illness person on the

unable to say.

I went straight miral and asked

eight hours' lea

the first leave

quested, and it w

I was able to co

a staff car from the motor pool an top speed to London.

Inquiry at ENSA brought the in that Gertrude was at the Savoy. I the hotel and phoned Gertrude lobby. There was no answer in her r

The desk clerk, to whom I was, o stranger, was understandably reluc me go up to the room. I appealed s to Charles Hofflin, managing direc

Savoy, who got a boy with a pass company me to Gertrude's room.

It was fortunate that he did.

Gertrude on the bed, just as she had self when she came in. She still h worn, faded ENSA uniform and sh semicoma.

I telephoned downstairs for a d nurse. I was told no nurses were avai

While waiting for the doctor, I

Gertrude, bathed her and got her

She seemed to accept my presenc natural; true to her nature, she ac me feebly not to worry. "I'm not ill

Only so terribly, terribly tired."

When the doctor arrived, he confi

He said that Gertrude's condition

sult of a recent attack of dysenter mandy, plus the shock effect on nervous system of battle-front cond

the wearing grind of the tour itself

Gertrude a sedative; soon she was a

For thirty-six hours I did not

As the hours passed, I was immense to see her condition improve, alth was still weak and was drowsy medication.

My immediate concern was to f

one to look after her when my leav

Gertrude seemed to catch some of

In one of her short wakeful periods

pered, "Get hold of Evie, Richar

She'll know what to do."

Evie Williams was a former se

Gertrude's in England, who later t her in Susan and God. After Evie r

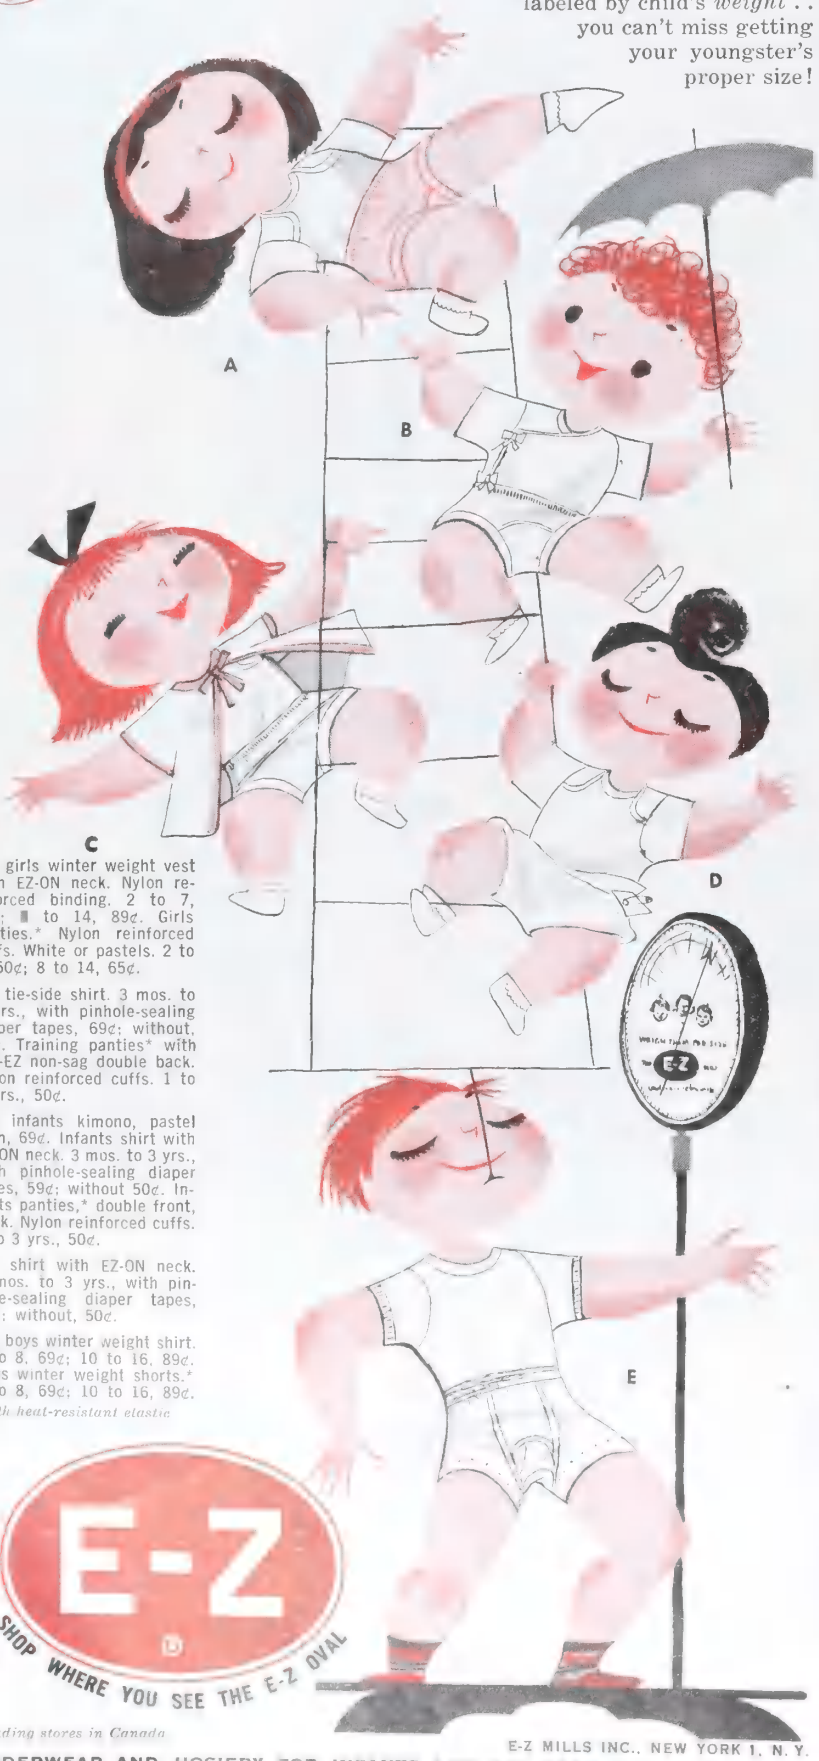
London, Gertrude had kept in cons



We are more inclined to hate one another for points on which we differ, than to love one another for points on which we agree.

—COLTON

Star performers today!

IN E-Z COTTON KNIT UNDIES

Climbing higher than ever in the thrifty mother's regard! E-Z underwear has been the choice of generations . . for its sturdy wear, reasonable price, excellent fit. Each shrink-resistant garment is labeled by child's weight . . you can't miss getting your youngster's proper size!

A. E-Z girls winter weight vest with EZ-ON neck. Nylon reinforced binding. 2 to 7, 69¢; 8 to 14, 89¢. Girls panties.* Nylon reinforced cuffs. White or pastels. 2 to 7, 50¢; 8 to 14, 65¢.

B. E-Z tie-side shirt. 3 mos. to 2 yrs., with pinhole-sealing diaper tapes, 69¢; without, 65¢. Training panties* with FIT-EZ non-sag double back. Nylon reinforced cuffs. 1 to 3 yrs., 50¢.

C. E-Z infants kimono, pastel trim, 69¢. Infants shirt with EZ-ON neck. 3 mos. to 3 yrs., with pinhole-sealing diaper tapes, 59¢; without 50¢. Infants panties,* double front, back. Nylon reinforced cuffs. 1 to 3 yrs., 50¢.

D. E-Z shirt with EZ-ON neck. 3 mos. to 3 yrs., with pinhole-sealing diaper tapes, 59¢; without, 50¢.

E. E-Z boys winter weight shirt. 2 to 8, 69¢; 10 to 16, 89¢. Boys winter weight shorts.* 2 to 8, 69¢; 10 to 16, 89¢.

*With heat-resistant elastic

E-Z

SHOP WHERE YOU SEE THE E-Z OVAL

Also at leading stores in Canada

E-Z MILLS INC., NEW YORK 1, N. Y.

E-Z UNDERWEAR AND HOSIERY FOR INFANTS AND CHILDREN, MEN AND WOMEN

iting her regularly and sending ress in suburban Teddington ted in Gertrude's small red ad-sent a hotel porter out there with rought the reply that Mrs. Wil-urry to Gertrude as soon as she the necessary arrangements to e take over her civil-defense uld not, however, be before the g by Gertrude's bed, one eye on r it was getting close to the time have to drive back to Southamp-ading the prospect of leaving

Gertrude to the already overburdened hotel staff, when there was a knock at the door. I opened it to find myself staring down at a gentle-looking little woman of indeterminate age.

"I'm Lou Hollis," she said. "I've been one of Miss Lawrence's fans ever since she started on the West End. I heard, in a roundabout way, that she was ill. I came to see if I could be of use to her."

Gertrude moved restlessly in the bed. I stepped out into the corridor and closed the door behind me. I suggested to Mrs. Hollis that we move down the corridor in order that our voices should not disturb Gertrude. I realized I owed her visit to the working of the grapevine of Gertrude's fans, one of whom might have seen her arrive at the Savoy or learned of her return through someone connected with ENSA. This was my first appraisal of the extent and importance of a British star's fan following.

I told Mrs. Hollis what I knew of Gertrude's condition, my plans for her, and my hope that Mrs. Williams would arrive to nurse her the following day.

"I'll stay until she comes," Mrs. Hollis offered. "And afterward I can come every day for a few hours after my work until Miss Lawrence is well. Don't worry, Commander. She won't be neglected."

I said that Gertrude should go home to the United States as soon as she could make the flight. I would see to that.

When I looked in the door she was sleeping. I did not rouse her. Lou Hollis had taken off her jacket and seated herself where I had been sitting near the foot of the bed. When Gertrude woke and opened her eyes she would see Mrs. Hollis at once and know that she was not alone.

As I drove to Southampton I began to comprehend, and to marvel humbly at, the almost mathematically precise workings of a Law which, I realized, operated consistently in Gertrude's life. All her life long, whenever she was in any sort of trouble, someone appeared unexpectedly and providentially who could, and was even eager to, give her whatever she needed most acutely at the moment. Life had tried her, had tossed her about, had brought her to the brink of disaster. But Life had never deserted her.

If there is a psychological explanation for this it may be found in the fact that she herself was always a ready giver; not merely of material gifts, but of interest, appreciation and affection.

In her giving, her criterion was never merit, but need. She was at once too proud and too simple to be a respecter of persons. I never knew her to expend herself over someone simply because that person happened to be important or rich or powerful. Just as I never knew her to snub or disregard anyone because he or she was not any of these.

But in addition to being one of life's givers, Gertrude had the rarest of all graces—gratitude. She could forgive a slight or an injury. She could not forget a kindness. She never undervalued friendship, affection, courtesy, loyalty; nor did she accept these as her due. She was always touchingly, almost humbly, grateful for what measure of these came her way. Perhaps in consequence, every crisis in Gertrude's life merely provided an opportunity for the emergence of someone who found great happiness in helping her.

Once, when I remarked on this, adding that it was almost uncanny how often this sort of thing happened, Gertrude said thoughtfully, "Perhaps that's what is meant by something my granny used to say when I was a child—'God pays debts without money.' Granny believed one has only to do what is right and kind at the time, without wondering or worrying about being repaid or even thanked. Because you will get it back, with interest, from God; when you need it most."

I breathed easier when I knew she was out of England; easier still when her cable came announcing: SAFE LANDING DEAREST. Things were bad in Britain that fall and steadily getting worse. And Gertrude was never cautious. If someone challenged her courage or her ability to "take it," she would stop at nothing.

Quick on the heels of her cablegram came a letter full of news. She was at The Berries "resting." Later Helen Mahoney told me that Gertrude's rest was as energetic as I feared it would be—climbing up and down ladders, cleaning out roof gutters, painting shutters. Helen's day off was always the signal for an orgy of rearranging the jars and canisters on all the kitchen shelves according to Gertrude's decorative ideas, with total disregard for convenience or for the fact that Helen was shorter and had less arm reach.

She was also, she wrote, starting work on her autobiography. What did I think of this, or that, for a title? She had offered her services to the USO immediately on returning from her ENSA tour. She wrote, "I am thankful for some months in which to finish my book. And then I hope the USO will send me back to Europe to entertain American troops, as I entertained the Tommies for ENSA. After all, I have a double obligation—to your countrymen as well as my own."

Her letter reached me through Lady du Maurier, at whose home in Cornwall I was a frequent guest.

At the time I was stationed at Fowey on the Cornish coast, quartered in makeshift barracks which offered little protection from the penetrating cold. I was particularly grateful to

...how to ny Tooth otection
ne Entire Family

Dental authorities agree there is no substitute for brushing teeth and gums after every meal.

Since a tooth cannot repair itself, regular care is vital. That's why your toothbrush is so important. That's also why Oral B is a wise choice. It cleans teeth easily without damage, massages gums thoroughly without injury.

Ask your dentist about Oral B. It's a softer brush, with far more extra small, smooth-top filaments—three times more than the ordinary brush.

Both children and adults like the gentle action of an Oral B. Buy it for the extra protection it gives.

IN 3 SIZES...
ASK YOUR DRUGGIST!

Oral B TOOTHBRUSH

RAL B COMPANY
S. Market St., San Jose, Calif.

Star performers tonight!

IN E-Z COTTON KNIT SLEEPERS

Happy dreams for your youngster in E-Z sleepers . . soft as lullabyes! Such comfortable, correct fit, because they're labeled by child's weight as well as size. And such sturdy shrink-resistant quality . . sensible prices. Of course . . mothers have preferred them for generations!

A. E-Z boys ski-type pajamas.* 4 to 10, $2.49; 12 to 16, $2.98.

B. E-Z girls ski-type pajamas.* 4 to 8, $2.25; 10 to 14, $2.69.

C. E-Z 2-piece sleeper* with EZ-ON neck. 6 mos. to 4, pastels, $1.79; with print top, $2.00. Extra pants, $1.00

D. E-Z infants 2-piece heavy weight sleeping bag* with EZ-ON neck, mitten sleeves. Pastels, $1.89. Print top, $2.00.

E. E-Z infants gown with EZ-ON neck. Mitten sleeves. White or pastels, $1.19. Gay prints, $1.49.

*With heat-resistant elastic

SHOP WHERE YOU SEE THE E-Z OVAL

E-Z MILLS INC., NEW YORK 1, N. Y.
Also at leading stores in Canada

E-Z UNDERWEAR AND HOSIERY FOR INFANTS AND CHILDREN, MEN AND WOMEN

Lady du Maurier, who, besides her thoughtfulness for the American sailors at our base, offered me not only a hospitable fireside at which to thaw out, but a mailing address at which I could receive letters from Gertrude in less than half the time required to pass through the regulation Navy P. O. Her daughter, Daphne, the wife of General Sir Frederick Browning, and their children were at "Menabilly," a few miles distant. A friendship sprang up in those months which was to result in Daphne's sending me her play September Tide two years later, and in Gertrude's appearing in it with great success in London and the provinces. Gertrude had starred with Sir Gerald du Maurier in his last success, Behold We Live, by John van Druten. She had spoken to me with the deepest admiration of the fortitude displayed by Lady du Maurier, who had gone to the theater night after night to watch her husband playing the role of a cabinet minister unknowingly doomed by cancer, while all the time she knew that the same disease had already marked Sir Gerald as a victim. In this admiration, Gertrude unwittingly expressed her own stoic philosophy.

When I had found Gertrude ill at the Savoy I accepted unquestioningly her assurance that there was nothing more serious the matter with her than the effects of fatigue, and the shock of the sights she had witnessed in Normandy. This was understandable. During the next few months, in my few moments of leisure, a picture of her kept appearing before me. Gertrude's most memorable features were her eyes—large, widely set and emphasized by her high cheekbones. It was these eyes which I saw recurrently on waking or in fitful sleep. But now they appeared to me not brilliant, not mischievously mocking, nor tender, at which time their blueness was ineffable. I saw them clouded over with weariness, full of the sights of the battlefields.

Therefore I was increasingly determined to exert whatever influence I could to keep Gertrude from accepting an assignme would again overtax her strength. V wrote me that she intended signin USO, I replied opposing the idea. I o my opposition until I heard that Jol radt, now known in motion picture Hoyt, would be in command of th knew John through our mutua Joseph Reed, and thought very highl

I then gave my consent, but under plete misapprehension (for which I blame the pressure of my own duties. USO tour would be confined to ca hospitals in the United States. Gertru continue to think so up to the very troupe set out. Her heart was set on to Europe, something which I had v

Had I stood out against the tour fiedly, would she have abandoned not sure she would. She might still h trived a way around my ban, making her cleverness in getting what sh while making this appear what I wa

Ten days after Gertrude delivere publisher the manuscript of A Star (she air-mailed me an advance cop book, calling my attention to the ded "For Richard"), she was on a plane USO unit, bound, not for a swing ar United States nor for the ETO, bu South Pacific. I learned later that up t moment of the take-off she did not destination of the unit, which besi trude and John consisted of Nancy accordionist, and Georgie Tapps, da Gertrude's letters from the Pacific very informative. Neither the climat exigencies of a six-week island-hopp playing two shows a day, were con literary expression. I would have kn or nothing about her weeks in the Pa Theater but for a diary which she kep lously during her tour. This was st other private papers, and I read it fo time after her death.

Her comments on her experiences taneous and characteristic. She wro first day, consoling herself for the di ment of being sent to the Pacific:

But this is the Army, Mrs. A. Pam, H David saw me off. They are all very and quite sure I shall return looking hatma Gandhi. . . . Dearest, I love much today up here in the sky. Please feet on the ground. . . .

This is April 19th and we are in a on the thirteen-hour hop to Hickam o to Kwajalein—fifteen A.A.C. men, the our unit. We are now about to con glasses of water each in case we a down. . . . The briefing at Hamilton cluded lectures on first aid, on how to life raft in case we have to ditch the another on tropical diseases. We were that none of the shots we had taken w any good if we were bitten by a mos that a plane seldom survives a ditchin the officer asked, "Any questions?" I n "Yes. Where can I phone and say I'v my mind?". . .

Kwajalein. Well, now I am all con having crossed the International Date now the day before yesterday. . . . W Japs surrounding the island, Kwajalei danger zone. From here we take off f and then by shuttle plane to Guam shows begin. . . .

Guam. April 22. We gave our first sh to a battalion of Seabees—1500 of th outside theater. Very efficient. Our se at 8:30 was about half an hour away to noisy Seabees (72d Battalion). Here the very poor, the stage enormous; we scream, and we were feeling the heat

From Guam the unit flew to Tinian . . . hence no shade and boili day, but cool at night." Here, as o the intense heat, humidity, insects, a ginning of the rainy season added the difficulty of giving performances air stages. "We are constantly u pressing and packing. . . ."

Gertrude's experience in Norma taught her that the troops were si sight of uniforms; they wanted to tainers in costumes that were pretty cut down on her personal luggage to her three complete changes of stage For each show she dressed and m

MAKE YOUR BED SO IT STAYS MADE WITH WONDERFUL WORK-SAVING

Pepperell Snug Fit Sheets

NEW LUXURY, NEW ECONOMY... NYLON SNUG FIT SHEETS!

Pamper yourself as never before—and be practical, too! Pepperell Nylon Snug Fit Sheets (top and bottom—in white and colors) are so luxurious, wear as only nylon can, and they wash and dry in a jiffy. Think what you'll save when you wash them at home—just like nylon undies!

DREAMY SNUG FIT® COLORS MATCH REGULAR LADY PEPPERELLS

Like all Lady Pepperells, famous Snug Fit Sheets come in six lovely colors in percale and muslin. Yet they cost only pennies more than white. And Pepperell Snug Fit Sheets are the only fitted sheets with the unique seaming‡ that makes corners ⅓ stronger to wear far longer!

...AND A NEW WONDER BLANKET—IT'S PEPPERELL'S ACRILAN*

Here's a luxury blanket that won't shrink and stays fluffy no matter how often it's washed! It's wonderfully warm. Comes in 6 exquisite colors dyed to mix or match with Lady Pepperell Sheets.

‡Patent applied for ® Chemstrand Acrylic Fiber

Lady Pepperell SHEETS AND BLANKETS

WHITE • COLORS • REGULAR • SNUG FIT • NYLON

® PEPPERELL FABRICS

...s for an appearance on Broad-...ntrived flower-decked hairdos, ...g bracelets and earrings; never ... indispensable false eyelashes, ...l but dissolved by the humidity ...on which bathed her as she sang ... in tents . . . no covering on the ...ts scuttling about. Suddenly it be-...t can rain only out here. The crude ... awash. I was wet and steaming. ...moved from the soaking clay hill-... them our full show. Halfway ...nerator broke down, but the men ...ashlights on us and we carried ... she appeared the men clamored ...ted a problem. The directors of ...sored this song from Gertrude's ...stent demands for it from sol-...rs who had seen her in Lady in ... her to the resident USO direc-...e. The calls for "Jennie" were ...e shows. ... hemming and hawing, she was ...t sing the song, provided she ...umps. ...ys like the bumps. They yell for ...rgued. They did indeed. They ...es declar-...nie" with-...as as flat ...hout salt. ... have to ...r Depart-...ldom told ...ltimately, ...issued the ... Lawrence ...mps, *pro-...them side-...aordinary ...s and de-...ccupy the ...while fight-...ar.

...ithi the ... south to ...nds of the

... 8000 men ... in Petelini ...0. Score is ...ar we have ...re 168,700

WHO LOVES SHALL BE BETRAYED

By JEAN TODD FREEMAN

We come to light through darkness,
To wisdom in like fashion:
The one who trusts shall be betrayed
And so shall learn compassion.

To love is to discover
The hardest way to live,
For he who loves must suffer
And then forgive, forgive.

in mind as, he has said, he wrote the star part in every one of his plays. She had missed creating the role because when it was ready for production she was appearing in the long run of Lady in the Dark.

The company was billeted at Moana Hotel, next to the celebrated Outrigger Canoe Club on Waikiki Beach. Each morning, Gertrude hopped out of bed, put on her swim suit and joined Duke and Nadine Kahanamoku for coffee at the Outrigger Canoe Club. Duke took her swimming. Finding her a good and fearless swimmer, he initiated her into several new strokes. At her insistence he took her surfboard riding. All John's remonstrances that she was likely to break her neck or be drowned or both, and what would I say, went over Gertrude's shoulder like so much sea water. The excitement of the sport, with the constant imminence of danger, acted on her like a long draught of champagne.

"Darling," John said, "you can break your pretty neck any way you choose, after we get back to the States. Until then, I have a responsibility to your husband. I promised him, God help me, to look out for you. I don't want to have to cable him that your friends have fed you to the sharks."

When these appeals had no effect he reminded her of her professional obligations to the USO. What would happen to Blithe Spirit if she were drowned?

"Think how much better I would play Elvira if I were really a ghost," she said. "Oh, Noel understands me. I would be the most infuriating spirit to have fluttering around. Perhaps Richard was thinking that when he made you promise to bring me back alive. He wants to be sure of being able to manage me."

"If Dick figures he can manage you at all, when you don't want to be managed," John retorted, "he shows greater imagination than any Aldrich on record."

A few days before they were to return to San Francisco, John was sun-bathing on Waikiki when he happened to look out to sea and saw beyond the surf a strange object protruding from the water. He watched it a moment. Observing that it seemed to float about in one spot, it occurred to him that it might be the periscope of some small new type of submarine, and that it was his duty to report it promptly to the Navy guards.

The object had not escaped the watchful eyes of the U.S. Navy. Before John could sound the alert, a plane had been sent to investigate. It circled low and swooped, then rose and flew back to shore. No submarine, the pilot reported; only Miss Gertrude Lawrence floating underwater wearing a glass mask such as skin divers use, to which was attached a two-foot-long plastic tube for breathing purposes. She had bought it at a shop in the town and was experimenting with it.

"With a thing like that you can stay in the water for hours and hours," she said happily. "I was having a marvelous time until you sent the Navy after me."

"Save your gadget for the Cape," John retorted. "Play mermaid there where there are no sharks. Though I'd bet on you to hold your own among the man-eaters. I've lost ten pounds on this tour and most of it because of you." John reminded her of a weekend party at Sam Pryor's place in Connecticut, where the guests had included John and his wife, Gertrude and myself, the Wendell Willkies and Joseph Reeds. "When I remember how we men got together and expressed our envy of Dick, all I can think is: What a bunch of suckers! What Dick Aldrich rates is sympathy, and as of this moment, he has mine."

(To be Continued)

... first visits to the hospitals on ... clear that the time the members ... spent in the wards where the ...n Okinawa were arriving every ... to the greatest advantage:

... to the hospitals I have appointed ...ilman. I take the names and ad-...vounded men's wives and mothers ...s, and write to them giving cheer-...rday I wrote 50 letters, and I have ...do. It is quite a job as it all has to ...ghand, and individual letters, of ...hink those at home will be glad to ... of their loved ones. There's an-...l ship, the Solace, due from ...orrow. Pray God she will get ... Japs attacked the last one, the ... many were killed. . . .

... Airborne again. This time for ...nder what our orders will be there. ...ndance now stands 200,000 men ... Received my Pacific Theater rib-...n General Ross. . . .

... to Honolulu, the company duly ... Maj. Maurice Evans. He wel-...ide's offer to appear in a play at ...Oahu, understanding and sympa-...vith the reason she advanced: "I ...mething that will re-establish me ..."

... lected was Noel Coward's Blithe ...as Gertrude's first opportunity ..., the ghost of the first wife whose ...n disrupts the widower's second ... provides the high comedy of ...'s "improbable farce." She had ...d to appear in the role which ...n the same glovelike smoothness ...Noel had written it with Gertrude

Today's powerful detergents dry out, roughen your hands

Delighted housewives report amazing, quick relief
from
"Detergent Hands"

New deep-softening lotion actually heals rough, red, chapped hands

It's scientifically years ahead—this new Angel Skin by Pond's! More than just a "cosmetic" lotion, Angel Skin is specifically designed to counteract the harsh, drying action of detergents . . . help prevent irritation. Housewives say this new lotion works wonders for rough, scratchy, red hands.

For Angel Skin gives more than just superficial smoothing to your skin . . . it goes deep. Angel Skin's rich goodness penetrates right down to the living skin tissue—where roughness, redness and dryness really begin.

See its amazing effects! Hands lose their dried-out, scratchy feel . . . their coarse redness. Look smoother, whiter—right away. Get new Angel Skin by Pond's—49¢, 25¢, plus tax (slightly higher in Canada).

No sticky coating! Unlike old-style lotions, Angel Skin contains no gummy "thickener." All of its richness goes in at once—never leaves hands sticky

MAGNIFIED SKIN DIAGRAM SHOWS ANGEL SKIN'S DEEPER SOFTENING

ANGEL SKIN penetrates the outer skin surface

Brings immediate help to living skin tissue where chapped roughness and redness begin

Angel Skin
by POND'S

....for Casual Carefree Living

colorful, new Carousel dinnerware

BY UNIVERSAL

CREATORS OF FAMED BALLERINA

It's Oven-Proof — with an exclusive Rolled Rim that makes it less likely to chip; much easier to handle, to store, and to use. Carousel's perfectly smooth solid colors can't wear or wash off . . . They're under the gleaming glaze.

BERMUDA PINK

CARIBBEAN BLUE

JAMAICA GRAY

NASSAU GREEN

It's debonair dinnerware to make an Event out of every meal you serve. Carousel's jaunty, modern lines blend with glamorous, soft-tone colors to add beauty to any table. You'll use it often for semi-formal dinners; informal buffets; and to add fresh mealtime magic to your everyday dining. You'll adore the zestful way Carousel fits into your way of life; the modest way it fits into your budget.

Choose Carousel — in mix-or-match colors, as you wish — from a full open stock selection; in complete sets to serve eight or more; or start with a Set-for-Four (4 dinner plates, 4 salad plates, 4 cups, 4 saucers) priced at $8.95 (slightly higher Denver and West). At better stores, or write — we'll tell you where.

UNIVERSAL POTTERIES, INC.

Cambridge, Ohio

If it's stamped Universal • It's guaranteed ovenproof.

Corinne Griffith's COOKBOO

"Wherever we traveled, I gathe recipes." Fifth in a series her round-the-world fa

I MET an Armenian by the name of Dikran Kouyoumdjian in London in 1932. He had just arrived from the south of France to write the dialogue for a talking picture of Michael Arlen's book, Lily Christine, which I was to make for Paramount at Elstree.

He told the story of Michael Arlen's presentation to the King of Spain. When a reporter asked Michael how he felt, he replied that he was very flattered—"Though I was much more excited over meeting William Saroyan." asked the reporter. "Well, after swered Michael Arlen, "one ma king every now and then, but w Armenian meets another A that's news." You may take Kouyoumdjian's word for it, Dikran Kouyoumdjian just hap be Michael Arlen's real name!

We were lunching at Boulest off Covent Garden. Michael had his favorite soup:

CREAM OF GREEN PEA AND PARMESAN CHEESE

Mince together 1 medium onion and ½ clove garlic. Sauté in 2 tablespoons butter or margarine until tender. Add to 1 cup cooked or canned peas. Press through sieve and put the purée in large saucepan. Add 1 cup chicken broth, 1 cup milk and 2 tablespoons butter or margarine and heat to the boiling point. Blend 1 tablespoon flour smoothly into 1 cup light cream. Add to the soup. Stir until it just comes to a boil. Remove from heat. Add a little hot soup to 2 slightly beaten egg yolks; then pour back into soup and stir vigorously. Add 6 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese, ½ teaspoon salt and a dash of pepper. Serve hot garnished with tissue-thin slices of salami, cut into matchstick-size strips. Six servings.

Here is something new in a tomato-juice cocktail—the popular American beginner for dinner.

VIRGINIA COCKTAIL

Boil the following ingredients together for 5 minutes: 1 No. 2½ can tomatoes, 1 bay leaf, 2 beef-bouillon cubes, ¼ teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon sugar, ½ cup chili sauce, 2 cups hot water, a pinch of celery salt and a dash of paprika. Strain. Add a dash of Tabasco and the juice of 1 lemon. Serve ice-cold. Eight servings.

Lovely to look at, delightful to eat and something to remember is this dish. Fine for a party lunch or the buffet-supper table.

GREEN CHICKEN SALAD

Mix well together 1½ cups diced cooked chicken, ¾ cup chopped celery and ½ cup salted toasted walnuts and marinate in regular French dressing (2 tablespoons) for ½ hour in refrigerator. Place on lettuce leaves. Four servings. The following dressing is to be serv rately:

DRESSING

Please take this hint: Keep c red wine vinegar. Force 2 tabl baby-food spinach and 1 tab capers through a sieve. Put 1 n sized Spanish onion and ½ cu cress through meat grinder, fine blade. Strain. Keep juice. pulp add 1 cup mayonnaise, spoon anchovy paste and all ing for dressing and force, again, sieve. Add just enough of straine and-water-cress juice for good ency. Add ¼ teaspoon salt and ground pepper to taste. Serve th dressing in a separate bowl to b with the chicken salad.

Something new (which has rev ized the cooking of meats) has bee to our household. It is an electr serie broiler—the greatest thi Barnum and Bailey's Circus! turkey, pork, ham, beef, even t hamburger, are raised to unb heights when cooked this simple

A ROLLED ROAST

Have the butcher remove the r a 3-rib roast of beef, roll the m tie securely with a clean stri rolled roast should weigh a pounds. Place the roast on the sp roast is less than 4″ in diameter, low heat 12 minutes to a pound If over 4″, allow 15 minutes or rare. For medium rare, incre roasting time further. Brush casionally during roasting with spoons soy sauce. Cooked on t serie, your roast will be app brown on the outside, tender a within, and the pan juices will delicious flavor.

Editors' Note: Corinne Grif motion-picture star, has collecte in many countries—from famo and hostesses and from obscure perb) cooks. The recipes here are collection soon to be published a Copyright, 1954, by Corinne Griffith. Corinne Griffith's Cookbook is from her forthcoming book, Eggs I Have Known.

PRESCRIP

CONTINU

you're probably anxious to ge of the weather, so I'll make the as possible. First I want you sses and telephone numbers o paper. Pass it along, please. I'm you to keep in touch with me by week for the next two months. that if you will do as I say, call o Doctor Blake's ten rules, more you—now listen to this—more ou will be married within sixty more will be engaged."

a happy murmur of approval, by the scraping of folding g eagerly toward the eminent was standing back, arms folded, mpact of his words. I wanted to so he would see me back there, eem advisable.

unched on the lecture. "Now bt you're saying to yourselves, reposterous,' but you are wrong. uinea pigs. Doctor Blake has is sort of thing before. In Bos- rancisco. In Chicago. And with ety-eight per cent success."

iling with such confidence, and ently, winsome, that even I be- Ordinarily I wouldn't have been t a rally like this, but since I was king it, I decided to take notes, ughs. I signaled Father Bristor, ack with paper and pencil, and, lice from my lap, he patted my tiptoed out of the room.

me you know good grooming," ergast said. "You dress with ssume you are normal, happy his start, I'll now give you Doc- rules. Paste them on the mirror sing table. Review them each v. Here we go. Rule One. Don't n to come to you. I don't care n the books. Find some proper nally approved method of get- ed with him. Rule Two. After m, contrive to make dates with . Men don't like to know they're Rule Three. Mother him. Show im and his health. Rule Four. At , show him you need him. Men self-sufficient women. I assume l self-sufficient, or you wouldn't Five. Be natural. Rule Six. Look d praise him. Rule Seven. Send t's not in the books either."

p from my notes and started. eyes were resting on me. Or were ked puzzled.

," he continued. "Don't try to ous by talking about other men, ary. Rule Nine. Be well groomed, a smudge on your face once in a give the effect of constant primp- . Don't cheapen yourself in any something that might make him r you, but introduce some situa- show him how much you really —how much he might miss you. e him propose.

friends, isn't that a simple pre- s practically foolproof. Here's touch." He gave us his phone d will the young lady in the back th the list of names, please." I thought. And I never looked en after haying on a hot day in be I could come under Rule 9 not being polished up. Actually, done too badly by me—no parts nothing fouled up—but tonight air needed a shampoo and ch coat hardly framed me in , tonight Rule 5, being natural, were a cinch. I stuffed the set of pocket, pulled on my boots and, gy umbrella dangling from my led as smartly as I could over to dreamboat.

I said, "I know you must be day's work and I won't keep you like to ask you something. Are ?"

ing, I looked up and he was just sitting there looking at me.

"Candy," he said, "you look beautiful tonight. You're a really beautiful woman."

I couldn't say anything for a minute. I didn't know what to say. Les used to say I was cute, but that's all. I suppose everyone on earth looks beautiful to someone. Finally I pulled out of my spin and said, "Thank you, doctor."

We got home a little past midnight. I gave Jake my hand and told him it had been a wonderful evening, but Jake knows what he wants. He took that hand and laid it carefully at my side. Then he took me in his arms and kissed me. It was just a nice, good kiss. "That's till the next time," he said. He took my key and unlocked my door, but he didn't come in, and I was relieved. I just wanted to come in alone and think about that kiss. That's a smart rule men could use, I thought, as I shut the door and waved him good-by—make one good, with a promise to dream on. There would be a next time, then. What technique. The genius!

Properly proportioned moder designed to make today's smaller living areas seem spac

Above—for your important living-dining area, unusually Heywood Coordinated Modern lends itself to easy arrangen minimum space. For your bedroom, space-saving Modern of birch carefully Home-Planned so you may be sure first purcha blend with each new addition you make. See Heywood-Wakefield at your favorite furniture or department store.

NEW "HOW TO DECORAT

Gladys Miller, famous decorating cons attractive home with Modern. Send 25¢ also like our Old Colony decorating book,

Heywood-Wakefield, Gardner, Mass. Dept. LH-29
I enclose in coin for your decorating books a (check your choice) ☐ Modern ☐ Old Colony

NAME .....
STREET .....
CITY & ZONE ..... STATE

carpels

Heywood-Wakefield, also makers of Ashcraft and Old Colony furnit

TON, GA.
TS, INC.

....for Casual Carefree Living

colorful, new Carousel dinnerware

BY UNIVERSAL

CREATORS OF FAMED BALLERINA

It's Oven-Proof — with an exclusive Rolled Rim that makes it less likely to chip; much easier to handle, to store, and to use. Carousel's perfectly smooth solid colors can't wear or wash off . . . They're under the gleaming glaze.

BERMUDA PINK

CARIBBEAN BLUE

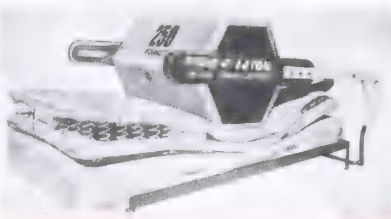
JAMAICA GRAY

NASSAU GREEN

It's debonair dinnerware to make an Event out o every meal you serve. Carousel's jaunty, modern lin blend with glamorous, soft-tone colors to add bea to any table. You'll use it often for semi-fo dinners; informal buffets; and to add fresh mea magic to your everyday dining. You'll ado zestful way Carousel fits into your way of l modest way it fits into your budget.

Choose Carousel — in mix-or-match color wish — from a full open stock selection; sets to serve eight or more; or start with a (4 dinner plates, 4 salad plates, 4 cu priced at $8.95 (slightly higher Der, At better stores, or write — we'll tel

as well as mat- the extra strength, erm-A-Lator Wire an be sure of longer- and beauty. Perm-A- ly spaced spring steel adding out of spring open- nently . . . there's never any lumping, or sagging. This ue costs you no more, yet ou more for your money. Ask stronger, longer-lasting Perm-A-Lator Wire Insulators in all the furni- ture and mattresses you buy!



for Tag!

Perm-A-Lator's Name Is Your Guarantee!

-Feel"! No Sagging!

FOR FREE BOOKLET

TWO 3-WAY COMFORT TEST

TORTURE TESTS PROVE WIRE INSULATORS LAST TWICE LONGER THAN ORDINARY INSULATORS

Millions of rolling cycles prove conclusively that wire insulators give permanent protection against "coil-feel" . . . add longer life to all upholstered products.

Perm-A-Lator Wire Insulators Manufactured by

FLEX-O-LATORS, Inc., CARTHAGE, MO.

Plants in Carthage, Mo. and New Castle, Pa.

I MET an Armenian by ...n, the eternal Dikran Kouyoumdjian ...lieves that only 1932. He had just arrive...fire. That's all of France to write th...sparks the primi- talking picture of Mi...t a cold rainy night Lily Christine, whic...g a fire. I went back Paramount at Els...ate, and we had it on presentation t...nt to talk about himself, a reporter a...y easy listening. It's funny replied th...r strangers sometimes click—

He told the s...he fire.

"Though...ne and me ...s. He told me farm where he ..., and he let me about myself, too, ...n was nice. He asked ... the first intelligent questions about ranch life I'd heard in four years.

The most valuable sense of humor is the kind that enables a person to see instantly what it isn't safe to laugh at. —ANON.

Well, after the fire had burned down twice I asked him if he'd like to see the shop. The shop means a lot to me. For four years I'd worked about twelve hours a day to make my start. Not much time for fun, and I was only now just coming up for air. We walked around and I snapped the lights on in my two showcases. As he leaned over to study the brooches, rings and bracelets, apropos of nothing he looked up and smiled.

"CALL me Jake," he said. And then, after a pause, "All your own design?"

"Everything I do is my own design," I told him.

"How about diamonds, Candy?" he said, and incidentally he said "Candy" as though it was really sweet. "I have a diamond. Square cut, about two and a half carats. It was my grandmother's. Would you be interested in designing a setting for it?"

That rustle of whatever it was sounded pretty loud. "Sure," I said. "I'll do it. I'll submit a few designs. Man or woman?"

"Woman," said Jake.

Oh, I thought, why do I always have to fight my way upstream? There is somebody else.

"Tell you what I'll do," he was saying. "Next Saturday afternoon I'll bring it down about four or so. Then, if you're free, we can go someplace for dinner. O.K.?"

"Wonderful," I said, but I hadn't planned that this was to be a business relationship.

That week I slaved over the designs. Saturday afternoon found me in my navy bengaline suit, high lights in my hair, polish on my nails, and all the rules memorized, with illustrations. Promptly at four I saw Jake's long black convertible pull up in front of the shop. The eminent dreamboat crawled out—he's no pee-wee, over six feet at least. I leaned against the soapstone fire table, trying to look casual.

"Hi," he said, opening the door and setting off the bell. "I brought the stone." He was right down to business, stepping over to the counter. As I laid out a piece of black velvet I watched his long fingers unwrap a fold of tissue from his wallet. A stone that flashed blue spilled out. It was a lovely rock, deep and brilliant. I got out my glass.

Magnificent," I said, and I ...You're sure you want me to set ...ou're sure you like my work we ...This is a beautiful stone."

"Definitely," he said. "I'm glad ...

I'd outdone myself on the desig... two modern ones, then one with ... four-prong shanks, and a fourth th... two visible means of support. I'd ... this setting a year ago, but had n... because I hadn't wanted to waste ... ferior stone. I showed Jake this dra... like saving the point of a piece of ... last bite.

"THIS one is unusual," I said. ... maximum of light get to the stone ... minimum of metal to distract the e... gem itself. The stone would be sur... light with complete safety."

"Um," Jake said, and he laid th... on the proper spot on the drawi... it."

"What size?" I asked. I really ... to know.

"Size?" he said. "What's norma...

I laughed. "That's like saying, ... normal size of shoe?' If you don't ... size, I can make it up and resize i... sizing won't strain this mounting. I... to be a surprise."

"Yes. That's right. Well, put it ... and let's shove off."

"Don't you want the price?" I sa... made settings aren't for free these ...

"I'll trust you to do me right. ... your doctor. Well, I'll trust my je... about a drive? While the sun's out ...

"Let's see ho... den looks," I ... casually. I'd jus... morning hosing ... York dirt off, sc... tables and c... changing the ... pieces on the stea... However, I'd ha... to set all the f... against the boar... that he could ... manly pleasure of setting it all up ... sun was shining when we went ou... liked th... place immediately.

"Say, this is great," he said, and ... around doing manly things with th...

"Coke?"

Jake stretched full length on th... picked up for five bucks at auctio... swank. Wait on me, woman."

Yes, doctor, I thought, for six ... longer. But why don't you fight clea... what I'm up against. There's nothing ... about another woman.

We settled ourselves in the gar... the chaise and I in the bright blue ... steamer chair. The sun poured d... like a special floodlight.

"Is it ethical for me to ask how ... five classmates did this week?" I ... they all call you?"

"Sure they called. All but you. H... doing?" He turned and faced me, a... up my glass.

"I just wondered how they're ... said, fencing.

"Well, twenty-one of them said t... a date—of one sort or another. Th... start. Of course in any experimen... human error there's bound to be so... But twenty-one out of twenty-five is ... you?"

"Did any of them need help?"

"Well, yes, three, as a matter o... asked to come in to see me, and tw... to visit them to give them some ad...

"And you went?"

"Sure. They're the laggards. The... a handful who go for the doctor... straightened out now. Let's get do... How're you doing?"

"All right, I think. I don't know ... to tell so soon."

"What's he like?" Jake said, sm... ing at me closely.

I sat there a little stunned, not bei... in a situation, and then, just when ... I'd have to make some giveaway, Ch... who lives across the yard, bless his lit...

e day by throwing one otes down. I jumped up note from under the ng on?" Jake said. "Is ommunicate in the Vila little angry, especially d up and saw Charlie window. Charlie's cute

e. Not too small, not ather a happy-looking

Charlie Apel. He's an says to hold our pose nutes more and then r for a Coke."
n long?"
r," I replied. "He's ee illustrations out here
Of course," I added, uch money in this kind pay him for it with et my pictures in the his drink around and ands. His face was red.

ought of the book I'd im on Fourth Avenue Rule 7.)
I've got something for s it on Fourth Avenue
unting an out-of-print I'll get it."
out and handed it to ter and Smooth," he ough it. "Never heard s a find." He unfolded w England streams in book and checked the some of the trips he'd streams I know, this y accurate. Thanks, it on my vacation this ys either climb or take Maine each year."

r," I said, and then I harlie in.
ed nice, especially if appeals to you. He and nds and made shillyation over one drink.
said we had to leave to chester for a table he'd ft right away, because Rule 8 here. I certainly get Jake jealous about who's a confirmed never shown a yen
. I got my new benga-ut that makes you look and we clattered down street, Charlie bringing hen he saw Jake's car e and winked, and then ying to glide in, which ed in, Charlie said, how about dinner to-
and The Red Shoes?
Art. About six."

as though he would I didn't blame him. It harlie not to know the situation. He'd never efore; his contributions sional evening being a s and a few bottles of ce while I upholstered, walls, or polished my didn't know what to started the motor.
morrow," I said.
said, "you play hard e shot the car out from dn't talk much until we green grass beyond the Bridge, and then sudd a second and smiled.
e job you're wearing."
is eminence felt better harlie, the boy painter, llage.
e took me to in Westuietly elegant—not the you run to any old Jake, picking a place for keeping special fabulous

Needletuft®

NOBILITY

in broadloom and hand-carved rugs!

Only in Needletuft can you find coordinated carpets and hand-carved rugs to carry your decoration scheme from room to room. Deep luxury pile, 16 fashion colors, soil-resistant, mothproof, washable, made with remarkable new, hard-wearing Spunvis rayon carpet yarn. Shown, diamond-carved "Rajah" rug in Rose Beige, accent and room sizes, about $12.95 sq. yd. "Nobility" broadloom, shown in Cocoa, 9′, 12′, and 15′ widths, about $9.95 sq. yd.

for the enriching touch

Needletuft® rugs and carpets

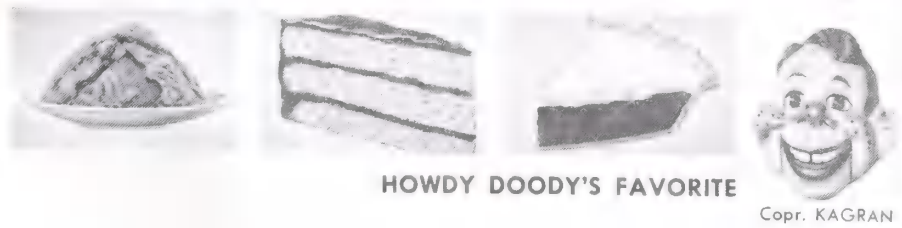
For free folder, "Your Scrapbook of Decorating Ideas," write to: NEEDLETUFT RUG MILLS, DALTON, GA.
FLOOR COVERING DIVISION OF CABIN CRAFTS, INC.

Only Royal INSTANT PUDDING is Super Homogenized

FOR "MELT-IN-YOUR-MOUTH" FLAVOR and SMOOTHNESS!



PRE-COOKED
EVEN A CHILD CAN MAKE IT!
Just Add to Cold Milk... Beat Let Set... Serve!

Extra Smooth! Extra Delicious! Digestible!

Because Royal Instant Pudding—and only Royal—is pre-cooked and super homogenized, it is buttery smooth from the swirls on top to the last smidgen you greedily scrape from the dish. Your tongue finds no tough film, no lumps, no starchy taste in a luscious spoonful. It's so easy to digest you can give it to babies. Get super homogenized ROYAL INSTANT PUDDING at your food store today.

Ideal, too, for Making Quick Ice Cream, Frostings, Pie Filling!

HOWDY DOODY'S FAVORITE

Copr. KAGRAN

After that first date I saw Jake every Saturday afternoon and evening for a month, and he always dropped down after dinner Wednesdays to see the ring. Sundays and Mondays he said he always flew to Maine for his days off.

The first Saturday after the Westchester date we went to see La Bohème at the Met, and then had dinner at a fancy place in the East Sixties. The second Saturday we drove up to Connecticut on a fake junket. I think now he'd called ahead, because we drove into a little side road and stopped at a gem of a small old house.

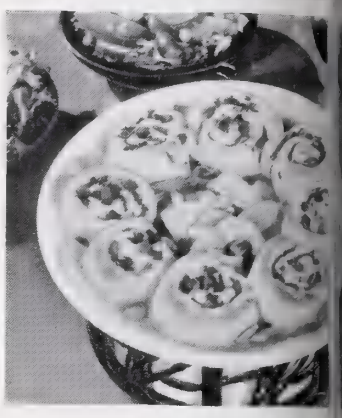
"What's this?" I said, half hoping he was thinking of buying it.

"My Cousin Larry's. I want them to meet you," he said. I was glad I'd worn my new tweed. It's bluish and does me no harm.

Cousin Larry and his wife, Ann, were fun and easy to talk to. With no urging, we stayed to dinner. They were just my kind of people, and they let me help. We sat in the kitchen while food simmered and roasted, and we danced to a portable they'd built into the kitchen cupboards. Their dog, a sweet no-breed, tore around the linoleum like crazy, and a tiger kitty sat on a shelf near the stove on a red calico pad and blinked and slept. It was all very peaceful and fun.

WEDNESDAY nights when Jake came down we stopped in the shop, and then took a walk around the Village, and afterward home for the chocolate deal, which had become a ritual. Oh, and one Wednesday was May first. The bell rang and when I went to open the door I found a big cellophane-covered basket of chocolates hanging on the doorknob. We used to hang May baskets out West, with mother working with us night after night, making them of crepe and tissue paper on the dining-room table after the dishes were cleared away. This May basket in New York really gave me a thrill, and I ran out. I saw Jake's car down the block and I caught him behind the wheel and hung a kiss on him that drew a little knot of onlookers. It was all perfectly legal, because that's what you're supposed to do if you can catch the one who hung the basket. Incidentally, in the bottom of the basket was a little volume of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's poems, which I'd mentioned once.

Charlie, meanwhile. I went out with him that Sunday night. Here I'd been twiddling my thumbs for four years, and now Charlie was taking me to dinner, opening doors and being powerfully entertaining. I began to wonder if maybe a bird in the hand wasn't worth Jake in the bush, swell as Jake was, because the day when that darned ring would be finished was drawing nigh.



So I was nice to Charlie—even unwittingly used Rule 7 on him. I ran across an artist's spot at auction and bought it for a bargain. I honestly never thought of using the rules on Charlie, but he was in a tizzy, as though I'd set up an annuity for him. Now I had him eating out of my hand, and I didn't know whether to pull it back or not.

Every time I saw Jake I asked about the class, and he said at the end of the fourth week eight of "the bevy" were engaged. It was fantastic. I decided if he wasn't eminent he ought to be. He always asked if I had any questions, and how I was making out. I always said I thought I was doing pretty well, everything considered. And it would seem so to anyone, I should think. Wednesday nights were so pleasant that I began to wonder about the little pearl who was waiting for that two-and-a-half-carat diamond. I decided not to worry too much, and just enjoy life, keeping well within bounds. This was a hard thing to do, if you know what I mean. Jake was a really attractive gent.

Monday morning of the fifth week the phone rang when I was in an unhappy mess—not with the ring, but with a difficult solder job on a brooch. Charlie had stayed too late the night before and had hinted that come fall he would be on his feet, and believe it or not, he was tired of the single life. Nothing definite. Just hints. No proposal. Just hints. You know, the cagey bachelor who is loath to give up what he's got, but still isn't sure what he's missing. I had the unsteadiest hand of my career. I'd just picked up the hot brooch with the tongs for the fourth time, and flipped it into

Meadow Gol
Mealtime Adventures

by Beatrice
Cooke

FREE! 10 MILK-F
CASSEROLE REC

- Chicken Pinwheel Casserole
- Beef-Macaroni Loaf
- Seafood au Gratin
- Hominy Special
- Salmon Shortcake
- Ham-Potato Bake
- Tuna Supr
- Mushroom Pie
- Frank-Mac Casserole
- Pork Chop

If you're looking for new ideas fo meals, I'm sure you'll be delighte 10 recipes listed above. They incl poultry, seafood and meatless c And to get the richest, creamiest suggest you use Meadow Gold Hor Milk. It has thick country cream drop—a delicious way to give yo extra proteins and vitamins. Try in this Chicken Pinwheel Casser

Chicken Pinwheel Cass

6 tbs. Meadow Gold Butter
1 cup sliced fresh mushrooms
1 med. onion, chopped
6 tbs. flour
1 tsp. salt
¼ tsp. pepper
¼ tsp. celery salt
1¼ cups chicken broth
1¼ cups Me Homogeni
1 tbs. lemon
2 tbs. chopp
1 cup sliced partially c
1 cup sliced partially c
1 cup frozen partially c
4 cups diced cooked chicke

Cook mushrooms and onion in bu tender. Stir in flour and seasonings. add chicken broth and milk; cook u ened. Add lemon juice and parsley. In 2-quart casserole alternate layers of chicken and sauce. Bake at 350° for 2 Increase oven temperature to 400°; wheel baking powder biscuits arou casserole. Bake 20 minutes more.

HOW TO GET YOUR 10 FREE REC

Each recipe printed on standard fil
Write to: Beatrice Foods Co., Dep
120 S. LaSalle St., Chicago 3

© 1954, BE ttering acid all over my smock, ne rang.

udio," I said, dabbing water on hat smarted my neck.

Maine, calling," said an operator. said, as though he were just up- s the Queen of Diamonds?"

tor," I said, "how nice. How's s was very flattering, getting a call.

said. "I just wondered how the y. Do you think you could have y registered air mail, say on Thursday? I'm staying up this gainst the cool stone fire table ut at the rain. Maine. So that's e pearl's shell was. I might have Jake," I said. "Sure. I was tak- n it. I didn't know you were in I'm working on something else, he ring out. You'll have it by he latest."

rush you," he said. "My grand- this week. I want her to see it. w it to my grandmother."

mother, nuts, I thought. How your grandmother likes it," I u doing otherwise?" Jake said. much. I'm on a country line, out But you know what I mean. .K.?"

aid. "It's pouring down here." he weather at this point.

urself some nd build a

of yourself, , "and good

up and I sat e fire stool t the brooch of the pickle. ame stream- Locking the the shop, I went back to the d lay face down on the sofa, e of the red roses dyed my cheek don't know what I'd expected of sychiatrist's magic formula, but uick end as this. Given a little felt I might have won. Why not? mplete dud, was I? Or was I? slipped up? Suddenly it came to en't the eminent Doctor Jake's ere a Doctor Blake's and Jake ng me as a guinea pig. What a was. There was Charlie, but I'd im to make Jake jealous. Why fight clean? Even a fool wouldn't andmother gag. Why do men lie viously? Well, if that's the kind nt, I'm better off. Anyhow, I said the way back into the studio, as lie's potatoes held out I wouldn't hat's more than a lot of girls n't bad company either.

I thought about that girl up in e out in a fresh drizzle of tears. hold of myself and settled down orked until nine o'clock at night embering lunch or dinner. The pped me was Charlie beating on with his umbrella. I let him in. he said, "what're you working on 've been crying."

a mirror. My hair was a sight. e swollen, and I had that red dye k. I sure had a head start on dirty-face one.

out and I'll buy you a dinner," "What're you doing until this ?" Then he saw the diamond in tic box on the bench. "Who," he is job belong to? That, my friend, said.

ne by the arms and faced me to on't think I've ever seen a human ore human.

he said, "dear Candy. I think I re. You're setting this for some- m I right?"

"Yes," I said, starting to cry again. "He's in a rush for it. By Wednesday." It seemed right to be telling Charlie. I knew he'd had a lot of disappointments in his life. Maybe he could understand. "He's in Maine. He called this morning. I guess she is too. Her father's probably knee-deep in paper money."

"Listen, sweetie," Charlie said, picking up the diamond, "put this in the safe."

I did.

"Now wash your face and hands."

I washed. It was good being told what to do. I was sick of holding myself up alone.

"Now go back there and get out of that smock and put some make-up on."

He turned off the gas, pulled the plug on the motor, gave the safe a twirl and then prodded me before him like a child. We went into the living room and I sat down in the red velvet chair by the window. I was exhausted, emotionally and physically.

"On your feet, miss," Charlie said. He came over and, pulling me up, he lifted my face in his two hands and kissed me. "You're dead on your feet and you look a sight. Now go in there and put something on your face so I can take you out. And comb your hair, or put a scarf over it."

I stood there in his arms, not wanting to move. It was so good having someone to lean against. The indoor type has his place too. Maybe I'd built the whole thing with Jake in my mind. Maybe I wasn't in love with him, just in love with the idea of falling in love. Maybe this was love. How could one know?

I went in and sat down before the glass. I looked up and saw the rules, and I started to pick them off the mirror. Rule 10, the one about creating a situation, was the only one I'd never used and now I'd never have the chance. I tossed the pieces into the wastebasket.

He who expekts to be praised every time he duz a virtewous thing will soon get tired ov the bizzness.
—JOSH BILLINGS

Charlie rapped on the door. "Get on your horse," he said when I opened it. "You haven't moved. Tie a thing on your hair and get to work."

We went around the corner to a Mexican chili joint and the hot food was good. We didn't talk until the coffee came. Finally I surfaced. "I think I'll move the shop to Topeka," I said. "I'm going to get out of New York and start over. I made it here. I should do it someplace else. People in Topeka must buy jewelry."

"THAT's tonight," Charlie said. "I've felt like that a dozen times, but I'm still here. I couldn't work anywhere else. You'll feel better in a few weeks. Broken hearts mend. Take my word. You can't leave now."

I looked at him and was struck with the thought that maybe he'd fallen deeply in love with me and here I was, in love with Jake. I suddenly saw poor Charlie having to suffer the way I was suffering, and I didn't want to be the cause. I felt bleak, sunk, confused and lost.

Charlie took me home, kissed me good night, and I went right to bed and slept for twelve hours. When I awoke, Charlie's last words to me flashed through my mind, "Don't worry, girl. Your old Uncle Charlie is always just around the corner." Old Uncle Charlie, was it? His heart was still intact, or he'd have got down to brass tacks on the subject of love last night.

On Wednesday I mailed the ring. It was the most beautiful piece I'd ever done. I had it photographed at Nick's before boxing it. Somehow, when you love gems for their eternal beauty, you're inspired to do your best, and this one had fired me. I was proud but heartbroken to pack it up and never see it again. I sent Jake the bill at his New York office. It was fair. In fact, he got a bargain. It's tough setting prices for friends.

That was Wednesday. Saturday afternoon, when I was getting ready to fold the shop for the weekend, I heard the bell ring, and in walked the eminent, incomparable Jake.

"Hello, beautiful," he said.

"Hello, yourself." Hello beautiful.

"Well, it's good to be back," he said looking around. "Mighty good."

"Take a good look," I said.

"Why? Something new?"

"No," I said. "I'm going to fold my tent and move to Topeka. Next month. How was the ring? Did it fit?"

I hadn't gone to greet him. I sat down on the fire stool and looked at him. He had on a light gray summer suit and cool dark blue tie. It was awful to know he was for somebody else.

"It's the most beautiful setting I've ever seen. We all thought so. The whole darned State of Maine. I came right in from the airport to have you size it."

"Today?" I said.

"Right now." He put it on my finger. It was a perfect fit. I started to cry. "It's for you, Candy. You should have guessed."

"You've been mean to me," I said. "I've never been so miserable."

Jake kissed me. "You thought all that work was for nothing? Even through Rule Ten? You're a star pupil. Didn't you know Doctor Blake puts out a set of tripe for men too?" He picked me up and carried me out to the living room and tossed me on the sofa. He was laughing. "There's a whole new set to learn now," he said.

"Oh, doctor," I said, "I've known those for years." END practical upholstery beauty

"Vibra-Life" Reclining Chair by The Berkline Corp. Morristown, Tenn.

wipes clean • colors last

Masland Duran®
PLASTIC UPHOLSTERY

Deep textures or smooth surfaces! Smartly styled patterns or grained effects. Just name what you want for practical decorative beauty. Durable, easy-to-clean Masland Duran has it in plastic upholstery's loveliest colors. Available on all types of furniture. Write for folder with sample.
The Masland Duraleather Company,
Dept. L-9, Philadelphia 34, Pa.

FROM ANY ANGLE
IT'S FINE UPHOLSTERY

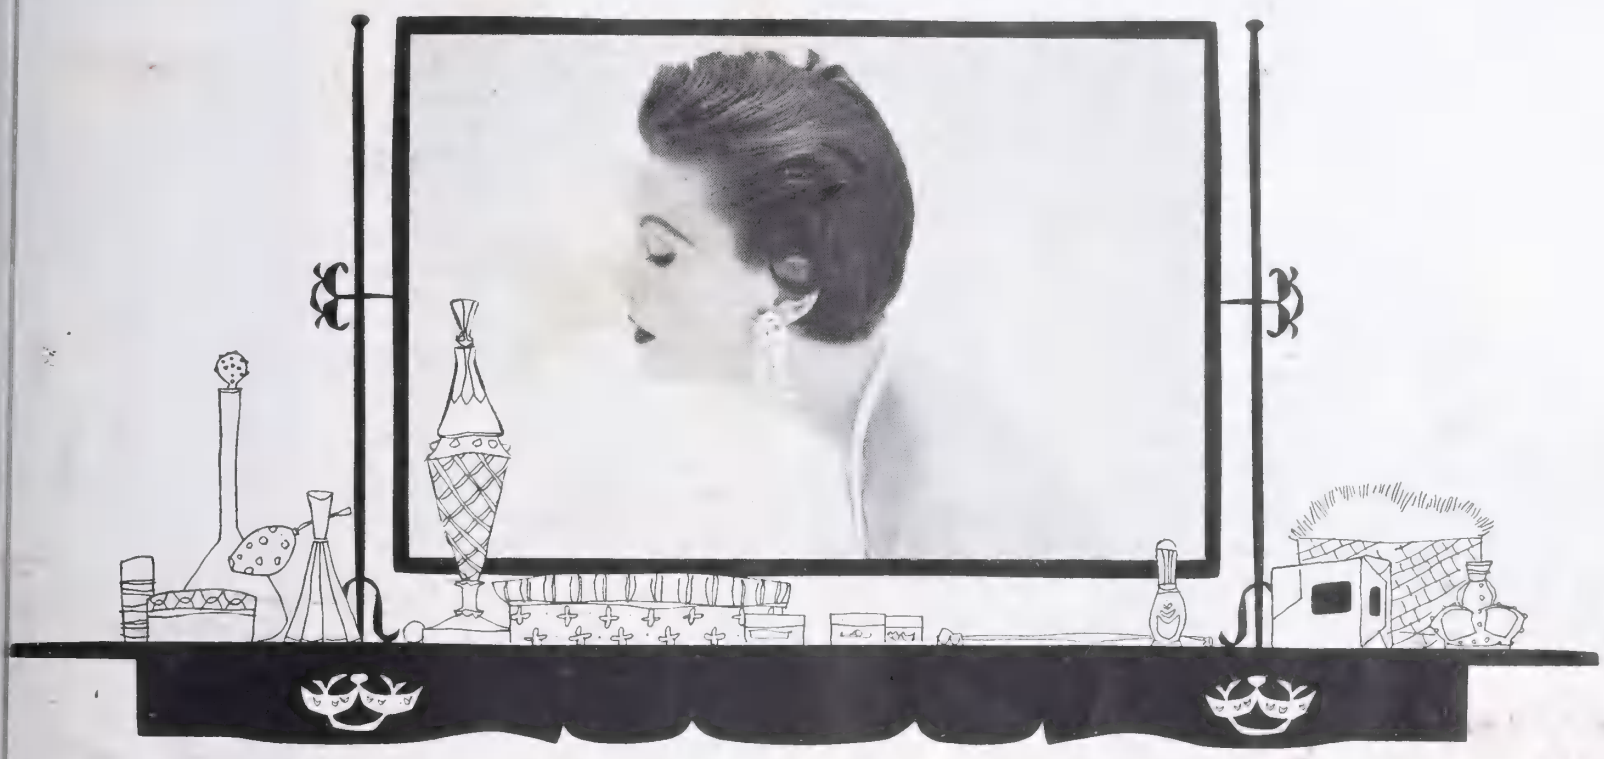
All Masland products are also available in Canada.

Below. Wanted: a friendly partition between neighbors; a little seclusion. Above. Thirty feet of fencing, a day's worth of paving . . . and pure delight.

Pleasure and Privacy for $99

By RICHARD PRATT

Split-paling fence, $48; 5 steel posts, $7; secondhand paving, $32; incidentals, $12.



ALMOST every small place has one strategic spot where a few panels of this or similar fencing can be made to create an immediate sense of seclusion. The closer this spot is to the house, the better, because then the house itself becomes part of the enclosure. Whether you call such a spot a terrace or a patio, it actually takes on the character of an outdoor room, and should be treated as one.

I have two admonitions of prime importance. One is to keep it small; the other is to make it level. What you see here, which used to be a catchall corner of the yard, right up against a next-door neighbor's house, is now an open-air leisure and entertainment area, where you can be as private as you please. It happens to be roughly sixteen feet square, which is plenty large for a party. And it is as level as a floor, which makes every square foot of it a pleasure to use.

What to use for paving depends upon what you can get locally for your price at places that sell secondhand building materials. Used brick or flagging, old sidewalk slabs, and discarded oven tiles like those in the picture, are all good. Their oldness improves their appearance. The main thing is to set them tight together on a carefully leveled two-inch bed of sand or cinders, first removing sod and topsoil to a four-to-five-inch depth. Just omit paving where you want to put plants.

I hope you have a tree, for its shade and attraction. If not, a sugar maple is tops for shade and beauty; a flowering peach for quickness and color

why Dial soap protects your complexion even under make-up clears your complexion by removing blemish-spreading bacteria other soaps leave on your skin.

No matter how lavishly or sparingly you use cosmetics, when you wash beforehand with Dial, the fresh clearness of your skin is continuously protected underneath your make-up.

For mild, fragrant Dial washes away trouble-causing bacteria that other soaps (even the finest) leave on your skin. Dial does this because it contains AT-7, known to science as Hexachlorophene. And there's nothing else as good. It clears the skin of unseen bacteria that often aggravate and spread surface blemishes.

Until Dial came along, no soap could remove these trouble-makers safely and effectively. Photomicros at the left prove it.

1

2

No. 1 shows thousands of bacteria left on skin after washing with ordinary soap. (So when you put on make-up, they're free to cause trouble underneath.) No. 2 shows how daily washing with Dial removes up to 95% of them. And Dial's AT-7 clings to your skin, so it continually retards the growth of new bacteria.

When you first try this beauty-refreshing soap, you'd never guess it gives you such benefits. Doctors recommend it for adolescents. With Dial your skin becomes cleaner and clearer than with any other type of soap. Let mild, fragrant Dial protect your complexion – even under make-up.

P.S. Shampoo a Diamond Sparkle into your hair with new Dial Shampoo.

Also available in Canada

'Sanforlan' Wools Wash!

Wools labeled "Sanforlan" won't shrink out of fit...stay soft as new

"Sanforlan"-labeled knitted woolens wash like a breeze—sweaters need no frames or blocking—socks need no stretchers!

"Sanforlan"-labeled wool shirts, slacks and jackets—for both men and boys—come out of soap and water the same size they went in!

Look for easy-to-wash "Sanforlan"-labeled jackets, robes, skirts, shorts—or make them of "Sanforlan"-labeled yard goods.

Now you can get "Sanforlan"-labeled children's woolens that wash easily, never shrink, never get hard or matted. What a money-saver!

BROUGHT TO YOU BY THE "SANFORIZED" PEOPLE

Sanforlan®

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of the trade-mark "Sanforlan" only on woolen fabrics or garments which have been treated by procedures approved by this company and which meet its rigid requirements. When washed in accordance with recommended procedures for wool garments bearing the trade-mark "Sanforlan" will not mat, felt, or shrink out of fit.

THIS MARRIAGE COULD NOT BE SAVED

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 51

to Kevin I'm afraid I might become a whining, unhappy neurotic like my mother. She lies in bed all day in a big house with three servants—my father is a successful manufacturer back East—moaning over her imaginary headaches and complaining of her marital woes. She and daddy are hopelessly incompatible like Kevin and me; they should have been divorced long ago.

"I take after my father, everybody says. There's a lot of get-up-and-go in daddy. My father is emotional. I'm the same. Perhaps I'm too emotional. Anyway, I simply cannot hold in my feelings when I'm around Kevin. He drives me distracted with his detachment, his absent-mindedness, his plain-dumb obtuseness. So I blow my stack and create a scene.

"It's bad for the children; they get bewildered and upset or start acting like wild Indians themselves. But I don't make a dent on Kevin. He stands there and stares, with no notion of how shattering a personality like his can be. One time I threw a Haviland plate on the kitchen floor and Kevin gave me a sort of surprised look, and got the dustpan and swept up the pieces. He then went into his workshop and forgot the whole matter. He never did ask what was wrong. Except where engineering is concerned, Kevin has no curiosity whatever.

"On the evening he and I finally split up nothing much happened except inside me. I sat down to dinner with him and the children, feeling quite calm. Kevin ate through a good steak as though it were sawdust, and without saying one single word. As I was serving dessert, Ellen asked him a question. He stared at her the blank, dazed way he stares at me. He was plainly ten thousand miles away. Suddenly I couldn't bear it. I set the dessert on the table and ran out to the garage. I drove to Malibu Beach at ninety miles an hour and I sat alone on the sand watching the waves come in, come in, until I felt a little peace. I thought about Kevin. I thought about Alex. I decided divorce was the only possible answer. I went to a public phone booth and called daddy long distance—my father is fond of Kevin—and daddy said to do nothing until he could fly to the West Coast. He promised to telephone Kevin right away, and try to straighten things out.

"MAYBE if Kevin had reacted differently when I drove home again," continued Dena, "we could still have patched up our affairs. The clock struck as I walked in. It was two o'clock in the morning. Kevin didn't ask where I had been, or why I had rushed away from the dinner table, or anything else. He didn't mention that daddy had phoned him from Philadelphia. Instead, he poured himself and me a cup of coffee. I quietly drank my coffee, and then I requested him to pack his clothes and move out. No, Kevin didn't lose his temper. I have never once seen him get mad or even raise his voice. I doubt Kevin can become angry. When I first told him I was in love with Alex, Kevin told me not to be silly, that he was a better man than Alex. And that's all Kevin said. When he packed up and left that night, Kevin said he would gladly come back as soon as I asked him to come. He didn't turn a hair on either occasion.

"At this stage I am probably unreasonable on the subject of Kevin. I can't help it. I've got so I can't see his virtues. Everything about him jars on me. Kevin is dilatory, procrastinating. I don't recall that we have ever arrived any place at the proper hour. I'm quick and I'm punctual. Time after time, the children and I have sat in the car waiting for Kevin while inside the house Kevin still wasn't dressed and was comfortably reading a book.

"Kevin is a fine-looking man—he is handsomer than Alex—but Kevin expects me to buy all his neckties and shirts and even select his suits and march him to the store when he needs one. Why should I? Kevin is fantastically untidy. You should see a bathroom when he's finished with it, and you should see the odd spots he deposits his soiled laundry. On the night he left our house forever, I found seven-airs dusty socks under his bed. I have ent a of being a man's personal valet.

where the laundry hamper was.
in't er use it. Kevin would dearly love
m nto a woman like his mother. I ad-ay other-in-law, but I'm not a scrap er. e picked up after Kevin and his rs d her husband, and bossed and end them. The iron hand in the velvet is mother-in-law's style. She and I ss ed her technique and she's advised w t handle Kevin and I've tried. Really ied But her ways aren't mine. I am ng my daughter and my sons to the m bility, and finding joy in the job. I to a mother to a grown-up man!

RIN the eleven years of my marriage," sa tensely, "I was forced into the s s against my will. I didn't like it. In co dn't stand it. Kevin expects me to e push him—make all the decisions y h mother makes decisions for his fand unmarried brother. I'm a woman.
I e treated like a woman. I want to wh nd love a man who will tell me to ad in. I admire strength, masculinrce trange as it may seem, even at this ar Kevin would say to me, 'See here, ri. I the head of this family and you'd p down and talking nonsense t divorce,' I feel very different thi and our mar-K n won't say ing f the kind. It in h nature.
he ree different es w have bought
e in have chosen, no jections and st comments
Ken. He lets me he l house, sign ew les contract,
he rniture van,
o all the arme s and then ac moves. On pra cal side of bu ess—Kevin's in is strictly ethi —I have also ob ed to make imp ant decisions.
n s ted out in a an aft plant; one he thirty-thousand-employee places e a bright but unaggressive man like n ca learn a lot if he stays five years but is to come a taken-for-granted cog in the ma if he stays longer. My father and I ss the situation—daddy has a good b ness head—and then I suggested n h t a job in a smaller plant where he d h e some chance to shine and show his A first Kevin hesitated. Like a good o r engineers in his generation, Kevin re o accumulate seniority and pension s a feel snug and secure while the coma the stockholders reaped the real s his intelligence. He hated to take a le m the opposite. Chance taking is do n my alley!
o t Kevin," said Dena, "I was willing to lo on half the salary, scrub, do the ry nything; that there was no need for ar ts to help us financially. So he transl a a small subcontracting plant. Since he as set up production methods that at cted the attention of experts all over ou y. Kevin is going to be a big man in el Two years ago he invented that new ac nautical switch, and it was patented n e. He will be cut in for a share of the
s. addy thinks Kevin will wind up a in famous man someday.
Vh didn't he think of the move himself?"
n d Dena. "Then I could have been l him. As it is, I just feel flat about h' uccess, since I was behind the scenes n and prodding and manipulating.
n ok all that as a matter of course.
ji ce has always seemed like an admiso ilure to me. I've worked hard for a y arriage. Nobody can say I haven't t elp and please my husband. Kevin likes hiking. I've hiked myself down to the ankles with a wordless companion who would just as soon have been by himself. I like cars, the bigger and faster the car the better. I believe the motor age is here to stay, but Kevin and I very seldom drove anywhere for the weekend. Drives involved the children and children are noisy.

"Kevin has never made the slightest attempt to share my interests. I've tried to understand him. He has never tried to understand me, although he is eight years older. I was only eighteen when we married, too young to realize how poorly suited we were. We had a hurry-up wartime courtship. I fell for Kevin's attractive looks and his uniform and he told me he fell for my singing, which isn't a fact. Kevin tackled music for a time as something to be examined and studied like a mechanical problem and then solved and laid aside. Music can't touch or stir his emotions any more than I can. When we go to a concert his eyes glaze and you can almost watch his ears close. When we drop in a restaurant afterward he hangs back and lets me ask for a table, order the food, nudge him to pay the bill and tip the waiter. I've never known him to pull out a chair for me, or open a door.

"Our sexual relationship fits with the rest of the picture," said Dena. "Kevin may be satisfied. I am not. After eleven years, Kevin is still fumbling and clumsy and hurried. I wouldn't describe him as sexually cold, but he certainly is far from ardent. When we met each other Kevin was twenty-six years old and I was his first girl. According to Kevin, he had been too busy for girls. Throughout our marriage, he has been too busy with his work to have sex on his mind very often. He was anything but demanding and he believed in a delicate male approach. Usually he waited for me to take the initiative. This left me desperate and frustrated. Perhaps I sound like a loose, promiscuous woman, a regular Hollywood type, but I'm not. I'm twenty-nine years old and I'm human. I want to marry Alex as soon as it's possible. In the meantime, I have not forgotten I am the mother of three children. I have been faithful to Kevin and I will remain faithful until I receive my divorce and remarry.

"I don't think it's wrong of me," said Dena, "to hope Alex and I will have a warm and happy sexual relationship. Something very different from my relationship with Kevin, which has never been my conception of what love between a man and a woman should be. I don't expect a perfect second marriage. Alex isn't perfect. And I'm not perfect. But I believe he and I can have a better marriage than I've ever known. We do need the chance. I don't think it's fair of Kevin to block my divorce and stand in our way."

THE CHILDREN AT MIDNIGHT

By M. JEAN CRAIG

Asleep, all of us, in the warm night
We make a dream.
We dream together of our mother.
She is watching the clouds
Blown thin across the night sky.
The dark wind moves in her hair.
She cannot see the stars.
They are in her eyes.

Kevin tells his side:

"I don't want this divorce," said Kevin, an attractive, flat-stomached man of thirty-seven with thick, light-brown hair and remarkable eyes—large, dark, bright with intelligence. At the moment the eyes were both puzzled and perturbed. "I want back my wife and my family. Dena and I have been separated four or five times in the past—she gets mad and walks out—but I've always managed to persuade her to listen to reason. This time I'm stymied. I need advice.

"My wife probably told you she is in love with another man—something I seriously doubt. In my opinion, Dena merely wants to stir up friction and excitement. She declares she and Alex will make out dandy, although to date Alex isn't even divorced. He had a legal separation, but, so far, his wife is refusing to agree to a divorce. Dena may not know it, but

How you can stop odor, check moisture, with Tussy ... the instant Deodorant

Tussy Cream Deodorant instantly checks perspiration moisture; no waiting to dry. Instantly stops odor and keeps it stopped 24 hours or longer... even through the hottest day!

Follow arrows for daintiness plus. Tussy Cream Deodorant is a cosmetic, made with face cream . . . so you use it like a beauty cream.

Blend it into the skin, moving finger tips up, then out to the sides.

It smooths and beautifies, and vanishes into your skin.

You can't become immune to its effects. Day after day, year after year, Tussy Cream Deodorant protects you against offending, when you use it daily. Safe for normal skin or any fabric. $1.

When you travel, always carry a Tussy Stick Deodorant. Fits your purse like a lipstick. So easy to use anytime, anywhere. Only $1.

prices plus tax

Marie Gifford
Armour Home Economist asks you to accept

Free!

MY NEW PICTURE

Pie Book

★ 36 PAGES!
★ 36 RECIPES!
★ 36 HELPFUL HINTS!

How to avoid common mistakes . . . easier ways to measure, mix . . . surer ways to get flakiness

With my new 36 page Pie Book and 5-Minute Pie Crust recipe you'll bake perfect pies so easily! Armour Star Lard guarantees you:

1. Greater Flakiness, because with faster blending you don't over mix. Armour Lard stays sweet, creamy, quickly blendable, on your shelf!

2. Greater Tenderness. You use less water. This insures tenderness.

Send for my Free new Pie Book. Just write to me. Marie Gifford, Dept. 144, Box 2053, Armour & Company, Chicago 9, Ill. Send no money but I'll appreciate your including Star Lard carton top with your request.

America's Perfect Pie
Shortening

Armour Star LARD

I gather Alex himself isn't exactly breaking his neck to get that decree. My guess is he is afraid of alimony, or maybe alarmed at the future Dena is mapping out for him. Alex is a lightweight from away back. When Dena wakes up to the fact, she is bound to throw Alex out on his ear even if a miracle occurs and they are able to get through with the necessary divorcing and marry each other. In that case, my wife and our three youngsters will be in a worse mess than they're in now and there's no sense in it.

"Dena is expert at self-deception," Kevin continued in a calm, objective voice. "She lets her feelings and emotionalism do the thinking for her. At the moment she is kidding herself that our children don't miss me and I don't miss them. She refuses to acknowledge all three are suffering from this present separation of ours. The twins are too young to show much outward effect, but Ellen is ten and every time I see her and her brothers she has a crying spell. Ellen didn't used to be a cry-baby. Dena has spelled it out to the children that their daddy and mommy like each other fine but they like each other better when they're apart. Even my six-year-old boys don't fall for such guff.

"Dena's complaints against me aren't logical or fair. Maybe at eighteen she should have married an excitable, fire-eating guy like her father, but the point is she didn't. She picked me; we've been married eleven years and have three kids to consider. Maybe I would have been better off myself—this is a possibility Dena doesn't reflect on—if I had married a different kind of wife. Personally I see no sense in crying over might-have-beens, but the truth is I did expect to marry a girl quite different from Dena. I pictured somebody who would be sweet and quiet-voiced, and who wouldn't be popping off all the time. Somebody who would look after me and run the house and manage a pleasant home life for us both.

"In some ways I guess I am dull for a woman like Dena to live with. I'll admit I'm not especially sociable. If I can avoid getting involved in a trivial conversation, I do so. Dena rushes toward bores with glad cries of delight. I duck around the corner to get out of their way. I don't walk along a public sidewalk with nothing on my mind.

"I think Dena should accept me and my faults," he said dispassionately, "as I accept Dena and her faults. I've made allowances. Plenty of them. Dena's parents are rich; the little she was taught about housekeeping wouldn't crowd a thimble. I don't complain when the carpet isn't vacuumed for a month and dinner is served an hour late. I remind myself Dena is a good mother, that she's helped me a lot in a business way, that she isn't extravagant and doesn't call on her folks for money.

"WHEN I was a boy," he said with a trace of wistfulness, "my mother used to see that my father and brothers and I put on our best clothes on Sunday morning—she laid out our clothes and made us polish our shoes—and we all went to church. When we got home there was a good hot dinner waiting. Fried chicken or ham, and wonderful pie. Sunday used to be my favorite day.

"Dena and I don't go to church. She would rather lounge around until noon in a dressing gown, arrange a back-yard picnic for the kids, and ask in a crowd of worthless people for cocktails.

"Nobody with a grain of sense could stomach Dena's present crowd. She met Alex in that crowd, so perhaps I am a little prejudiced, but I wouldn't have liked the crowd anyway. They run around in fine cars that aren't paid for, wear expensive clothes and live in tiny apartments in fashionable hotels so they can boast about having a good address. They gabble about the theater and music, and pretend they're sophisticated and cultured.

"I used to enjoy hearing Dena sing until these cheap phonies, egged on by Alex, began stuffing her head with moonshine. Dena has a pleasant voice, but she's neither a Patrice Munsel nor a Celeste Holm. She will never get anywhere in the theater, with Alex or anybody else as her manager. I'll bet Dena didn't have the nerve to tell you one of Alex's main attractions is she thinks he will turn her into a big singing star. Alex hasn't managed himself into a paying job in the theater, for all his mother's connections and his fancy talk. He sells insurance.

"I don't know how other men react when their wives announce they're in love with somebody else," Kevin said to the counselor. "It happens I'm the first man I've ever known who found himself in that spot. The night Dena introduced Alex to me as her future husband I was flabbergasted. I looked at Alex and he looked at me. For a moment I felt like throwing him out of the house. It then occurred to me that Dena might be trying to make me lose my temper—a habit of hers. Dena is very quick tempered. As a boy, I learned how to control anger. When I get annoyed I bite down on my tongue, say nothing, and the feeling of annoyance soon blows away. For some reason, that seems to make Dena madder than ever.

"I STOOD there a moment and I thought. I knew Dena wasn't carrying on an affair behind my back, since she isn't that sort of girl. I saw no reason to make myself ridiculous with a display of jealousy over something I figured was a stupid flirtation. I decided to accommodate to the situation and be just as civilized as Dena and Alex seemed to think they were. 'Well, that's interesting news,' I said. Then I went into my workshop and closed the door.

The final test of fame is to have a crazy person imagine he is you. —ANON.
New Dictionary of Quotations — H. L. Mencken (Alfred A. Knopf).

"Possibly I didn't play my cards right. Dena's father—he is staying with her and the children now—thinks I made a mistake. Anyway, I believed Dena would soon come to her senses. She didn't. Several weeks after the announcement night, I telephoned Alex and we met in a bar and had a drink. I then told him to leave Dena alone, that he wasn't welcome in my home. Alex smiled and said he came there as Dena's guest, that she would have to ask him to stop coming. We telephoned Dena and she joined us. Dena sided with me. She agreed it wasn't right for Alex to appear in our house—until the two divorces went through.

"Ten days later," Kevin resumed, "Dena made a terrible scene over nothing and asked me to move to a hotel. She promised not to see Alex anywhere except at lunch in a public place. So I moved. Ever since then—for three months now—she has been demanding a divorce. Dena's father, who is an awfully nice guy, has been telling me I should move back into our home, beat the ears off Alex, court Dena one day and drag her around by the hair the next day. My mother—you may be surprised to hear she is on Dena's side in the trouble between us—has been bombarding us both with daily letters. We've also heard from Dena's sister and my brothers. Both sets of in-laws," he said with a wry grin, "are perfectly satisfied with our marriage. Everybody seems to be satisfied except Dena.

"I don't know how to play the heavy husband," said Kevin. "Anyway, I don't want to be a heavy husband. To me the idea is comical. I just don't see myself in that light.

"The other evening, quite late, I got to thinking about Dena and the kids and how I missed them. I remembered some of the things Dena's father had said. I drove down to the flower market and bought a bushel basketful of roses and drove out to our place. All the lights were off. I walked across the grass with the flowers. Suddenly I felt like a fool. If I went inside I knew I would have to go through a scene just to meet Dena's childish conception of an exciting reconciliation. I chucked the roses in a trash can and drove back to my hotel and went to bed.

"It's no use," Kevin said to the counselor, "for you to advise me to court my wife all over again. I'll make any sensible concessions. I know I'm not perfect. I work on Dena's nerves

CONTINUED ON PAGE 116

KENNETH'S FIBERGLAS® CURTAI

shown on the facing page are available at these fine stores:

ARIZONA
Phoenix — Dorris-He

CALIFORNIA
Hollywood — Broadway Holly
Long Beach — Bu
Los Angeles — Broadway Dept.
The May Co
Oakland — Hale Br
Pasadena — Broadway Dept.
Bullock's Pas
Sacramento — Hale Br
San Diego — The Walker Scott
San Francisco — Hale Br
Santa Ana — Bu
Westwood — Bullock's West

COLORADO
Denver — Denver D. G

CONNECTICUT
Bridgeport — D. M. Rea

D. C.
Washington — K

DELAWARE
Wilmington — John Wanan

FLORIDA
Jacksonville — Cohen

GEORGIA
Atlanta — Rich's

ILLINOIS
Alton — C. J. Ja
Champaign — F. K. Rob
Chicago — Wieb

INDIANA
Hammond — Edw. C. Mino
Indianapolis — H. P. Wasson &
South Bend — Robertson Bro

KANSAS
Topeka — Crosby
Wichita — B

KENTUCKY
Louisville — Kaufmann-Straus Co.,

MARYLAND
Baltimore — Hochschild Kohn an Salisbury — Benja

MASSACHUSETTS
Boston — Gilchrist
Springfield — Albert Steige

MICHIGAN
Detroit — The J. L. Hudson Com
Grand Rapids — Paul Steketee &
Grosse Pointe — Jacob
Home Decorative S
Lansing — J. W. Knapp
Mount Clemens — Krauseneck's,

MISSOURI
Kansas City — Robert Keith Furn
R. H.
Springfield — M. Netter D. G
St. Louis — Stix, Baer and F

NEBRASKA
Fremont — Geo. Schweser's Sons,

NEW JERSEY
Montclair — Hahne &
Newark — Hahne &
Passaic — W
Paterson — Meyer
Perth Amboy — F
Plainfield — Tepp
Red Bank — Sherm

NEW YORK
Brooklyn — Rialto Decor
Buffalo — Sat
Flushing — C
Jamaica — C
New York City — Gim
Rochester — Sibley, Lindsay &

NORTH CAROLINA
Charlotte — J. B. Ivey and Comp

OHIO
Cincinnati — H. S. P
Columbus — F & R Lazarus and Comp
Toledo — Lasc

OKLAHOMA
Oklahoma City — John A. Brown

OREGON
Portland — Meier & F

PENNSYLVANIA
Philadelphia — John Wanam
Providence — RHODE ISLAND — Shepc

TENNESSEE
Memphis — Lowenst

TEXAS
Fort Worth — The Monnig Dry Goods
Houston — Meyer

UTAH
Salt Lake City — Z. C. M

WASHINGTON
Longview — Bon Ma
Seattle — Frederick & Ne
Tacoma — Rhe

WISCONSIN
Appleton — H. C. Prange
Green Bay — H. C. Prange
Madison — Harry S. Manche
Milwaukee — Gim
Sheboygan — H. C. Prange
Sturgeon Bay — H. C. Prange

BARTMANN & BIXER, INC.
339 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. 16, N. Y.

KENNETH promises: heat won't wilt them . . . fire won't burn them!

Even these baby ruffles by KENNETH never need ironing!

Fiberglas draperies glow with the sun!

Sudsed and up in 7 minutes . . . KENNETH'S smart room divider!

High and dry in 28 minutes

7 minutes

7 minutes

7 minutes

7 minutes

. . . a houseful of Fiberglas curtains and draperies

No ironing . . . not even a touch at the hems . . . with Fiberglas! Remember the dark ages when you had to work to keep a house full of clean curtains? Today, Fiberglas curtains and draperies wash and hang in 7 minutes. And they have other modern ways of brightening your life. They love the sun. In colors specially selected to resist fading, they filter sunshine . . . flood your home with a warm glow. More good news . . . they won't shrink, stretch, mildew . . . or lose their wrinkle-free freshness. Owens-Corning Fiberglas, Decorative Fabrics, New York 22, N. Y.

KENNETH designs a houseful of smart styles and colors . . . see them at smart stores everywhere.

OWENS-CORNING

FIBERGLAS

Now I can make anything
—because my automatic NECCHI does everything!

YES, you can make these beautiful embroidery stitches automatically!

Straight, zigzag, embroidery . . .
NECCHI does every stitch of the work . . . without attachments!

Appliqués

Monograms

From first stitch to final finishing touch, you can sew everything, easier, quicker, better . . . on the amazing Automatic Necchi . . . and you don't have to be an expert.

Your Necchi quickly pays for itself with the money it saves you on every kind of family sewing.

You can't afford to buy any sewing machine until you have tried and compared the "does everything" automatic Necchi. There is a Necchi to suit your budget; straight stitch model BC is only $98.95

automatic NECCHI with the Wonder Wheel

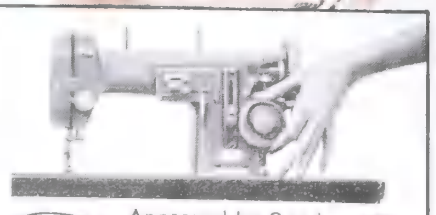
Sews on buttons, makes buttonholes



Parts and services available at 2,300 dealers in the U. S. See phone book for authorized dealer.

FREE BOOKLET: Send for 24-page illustrated guide on "How To Select a Sewing Machine."
NECCHI, Dept. S442
164 West 25th Street, New York 1, N. Y. or 464 McGill Street, Montreal, P.Q., Canada.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Approved by Good Housekeeping and U. S. Testing Bureau.
©1954 Necchi Sewing Machine Sales Corporation

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 114

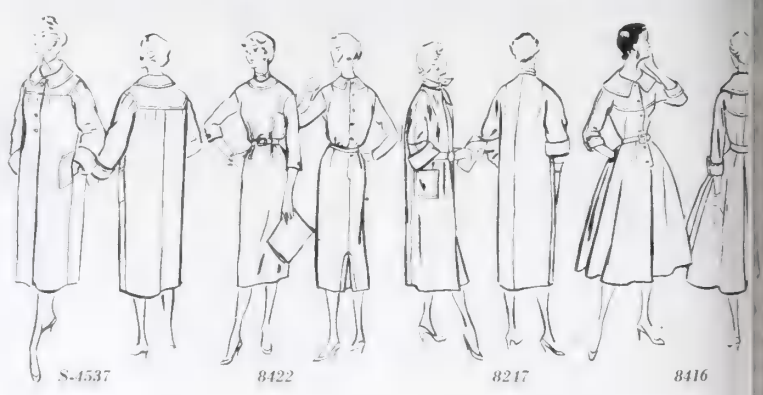
and sometimes I suspect I work on the nerves of other people. Maybe I am a little too calm, too self-centered. I've heard fellows say so. But I can't turn myself into a character like Dena's father. I've bought my last bushel basket of roses, and I simply cannot stage a big emotional reconciliation scene. It just isn't in me. Dena knows, or she should know, how much she and the youngsters mean to me, and she'll have to settle for that."

The marriage counselor says:

"This particular marriage ended in a divorce. Dena and Kevin did not go back together. Dena, a stubborn young woman, was determined to gain her freedom, whatever the cost to herself and her youngsters. In the past she had attempted, frequently but impatiently, to make a go of living harmoniously with Kevin. She was convinced any further efforts would be futile. Her mind was closed.

I am a great believer in luck, and I find the harder I work the more I have of it.
—STEPHEN LEACOCK

"What Dena wanted me to be," the counselor went on, "was her ally. She hoped I would encourage her to divorce Kevin, and agree that temperamental differences made a happy marriage impossible. She also hoped that the Institute's psychological testings would prove that she and Alex were well suited temperamentally and were destined to be happy together. The tests proved nothing of the sort. When I tried to help Dena acquire a little insight, when I tried to show her possible ways of composing her marital troubles and endeavored to turn her thoughts to the future, I accomplished nothing. She was certain she already knew the answers.



"Many husbands and wives, as dissimilar in tastes and character as Dena and Kevin, are happily married. Dena and Kevin were sufficiently attracted to each other to marry, produce three children and stay together eleven years. To me this is reasonable evidence that each felt a real need for qualities po the other. In my opinion Dena could have worked out a good mar compromises on both sides.

"Dena didn't see it that way. Sh into the habit of resenting and resis at every turn. She brooded continu his faults, without reflecting on he Kevin uncomplainingly accepted Her sloppy housekeeping, for exam bother him. He took her undisci havior in his stride. Few men wo wanted, so she said, a strong man band—a man like her father. She her own similarity to her father, b not recognize that a cocksure, manag woman like hers does appeal t terful man. Furt doubt Dena c tolerated a mast long enough for acquaintance to Alex, whom she h for her next wasn't nearly as and as worth Kevin. Alex was a true mamma much of a mamma's boy that he piano three nights a week as an ac for his mother. A well-known sing extremely dominating woman, Alex had broken up his first marriage an pared to make difficulties for any Dena did not perceive that she pr enter into a second marriage very sim first marriage but promising co more trouble and even less emoti faction.

"Now suppose we turn to Kevin an exasperating husband. No one that men like Kevin with a scientific nological cast of mind can make tr contributions in our present society also make wretched husbands. Kev too much responsibility for both tional and practical success of the m Dena, and he had failed in co-oper sharing. In theory he loved his child

OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATT ON PAGES 52 AND 53

Vogue Design No. S-4537. Coat and scarf; 12 to 20, 30 to 40. $1.50.
Vogue Design No. 8422. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 8247. "Very Easy to Make" coat; Small (28–30), Medium (32–34), Large (36–38). 75c.
Vogue Design No. 8416. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Junior Vogue Design No. S-3588. Coat; 9 to 15, 29½ to 33. $1.00.
Vogue Design No. 8371. Suit; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 8404. One-piece dress and jacket; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c. For contrasting jacket allow 1¾ yds. 54-inch fabric for S

S-4537 8422 8247 8416

S-3588 8371 8404 8404

Keys
ome ning
Lucina Ball

...IO... HOME CANNERS PRO-
...TH...IR FAMILIES WITH
...DE...CIOUS, MORE NUTRI-
...TOC..., SEASONED TO THEIR

...B... adding new twists many
...r h...e canning more
...too... Yet home can-
...s o...y about 3¢ a jar
...at, ...p and jar (esti-
...r-li... at 8 years).

...e F...avors

...ou ...ake peach butter, dress it
...sub...e new flavors by adding a ...ging... or nutmeg. Or give new
...peal...o your canned pears by
...the... with orange peel or pine-
...ce.

...bt ...bout It

...all ...Mason Jars—outstanding
...avo...es for 4 generations—are
...ad...especially for home can-
...ing...assure best results. Shaped
...r s...ce-saving, they've non-slip
...th...ONLY jars that come with
...Ball...DOME Lids!

...m... Pretty

...yo...r pickles from shriveling,
...t...much sugar, salt or vinegar
...me...fruits and fruit pickles will
...per... left standing in syrup 12
...rs...efore canning.

...r ...e ENAMEL Lining!...

Home canners like the clean-looking, cream-white enamel of Ball Dome Lids that resists ...acids and prevents corro-...sion. And, they prefer the seal they can SEE . . . ...wi... jar sealed.

...f ...Better Seal

...xa...ine jars before filling, dis-...che... with nicks. Be sure to ...e ...all DOME Lid; then screw ...nly... but do NOT use force.

...T...atment

...fru... from darkening when pre-...ch...: Add to 1 gallon of cool ...ta...spoons each salt and vine-...p...nit into salt-vinegar water ...ee...t. Don't leave it in water ...ni...tes. Rinse on removing.

...o ...Tells How

...ti...ly illustrated ...on... canning and ...o...ains over 300 everything ...-...ne favorites ...'n to many

...For your copy, send 25¢ ...all Blue Book, Dept. L94, ...Ind...ana.

...WITH...
...DENCE...
...N WITH Ball

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

was inclined to elude their company. He offered his family a starvation ration of companionship.

"Kevin was an excellent chess player, but he was a washout in making any positive moves in the intricate game of human relations. He himself was vaguely aware of the fact. He was anxious to win back Dena and hang on to his home. He wanted to improve his personality which, frankly, had begun to handicap him in the business which meant so much to him. His remote attitude—frequently almost an occupational disease among engineers—had chilled quite a number of the executives who had visited his plant.

"Following our consultations, Kevin undertook to change his emotional patterns. He tried to be more outgoing, spontaneous and friendly, more sympathetic and more aware of other people. For him it was a rugged assignment. Certain hours of the day, he deliberately thrust engineering problems from his thoughts and looked at the world around him. He stopped crossing the street to avoid speaking to acquaintances. Necessarily, since he was living alone, he took care of his laundry and his clothing. He bought a new suit of his own volition. He hung it up too!

"He improved on the punctuality score. On the Sundays when he called for his youngsters, he arrived at the appointed hour. He concentrated on the pleasure of the children, made genuine efforts to entertain them. In the process of becoming better acquainted with his daughter and little sons, he became increasingly eager to win back his family.

"KEVIN and I discussed the sexual difficulties in the marriage, of which he had been oblivious. He was not at all well informed, and subsequently read a great deal on the subject. My own surmise is that Kevin's sexual urges had been sublimated in his work. I feel sure he would have become a better lover if Dena had given him the opportunity.

"There was one thing, however, Kevin was either unable or unwilling to do. Despite the pleas of Dena's father, he could not masquerade even for a brief time as a dominant, hair-on-the-chest male. I have sometimes wondered what would have happened if Kevin had put up a token show of force to obtain what he very much wanted. Perhaps Dena would have been thrilled and would have resumed the marriage. Perhaps not. After all, she knew Kevin very well and she might have been unimpressed. Certainly Kevin could not have sustained for very long a role so foreign to him. In order to put the marriage on a solid foundation, it was up to Dena to accept herself for what she was, Kevin for what he was.

"I have always been sorry I couldn't bring this couple together. It was a marriage worth saving. Dena and Kevin were divorced early this year. So far as I can see, nobody has profited. Everybody has suffered.

"Dena is still unmarried. Alex never got a divorce. His mother and the wife from whom he is legally separated combined to spike that. Alex has drifted from Dena's life. She has met nobody whom she is likely to marry. She spends many lonely, restless evenings. Curiously enough—I cannot explain this—she has given up the music which caused such friction between her and Kevin. Possibly it is because she has fewer visitors to charm. The gay swarms who enjoyed her hospitality when she was married seem to have sought new fields.

"The three children miss and need their father, whom they now see rarely. It isn't that Kevin doesn't want to see his children, although I must confess he is reverting to his lone-wolf ways. The fact is that meetings between Kevin and his children have become painful to arrange. Both Dena and Kevin fancied they could divorce each other and escape any aftermath of bitter feelings. A divorce almost inevitably engenders a good deal of mutual bitterness. Dena applied for her divorce on a friendly, 'civilized' basis. But like many other people, she and Kevin quarreled over the financial settlement, over Kevin's visiting rights, over the usual things. These days Dena and her ex-husband speak to each other through their lawyers."

Editors' Note: This case history was compiled and condensed from actual records by DOROTHY CAMERON DISNEY

Might as well learn the EASY WAY first!

Attention, all brides...

Are you going to be married in a dinosaur-skin gown? Planning to live in a cave? Collecting recipes for pterodactyl pot-pie? If so, use the picture above as your guide to prehistoric ironing.

There is, however, an easier way... as new as your own dream house. It's the Rid-Jid Knee Room Ironing Table, pictured below.

At the all-steel Rid-Jid Knee Room, you can do your ironing sitting down. But you're not hunched over; you don't bump your knees or snag your stockings; you have no need to bend, stretch or twist. Broadly curved legs on the Rid-Jid table give you plenty of knee room, and you iron right over your lap.

You can stand when you wish, and use ten height adjustments to fix your own "comfort level." Only Rid-Jid has the fully ventilated, open-mesh steel top that draws steam and moisture out of damp clothes so swiftly. The table clicks open, clicks closed. And it's beautiful, with sunshine yellow top and gleaming chrome legs.

Ironing is big business, in any marriage. Learn the easy way first. Get the ironing table that's . . .

"Watch your skin thrive on Cashmere Bouquet Soap!"

says Candy Jones

CONOVER SCHOOL BEAUTY DIRECTOR

"Our Conover girls know what it can do for every type of complexion—dry, oily or normal!"

"Joan Fetherston is a TV actress and dancer." says Candy Jones (Mrs. Harry Conover) "and a pretty complexion plays a big part in her career. That's why I taught her—as I do all my Conover students—to beauty-wash twice a day with gentle Cashmere Bouquet soap. Years of experience show what it can do for every kind of skin."

"It's such wholesome beauty care for my dry skin!" smiles lovely Joan. "I always beauty-wash with Cashmere Bouquet soap—just cream that fluffy, fragrant lather over my face with my fingertips. It leaves my skin looking wonderful – softer, smoother, with a lovely glow."

P.S. "Scatter a few cakes of Cashmere Bouquet through your lingerie and handkerchief drawers. Leaves a lovely, flowery fragrance, much more subtle than sachet!"

Candy

Complexion and big bath sizes

DIARY OF DOMESTICITY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21

per person for this. Then I ladle the hot cream sauce into warm bowls and spoon the onions over the top, add freshly ground pepper and salt to taste. This is a rib-sticking supper, with a green salad adued, and for dessert a big bowl of newly gathered grapes, purple, pale green and frosty cool.

An appetizer that is good these cool days goes with fresh tomato-juice cocktail nicely. I blend 1 package cream cheese, ½ cup grated Cheddar cheese, and enough cream to make it soft enough to form into small balls. Salt, a dash of cayenne pepper, a few drops of Worcestershire are added, the balls are last rolled in a mixture of paprika and chili powder. Delicious!

Holly has the Irish way of collapsing if she is asked to go out and doesn't feel in the mood. She turns to a soft jelly, nobody can heave her up. She remains amiable, but is obviously too weak to stand! We resort to subterfuge and call Teddy out. He rushes happily off and she instantly rushes after him. She is the most imitative dog we ever had, she will copy anything any other dog does. And she has an amazing effect on them, for she adores toys and makes up such fascinating games that even Little Sister, who w and has never gone in for ch appears suddenly hopping doll in her mouth. She gives ogetic look, saying plainly, be the fashion around here."

Jonquil, on the other hand up, even after having her lust and she is delighted to play her morsel of tail like a spin sunny that even when she hospital for a minor ailmen was amazed. "Why, she wa said they with awe. And she wags her tail when she is asl say cockers are shy, nervous met Jonquil! Or for that matte ical ebullient merry cocke Jonnie he world needs more disposition, a tonic.

I know of no happier sight running cockers and Irish i evening light. They have the fectly in the present momen have. And as I walk across th I think September is like an so luminous, so lovely and so

SHE GLITTERED WHEN SHE WALKI

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 35

wanted to hear about the girl who had been there before her.

But she heard about Lisa. People dropped in to visit, people from Bill's home town, and they remembered, as people will, old times, old laughter, and they said, "This must be a bore for you, Mrs. Hampton, but it was really so funny if you could have seen it." And Mrs. Hampton said that it wasn't a bore at all but on the contrary frightfully entertaining, and she sat with a chill smile on her face and listened.

"There was Bill dressed to the teeth dancing so elegantly and along comes this shaggy red dog that Lisa Kerrigan had taught to stand on its hind legs and make turns and everything as though he were dancing. He actually tried to cut in on Bill because the orchestra was playing Jersey Bounce, which was the music Lisa had used to train him."

"Used to train Bill?"

"No, the dog. Well, maybe Bill, too, for all I know. With Lisa it was anything for a laugh. Mrs. Hampton, that dog just wanted to dance. He wouldn't go away."

"So," asked Mrs. Hampton, "what did laughter-loving Lisa do then?"

"Oh, finally she threw him a lump of sugar and he left. The dog, not Bill. I often think of the things that happened at Cherry Hill. Bill, do you remember the night the old building that had been the carriage house burned down? For some reason Lisa thought the butler's wife was inside and we all went mad trying to fight our way through the smoke and flames till we woke up to the fact that the woman directing the operations was the butler's wife. I'll never forget your face, Bill, when you caught on. Talk about a double take!"

"I'll get you another drink, Mr. Stone."

"Call me Bob. I'm Bill's oldest friend. Let the drink wait a minute. Listen to this: One Christmas up at Cherry Hill they threw a terrific party. Only one thing was wrong. Lisa thought her mother had arranged with the caterer for the food and her mother thought Lisa had. Can you imagine? A hundred guests and no food. Naturally not a restaurant in town would deliver such an order on short notice except one. The Peking Palace! So there we were stuck on Christmas with a million pails of chop suey."

"How amusing."

"It was. It really was. Gee, that party was fun. Do you remember, Bill?"

And Pat looked at Bill and she saw that he remembered.

That was the way they spoke, the people who came to visit. Lisa Kerrigan. Cherry Hill. Do you remember? And they asked the question not casually, not carelessly, but almost as though they meant, Bill, how get? Lisa Kerrigan. Cherry Hi tactful, the most knowing o not of the past at all. They m behave as though they had b very day, and the bride wh happy, so confident and so no pleasure in their gracious was only confirmation of the past was inseparable from th rigan's. Lisa and Cherry Hill.

And after a time she was re things that Bill had tried to te they became engaged.

"Tell me about Lisa Kerrig him.

She was ready to ask the Was she prettier than I? Di more than you love me? Are don't love her any more? Wh the romance between you two to hear the answers. Darling, y times prettier. I never loved h compared with the way I feel never give her a thought any m up because I grew tired of her

Bill was emptying ash tray glasses. These things made c Loud clinking noises. Perhaps h her.

"Tell me about Lisa Kerrig again.

He turned and faced her. "T did, didn't they? From eight to watch."

"Oh, they didn't really tell Their stories are just an adventu Kerrigan at the Ski Lodge. Down the Mississippi. Lisa Grandma's Ranch—or maybe it ma's nerves. I don't remember really like?"

"You must have an idea by n

"But I'd like you to tell me a

"What can I say?"

"Well, that's a silly questi say ——"

"I can say she's the girl I o marry. But by this time you mus

"Yes, but I got my informati way. I picked it up from the big the street. I should have come daddy and asked him to explain

Bill said, "Daddy's too tired you've got all the facts. A little haps, but it will have to do."

And she thought to herself, N him very lightly, very unconcern way, you don't love Lisa any mo

That was the question that wo lovely reassurance and Bill's co ily she did not dare to ask it.

n as he stood there and she uch she loved him and how e if he said, "Yes, I still love onest, painfully honest, and d dare to ask him if he still an. She knew then that she he question. And it occurred ight go through life without much of Bill Hampton was will never be happy," she know," herself replied.

She hasn't. That must prove t the whole thing. Let sleep-eir own moss or something.

done. A person could for-end. Bill's friends from the vn began to slack off. After hem ever got to New York ed there had seen her, had satisfied, and most of them
k. They would be rememyear when their Christmas hen Bill mentioned that he'd b Stone or Chris Campbell.
ien they came were easy to mention Bill's past in a way d to Lisa Kerrigan. Lisa his mother's memories of ne, Bill's sister, was silent, t of Lisa, but just the same ow where you stood with hockingly thin, terribly chic that she had been a regular d that she had eaten chop night, but at least she didn't at unspeaking but not quiet.
heavy gold bracelets and te holder against her nails her new sister-in-law and miled.

other nor his sister ever said,
They never said, "You'd Come on just for a week or w why. Lisa Kerrigan and were afraid. In back of ile and her mother's cheer-re afraid.
elf who talked of her going is mother and sister nodded d be very nice indeed. What they could say?
oon now," Bill promised.
vacation?"
ationtime she was pregnant understand that she didn't
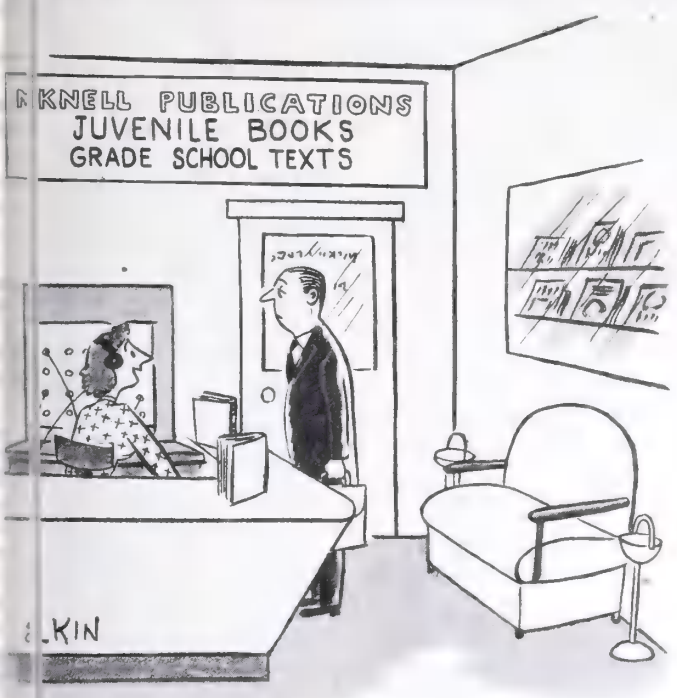
And later he understood that it would be a nuisance to travel with a baby and after that she was pregnant again and then it was a nuisance to travel with a baby and Janey and the time went by and sometimes she told herself the truth. Sometimes she admitted that she was afraid of Bill's home town. It was an ambush and she would not walk into it.

AND sometimes she came close to convincing herself that she was being exceedingly sensible. Bill's family came to New York every year and between times he usually had a business trip on which he fitted in a quick visit to his parents. So why should she cart the children around the country upsetting their little stomachs and starting their little noses running? Home was the best place for children. Why should they travel? Why indeed? So that people could point out to their mother a place named Cherry Hill? So that their mother could listen to a thousand new stories of Lisa Kerrigan and young Bill Hampton who had been both shadow and slave to Lisa?

And the years went by until there were seven of them in which she had been Bill's wife and still she had not visited his home and now when he spoke of going it was difficult to find excuses. And perhaps, after all, there was no need for excuses. Seven years of being Mrs. William Hampton, his wife. What was there to fear after seven years? It was her fault, not his, that she had never felt sure of him. He had been a good husband. a good father, a reliable fellow. Of what was she afraid? Of foolish things. Of waltzing dogs on a television show. Of chop suey. Of pictures of people grouped cozily about a fire of a ski lodge. She knew the thoughts, the memories that came to his mind at such moments.

She would look at him and she would think, Oh, my darling, turn to me and say, "That reminds me of a funny story about Lisa Kerrigan." Tell me the story and although I've heard it before I will laugh with you. Don't shut me out. Talk to me of Lisa Kerrigan and I will never be afraid again.

Janey was six that year, the year that she could no longer avoid going home with him.



"I've figured it out this way, honey. I'll take my vacation before we move to the shore."

"But you always like your vacation down there."

"Well, this year I won't get it down there. I'll just have weekends. It won't kill me. We'll use the vacationtime to visit the folks."

"Why? They'll be here in the autumn and ——"

"Oh, I think they'd like it if the kids could see the old place and sleep in the rooms that "There is a chair. Do you see the chair? The chair is to sit on and wait. Won't you sit on the chair and wait?"

The "moisture-shield" in gentle new Fresh is an extra-effective astringent. This acts like an invisible shield to protect your clothes and stop underarm odor

"L'Elegance"—ball gown of gleaming golden brocade by Philip Hulitar. Her deodorant—sure, new Fresh gentle new deodorant has moisture-shield to keep underarms dry!

Instantly—Fresh Cream Deodorant forms an invisible shield to protect you and your clothes

Wonderful news! Gentle new Fresh with "moisture-shield," used daily, ends the problem of perspiration moisture which stains fabrics and causes unpleasant odor.

Tests in a leading university laboratory show gentle Fresh has up to 180% greater astringent action than other leading cream deodorants. It's the astringent action in deodorants that keeps underarms dry. Try creamy-soft new Fresh today.

FRESH®
keeps you Lovely to Love

Fresh is also manufactured and distributed in Canada.

Fresh is a reg. trademark of The Pharma-Craft Corporation.

How do you find a BETTER DRY CLEANER?

Most dry cleaners are good . . . but if you want the best care for your family's wardrobe, it's just good horse-sense to look for the Sta★Nu dry cleaner nearest you! He is one of more than 2,000 leading dry cleaners throughout the land who take pride in their superior workmanship and have been licensed to offer you the Sta★Nu Finishing Process at no extra cost! Sta★Nu revitalizes fabrics by restoring textile finishing agents lost through ordinary wear to bring back the color-fresh look . . . the cashmere-soft feel . . . the wrinkle-resistant qualities you admire so much in fine new clothes! The Sta★Nu Process is available only from dry cleaners displaying this emblem . . .

Stā★Nu FINISHING PROCESS

sis and I slept in. We'll figure on going, honey."

There it was. No way out this time.

When Pat walked downstairs she was conscious of how quiet the house had become. Bill had taken the children somewhere, no doubt. Had everyone gone?

Out in the kitchen she found the cook shelling a mountain of green peas.

"You looking for your family, Mrs. William? They all went off in the station wagon, your father-in-law with them. They're going to fly kites, they said to tell you."

"Oh, thank you." She stood irresolute, faced with one of the small problems of visiting one's in-laws. Should she inquire where to find Mrs. Hampton and Joanne? Had they withdrawn purposely, wishing to be to themselves? Or would she seem standoffish if she made no effort to join them?

"Mrs. Hampton and Miss Joanne are on the side veranda. I was just thinking of bringing out this bowl of fruit to them."

Good old cook. She knew the problem. She had said in her own way, "Look, you carry out this fruit and it'll give you a chance to survey the situation. If they want you to stay, you'll know it. If they don't, drop the fruit and run."

"May I take it, Katherine?"

"Oh, why certainly, Mrs. William. If you like."

The living room was dim, shaded by the huge trees on the lawn. A person walked quietly there, for it was a room of sober elegance. It was green and white and soft lavender shadows and she moved through it feeling a certain awe for its antiquity. She had been an apartment-house child herself and except for beach houses had had no acquaintance with any human shelter that offered more than a half-dozen rooms or had weathered its second decade. This house of the Hamptons was enormous and it had known a full century of life. It was stately and impressive and even beautiful, but it did not seem friendly. She had wanted to love the house as she loved Bill's parents, but the house was not so ready to love her. It was not a home. It was a museum. A museum with a swimming pool and excellent servants.

SHE trod softly toward the French windows beyond which stretched the veranda and they were there—Mrs. Hampton and Joanne. And they were talking.

"Well, I don't like it, Joanne. I don't think it right for him to take her to Cherry Hill."

"I told him it wasn't. I said it as flatly as I could."

"What did he say?"

"He told me to mind my own business."

"If he felt that way it's a wonder he told you that he was taking her out there."

"Oh, well, he had to. I was thinking of driving her over to Aunt Laura's tomorrow and I asked him if he thought she'd like to go. That's when he said he was taking her to Cherry Hill."

They must not speak again until they knew that she was with them. A word can be said in an instant and remembered for a lifetime. Pat walked through the French window and out upon the veranda. She said, "I heard. Some I couldn't help hearing and some I stood right there and listened in on. What about Cherry Hill? What am I getting into?"

They stared up at her and saw a haired girl with a bowl of fruit in he girl whose anxious gray eyes went fr
the other of them as she asked her They did not answer at once. They l their reclining chairs and to Pat they denly strangers. A slender gray-hair and a dark girl with skinny legs. Wh asking questions of these people, that her own husband would not an what was she doing on the veranda seum with a bowl of fruit in her ha

"Sit down," Joanne said. "Put bowl somewhere and sit down."

PAT deposited the bowl on the flo down beside it.

"You could have a chair, yo Joanne said.

"This will be fine." She waited f speak. They did not speak and th look at her, though she waited, her her eyes still searching their faces
And after a while it came to her th not know what to say, for they cou how much, how little Bill had told

I will h them, sh and so she
"I don't su
Kerrigan
ger to eith
"No. ger," Joan
"Bill w with her, flatly. "I was."
"Bill about her
"He tri
I would
That was Now I wa to know What wa Was she derful?"
The tw women each othe silent.
"I've p terrible know it.
on, "but help me.
me a little about—Joanne her mo should,
she said.
"Wha would Mrs.

voice was quiet and a little sad.

"None really. Only it's silly th but Bill's wife knows about Lisa.

"Were they engaged?" Pat aske

"Yes, they were engaged."

"What happened?"

Joanne took an orange from t stared down at it, turning it slowly thin fingers. "Lisa met someone el

Pat swallowed hard and saw world of trees and blue sky blu eyes. It had been such a comfo the one in which she had pictur Bill drifting apart in the natural v people who were not truly me other. But he had lost Lisa. It ha sweetly wistful surrendering of a f Instead it had been a sickening, all but mortal.

"I suppose she was beautiful."

Joanne shrugged. "I suppose thought much about it. There things that one remembered abo

"Such as?"

"Oh, I don't know exactly." Jo and tossed the orange into the a idly.

She's going to eat it eventually.
Why can't she do it now and stop body nervous?

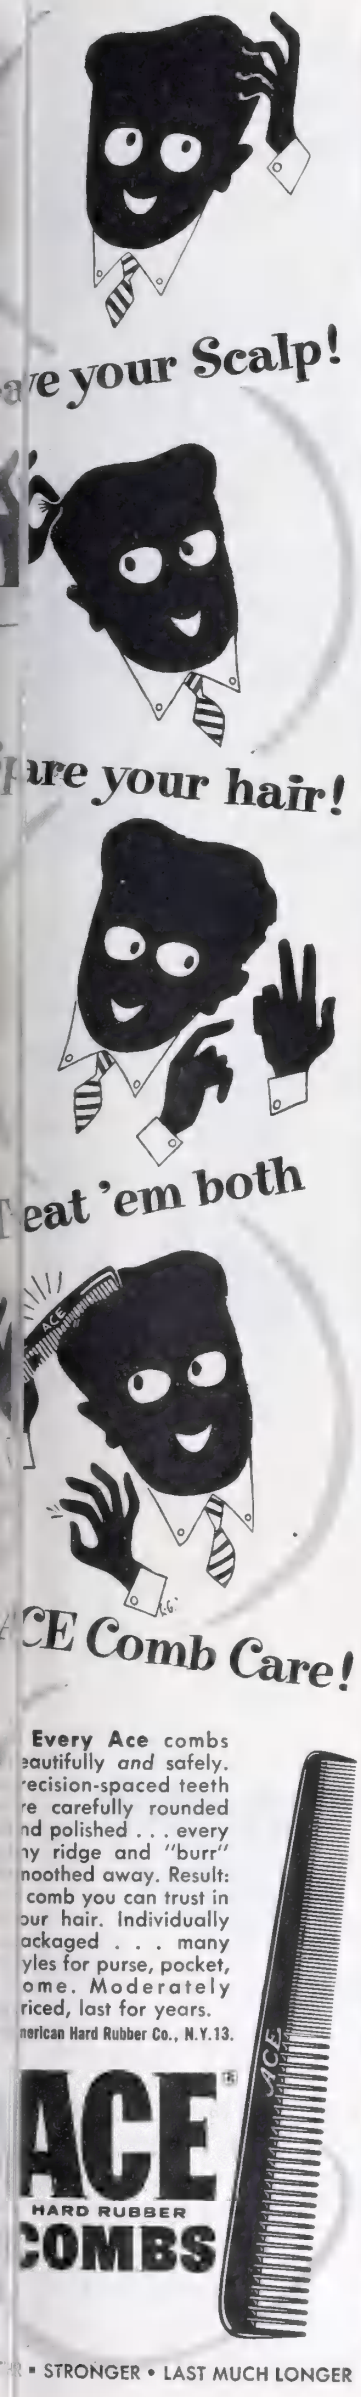
"There was a poem years ago,
"about a man who glittered wh

NEXT MONTH



● The boy advanced murderously, his hand tense. Then the knife, long and shining, caught the pale sunlight that slanted through the schoolroom windows. Rick, the teacher, backed away, eying the sharp blade. I'm calm, he thought, I'm scared, but I'm calm. Exceptionally calm.

He had pictured himself teaching, keeping friendly, easy control in the classroom, opening up new ideas and greater vistas to young minds eager for learning. But this wasn't quite that way. These boys weren't children. They were swaggering toughs, products of the slums, diabolically skilled in their devious ways of making life unbearable for a teacher.

The shocking conditions which exist in some of our schools today form the background for Evan Hunter's powerful new novel,

THE BLACKBOARD JUNGLE

Complete in the October JOURNAL, condensed from the novel soon to be published by Simon & Schuster.

Somebody ran across it and that line became generally used in describing Lisa. She glittered when she walked."

Pat's eyes fastened themselves on the orange. "It sounds wonderful," she said. "I just walk in the usual way myself. I never guessed that—that there were people who could glitter." And suddenly she wanted to be alone. She wanted to run to the room upstairs and hear no more of Lisa Kerrigan. But she had tried something very like that once before.

Bill's sister sank her long red nails into the golden skin of the orange. "She glittered," Joanne said. "She wasn't like anyone else. She had a sweet way of laughing and a heart full of fun and an imagination that kept us all gay and safe from thinking of anything that wasn't thoroughly delightful. She had tiny hands and enormous eyes and the bravado of a tough little boy. She had glamour and wit and grace and she was more fun than a barrel of monkeys."

Pat watched the skin stripped from the orange and she thought that she must indeed be a dull wife for a man who had wanted Lisa Kerrigan. And she was thinking, too, that she had won Bill only because all women were alike after Lisa, but a man must choose one of them if he would have a home and children.

"Say something," Joanne urged. "Or have a piece of orange. You wanted to know about Lisa, didn't you?"

Pat nodded miserably.

"Well, fight back a little. Stop looking as though you were ready to quit."

"Oh, I don't quit."

Joanne chewed reflectively. "Say something nasty about Lisa. It'll make you feel better."

BUT Pat was silent and after a time Joanne popped the last section of orange into her mouth and began to speak as though a decision had been reached in her own mind.

"Bill was overseas when Lisa met Ken. Ken was a tall blond guy and he was a stranger in town. Someone brought him to Cherry Hill and he went mad about Lisa. He was in the Army, too, but his work was here and they saw a lot of each other."

"I never liked him," Mrs. Hampton said. "He had a falseness that you could detect at a glance and a wide streak of cruelty."

"But he was handsome and romantic, mother. Lisa didn't stop writing to Bill. He thought they were still engaged until he was shipped back to the States wounded. He called Lisa from the hospital in San Francisco."

"She was the first one to be called," Mrs. Hampton said bitterly.

Joanne said nothing for a moment. She considered the fruit bowl, reached for a pear, then rejected the whole idea. "Lisa didn't tell Bill when he called. Instead she told him that she still loved him and she promised to fly out to San Francisco as soon as she could get space on a plane. Then she hung up the phone and went out and married Ken."

"Oh, poor Bill." And it was her Bill Pat pitied. Decent, honest Bill who didn't deserve that kind of treatment, but it was someone else she pitied too. Someone she had never known. A young soldier lying wounded in an Army hospital.

Bill's mother said, "She never did tell him. I told him. Someone had to. He was going crazy wondering why she didn't write. She would never have told him. It wasn't gay. It wasn't fun. It was the kind of thing you couldn't glitter while doing."

Joanne was tearing the discarded orange skin into small pieces now and the ceaseless movement of her thin fingers was maddening.

Mrs. Hampton said, "But do you know he never blamed Lisa? He always took the attitude that he was somehow at fault. He just couldn't conceive of Lisa being wrong or unkind in any way. We came to detest Lisa because we knew how much she'd hurt him, but he never seemed to hold anything against her."

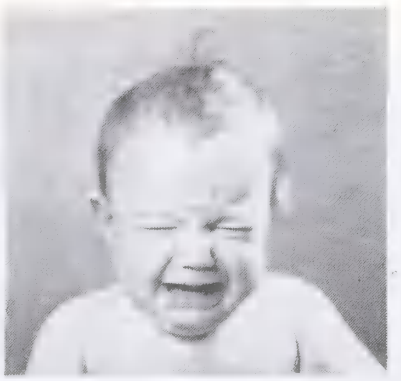
Pat said, "I'm not that forgiving. I just hope I can manage to be civil when I meet her."

The heads of the two Hampton women turned swiftly toward her, their glances sharp and incredulous. They looked suddenly like birds who have seen something both alarming and astonishing.

STYLE NO. 3204

Everything about a Lassie looks expensive...except the price. This coat, an effective example...goes around the clock, over everything you own. One beautiful sweep of Rippletone, a fine wool...and remember, the lining of every Lassie is guaranteed for the life of the coat. Your choice of vibrant Fall colors, in sizes 8-18. $55

SLIGHTLY HIGHER WEST OF THE ROCKIES



"THE COAT OF GUARANTEED QUALITY"
LASSIE Maid

FAMOUS LASSIE COAT BRANDS: LASSIE JUNIOR, LASSIE MAID, LASSIE PETITE®

SPECIAL LASSIE OFFER: YOUR PERSONAL PERFUME PACKET . . .
2 BOTTLETTES EACH OF 12 WORLD FAMOUS PERFUMES. LIMIT—2 PER PERSON.
SEND 50¢ EACH (IN COIN) FOR POSTAGE AND HANDLING TO ADDRESS NOTED BELOW.

FOR FREE "FASHION BOOKLET" AND NAME OF NEAREST STORE, WRITE TO LASSIE MAID, DEPT. L-9, 512 SEVENTH AVE., NEW YORK 18

The difference between this...

and this...

is often this...

Joanne's dark eyes searched Pat's face as though seeking a hint that this was a joke or a piece of wild insanity. "What are you talking about? Lisa's dead. She's been dead five years. Didn't you know?"

Pat gasped. Lisa dead? Then indeed there was no hope. Lisa was a lovely legend now, a woman who would remain enshrined in all her perfection in the mind and heart of the man who had loved her.

Joanne said, "She couldn't live without Ken. Oh, I don't mean that she went into a romantic decline when he died. It was a little more tabloid than that. She killed herself—with a gun."

Mrs. Hampton shuddered. "It was just awful. And so unnecessary. The whole thing. A hunt for treasure off the Central American coast. He went with a crowd on somebody's yacht and the yacht was never heard of again."

Pat said nothing. She could see Ken, Lisa's husband, the blond young man who seemed to have glittered quite a lot himself. She could see him drowning in blue water—shark-infested water—and the thought was ghastly. No wonder that Lisa, who understood only gaiety, could not live with such a thought.

"She had wanted to go along but he wouldn't take her. She was pregnant again and I guess he thought she might be ill and spoil his fun. He just went off with the others and left her here. She waited three months after the yacht was given up for lost, then she ——"

"Had the baby been born yet?"

"Oh, no. Not that one."

PAT wondered which evening it had been when Bill had come home to her with the aching knowledge of Lisa's death fresh in his thoughts. And she could not suppress the dreadful idea that perhaps she had tortured him with tedious details of her day or had nagged him about keeping a dentist's appointment. She rested her cheek against the veranda railing and felt weary and sick.

"Have a peach," Joanne said.

Pat shook her head.

"You were the one who wanted to hear this, you know," Joanne said.

Pat sighed. "You're right. I wanted to hear it. I wanted to know why you both thought I shouldn't go to Cherry Hill."

Joanne said, "You shouldn't go because Lisa's mother is there. If she's in the mood for it, she'll tear you apart."

Pat looked long and hard at her sister-in-law. "Nobody tears me apart," she said. "And why should the woman want to try?"

"Because Bill was Lisa's and her mother will resent you."

"Resent me?" Pat asked ruefully. "Me? More likely she'll be sorry for me. She'll see at a glance that I couldn't glitter if I were sprayed with star dust."

"Is that so?" Joanne reached into the bowl and chose another orange. "You know what she'll see at a glance? The same thing we saw. She'll see that Bill never had it so good."

Children were wonderful. They didn't mind asking questions. They had yet to learn that a question thrust suddenly into a delicate situation could cause internal bleeding.

"Where are we going?" Janey asked. "Where are we going, daddy?"

Bill studied the road ahead. It was straight and clear of traffic, but he fixed his gaze upon it very intently.

"To a place named Cherry Hill."

"Why are we going there?"

"Oh, to see some people."

"Are there cherries there, daddy?"

"There are cherry trees. I won't guarantee that there'll be cherries."

"What are we going for? I wanted to swim."

"Well, you'll swim tomorrow and all summer long. Today you can meet a lady who knew your daddy when he was your age."

Janey said, "What's so special about that? Grandma knew you the day you were born."

Pat turned and said, "Now, now, Janey, don't be smart."

"What'll we do at Cherry Hill, daddy?"

"Oh, look around. It's a great big place."

"Bigger than grandpa's?"

"Yes. It's a country place."

"With cows and pigs?"

"No, dear, not that kind of country place. It isn't a farm. It's simply a big house away

the fragrant way to clean Toilet Bowls

JUDSON DUNAWAY CORP., Dover, N. makers of ELF Drain Opener

"Lazy Susan"
DRYETTE
for washings and ironings

Satisfaction Guaranteed or your money back!

SNAGPROOF, RUSTPROOF METAL Holds more in less space
Lustrous finish—Perfect for Gifts

Super Dryette, 12 arms.....$8.9
(23 ft. drying space; strong, sturdy) Travel Dryette, 6 arms.....$4.9 (9 ft. drying space; stands in bath-tub, packs eo

Act now to enjoy easier clothes drying servi order today from your dealer or direc

DRYETTE CO., 201-E N. Waco
Wichita, Kans.

Corns ... Sore Tender S

SUPER-FAST RELIEF!

Super-Soft Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads not only give you fast, nerve-deep relief . . . stop corns before they can start . . . remove corns one of the quickest ways known to medical science—but also ease new or tight shoes! No other does all these things. So, insist on Dr. Sch

Super-Soft Dr Scholl's Zino-p

FREE! Sunshine Christmas Sle
SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER: We'll you colorful five-piece Christmas Sleigh A LUTELY FREE, with complete details an proval samples on how to MAKE BIG MONEY ing famous exclusive Sunshine Christmas Car best sellers you offer at big savings. Write tod Free Sleigh and details.
SUNSHINE ART STUDIOS, Inc., Dept. Springfield 1, Mass., Pasadena 3, Calif.
(East of Rockies write to Springfield office city with lots of land around it for nd horseback riding and ——"

e go horseback riding?"
ear."
broke into a loud wail. "Why won't
e go horseback riding?"
se Cherry Hill doesn't have horses
," Bill said.
l right, then." Tommy had always who could recognize the folly of is breath.
ldren sat back in the car and were road was dazzlingly bright in the nd the trees seemed violently green.
e about them had a weird unnatural though this were not really a road n elaborate booby trap hastily con-r the sole purpose of leading them
. Pat looked at Bill and she guessed le through the quiet afternoon with
of Lisa Kerrigan.
to the children, "Let's sing somed not respond as she had expected.

thirsty. They were warm. Tommy go back and look at a very interest-he had seen which he suspected tiger. Janey thought she was get-k.
"My goodness, some of us are de-mpanions today, aren't we?"
w a fast look over his shoulder at n. "We'll be there in a second," he they all right?"
fine."
t," Tommy said. "I'm worried tiger. I think he was lost."
ear, someone'll read his license tag r catcher'll take him home. I know ut a tiger. It goes like this:
tiger Trey ever faithful
f will not drive him away —— Sing with me."
n't sing. Janey said, "Look, what's aid, "It's a castle up on a hill."

"That's where we're going," Bill said and they made a turn and were on a private road.

Pat looked about her and she thought that no one would be home, for as far as the eye could see there was no sign that anyone had recently been there. And it was perhaps because she was a city child that she could find no beauty in the shrubs and bushes that grew wild and neglected.

"The stables and kennels were over there," Bill said, pointing.

"Over where?" Janey asked.

Pat looked, too, but could see only tangled underbrush and a maze of crazy, untended hedges. It was a dismal sight, she thought, and it seemed that they drove a mile between trees that were blighted and uncared for and it was only fitting that close to the house there was one that had been struck by lightning and stood like a medieval beggar exposing his pitiful disfigurement.

Bill stopped the car and came around to her side. He opened the door and she stepped out and stood beside him. Was it harder for him to come here or for him to stay away? She wished she knew.

The children scrambled out of the car and looked about them. "Gee," Tommy said. "Hey." Below, the road which had led them here stretched far into the distance, a shining white ribbon. A small forest lay at their feet sloping gently down to the world of mortals. It was done with magic, of course, a magic so strong that Pat found herself wondering why, in approaching the house, she had thought the aspect dreary.

"Did you play here when you were little?" Janey asked.

"Yes," Bill said. "I played here."

"I bet it was fun."

He smiled at Janey. "Oh, it was."

And it must have been, Pat thought, but it had all led to a man's walking through life with a heartache that he could share with no one. She stood there in the little world of Bill's enchantment and she tried to picture it all as

By MUNRO LEAF

This snooty, smirking stupid is a Blamer. If you believed what it says you would think it never made a mistake or did anything wrong in its life. It always blames somebody else for everything. If people don't want to play with a Blamer, it always thinks there is something wrong with them, instead of knowing that it is so tiresome itself. If it doesn't do well in school, it blames its teachers. If it can't build or make something well, it blames the tools; it just has to blame something other than itself. What a pain!

It's here! The thrifty sleeper that GROWS with your child!

Wears Longer! Fits Better! On and off in a Jiffy!

"Room to grow, from top to toe!" That's the extra value you get in this up-to-date Sleeper Suit by Healthknit. In this new design top and bottom are separate—do not fasten together as in ordinary Sleepers. Extra length in the top, plus gentle self-adjusting waistband of heat-resistant elastic lets the garment expand—it actually G-R-O-W-S right along with your fast-growing youngster. Longer wear saves careful dollars.

You busy mothers will cheer the time-saving qualities of this new Sleeper Suit as well as its economy. Training is simpler, your child will quickly learn that he can "go" by himself. Makes diaper changing for little tots much, much easier too!

No buttons to replace, no fasteners to gouge. Nothing touches your baby but that soft, cuddly shrink-resistant Healthknit fabric which is so easy to wash and needs no ironing. Nylon reinforced neck band keeps its trim fit through washing after washing. Stretchy toes mean comfort for tiny growing feet, while double soles mean double wear. Choice of colors, sizes 0 to 6. Truly a luxury garment—see it today!

Now at your dealer's—in sanitary cellophane packages and priced at only $1.95 to $1.98.

P.S....For dads and lads and sisters, too!

Made from an exclusive new Shrink-Resistant, Wrinkle-Resistant fabric, these Ski-Type Sleep Suits are the last word in warm sleeping and luxury lounging. Nylon reinforced neck, snug fitting ankles and cuffs, Heat-Resistant elastic waistband. Your choice of colors. Priced from $2.19 to $3.95.

Healthknit®
SLEEPWEAR FOR THE FAMILY
By the makers of famous MacDee Shorts and Kut-Ups Shirts for men and boys
STANDARD KNITTING MILLS, INC., KNOXVILLE 3, TENNESSEE

Curity
DIAPERS

Curity Diapers absorb fully . . . their thirsty surgical weave soaks up moisture like a sponge. They're cloud-soft, too, with exclusive woven-in Foldlines to make folding easy for you. And their laundering story is something to make you cheer, because Curity Diapers . . .

Wash Easier — Their open weave means quick-cleansing ease in Ivory Flakes, Ivory Snow or Dreft.

Dry Faster — Indoors or out, Curity Diapers dry faster, smoother and softer.

Wear Better — Curity Diapers are made of full-weight quality gauze for longer wear, lasting good shape, easier care.

You'll find Curity Diapers at your favorite infant's department . . . leading diaper laundries also have them. Don't forget — Curity has wonderful gift diapers, too.

SEE THE NEW Curity NIGHT DIAPER

Mail the Coupon for Regular Diaper

KENDALL MILLS—Division of
The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. J94
Enclosed is 25c (coins only) for full-size Curity Diaper and literature on Curity Nursery Products. (Only one diaper to a family.) (Print clearly.)

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

Good in Continental United States and Hawaii.

it had been in other days. Those days when laughter had lived here along with a little girl who could charm birds out of the trees and take a boy's heart and hold it so fast that when he left Cherry Hill he would be forced to go without it.

Pat could see that little girl. She was there in the doorway. A child with enormous eyes and dark gold hair, slim as a flower and with tiny hands outstretched to Bill.

The children seemed to see her, too, though she was only an enchantment. They must know she wasn't real, for she moved like sunlight and there could not be any other children like this one.

"Myra, honey." Bill had the little girl in his arms and she did not melt away. She was real and Pat remembered that there had been another child, one who had not died with Lisa. Bill brought her to them and she smiled and her smile was heavenly.

"Please come and meet my grandmother," she said and her voice was a small silver chime and she beckoned to them and disappeared in the cool grayness of the hall and they followed her.

Bill led the way down the dim corridor. "Isn't that an amazing kid?" he asked his wife.

And his wife said that yes indeed she was, and the jealousy that flamed within her was for Janey and sweet little Tom, who were not amazing kids.

"How old is she, Bill?"

"Eight. Eight years and four months."

Pat choked down the poisonous urge to say, "And how old are your own children—would you know so precisely?"

They walked into a room that was a great splash of color. The walls were hung with vivid paintings. Not good, Pat noted, but bright. Two bridge tables had each a half-finished jigsaw puzzle awaiting attention. The flowered chair coverings were brilliant South Sea Island prints and the uncarpeted floor had been painted butter yellow.

"This used to be the morning room," Bill said. "It was different then. Sit down, darling. Not there! Look out!"

The children laughed as she performed an adroit recovery two inches above the chair cushion. There was an annoyed "miaow" and a shining Siamese cat slid to the floor.

"That's Princess Ming," Bill said and he threw himself casually into a chair by the window. And Pat did not look at him, for he was not hers at this moment. He was a man who called by name a cat she had never seen before, a man who had known this room all his life and who waited in it without discomfort or strangeness.

Janey said, "Come here, Princess Ming. Come here, kitty. Will she scratch, daddy?"

"No. Never scratched anybody in her life."

Tommy was at one of the jigsaw puzzles.

"Don't disturb any of the pieces, honey," Pat said to him.

"Oh, let him play with it. Nobody will mind," Bill said.

"I will."

"Why should you mind?"

"Because I'm teaching him not to touch things that belong to other people."

BILL grinned. "We're on a holiday, Pat. Don't be so earnest."

And there probably was no harm in Tommy's touching the jigsaw puzzle, but there was a hurt feeling within her because here on this strange, and perhaps hostile, hill Bill had not sensed her need of his support, his understanding.

Myra had returned. "Grandma's coming," she said.

And there was grandma. Pat rose to her feet to meet the old lady and was startled to find that the old lady didn't look very old. She was slim and black-haired and tanned and the lines in her face seemed to be only those that the sun and the wind had put there. She wore slacks and a creamy white blouse and the scarf at her neck seemed to be eternally blowing in a breeze stirred by the galloping pace of her mount.

"Bill, my darling boy."

"I've brought my family to see you this time, Betsy."

"I see you have." She studied Pat with a candid interest. "You're different than I expected."

"AM I?" Smile with that question. It could sound sharp, you know.

"Yes, you're so sweet-faced for a New Yorker. They have such brass-hard expressions as a rule. Surely you've noticed that."

"No. It's escaped me."

"How odd." Mrs. Kerrigan had taken no notice of the children. They stood, the two little Hamptons, staring up at this grandmother who was like no grandmother they had ever seen before. And Pat observed that they looked excessively scrubbed, revoltingly starched and dressed up. Should she have brought them here in blue jeans and T shirts? Yes it would have been better. Anything would have been better than their standing in Lisa Kerrigan's house looking like little underprivileged cases who had been stuffed into their Sunday best for a day's outing to the home of a highborn lady.

"And the terrible accents," Mrs. Kerrigan was saying.

"Accents?"

"Yes. New Yorkers. Their accents. Dreadful, aren't they?" she said. "Of course not yours, dear. And I'm not going to call you Mrs. Hampton. Bill has spoken of you so often that I really do know you. I'm going to call you Peggy right off."

"That will be nice," Pat said.

Bill leaned out of his chair and stroked Princess Ming. "Well, what's new with you, Betsy?" he asked. "Any bidders on the place yet?"

"Oh, of course bidders, but they want to pay me nothing, just nothing. I don't know what to do. I can't afford to keep the house and I don't want to give it away. I haven't the money to pay a staff of servants, so we live in three rooms. Everything else is closed."

She waved her hand to indicate the vast dark wings of the house with their sheet-shrouded furniture and covered mirrors. Pat stared at Mrs. Kerrigan's waving hand. The woman bit her nails Down to the quick she bit her nails. She had suffered the tragedies of a lost fortune, a drowned son-in-law and a suicide daughter, but grief had left her eyes unshadowed and her fine figure unbent. She simply bit her nails down to the quick.

"We have one servant on the place. One. Can you picture it, Bill? And I'm not even paying her. She is Floria's cook. Floria's paying her. She went to Europe and left her cook with me. Before that I had Marge Sutherland's servants, but Marge settled permanently in Honolulu and sent for them. God knows what I'll do when Floria wants this one back."

"You'll make out, Betsy," Bill said. "You always do."

"Floria wants me to join her in Italy. She'd pay my way, of course, and all expenses, but I can't go." Mrs. Kerrigan darted a glance toward Myra. "Floria simply loathes children, so that's that. I can't take the poor little wretch where she isn't wanted, can I?"

Pat's glance slid away from the tanned face of Betsy Kerrigan. She looked at the child and offered her the only thing she had at the moment, a smile. Why did people say such things? Didn't they know that children had feelings? She did not wonder that Bill's arm went swiftly about Myra and that he held the child close to him as though he would protect her from the sting of her grandmother's careless talk

"I don't blame Floria, you know. I don't care for children too much myself, though Myra's not a great deal of trouble. I don't have to play games with her or entertain her. We just sit here like two old women reading

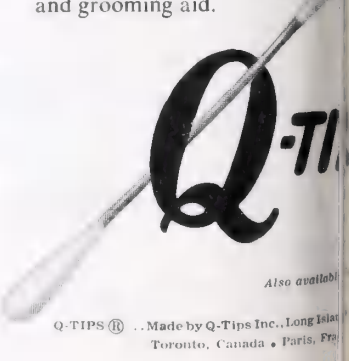
INVEST IN U.S. DEFENSE BONDS NOW EVEN BETTER

"Who on earth does use Q-Tips®

Swabs are like baby-sitters.. you want only the highly recommended kind. So ask your physician, ask your friends which swab they swear by. You'll find that nearly everybody (four out of five) prefers 'Q-Tips'.

More doctors and mothe have used 'Q-Tips'

. . . more babies have be cared for by 'Q-Tips'



. . . than all other cotton swabs combined!

- sterilized by the best hospital
- swabs can't loosen or leave lin
- "silkenized" super-refined cot
- trusted over a quarter of a ce

IT'S A BEAUTY OPERATOR, T

Keep 'Q-Tips' on your dressi table to blend on make-up, erase smudges, touch up hair the easy way. It's a marvelous manicuring and grooming aid.

Also availabl

Q-TIPS ® . . Made by Q-Tips Inc., Long Isla Toronto, Canada • Paris, Fra talking. If I hadn't had to give up the es we'd ride all day, but things being as are we just sit."

Don't you go to school, Myra?" Janey
d. yra shook her head. "I've had a private her."
he Dickinsons' governess comes in occally and gives her sums and a few little and ends. I taught her to read. You reber the Dickinsons, Bill? The school au-ies will get after me in time, I suppose, or now we're doing it our way." She ed suddenly on Pat. "Please feel free, to wander about the house and look at ou'd like."
flushed and his eyes went pleadingly to Make allowances for old friends, they said.
mind her. Please don't.
would not meet his gaze. "Come, Janey, ny," she said, "we'll take a walk. Comdismissed."
on't take too long a walk," Mrs. Kerri-
id. "Hurry back, Peggy dear."
, I will. I'm having a lovely time." marched the children through the dim or and out into the sunlight and when t there she found that Myra had come with them.
hat do you want to see?" the child asked.
jungle, the desert, the ocean or the ains?"
said, "Are they all handy?"
t over there."
children followed her pointing finger, ey did not see any of the things their had mentioned. Myra studied their faces, poked away from them in disappoint-
"You don't know how to play, do you?"
my was indignant. "I know how to play.
baseball and football and—and football kinds of things. I ——" y said, "Wait a minute, Tommy.
too little. You don't know what Myra She means playing that something is really isn't." The little girl looked up at other. "Isn't that what she means?"
ink so," Pat said.
a took Janey's hand. "That's right.
hat place way over there is a witch's
"
witch's house," Janey said agreeably.
course it isn't. Years and years ago it carriage house but it burned down. It's 's house, though of course you may be of witches."
" Janey said, "because I don't believe nes."
dropped her hand. "If you're going to ome about things we might as well just ur car and listen to the radio. I suppose believe in Arthur Godfrey?"
said, "Take us to the jungle, Myra.
y. We'll do our best. But you must be with us."
looked up at Pat and gave her a long, re. "I don't expect you to be able to he said.
not? Grownups can play as well as ple can."
lly?" Myra considered the matter. "I ey only say that when they're trying to t what we're up to. As soon as they ey get bored and want to do something ft them then and hurried ahead lead-way, flying over obstacles in her path.

y hedge, a rotting log, a large moss-rock. Janey and Tom followed her siderably less speed and grace.
motherly eye observed and noted. Was -ordination less perfect? Should the e drawn to the pediatrician's atten-e pictured herself saying, "Doctor, my don't drift through the air. Their tle feet touch the ground when they ey don't seem able to float a darn bit."
perhaps the pediatrician would reply, hat's tragic, of course, Mrs. Hampton, to be expected. Their mother, you emember, didn't glitter when she e time Pat reached the children they ted on the grass, one on either side of may have the throne of guests," id.

Pat graciously thanked her and found a tree stump.

"Now we're in the jungle," Myra said. "Boomlay, boomlay, boomlay, boom. That's the drums."

Tommy squealed with delight. "Do that again. That drums thing."

Myra dazzled him with a sudden swift smile. "That's the beat of the jungle. You listen." And she threw her head back and began to recite* in that silvery voice and Pat watched her children and she saw them slip away from her on a sea of dreams and enchantment.

"Then I saw the Congo, creeping through the black,
Cutting through the jungle with a golden track.
Then along that river bank
A thousand miles
Tattooed cannibals danced in files ——"

"Do it again," Tommy broke in. "Do the drums part."

MYRA said, "I can't bear to be interrupted. It gives me a frustrated feeling. Now I can't recite any more at all."

Pat sat quietly as the children teased and coaxed for more of the poem and she saw that there were pleasure and excitement in their eyes, but not so much as in the eyes of the child Myra. And she asked, "Myra, how often have you said that poem?"

"Oh, hundreds of times."

"Always here?"

"Yes. Always here in the jungle."

"But never before with people listening?"

Myra stared at her coldly. "Do you think I recited for the trees? Of course people listened. All the natives and all the traders and the sailors on the ivory-laden ships."

"I see."

"Make her say some more of it, mamma," Tommy begged.

"I can't make Myra recite if she doesn't want to, darling. I can only tell her that she does it beautifully and that her voice is so lovely that we all feel sad when she stops."

Myra said, "Oh, well, if I have to, I have to."

She took up the poem again and Pat looked at her own two husky, happy kids who did not know what loneliness was and she looked at the child of Lisa Kerrigan and she was stunned by the thought that came to her. Oh, no, she said to herself, I'm not that crazy. Oh, no.

"The ebony palace soared on high Through the blossoming trees to the evening sky ——"

And she thought that to be unwanted was the worst thing that could happen to a child and for all her magnetism and charm this was indeed a poor little wretch.

"The inland porches and casements shone
With gold and ivory and elephant-bone ——"

The ghost of Lisa Kerrigan was there in the little clearing and she said to it, I am afraid of you and for all I know I should be afraid of your child as well but I am only sorry for her. And she thought of Bill, who loved Myra because he had loved Lisa.

"And the well-known tunes of the parrot band
That trilled on the bushes of that magic land ——"

She looked closely at the child Myra and saw how conscious the youngster was of the spell she had cast upon the young Hamptons. How aware she was of the power of her sweet voice and how she reveled in the tribute of their wide admiring eyes.

Pat thought, I do not like people who strive for effects, who are theatrical and unreal, and I don't care whether they're eight or eighty, I don't like them. And she was ashamed of herself, for this was only a pitiful child wanting and needing to be loved.

"Yea, long-tailed coats with a gold-leaf crust
And hats that were covered with diamond-dust ——"

* From The Congo, by Vachel Lindsay.

After a while the poem ended and Tommy screamed into the enchanted silence, "Say it again, Myra. Say it all again." But Myra shook her head and lay back on the grass, looking withdrawn but contented.

Pat sat very still and examined her thoughts. And after a time she moved over and sat beside Myra and she said to her, "We have no jungle but we have an ocean. In the summertime we live near it and it is very pleasant."

Myra said, "I know. Bill told me."

And Pat knew what he had been thinking when he had told her of the ocean. He had been thinking that he would give much if he could sweep this child up in his arms and take her to play with his children in the safe snug world he had built for them. And Pat looked into the eyes of Lisa Kerrigan's little girl and she said to herself, You ought to have your head examined, and she said to Myra, "If your grandmother consents, will you come with us and visit our ocean this summer?"

Myra said, "Perhaps. I would have to think it over, of course."

"Of course," Pat said. What a vixen it was, a bundle of affectations and artfulness. She had known how to get the younger children begging and pleading.

"Myra, please come. Oh, will you, Myra? Myra, won't you please?"

Hospital-proven!
actually prevents diaper rash!

A new beauty is born!
Mennen satinized baby powder in new Baby-in-the-Rose package. 25¢, 49¢. No tax.

No wonder it's America's favorite baby lotion!

This new wonder lotion actually prevents diaper rash, when used after each bath and diaper change. Baby Magic, used properly, heals and prevents the return of present cases! Even most severe rashes cleared fast, in hospital tests.

America's favorite baby lotion checks diaper odor, smooths skin, clears chapping, chafing, cradle cap, prickles. In refillable squeeze bottle, 59¢. Giant economy size, 98¢. No tax. Slightly higher in Canada.

Mennen... Baby Specialist since 1880

And Myra smiled tantalizingly at them and said that she would consider the matter.

She loves to be coaxed. It's flattering to her. She thrives on being the main attraction. Well, wouldn't your kids angle for attention, too, if they'd never had any? Mrs. Hampton, you're a jerk and you'd better leave this child right here if you're going to find fault with her every mood and word. But she'll never know I'm finding fault. Like fun she won't. Get with it, girl. Forget Lisa. That's what's doing you in, you know.

"Let's go ask your grandmother!" Janey was on her feet, streaking toward the house.

Pat watched the three children as they ran. Myra had overtaken Janey without any effort at all. Tommy was left far behind. Pat caught up with him as he fell and lay resting a moment beside the moss-covered rock. He grinned in his angelic way at her.

"Boomlay, boomlay, boomlay, boom," he said.

Pat nodded. "Yes, indeed, son," she said. "Yes, indeed."

They stayed in New York only a few days, only long enough to prepare themselves for the summer at the beach. The preparations were simple, involving little more than a decision between which clothes and toys were to be taken and which left behind. And always, of course, it was said over and over, "After all, we're not going to Madagascar. Your father can bring down anything you find you must have." Bill never brought anything down from the apartment, but the knowledge that such a thing could be done reassured the children and prevented them from packing every last space helmet and disintegration gun.

In the apartment Pat surveyed what Myra had brought. She had brought little and in the little she had brought were two handmade dresses that might have fitted her a few years back.

"We'll leave them here, honey," Pat said. "They're too beautiful for anything we do at the beach."

There were some other things. A pair of dungarees and a pair of corduroy slacks. A few sweaters, a white blouse and a pink velvet dressing gown with "Myra" embroidered on it in large letters.

"I forgot to pack socks and underthings," Myra said.

She said nothing about shoes, toilet articles, a bathing suit, a beach robe or little cotton dresses for Sunday school or visiting. She had not forgotten to pack three books of poetry, a picture of Princess Ming and a lipstick in a candy-striped case.

Pat stared at it. "Darling, you don't use that, surely."

"No. I found it in an old dresser drawer. I brought it with me to keep."

"Well, of course you did. Here. We'll put it deep in the pocket of your valise so that it won't roll out and get lost."

A lipstick in a candy-striped case. The child's inheritance. And if I should die tonight what will my children have from me? A discarded lipstick lying in an old dresser drawer? Perhaps not more. Who is to know what a child may seize upon and treasure? Pat tucked the lipstick safely away and she could not help wondering if the candy-striped case would be familiar to Bill.

"I should have packed more," Myra said.

"Never mind. We can always pick up some things in the stores."

"I suppose so. Does Janey have a fur coat?"

"No, she doesn't."

"I have. Floria gave it to me last Christmas. She's a countess, you know. It's leopard, but I didn't bring it."

"Oh, I don't think you'll need it at the beach."

BUT the child had needed to talk about it. She had a fur coat and she knew a countess. The leopard coat and the countess would have to make up for all the things that Janey had and Myra did not have. And it was in moments like this that Pat could forgive Myra for the stupid woman on the plane who had said, "Your oldest child is simply entrancing." Let Myra be entrancing. It was only fair that God had given the poor child something.

"She's a handful, Mrs. Hampton," Annette said. "I'll be glad when we get her to the beach. It'll be easier there."

"A handful? How do you mean, Annette?"

"Well, take today for instance. I was giving the living room a good farewell cleaning. Richard had taken the children to play in the park because I didn't need him. When they came in this little one dashes into the living room and makes out like the white carpet's a skating rink and there she is skimming over it like she's ice-skating. On the white carpet no less."

"I'll speak to her about it, Annette."

"When I told her that no one was allowed on the white carpet with their shoes fresh from walking in the park she laughed at me. Not nasty, you know, but just like I was being silly and that a white carpet was for nothing in the world but to please a person."

"Maybe she has a point there, Annette."

"How do you mean, ma'am?"

"The carpet wasn't hurt, was it?"

"No. Not with those little fairy feet fly over it, but it's your rules, Mrs. Hampton was trying to hold to."

Pat nodded. Her rules. Stuffy middle-cl rules, no doubt. At Cherry Hill beautiful pets would be enjoyed, not cherished. Only dreary bourgeois would dream of mak rules that protected a carpet from the natu hazards of its existence.

ANNETTE said, "I wouldn't want you to sc her, Mrs. Hampton."

"Oh, I wouldn't."

"She's really a darling child. I never saw like that before. You can't stop looking at and she can wind people right around finger, that child."

Pat found Myra in the guest room sitt cross-legged on the floor telling fortunes. learned from a gypsy who came to Ch Hill. He wore gold earrings and had a ce scarf tied around his head and every night gypsies built a fire and danced and I c down to be with them and sing their son

"Did your gra mother let you?" Ja asked.

Myra's eyes glov "Grandmother di know," she said. slipped away from The gypsies wanted to ride west with t when they left b couldn't go because had told my fortune it said that to the lay my undoing."

Pat said, "Why, ling, you've made wonderful story. must remember it so can write it all do

"It isn't a st though," Janey said happened, didn't it

Pat shook her h "It's clever of Myr think of gypsies an those interesting thi It wouldn't be so m would it, if she was telling of something that really happen

"Did you make it up, Myra?" Tommy a and it was clear that he hoped she hadn

Myra picked up the cards and shuffled unconcernedly. She turned her gaze c upon Pat and prolonged the moment of pense. Then suddenly she threw the cards in the air and laughed as they fell about

"I won't tell. I won't tell," she said. "M it's true. Maybe it isn't." She gathered cards together and tossed four of them at dom toward Janey. "I see a house on a m taintop. It's cream-colored and has shutters and all day and all night ther beautiful birds flying around it and they little golden bells fastened to their feet an air is filled with sweet music from the golden bells and you will live there some

"Me too?" Tommy asked.

"Yes, you, too, Tommy. Only you'l next door and instead of birds there w space ships zipping past your house."

Tommy leaned forward, his little face kled in perplexity as he studied the c "What one says that?" he asked. "What says about the space ships?"

Pat left them alone. She went to her and threw herself upon the bed. She v have liked to lie face downward, but that tion suggested defeat.

I retreated. No, I left them alone to Children should not be eternally supervis grownups. Who are you trying to fool? retreated. I did not. All right, then, why you say what you think about fortunete Do you want your children's heads cra with all that nonsense? Why didn't you it? And why didn't you tell Myra that she permitted on the white carpet when she come in from the park? Why don't you yourself? What's the matter with you?

And now she did turn face downwa the bed because she knew the answer

BIRD WATCHER'S SONG

By GEORGIE STARBUCK GALBRAITH

Her hair is from the raven
Her breast is from the dove,
And from a linnet came the voice
Of my love's other love.

Her grace is from the swallow,
My rival's. And it's plain
Some nameless little feathered friend Contributed her brain.

Gibbs Kids Welcome Nippy Days

Cold Weather's Fun for Carefree Kids in Cozy Gibbs

Girls' Interlock "Soft as Doeskin" pullover shirt patented shoulder. 2 to 8 yrs., 89c. Same in combed cotton, 75c. "Peek-a-Boo" mesh panty, elastic waist. Leg ruffles. White, blue, maize, pink, mint. 2 to 16 yrs., 69c.

Infants' Interlock "Soft as Doeskin" 2-piece sleeper. Gripper fastened. 2-way stretch seat. Dark blue striped top with light blue pant; dark green stripe with mint; dark orange stripe with peach. 6 mos. to 4 yrs., $2.25.

Boy's crew-neck T-shirt, Interlock "Soft as Doeskin" reinforced with nylon. 2 to 8 yrs., $1. Same in combed cotton, 79c. Interlock "Soft as Doeskin" brief. Elastic waist and ribbed cuff leg. 2 to 8 yrs., 79c. Same in lt. wt. combed cotton, 59c. Med. wt., 69c.

Boys' Interlock "Soft as Doeskin" 2-piece ski pajama. Blouse has embroidered crest, contrasting crew neck, military shoulder and cuffs. Replaceable covered-elastic waist. Blue with navy pant and trim; tan with dark brown; gray with dark green. 4 to 8 yrs., $2.95. 8 to 16 yrs., $3.95.

Infants' pullover shirt, Interlock "Soft as Doeskin." Patented shoulder. Birth to 3 yrs. Side tabs up to 12 mos., 79c. Same in combed cotton, 69c.

Girls' 2-piece ski pajama, Interlock "Soft as Doeskin." Embroidered front, rib cuffs and waist. Replaceable covered-elastic waist. Ivory-white blouse with sapphire, peach or maize embroidery and pant. 3 to 6X yrs., $2.95. 8 to 16 yrs. $3.95.

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

COMMENDED PARENTS' MAGAZINE

Shrink Resistant for Comfortable Fit

Ask for Gibbs in Infants', Children's, Teen and College-Age Sizes

Gibbs Underwear Co., Empire State Bldg., New York 1, N. Y. • Philadelphia 34, Pa.

DENNISON SCHOOLMATES" from Kindergarten to College

Start the school year by stocking up on Dennison "Schoolmates"—the helpful supplies for students and teachers. You'll always need gummed reinforcements, stars, index tabs, gummed labels and stickers, key tags, and many more — all of fine Dennison quality and priced for young budgets.

New craft material: Dennison Gummed Crepe Paper. For art classes, hobbies, decorations, gift-making.

Dennison
Manufacturing Company
Framingham, Massachusetts

MINUTE
re in minor injuries
-BURNS
terrible infection

Apply germ-arresting OIL-O-SOL at once. Helps control infection, ease pain, speed healing. At your drug store — MOSSO'S OIL-O-SOL

T FOR PET CATS

KITTY LITTER

Amazing absorbent granular material replaces messy sandbox routine...destroys annoying odors. Sanitary, economical . . . 5 lbs. last several weeks. Obtain where pet supplies are sold.

WRITE FOR FREE FOLDER

OWE CO., Dept. 920, Cassopolis, Mich.

RNS

also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 35¢ and 60¢. Buy Mosco at your druggist.

OVED BY
ney refunded fied. The Moss Rochester, N.Y.

MOSCO

THUM

For Prolonged and Persistant

BITING • THUMB-SUCKING

PHYSICIANS, DENTISTS, NURSES FOR 20 YEARS — AT YOUR DRUG STORE

questions. Bill. Bill was the matter with her. He had said, "Pat, I think it was wonderful of you to invite Myra for the summer. You've got enough with Janey and Tommy and to take a third is getting pretty close to being an angel."

"I felt sorry for the poor little thing, Bill."

"Sure. So did I. Must be deadly for her, never having kids to play with or anything. We'll have to see that she has a great time with us."

"Yes. We'll see to it."

"Of course she's a little spoiled and high-strung and all that. You won't find her well trained the way our kids are, but that won't matter to you, will it, Pat? I mean since you're only to have her a few months you won't care if she's not exactly up to your standards?"

"You mean I'm tough with the kids, Bill? You think I'm a top-sergeant kind of mother?"

"Oh, no, honey, but our kids know what's expected of them. They do what they're told and they're reasonable little people. Myra hasn't been disciplined."

"A pity. I always think there's nothing like a good heavy bullwhip to keep a child in line."

"Now don't be ridiculous—I only meant ——"

"I know what you meant, Bill."

"I hope so, honey. I wasn't trying to tell you anything about kids. I don't understand them and you do, but ——"

"This one is our guest, Bill. I won't try to build character in her or prepare her for the years ahead. Don't worry. She'll have a nice summer."

He had kissed her then. "You're wonderful, Pat."

That was the way it had been. They had both pretended that Myra had had no mother. They had been cagey and smart and had acted as though no such person as Lisa Kerrigan had ever lived. They had a marriage to preserve and it was safer not to speak of Lisa. So they did not speak of her, though Bill had made it clear that he could not bear it if a cross word was spoken to Lisa's child.

I should not have taken her from Cherry Hill. It was a mistake. How will I manage when I dare not correct her? A simple rebuke and he will remember that she is Lisa's and he will not be on my side. He will tell me not to be so earnest and he will smile at Myra and let her know that I am not really to be taken seriously. Or am I making something out of nothing? Am I only back to the same old business of being afraid of Lisa Kerrigan?

She thought of Betsy, the grandmother in the well-fitting slacks who could go to Italy now and be with the countess. She thought of Princess Ming and wondered who would take care of her. I wonder why I don't offer to take the cat. It wouldn't be any crazier than what I've already done.

She thought about the first night in the apartment when her children had knelt for prayers. She had looked questioningly at Myra, who had stood aside in the little pink velvet dressing gown with her embroidered name splashed across its left front.

"Prayers, anyone?"

"I'm of a different faith," Myra had said.

"Our prayers are to everyone's God, darling. You can join us without belonging to our church."

"I don't think so." Myra had remained standing.

Pat had then given the signal for her own children to proceed, but Janey had been consumed with curiosity. "What are you, Myra?"

Myra had smiled in that heavenly way of hers. "I'm a fire worshiper."

Pat said, "Naturally. I should have guessed that. Well, you just go over there and light a match while we're saying our prayers. . . . No, no, Myra, not really. Put that down. . . . Now, children, get started."

But how could they? A fire worshiper. How exciting, how delightful to be a fire worshiper. How did you go about becoming one? What did you believe in? Was there a Sunday school for that sort of thing?

"I'll tell you all about it tomorrow," Myra had promised, and then she had graciously acknowledged Pat's predicament by adding, "Now do as your mother tells you. Say your prayers like good children."

Bill laughed when she told him. "What an imagination. Fire worshiper. Now where do you suppose she got that?"

"What shall I do about it? Go along with a gag or pack her off to our plain little old commonplace church?"

"Let her do what she wants, Pat. What's the difference? I guess Betsy's made no point of religious training and it isn't up to us to ——"

"No, I suppose not."

It wasn't up to "us" to do anything except to see that Myra had a nice summer. Pat wondered as she lay on her bed in the apartment what kind of summer the rest of them would have.

Myra had never before seen the ocean. She stared at it fascinated, her enormous eyes clouded with heaven alone knew what fantastic notions. Far out across the blue sky a boat rode the waves and she was ready with a salute to it:

"Stately Spanish galleon coming from the Isthmus, Dipping through the Tropics by the palm-green shores,
With a Cargo of diamonds,
*Emeralds, amethysts ——"

——

*From Cargoes, by John Masefield

Easy way to really clean . . .

CHOOSE BRUSHES WITH

stay-lively bristles

OF DU PONT TYNEX NYLON

So many handy brushes have bristles of Du Pont "Tynex" nylon! This long-handled brush scours sides and bottom of baby's bottles hospital-clean in seconds. The firm-bristled nail brush makes it easy to keep nails immaculate—for good grooming, for good health.

In any household or personal brush, "Tynex" bristles don't get limp or soggy . . . are exceptionally durable. "Tynex" bristles can be cleaned with a rinse and shake . . . can be sterilized. Brushes bristled with "Tynex" are economical, too . . . because they last longer. So, next time you buy brushes, look for "Tynex"—the bristles that carry the Good Housekeeping Guaranty Seal.

"Tynex" is Du Pont's new trademark for its genuine nylon bristles.

Look for Du Pont TYNEX nylon bristles when you buy brushes

DU PONT
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING . . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY

ASK Mary Gordon OF TWA

for tips on traveling with the children

HOW TO GO. Fly TWA, of course. TWA will get you there before the children have time to become fretful. The friendly hostess will heat the baby's formula. A visit to the galley or a thrilling peek at the pilot's cockpit can be arranged for the older children.

WHEN TO FLY. Ask Mary Gordon of TWA about the money-saving Family Half-Fare Plan.* Mom can take the children under 22 for half fare—one baby under 2 goes free—only Mom pays full fare. If Dad is along, Mom goes for half fare, too.

WHERE TO SIT. Children prefer to sit forward, near the galley. There they are served among the first. Mary Gordon will tell you to plan your trip so that you'll have at least one meal en route. Children and grownups love TWA meals.

FOR MORE INFORMATION on taking the children, see your favorite travel agent, local TWA office; send for the helpful leaflets listed below or write Mary Gordon. She'll help you solve your travel problems.

*Available on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays on First-Class flights in the U.S.A.

FILL OUT AND MAIL

Mary Gordon of TWA, Dept. J94
Trans World Airlines, 380 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

I am interested in:

- ☐ Traveling with Tots.
- ☐ How to Stretch Your Travel Dollar.
- ☐ Vacation Specials for the Family!
- ☐ How to make reservations by mail.

NAME_____
PLEASE PRINT

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

Tommy's eyes sparkled but Janey, the practical-minded, pointed out that the Spanish galleon was Mr. Sneedy's fishing boat. Myra hesitated only a moment, then she was ready again:

"Mr. Sneedy's fish boat coming from the market Bought a whole lot 'cause he didn't catch a one
With a cargo of mackerels, Blue fish, Percherons ——"

"They don't catch Percherons here," Tommy objected. "Perch. Not Percherons."

Myra shouted with laughter and threw herself on the warm sand. "Little boy, you don't know what a Percheron is."

"I do too. I know everything about fishing. It's a—it's a big, big fish with a tail."

"Oh, it has a tail, all right." Myra lay laughing up at him. "Describe the way it swims, Tommy."

"Like a bass or maybe more like a porpoise maybe."

Janey said, "Tommy, you talk too much. You don't know what a Percheron is and neither do I. You just make yourself seem silly, that's all, when you pretend that you ——"

Myra said, "Be quiet. It's lovely here. Don't chatter."

She propped herself up on an elbow and dreamed out at the ocean. There was sand in her dark gold hair and stars in her eyes. "It's just beautiful," she breathed.

But when Janey and Tommy ran to play in the water she stayed where she was, warm and lazy.

"Is the beach always deserted?" she asked.

"No, but I like it this way, don't you?"

Myra did not reply.

"The water looks very inviting to me. Does it look that way to you too?"

Myra said, "It looks rough and cold and as though the waves would knock you down and roll you over and bury your face in the sand."

"Oh?" Pat's glance seemed to be weighing the possibilities of such an occurrence. After a moment she said, "Janey and Tom are making out all right. Maybe we would too."

Myra yawned delicately and scooped up a handful of sand. She watched it intently as it trickled between her fingers and she said, "There's something I have to tell you, Mrs. Hampton, but I hope you won't tell Janey and Tommy. I'm afraid of the water."

"I won't tell them, Myra."

"Thank you."

"But as a matter of fact there's nothing to be ashamed of, you know. Janey isn't crazy about thunder. A great many people are ——"

"Pardon me for interrupting," Myra said, "but were you ever a governess?"

Well, I asked for it. A person can try too hard, you know. And I was trying hard. I was dispensing sweetness and light as though I were being paid for it. All right. It doesn't have to be that way. I can be tough and matter-of-fact too. I can say, "So you're afraid of the water? O.K. Then sit on the beach all summer." What do I care about her phobias? They're none of my business.

"Mrs. Hampton."

"Yes, Myra." And it was startling to find the tiny hand suddenly clinging to her own, the big eyes turned upon her trustingly.

"Mrs. Hampton, will you help me? I'm so afraid of the ocean. I think it's because my father was drowned."

And Pat's heart shook within her for Myra who had been spared nothing and she offered the strength of her arm and swept the child to her and buried her own wet eyes again dark gold hair.

"Darling, I'll teach you to swim and you'll be brave about the ocean."

"I hear it at night when I'm in bed an afraid."

Pat held the child close and uttere strange little meaningless sounds of co that come to a woman when a child whi in fright. And it was an appalling though a little girl must live with terror becaus grandmother, who might know all horses, knew nothing about children. had the child been told? In what words Perhaps it was right for Myra to know had become of her father, but in that mo Pat hated Betsy Kerrigan for the fear th within this child. Poor little wretch, her g mother had called her. And she had go to join the countess in Italy.

"Myra, I'll tell you a secret about fea cold and it has to be cold because it's of ice and you know what happens to melts. Fear melts too. Always it grows les less and finally it's gone."

"Is that the truth?"

"I solemnly swear that it is," Pat tol

"I didn't that." Myra herself away stood up. stretched, exte her arms wide suddenly was ning along the b wild and light foam. Pat's ey lowed the sma ure and she di believe that this feared anythi that she had he and offered wo comfort.

I dreamed it never curled me and gave n hand and look me for help. I up the whole

Tommy and were coming the water now dragged the t out of the beac and made rea receive her chi

"Isn't Myra going in?" Janey asked.

"I don't know. She's busy explorin beach."

They squinted their eyes and saw h away, very small now, still running.

"I hope she comes back," Tommy sa

"She will," Janey assured him. "I ha bobby pins."

"Is she running away?"

"No, Tommy," Pat said. "She's jus ning."

"Why?"

"For the same reason you rushed in water. Because she feels fine. Here she back again."

They watched her as she came toward over the white warm sands, her hair bri behind her, her eyes bright and gleami saw a sea serpent," she said. "Green shining silver scales."

"Where?"

"You can see him from up there, fro farthest place I was."

Janey and Tommy were off streaking t the magic place where Myra had stood. could only reach it, then surely one cou the things that Myra saw.

Myra turned and smiled at Pat. "Ta in the ocean now, Mrs. Hampton," she "If you please."

Pat looked at her children running off on a fool's chase and she led Myra in water feeling that she had conspired a Janey and Tom.

Myra did not learn to swim that Pat hoped only to put her at ease wi waves and in that she was somewhat su ful. Many lessons followed, most of th the beach-club pool, and in the end learned to swim.

SPLASH!

Take the plunge—do your Christmas shopping NOW!

Yes, shop today for Christmas gift subscriptions to LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, the magazine women believe in! They're so easy to order—economical too. Two or more 1-year gift subscriptions are just $3 each!

Simply fill in the order form that's in nearly every copy of this issue and mail with your remittance TODAY! A colorful gift card in your name will announce each JOURNAL gift in the Christmas mails!

sn't Esther Williams, you under-at explained to Bill when he arrived ekend. "I'm interested in her being water, not sensational."
you're wonderful, honey."
id he think she was wonderful?
e had taught Lisa's child to swim?
dn't he forget Lisa? Why wasn't this tle girl who was spending the sum-them? Why was the awareness of s so close, so pressing that Myra be-est, his responsibility which he must to his wife for sharing with him?
er that came from Betsy Kerrigan lp the situation any. To Pat's mind it was downright rude, for it was addressed only to Bill.

"We had a letter from Betsy," he said, taking it from his pocket and handing it to her.

"You had a letter from Betsy," she said, glancing at the envelope.

"Oh, well, it's just that she sent it to the office. I guess she's misplaced this address."

"That means, then, that the child isn't to hear from her at all, I suppose."

Bill shrugged. "They understand each other. They're not terribly sentimental people."

"I wouldn't call it exactly slobberingly sentimental to send your granddaughter a postcard picture of the Leaning Tower of Pisa."

Bill said, "You know I'm beginning to think you don't like Betsy."

"Where did you ever get such an idea? I'm crazy about her and she likes me too. Right here in the postscript she says, 'And do give my best to your dear Peggy.'"

"Betsy can't remember names. You mustn't mind her."

Pat did not answer. She was reading the letter. A foolish letter, she thought, taken up with trivial comments on weather, luggage and food. Where was a word concerning Myra? Oh, here it was. She had almost missed it.

It's such a joy to be free again. I didn't know just how sick I was of being a permanent babysitter. Of course with two children of your own I don't suppose it bothers you to just add another.

Pat folded the letter and handed it back to Bill.

He said, "When I write I'll let her know that a person named Pat is the only reason she's getting her summer in Italy."

"Don't bother. What's the difference?"

"Oh, no difference of course, but you should get the credit for ——"

"Credit? Will she bring me a merit badge when she comes home?"

She thought, I am being irritable and sharp and I am enjoying it. I'm digging at him about Betsy Kerrigan and that can only result in his finding me very unpleasant company. Then why don't I stop? Why do I plague him when it can gain me nothing? Betsy is Lisa's mother and I have lived so long in the presence of Lisa that I am sick with the poison of my jealousy and I'm doing everything wrong and foolishly.

And she thought that in other seasons weekends had never been marked by disagreeable words. She had always seen to it that when Bill returned to the city he carried a memory of the fun it was to be with her.

Not this time. It wouldn't be that way this time.

MYRA had never before brought cards to the beach. It happened that she brought them Saturday afternoon and as they lazed in the sun after a swim she produced them from the pocket of her robe.

Bill said, "What are we going to play?"

"Oh, we don't play games," Janey explained to him. "Myra tells fortunes."

"Really?" He raised himself and lay watching with amusement as Myra arranged the cards.

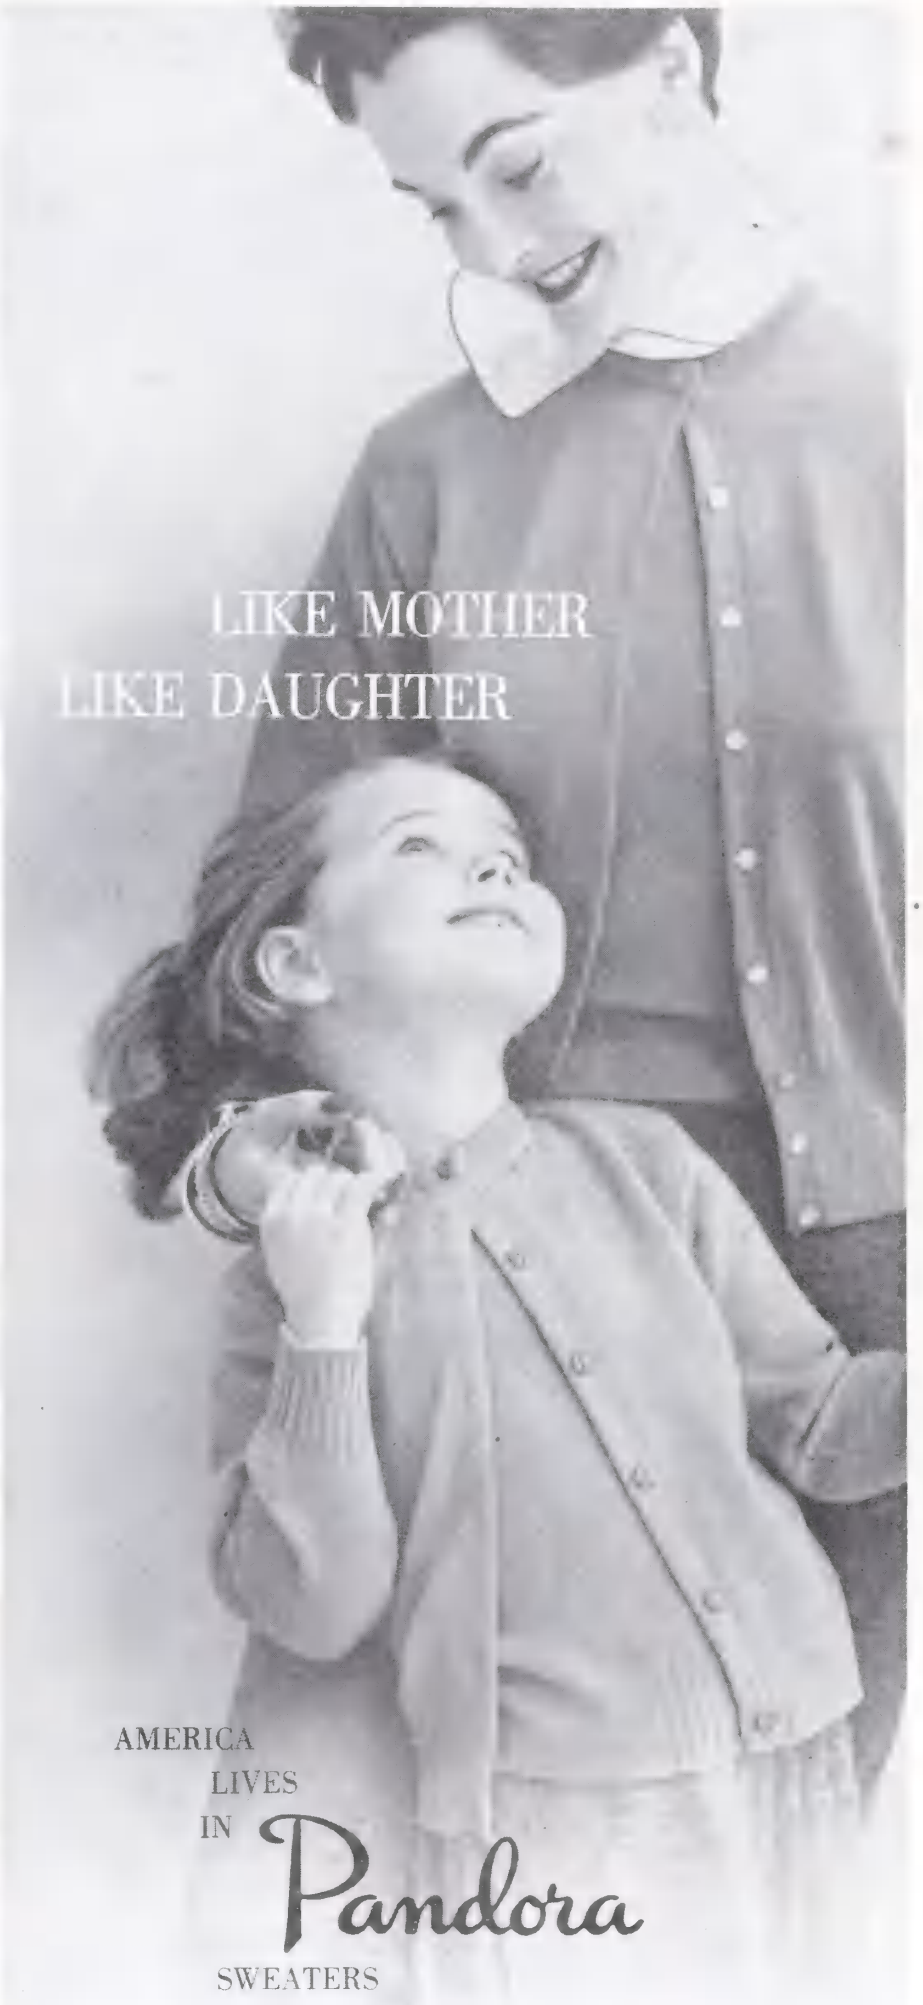
Janey said, "You always tell me I'm going to get a big surprise and I haven't gotten it yet."

Myra signaled for silence. Her eyes went swiftly from the cards to the face of Janey, then back to the cards and Myra shook her head sadly, mysteriously, and sighed deeply.

"What is it?" Janey asked.

"The nine of clubs. In a way it is what I feared. The surprise is coming and it will be big but not pleasant."

Janey stared in horror at the nine of clubs. "What's going to happen?"



"Something bad, I'm afraid. I see hundreds of people screaming and you in the midst of everything and you're screaming, too, and I see ——"

Pat said, "You see a pack of cards, Myra, and that's all anyone can see. Now put them away and let's go get a soda."

No one was interested in a soda. Janey's eyes were fastened upon Myra. "Tell me what was happening."

Myra slipped the cards into her pocket. "I can't tell you any more. My train of thought has been interrupted."

Janey turned to Pat. "Now I won't know," she said accusingly. "Now I'll just wonder and worry and ——"

Pat said, "Myra was only entertaining us. She doesn't pretend to really know the future. She can't tell fortunes. No one can."

The children stared sulkily out to sea and from the corner of her eye Pat caught the expression on Bill's face and she thought that was rather sulky too. Lisa's child had been rebuked, even discredited.

Well, what could I do? Could I just sit here and have Janey frightened to death?

Bill turned over in the sand and lay with his eyes closed. No one said a word and in time the children grew bored with the silence and ran to the water. Pat waited, but Bill's eyes remained closed and he did not speak to her.

She said, "Well, let's have at it. You're annoyed with me."

He opened his eyes but he did not look at her. He examined a sunburned arm and scowled a little. "I just don't get it," he said. "The kid's apparently been fortunetelling all the time. Fair is fair, Pat. You can't approve of something for weeks, then all of a sudden jump down a kid's throat about it."

She counted ten, then added another five. "Bill, I never approved of it. I didn't jump down her throat just now, but I should have the first time she did it. That was in the apartment before we came here. I never wanted to reprove Myra, so I kept quiet. I couldn't keep quiet today because ——"

"Why was today different?"

"Because she always told Janey and Tom nice things till today. I thought the nonsense was relatively harmless because she always dreamed up pretty forecasts. This is the very first time she ever took it into her head to frighten or worry them. I won't have her doing that."

"No," he admitted. "That's no good, but you should have said something earlier, honey. You can't let things slide and then ——"

Pat said, "I wasn't to 'top sergeant' at her, do you remember? I leave her alone but I'm certainly not going to sit by and let her make nervous wrecks of my children."

Bill reached for his sweat shirt. "I'd better cover up," he said. "I'll bet I'm going to blister."

She thought, I may blister a little myself. I'm mad enough to boil.

Bill put on his shirt, then lit a cigarette and turned to her calmly, reasonably. "Honey," he said, "we're different kinds of people from Myra and her folks."

"Hurray."

"Now just listen, Pat. Don't be cross. She simply has an overcharged imagination that makes her dramatize everything. She's a good kid, only she's different from ours. People have to be different, darling."

He's telling me not to change Myra, not to stifle her imagination, not to beat her into line with all the dreary people who are earnest and sincere and colorless. He needn't bother. I will leave her as she is. But are my children fearsomely dull little clods? Does he think they are?

He said, "I wish you could have seen her ride a horse."

She turned and looked at him in amazement. Ride a horse! Good heavens, was equestrianism a substitute for character? Did he really and truly think that because her grandmother had taught her to ride well, here was complete exoneration of Betsy's methods of child raising, incontestable proof of Myra's lofty quality?

"This is a preparation for life?" she asked.

"I only meant that you'd have been impressed by her courage and perseverance. She has terrific courage. Last year when I was home I saw her ride a horse that I wouldn't be crazy about riding. She was seven then and ——"

Pat said, "Don't talk to me as though you had to defend the child. I am not unkind to her. I don't cuff her when you're not looking. She and I get along just fine together. Rest easy, I am not going to impose my standards on her. I won't teach her anything that will curb her rare spirit."

He said, "You know what's happening here? We're getting close to a quarrel."

SHE did not meet his eyes. She dug a small hole in the sand and carefully buried a shell.

"I just refuse to quarrel," he said.

"You have nothing to quarrel about."

"And you have?"

She did not reply. There was too much to say. She thought, This is all just as much about Lisa as though her name had been mentioned. It hasn't been, but just the same that is what we are talking about. Lisa. Suppose Myra were a friend of Janey's from town. Would he care that I had interfered with her fortunetelling? I am so fed up with Lisa Kerrigan that I could scream.

Bill pulled himself off the sand. "Isn't it about time to go home?" he asked. "I've had too much sun."

She called the children and shepherded them across the ocean-front avenue. They were remembering the offer they had ignored earlier.

"Can we have sodas?" Tommy a

"No. It's too late."

Tommy said, "O.K. I don't min about daddy's only chance for a soda."

Bill said, "Nice try."

They walked the rest of the way to in silence.

Pat showered and left the water r Bill, but no word passed between was lying on her bed when he came bathroom looking healthy and ag terry-cloth robe the children had b his birthday.

He said, "Are you going to take "I hadn't thought about it."

"Well, do. You need one. You're

"Maybe I'm just naturally bad-t

HE grinned. "They warned me haired tempers, but I wouldn't li ously, I've been thinking about s This summer's tough for you, Pat. H you like to get a woman to manag dren?"

She told herself not to answer in means it kindly. Take it easy. He do that you're doing a bad job or that would be nicer to Myra. He means trying to help.

"I make out all right," she said.

"No, you don't. You ——"

"Oh, I don't? the more seri plaints?"

"I didn't m were any com mean you're kno self out. It isn't be so sharp, Pat

She said, "I alone, will you in a filthy humo

Bill looked at lessly. "I don't k to say. You're awfully big, ar

"Taking what

"That I criti handling of th jumbo down at

She looked wonderment. W sible that he di that this thing than just that significant incid he know that sh all over from losing battle a Kerrigan? Didn't he know that a to feel herself loved above all oth was his understanding, his compa it all been spent on a girl who had him, a girl who had given him heartache?

Bill said, "I guess it's my day fo wrong thing. Well, if it's all my fau but I think you're taking a pretty s you're also mad about my suggest maid, forget I mentioned it, but I k a strain on you. She's a lot for yo and, believe me, I'm grateful f you've ——"

"Grateful!" Pat sat up on the be him angrily. "Yes, that's the trou grateful to me just as you are to making fudge for Myra, to Mr. taking her on his boat or to Richar her a starfish. Don't you know y grateful to me for being nice to my responsibility too. I belong he wife. Remember?"

"What's the matter with you?"

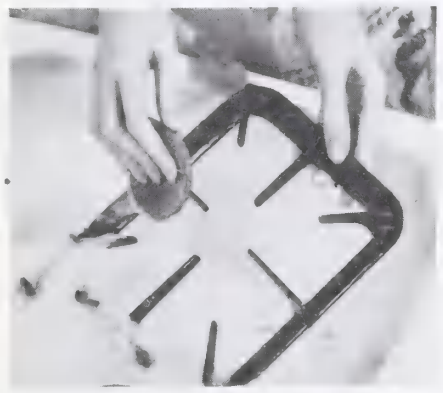
"Nothing's the matter with me

"I think you've suddenly come Maybe I used the wrong word. A not grateful. Maybe I'm just pleas infuriating too? I don't know wh about, but if you're exhausted I remedy. That's all I can do. I c child in a CARE package and Italy, you know."

"The child doesn't bother me

"All right, but I don't see why Heaven knows she's a little whirl

His voice softened, she thought a word that delighted him, a w



LET US PRAY

Almighty God, Who hast found it fitting that our lives here on earth should be lived in this particular context of time and of place, grant us, now, we beseech Thee, the power of penetration to discern the peculiar dangers and delusions with which our age is replete, and the strength to meet them in the spirit of Him Whose example and teachings we are endeavoring to follow. Amen.

Prayer from an address given by George F. Kennan at the First Presbyterian Church, Princeton, New Jersey

Easy ways to clean your stove

Never were stoves so easy to clean—but when foods spatter or spill and burn on—you need S.O.S®

Easy way to clean grates. Burner grates, like most stove parts lift out for easy cleaning at the sink. Sturdy, oval S.O.S. pads wrap around grates—clean off burned-on, crusted foods. Use S.O.S. to clean up drip trays, too.

Easy way to clean oven lining and racks. When grease collects and food burns on, it's no trick to clean the oven with S.O.S. Just rub an S.O.S. pad over the oven lining...food and grease will disappear. Use S.O.S. on oven racks, too.

Easy way to clean deep-well cooker. Clean it as you would any other prized pot or pan: give it a daily rub-down with an S.O.S. Magic Scouring Pad. S.O.S. removes stains, burned-on food and grease, makes your cooker really shine!

Easy way to clean broiler. Two tricks make this job easy: (1) Clean broiler after every use, before food and grease burn on tight. (2) Use S.O.S. each time, to scour off burned-on food and grease... make broiler cleaning easy!

The S. O. S. Company, Chicago, Illinois, U.S.A. • S. O. S. Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

d, and no doubt he was seeing vind as she raced toward him ening, her hair flying, her eyes itement. Yes, that was the way the way her mother had looked.
what he was thinking.
ted desperately to hurt him for ll the other times when he had thoughts that she could not was a way.
, yes indeed, she's a little whirl-
ket. A bonfire, and she glitters
."
t her in silence for a long cold
e said, "Oh, that's what we're Well, it had to come, didn't it?
has been burning holes in you,
.. Lisa did glitter when she ere any more questions?"
ne window and stood with his ing out at the ocean. "Myra's but of course you knew that.
y missed nothing. Did she tell ved poetry and that you'd hear achel Lindsay all summer be-taught them to Myra? Let me le uncanny to hear The Congo n a voice that's been still for a
"
ou don't have to go into all

? How does it always happen eady to speak of Lisa, you're en?"
dy. I was trying to spare you me. How do you know I don't speaking of Lisa? How do you dn't rather speak of Lisa than e else? You started this and o tell you about Lisa."

tell me. Tell me the things now to tell me, the things that Tell me that you've never re-sing Lisa, that dead or alive,
."
ross the room, his eyes full of hard. He said, "Is that what ar? Do you want me to tell s shocked at the sound of her had not spoken. She had ay it, Bill. Don't tell me." She inst the pillow and the tears as no longer angry. She was and lost. He had never been d be hers, and now it was a st a fear. He had always been if you're going to cry!" And he room and left her there.

e dried her eyes and dressed back into the world of vaca-She and Bill spoke politely to hey danced at the club and ster and played with the chilined about the train service as just as it had always been.
Kerrigan's name had been iddle of a hot summer's day hem could pretend that it eally changed. It was all the een except for small painful revealed themselves in the

of their politeness to each way he greeted the children
d to him on Friday nights.
ch him always received the
and now it was agony to Pat aneuvered to make certain ever first.

the performance and she mean it to be like this. Can ases me? And there was no wrong, for there would be ng, "Well, what is it you do nothing concerning Lisa's ase you?"
had come from Betsy Kerriit among a sheaf of papers th him over the weekend. He he letter. How could he? It ther eruption. A man, she t be too careful when he was an whom he probably conlunatic.

For all these years I managed to live with the ghost of Lisa Kerrigan. And I managed it in silence. Then all of a sudden I wasn't silent any more. Now he does not go back to New York thinking that it has been fun to be with me.

And she had plenty of time to sit alone and think her thoughts, for the children were conquering Mt. Everest these days and their interest in the beach had vanished.

"When I grow up I'm going to be a mountain climber," Tommy said. "Myra knows all about mountain climbing and she's going to show me how to do it."

Pat drove them to a little hill a mile from the house. It was a very sensible New Jersey hill and Myra, appraising it thoughtfully, nodded her approval. "The jagged majestic summit of Everest," she said, "if I've ever seen it."

Pat had never left the children alone on the beach, but this was different. They wanted and needed to be free of supervision. In the city Janey and Tommy were unable to taste freedom. This was the solution—at least till they conquered Mt. Everest or grew tired of it.

The talk now was all of rope, spiked boots and ice-cutting instruments. Every day they were driven to the small hill and Myra spoke her magic and there were icy peaks towering into the infinite and a cold wind that blew forbiddingly about the little band of dauntless climbers. Pat learned to say, "Good luck, men," instead of "I'll pick you up at four."

She would go back to the house and sit pretending to write a letter or read a book, but it was difficult. Never far from her thoughts was the fear that sooner or later it would happen. The phone would ring and Bill would say, "Something's come up at the office. I can't make it down there this weekend."

It could happen. It had happened to other women. But it was three weeks ago that we quarreled and he has not stopped coming. Yes, three weeks ago that I, an infidel, trod on sacred ground. Didn't I always know that Lisa came first? Didn't I always know that I was lucky to

MODEL S-WB

$14.95*

Chromium or black enamel legs. Five-ply COSCOAT wood-grain finish in blonde, gray, green or charcoal.

*Slightly higher Colorado and west

COSCO® TRAY CART

Top doubles as serving tray!

■ Most useful thing on wheels! A real step saver at mealtime . . . ideal for countless household tasks . . . a smart serving cart you'll be proud to display on finest guest occasions. 29½" high, 16½" x 23½". Turns and rolls at a finger's touch on 3" casters. Other all-steel Cosco carts and utility tables as low as $5.95*. At department, furniture and hardware stores. Get yours now!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

HAMILTON MANUFACTURING CORPORATION, COLUMBUS, INDIANA • Maker of Cosco Metal Household Furniture

COPYRIGHT 1954

have him on any terms? Then why didn't I keep quiet?

If the phone rings I won't answer it. I'll tell everybody not to answer it. He'd have to come down if he'd been unable to reach me, unable to say he wasn't coming. Wouldn't he?

And when she raised her eyes from the book she wasn't reading, it always came as a shock to find the house so serene, so peaceful. Flowers in the vases, curtains bright at the windows, the house full of welcome and cheer. It was odd that the doubt and fear she felt were reflected nowhere. This was a happy house. It fairly sang with contentment. And it occurred to her that it might be an imbecile house, too simple-minded to sense that a marriage was in danger.

"It is, you know," she said to the sea-green walls. "How long can a marriage live on politeness?"

Tommy's birthday came at the end of August and it was a Saturday, so Bill was home for the occasion. There was ice cream, and of course a cake. Pat had intended to have it decorated with a wondrous sparkling Mt. Everest, but the children were Indian scouts now. Bill brought an armload of presents from town to add to those already assembled at the beach. Everyone in the house had bought a gift for Tommy, and Myra had come to Pat with a very old and basic problem.

"I have no money, Mrs. Hampton."

Pat had not asked her to account for the allowance that all three children had been given each week. Instead she asked, "How much do you need, honey?"

"Well, it's for Tommy's birthday present. I want to buy him something nice. I think about ten dollars."

"Yes, that would buy something nice," Pat conceded, "but don't you think it would make Janey's present look a little unimportant? She's spending only a dollar."

"Really?" The question was asked very politely though incredulously. "What could a person buy for a dollar?"

"You'd have quite a selection to choose from," Pat assured her.

"I wanted to buy him something—something very special."

Pat said, "Any gift is special when it comes on a birthday from a well-loved friend."

"Maybe. But I wanted to buy him a large dog. I was thinking of a Saint Bernard."

Pat laughed and put her arm around Myra. This was the sort of thing that you remembered longest and liked most about Myra. These moments when she was only a normal little eight-year-old full of innocence and eagerness.

"Could you bring yourself to buy a book for Tommy? He'd like that. There are lovely books that ——"

"Oh, yes." Myra's small hands came together in a sudden ecstatic gesture. "I'll buy him a book. Is there a nice bookstore here?"

Pat said, "Well, the variety store has toys, and on that counter there are some books. Would you like me to give you a dollar now so that you can ——"

Myra shook her head. "If I'm only to spend a dollar there's no need of me borrowing," she said. "I have a dollar."

In the end she had settled for a box of modeling clay. There were no books in town that appealed to her. "And suppose Tommy should become a sculptor? Think how proud I'd feel."

They played Tommy's favorite games and sang songs that he suggested and as they all joined in singing Little Sir Echo, Pat's eyes met Bill's and his glance was softer than she had seen it since that bad Saturday. They had sung this song to Janey and later to Tommy, and now they were all singing it together.

He can remember about us too. He doesn't always have memories that shut me out. Oh, Bill, I love you so. Say something now. Something that will let me know that you love me a little. Lean close and say that it's a wonderful day and I will know what you mean. I will know that we're together again. But he said nothing. She had to be content with the knowledge that the song had reminded him of another time, a time before she had tried to hurt him and had ended by crying her heart out.

She became aware that the song was ended and that Tommy's voice was pitched now to a wheedling, coaxing tone.

"Maybe later, Tommy," Myra was saying.

"No, now. It's my birthday right here and now. You promised. You said that you'd ——"

"Yes, you did, Myra," Janey said.

The children were looking at Myra expectantly.

"What is it?" Bill asked.

"Myra promised that on his birthday she'd recite for Tommy that boomlay thing he likes to hear."

Bill said "Oh." And Pat knew that he wished he had not asked.

Myra said, "All right, Tommy. If I promised I will." She got up from the cushioned window seat and chose a better setti self. The hassock that was placed one's view was obscured. Tom breathlessly, his eyes glistening, his restive with excitement. She did no there was complete attention from Couldn't you have left the re Tommy would have enjoyed the po you. Why did you stay? It's too late to leave. She's into it. What does th to you, darling? Does it take you happy day? Or do you feel like wee

"Whirl ye the deadly voo-doo r
Harry the uplands,
Steal all the cattle,
Rattle-rattle, rattle-rattle Bing!
Boomlay, boomlay, boomlay,

Richard and Annette were stan foyer, listening. Why, this was a p of note. Perhaps she should have in of the local residents to hear a voi been still for a very long while. Sh Bill. His eyes were lowered and g of what he thought or felt.

"A roaring, epic, rag-time t From the mouth of the Co To the Mountains of the M

And it's a pretty good performan come to think of it. Bill appears t this room, listening to Myra, but h Cherry Hill and ing to Lisa's v am smiling and the rhythm a happy and at pe world. When sh reciting I will was wonderful, I will say that tremendously. And no one wi that each in h died a million a

Richard and plauded and fac the kitchen cheered lustily Myra the supreme compliment o shiping silence.

Pat said, "That was wonderf enjoyed it tremendously."

"So did I." But Bill was not lo child when he spoke. He was lig rette and there was the old farav his eyes.

And when Tommy seized his and embroiled his father in a sc walked away from the house and alone on the beach. It was good t breeze upon her face and to be moment from the anxious busine Bill's glance, of hoping for a wo that was more than just a studied diality. I cannot go on this way n cannot bear our being such pleas ances. She thought how he had lo one moment when they had been it didn't mean much, really. It c for he had made nothing of it. I my hand, if he had said a word –

And she did not exactly pray, l far out to the place where the se and she whispered, "I am the ki be told that she is loved. Every s hear an affectionate word. Plea these things." And of course prayer, for she did not address it only a sigh on a lonesome beac pected nothing of it. She wen house and played darts and sh how to model a flower out of c

And the children's day was o she went upstairs with them for t words and kisses that would c through the dark hours.

"Did you have a nice birthd

"It was keen."

In the guest room Myra was and she did not move when Pa

"Well, you got undressed fas

"Yes. Will you sit a minute

"Sure, if you'd like." Pat sa little slipper chair.

Care for the life of another, even material, bodily care, is spiritual in essence. Bread for myself is a material question; bread for my neighbor is a spiritual question.

—NICHOLAS BERDYAEV:
The Fate of Man in the Modern World

Here's Double Value!

Only Kentile gives you these

LOW COST FLOORS

with

Guaranteed LONG WEAR

Kentile Colors shown are: Gardenia and Genoa Green with Daisy ThemeTile

Colorful KENTILE Floors Help Turn Unused Space Into Beautiful Rooms

Install It Yourself . . .
It's easy! An 8'x10' Kentile Floor can be yours for about $16.75

Just think, you can remodel that attic or garage with a lovely floor at a cost far less than you'd dream! Kentile's long-wearing beauty compares in price to floorings with painted surfaces that quickly wear off...yet Kentile gives you color clear through each tile. Create the floor of your heart's desire...an easier-to-mop-clean floor that stands up under family wear and tear even if you're raising an active pair of twins! Choose from 24 colors: individualize your design with exciting ThemeTile inserts...then sit back and enjoy this double-value beauty floor for years!

SHOPPING HINT . . Be sure you get the finest in asphalt tiles. Look for the famous Kentile name on every carton. Genuine Kentile is manufactured only by Kentile, Inc.

See your local KENTILE Dealer for FREE estimate. He's listed under FLOORS in your Classified Phone Book. In Canada, T. Eaton Co., Ltd.

KENTILE®
The Asphalt Tile of Enduring Beauty

Copyright 1954 Kentile, Inc.

KENTILE, INC., 58 2nd Ave., Brooklyn 15, N. Y.

. On my bed, please."
K." What was this now? Was fever? I suppose I can put my her forehead without her guess-she's scaring me stiff. I wonder had the usual children's diseases.
suppose so. That would be ex-too much.
head's cool. I'm not sick. I nted to say that I had a good day."
that's nice, honey."
ed all that birthday feeling.
ow what I mean?"
nk I do."
ept making believe I was
."
t silent. What did you say to rprivileged child who owned at and who had been raised ooded horses on an estate the village?
be Tommy was making be-was you," she said after a
.
I don't think so. It was too ng him. I want to tell you ng and I want to ask a favor you Go head."
My turned away and ran her little nds er the sheet, smoothing down ready smooth surface. "I want to yo hat I'll always remember you.
ant to tell you that I love you."
Dow on the beach a voice that ande lonely called a name and re s an answer to the call and ough came from far away it came ous and without hesitation. And sa on Myra's bed and thought ut e lonely voice that had been wet , then she bent and kissed a K rigan's child. "What is this or, ney?"
I w t to call you Pat. Will you let
"
Yo could have done that at any
"
I almost did, but I was afraid you like it."
ve loved it."
hand came to rest in Pat's.
uiet and contented, her eyes ed, ittle smile on her mouth. "I yo Pat, just as much as Janey s." e voice was soft and drowsy
M was asleep.

dn't been a prayer. She had d e he beach and looked out to and d simply stated her needs.
sl had wanted Bill to say that ove her. Not Myra. Someone, eth had heard her whispered ar had missed the point, had un stood that only Bill could th assurance that made life h l ng. But Pat gazed down at sle ng child and on impulse d again, for it was not a small a had given. And she bescious of a sudden proud wi n her and for a moment its oth re a startling resemblance app ss.
e s ched off Myra's light and d stairs. Bill was sitting in ro oom reading something he ght with him from town. s . "I think Tommy had a don't you?"
e said he did."
s went back to his reading.

u have to read? I only see ekends, you know."
aside the deadly-looking seemed to be a contract.
y, t. Would you like to go to ab
d not reply. She did not want to e club. She wanted to sit in lk to him. She wanted to th high points of their baby's ay nd she wanted to tell him
My loved her and that the world was a pretty sparkling little thing if only a man would make the effort to be happy with the woman he had.

"Or the movies?" he said.

It was obviously not his wish to sit here and talk. If he could not read, then they would dance or go to the movies. Anything, apparently, was better than just sitting here with her.

Pat waited, but he said no more. In the end it was she who spoke.

"All right," she said. "The movies."

It was almost time to go back to the apartment. Pat looked about the room thinking that soon, any day now, it would begin, the annual weeding out of the things that belonged only to the bright summer days. It would start with a small motion toward the closet or perhaps only a thought—I don't need that in the city and next summer I'll buy a new one—and all of a sudden there would be a quickening of tempo, a definite series of actions that would have all the clothes out of all the closets and would end with the bags packed, the car waiting and the children saying good-by to the house. She walked toward her closet.

She thought, The black bathing suit is about finished. I might as well throw it away today and see what else I won't be wanting any more.

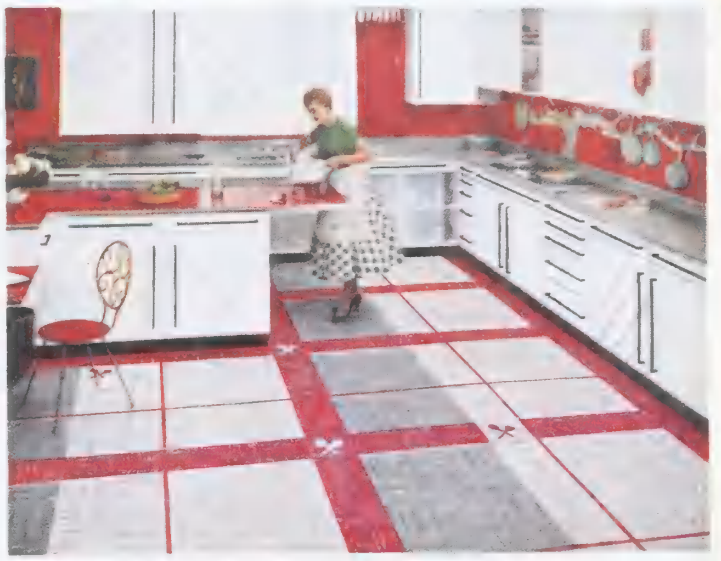
Halfway to the closet she paused. Who had thrown the downstairs door open with such a dreadful bang against the wall? Not any of the children, surely. They were a mile away playing at —— Whose hurried footsteps were those? Who was calling?

You can answer every flooring need with a floor by KENTILE, INC.

It's easy to choose the perfect flooring to fit your home and budget from all the exquisite colors in easy-to-care-for floors at your KENTILE Dealer's now. Prices quoted below are approximate. Look for your KENTILE Dealer's name under FLOORS in your Classified Phone Directory.

KenRubber colors shown above: Medoux and Waulsort with White Feature Strip

KENRUBBER TILE FLOORS



The finest of rubber tiles, KenRubber's unequalled luxury is preferred in America's foremost homes...even to flooring costing dollars more. You can feel KenRubber's quality in its "Cushioned Beauty," its coiled-spring resilience, its mirror-like smoothness that assures easy cleaning. Rich colors go tile-deep, won't wear off even under hardest use. Install your own 8'x10' floor in the economical new Standard Gauge KenRubber for only $32.50

Kencork floor tiles shown above are 6" x 12" size

KENCORK FLOORS/WALLS

This superb cork flooring is brought to you only by KENTILE, INC. Kencork's natural beauty gives rooms the luxury of quiet elegance with easier care. Economical, too. Kencork actually costs less than wall-to-wall broadloom, needs no other floor covering. Be sure to see its decorator-preferred random tones for floors and walls. You can install a luxurious Kencork Floor in an average 8'x10' room for as little as $41.50

KenFlor colors shown above: Ruby Red, Quaker Grey, White Peony with Feature Strip, ThemeTile and Matching Counter Tops.

KENFLOR VINYL TILE

For the newest in tile floors rely on KENTILE, INC.! "Beauty Smooth" KenFlor bonds strong, grease-proof vinyl to a pliant cushion for easy installation over new and old wood floors. Clearer, lovelier colors and lastingly brilliant surface won't scuff or mar under hardest use or hot grease spills. Comes by-the-yard, too, for floors and matching or contrasting counter tops. Install KenFlor yourself. An average 8'x10' tile floor costs approximately $26.50

Your Choice of 2 Kinds of Vinyl Tile

KenFlex colors above: Desert Sand, Marigold and ThemeTile

KENFLEX VINYL TILE

Yes, highest-quality floors for every purpose are yours from KENTILE, INC. KenFlex blends vinyl with asbestos for use wherever bright, colorful flooring is needed. It is ideal for new, non-basement homes, or over any smooth cement floor in contact with the earth. KenFlex defies grease, dirt and wear. Colors go clear through, clean magically, won't wear off, need waxing only to add luster! You can install an 8'x10' floor yourself, for only ... $25.50

AMERICA'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF RESILIENT TILE FLOORINGS

It's the finest flooring of its kind, if it's by Kentile, Inc.

KENTILE, INC. *REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

KENTILE * KENCORK * KENRUBBER * KENFLEX * KENFLOR

©1954 Kentile, Inc., 58 Second Avenue, Brooklyn 15, N. Y.

Tam O'Shanter

Three Little Pearls for School . . . in Knit Basquettes

From the fastidious and expensive detailing to the wash-fast colors, these super-fine cotton knit basquettes add up to total perfection!

A. Cardigan-type with bow tie, navy, red, charcoal.
Sizes 2 to 6X.....$1.98
Sizes 7 to 14.....2.49

B. Two-tone Peter Pan Basquette; navy and red.
Sizes 2 to 6X.....$1.98
Sizes 7 to 14.....2.49

C. Man-tailored Tattersall Shirt with its own cuff links; tan and blue.
Sizes 2 to 6X.....$2.98
Sizes 7 to 14.....2.98

For free catalog, write Dept. L

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

TAM O'SHANTER, Inc., 5512 Empire State Building, New York 1, N. Y. Plant: Manchester, N. H.

Evenflo — Best By Test For Baby

John Millar, Cleveland, Ohio, with son and daughter

Evenflo is Mealtime to Johnnie & Susie

The Millar youngsters have been fed with Evenflo Nursers since birth. Evenflo's Twin Air Valve Nipples nurse so free and easy that feeding babies is automatic and routine, even for father. And Mrs. Millar, like many other mothers, appreciates Evenflo's handy nipple, bottle, cap, all-in-one unit. It is so convenient to clean, fill and seal for refrigerator or baby bag when you go visiting. That's why more mothers use Evenflo than all other nursers combined!

THE PYRAMID RUBBER CO., RAVENNA, OHIO

Evenflo® PRECISION FEEDING

Complete Evenflo Units 25c (4- & 8-oz. sizes)
—with ounces in red 30c
—with Pyrex bottles 40c Unbreakable Plastic Units:
8-oz. size 54c; 4-oz. 40c
Plastic Bottles Only:
8-oz. size 39c; 4-oz. 25c
Evenflo Nipples & Parts 10c
Evenflo Deluxe Silicone Nipples 39c

America's Most Popular Nurser

Turknit® Baby Goods

Bibs
Towels
Wash Cloths
Bath Robes
Bath Blankets

Shower Gifts

PUTNAM KNITTING CO., BOX G, COHOES, N.Y.

1¼ Million Mothers PREFER BABEE-TENDA*

CARE!

Mothers know best. Give your precious little one the security of America's finest safety chair. Your baby can't tip, tumble or slide out of Babee-Tenda. Playground area keeps baby happily occupied—gives you wonderful freedom. Posture-perfect swing seat. Push button legs raise for easy feeding. Pays for itself in extra features and years of service.

Compact, Modern, Sanitary Design

Approved and used by leading doctors and institutions.

RECOMMENDED BY PARENTS MAGAZINE

Insist upon the original, genuine Babee-Tenda. NOT SOLD IN STORES. Telephone your nearest Babee-Tenda bonded agency or mail coupon below for free folder on Babee-Tenda Care.

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

MAIL COUPON FOR FREE FOLDER!

BABEE-TENDA CORP. Dept. 229,
750 Prospect Ave., Cleveland 15, Ohio
Please send Free folder on Babee-Tenda Care.

Name.....
Address.....
City..... State.....

*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. and Foreign countries

"Mother! Mother!"

She flew to the stairs and there was Janey, her small face bright scarlet, her breath coming in frantic little gasps.

"Janey, how did you get here? What's the matter?"

"Tommy's hurt, mother. Tommy's hurt! I ran all the way to get you. Hurry!"

You made the most speed by walking downstairs as though nothing unusual had happened. You paid no attention to the hammering of your heart or to the terror that gripped you so hard that you wanted to sob as Janey was sobbing. The best thing you could do was be calm and sensible.

She called to Richard, "Come with me. Never mind changing. We're in a hurry."

She started the car and they were on the way before she asked anything of Janey.

"What happened?"

"He was up in a tree and he fell. He hurts awfully bad, mother, and he was crying. Not loud, you know, but I could tell it was hurting and he can't move and his face got all pale and I ran for you."

"That was the right thing to do, Janey."

"Myra can run faster and she said she'd go, but I told her to stay. He hurts so bad that I told her to say boomlay for him. He likes it and it'll make him happy and I promised to run awfully fast if she would just recite for him and maybe make him stop crying."

"That was a good idea, honey."

They jumped from the car on a side road and ran into the dim little woodsy place where Janey led them. "It's right up here, mother. Right up here."

There was a little clump of trees and there was Tommy lying white-faced on the ground. You didn't have to be a doctor to know that a leg could not assume that grotesque position unless it was broken.

Pat said, "How's it going, fellow?"

"It hurts," Tommy moaned.

"I know. I know."

Richard said, "I can lift him easy, Mrs. Hampton."

THAT was what she wanted. Her baby lifted off the hard unyielding ground; but you had to be sensible. She kept telling herself you had to be sensible.

"No, Richard, don't touch him. Find a telephone and call the hospital. Get an ambulance out here fast."

How could you tell if it was more than the leg? Oh, dear God, how could you tell when he lay there so crumpled and white?

Richard rushed away and Pat knelt beside Tommy. "We'll get you all right soon now, fellow. Take it easy." She hoped her voice wasn't as shaky as it sounded in her own ears. Don't cry, you dope. You'll frighten him if you cry. He'll think things are bad and they are bad, are they, God? It'll be all right, won't Oh, please, God, let Tommy be all right.

Richard came back. "They're coming, M Hampton. I'll wait on the side road to sh them where."

"Janey, do you want to wait with Richard

It would be better so, for Richard wa cheerful man who would have no dealings w frightening fancies.

"I'll stay with you, mother. I might be a to help." Janey looked about her and back Pat with puzzlement in her eyes. "Mothe

"YES, honey?" She was bending closely o Tommy. Did she imagine it or was his brea ing terrifyingly irregular?

"Mother, where's Myra?"

"What, dear?" He was breathing peculia Where was the ambulance? Why didn' come?

"I left her here. She's not here now."

"She must be somewhere, Janey." The bulance had only two miles to travel. W could be delaying it?

"I looked. I don't see her."

Was that a siren? Yes, it was coming. ambulance and the men who would kn what to do for Tommy.

"It's all right now," she whispered to h "You'll feel better soon, honey."

They came with Richard leading the those blessed men in white, and they ha stretcher and they knew how to lift the ch

"I'll ride with him," Pat said. "Janey, go home with Richard and I'll let you k what ——"

Janey said, "I can't go home. I have to h for Myra."

And at last Pat understood what Janey been trying to tell her for five minutes. M was gone from the place where Janey hac her. Pat cast a glance into the trees as tho she expected to see what Janey had not s Myra must be somewhere close by. And I Tommy to think about. Yes, but this is sponsibility too. Maybe she isn't playing a g Terrible things happen to children who disap

She turned to Richard. "Look everywh she said, "all around. Keep looking an this must be spoken in a special way so Richard would take it seriously and J would not—"when you don't know where to look call the police station."

She stepped into the ambulance then an on the little seat beside the stretcher. stroked Tommy's hair and sang to him remembered to smile whenever he opene eyes and looked at her.

The ambulance shrieked its way throug beach traffic and Pat said soothing wor Tommy and she thought to herself, As so I know that all is well with him I will call

"Why should I take a bath? I'm not getting married!"

HAMBURGER ever ate!

Pan-broiled it myself . . . in LT (sprinkled to cover bottom pan) instead of fat. Mixed the eat with chopped onion, a little ter and some Lea & Perrins orcestershire. Good? Bro-ther!

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE
THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

Add zest to your cooking with Lea & Perrins — a favorite for more than 100 years.

ecipe Book, "Dishes Men Like." Write a & Perrins, Inc., 241 West Street, ew York 13, New York, Dept. J-9.

JOLLY TIME POP CORN POPS LIKE MAGIC!

NOT EARN MORE?

easily earn extra money by agazine subscriptions in your
ne. Thousands of our repres made their start by asking enerous commission offer. No n. Address a postal today!

IS CIRCULATION COMPANY
ndence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

For delicious picked-this-morning flavor buy . . . .
EYSTONE USHROOMS
—it's the Quality Pack"
FREE! Big Recipe Booklet. Send name of your food store to Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa.
Fancy Mushrooms at a popular price

ARSHMALLOW
luff eanut Butter hes for School
ite with boys and or graham crack-es with delicious anut butter filling;
jelly or jam. Write ummy Book" of ts, illustrated in kee-Mower, Inc., nn, Mass.

and Richard will say that he has found Myra. But why wasn't she there when we came? Why wasn't she there?

"You're all right, Tommy. Here's the hospital now."

They carried him inside and she walked the halls while the examination was under way. She walked unseeingly, numbly as people walk hospital halls. She could not tell how long she walked. It seemed forever and she prayed as she walked and she thought about the sweet smile of her little son and the remembrance of his endearing ways wrung her heart.

After an eternity a doctor came and he did not look like a man who was bringing dreadful tidings. He said, "Mrs. Hampton?"

"Yes. How's my boy? What ——"

"Broken leg. Not too bad. Painful, of course. He's shaken up and he's scraped pretty raw on his hands and knees, but he's in good shape. Leave him here tonight. You can pick him up in the morning."

"Can I see him?"

"We'll get the cast on first, I think. Don't worry. Everything's fine."

EVERYTHING? She went to the phone and called the house. Annette answered and her voice was the voice of one who waits in the quiet zone, longing for news from those on the distant fronts.

"How is Tommy, ma'am?"

"He's all right. A broken leg, which isn't much compared with what it could have been, Annette. What about Myra?"

"They didn't find her, ma'am."

"Is Richard still looking?"

"Yes, ma'am, he's still looking and the police are looking. Richard's out asking everybody. If you can come home, ma'am, please come. Janey is a wreck what with her little brother getting hurt and now this. The poor child is ——"

"I'll come right away."

She went to the desk and spoke to a nurse. "Will you give my little boy a message for me? Tell him I'll be back later to visit him and I'll bring him ——"

"Back later? I'm afraid the children don't have visitors very late."

"What time is it?"

"Twenty minutes after six."

"Twenty minutes after six!" She leaned weakly against the desk, feeling suddenly faint. It was impossible to believe now that all was well with Myra. She was conscious of the nurse's eyes regarding her with wonderment. What could be so special about twenty minutes after six that it would cause a woman to clutch at the desk for support?

"Are you all right? Would you like to sit down?"

"No. Don't bother, please. Tell the little boy I'll see him in the morning. Tell him I'll be here early and please—would you tell him I said good night?"

She thought of Tommy alone, among strangers. In the first ordeal of his life she would not be there and he would not know why she was not. He would only know that in this unfamiliar place there would be no good-night kiss, nobody who belonged to him.

But there is nothing I can do. He at least is safe and among kindly strangers. God knows where Myra is. And dread and despair engulfed her. She was out on the street before she realized that she had no car. Now the taxi service would have to be called. They had two taxis in the town. The wait was usually interminable. This time was no exception.

When it came at last the driver was garrulous and full of information about a lost child. He remembered two other such cases. One child had been found. Oh, yes, they found her, but she was dead by that time. Never been no word of the other one.

And there was no word of this one at the house. Janey brightened somewhat with Pat's assurance that Tommy was in no danger, but there was a haunted look in her eyes and Pat knew that she had heard dreadful stories of little girls who had disappeared. Annette was tight-lipped and somber-faced. Richard had lost his cheerfulness. Pat took the car and went over to the police station and talked to the lieutenant.

"We had to question the little boy, you know, Mrs. Hampton."

Only NIAGARA makes perfect starch instantly in cold water for 1¢ a quart

medium starch solution

Produced by Corn Products Refining Co.

Just swish Niagara in cold water . . . it's ready to use. No cooking or fuss of any kind. Every particle of Niagara Instant Starch has been "precooked" to make perfect starch in cold water. It saves you both work and money!

No sticking . . . No spotting when clothes are starched with Niagara. Your iron glides easily . . . it stays clean and smooth. All your cottons look as nice as the day you bought them. No white streaks even on dark fabrics!

INSTANT NIAGARA SAVES YOU MONEY
(It goes 4 to 5 times farther than costly bottled starch)

"Oh my feet! Every step is agony!"

Pain in your feet can put lines in your face!

● When your feet are sore, throbbing with fatigue, your face is shadowed with pain! And those tense little pain-lines may start old-looking wrinkles.

So be prepared—at the first signs of foot fatigue, rub your feet with Absorbine Jr.

Wonderfully soothing!

Medically recognized for quick, effective help, Absorbine Jr. works with surprising speed to help counter the irritation. At the same time, it soothes the pain of those tingling nerves—gives you wonderful, muscle-relaxing relief.

When your feet feel better, you feel better . . . and your face shows it! Get Absorbine Jr. wherever drugs are sold.

W. F. Young, Inc., Springfield, Mass.

"Help those pain-lines vanish!"

Absorbine Jr.

"You had to question him at the hospital?" Pat asked.

"Yes. Davids went over. He's a father himself. Knows how to talk to kids. Didn't alarm your little fellow any, but this could be serious, so we had to ask him if he saw anybody ——"

"And had he?"

The lieutenant shook his head. "He couldn't give us anything. Not a thing. Maybe right after the fall he was out for a minute. I don't know."

Pat went home and telephoned Bill.

"I'll catch the first train," he said.

It would have been sheer cruelty to put Janey to bed. They sat, all of them, in the living room, waiting for Bill, waiting for word from the police, waiting for something.

Pat called the hospital and heard that Tommy was quite comfortable. He had eaten a little and had been in good spirits and had been rather pleasantly excited about his cast. He was sleeping now. There was no cause for alarm.

No cause for alarm, they said. They didn't know what was going on here. Twice she got out the car because she could not endure the silent sitting. She ran it aimlessly around the town, squinting her eyes into the darkness for the sight of a little figure with flying hair. There were beach parties tonight and she hated the happy glow of their fires and the carefree laughter of the people. Why weren't they out looking for Myra? Others were. The men from the Legion post were searching. The Boy Scouts, too, and a group from the church.

And I had to tell Bill that Lisa's child is gone. He is sitting on a train now, his mind tortured by his fear for her. Help him to bear it if the news is —— No, I won't even think that. Bring her back, dear God. Bring her back safely to us.

After each fruitless round of the streets she returned to the house hopefully, but the drawn faces in the living room told her that no one had been more successful than she had been.

It was ten-thirty when Bill came. He walked into the living room bringing strength and promise with him. They could live again because he was here. He held Pat in his arms and he said, "What a day you've had, sweetheart. How is the little guy?"

"He's doing fine. There's no need to worry about Tommy."

"All right then." And he looked at her with his eyes very calm and he said, "Now tell me again in detail about Tommy's fall—you'll have to help fill me in, Janey—tell me everything. What everyone said and did and all about Tommy and what Myra was doing when you saw her last. Just everything. Both of you."

He listened intently as they told him and when they had finished his eyes were still calm and he took Janey's hand in his and he said, "Honey, do you want to do something that will really help?"

"Oh, I'd do anything, daddy."

"Then get into bed, think your nicest thoughts and go to sleep. I give you my word that when you wake up everything will be all right."

He looked at Annette and Richard and they understood that his directions to them were the same and they withdrew. Bill went to the kitchen then and picked up a flashlight and he took Pat's hand.

"Come on," he said. "Take me to the place she disappeared from."

SHE was touched by his assurance. Didn't he know there were hundreds of flashlights sweeping the wooded section back of town, that for hours people had tramped every inch, had peered behind every tree and rock?

They drove to the little side road and she stopped the car. He got out and looked around. She stayed close to his heels. In the faraway darkness there were voices, a searching party. Any minute a man might call out and the search would be over. And when it was—when it was ——

Bill said, "That empty old house ——"

"Richard and Janey looked there right away. The police have been there since. Everybody's been there."

He said, "She couldn't have gotten far. It's a physical impossibility. You and Janey were back here in no time and they started looking soon after."

Pat stood trembling in the summer night. It hadn't occurred to him that Myra might have been taken from this place in a car. It was strange how he seemed to accept as a fact that there was no crime, no criminal, no tragic heartbreak ahead for them.

If he believes in the possibility that she is in that house, what does he think she is doing there? How can he picture her going voluntarily into that grim old shack? And even if, out of curiosity, she ventured into it she would hurry right out. Any child would. There'd be no point in staying there. If she is in that house, then we have lost her. Doesn't he know that? How can he be so optimistic, so confident?

"Come on," he said to her. "We'll have a look."

He mustn't. Dear God, not Bill. Someone who doesn't love Myra must make a thorough search of the house. But not Bill.

She said, "Everybody has looked and ——"

"I haven't looked," he said and she could not let him go alone.

They walked together through the breathless night and opened the sagging door of the deserted house. Inside there were blackness and the strange sounds that only an old unhappy house knows how to make. The creaking was age. The ghostly rustle was wallpaper stripped and hanging in rags. The scratching noises were rats. These things a person knew, but the effect was weird and terrifying just the same.

It was a small house. It would not take long to comb through it. She held her breath waiting for him to begin, but he did not open a closet door or flash a beam of light into any corner. He simply walked to the center of the main room and he stood there a moment, a big man looming strong and certain against the fearful possibilities of the night. He made no search. He only spoke into the darkness and his voice was soft and persuasive.

"Myra, this is Bill. I've come to take you home. You don't need to hide from me, though I know why you're hiding. Come out, honey. Everything's all right because I understand you. Don't you know that? And I don't think less of you, Myra. That's because I really do understand you. You see, I know that there are things you can't help doing."

Pat stood in the darkness and felt tears hot upon her face as Bill talked into the troubled night.

"Please come. I will never ask you to explain. I don't need to ask. I understand. I know you so well that you don't have to tell me anything. I know why you did it."

There was only silence.

"Honey, please come, please. We miss you. We need you and we'll never blame you or ask a single why."

And there was a sound that was not pa the old house's nightmare. Only a little s somewhere between a sigh and the lighte footsteps and there was a shadow that tered for a second against the window an was saying, "That's it. That's my girl."

And he was walking out of the house Myra in his arms.

She asked about Tommy and her relie evident, but there was something on her that would not give her peace and all the home she cried. She was a child and ther no reason why a child's crying should odd, but it was so just the same.

PAT thought, Somehow I never expec hear the sound of Myra's weeping and I understand any of this. I don't know wh was in that house. I don't know what s that Bill has promised she need not exp don't know why she is crying.

Pat drove in silence listening to Myra's Bill held the child but he did not speak when she glanced at him she saw that h pression was one of sober thoughtfulne

He carried Myra into the house and her on the living-room sofa. Pat brou cold towel and washed the child's fac smiled gently at her.

"You missed dinner, you know. How a little something now?"

Myra shook her head.

"Maybe just a glass of milk?"

"No, thank you." The child stared d her dusty shoes and she said, "I'm about—about everything. I really am."

Bill smiled at her. "I know."

Myra looked at Pat then, but swift ered her eyes when their gazes met. "I s when you came with Richard, but you c see me. I was hiding from you."

I can't ask why she was hiding. Bill p she needn't explain.

"It was easy to hide from everybody in and out of that old house a dozen Nobody heard or saw me. There's s trees, so many places to hide. Once I someone saw me, but he didn't and I back in the house again."

Bill said, "That's all over."

Myra was quiet a moment. Then, was terrible in there. I wanted to screa so frightened, but if I had they wou found me."

Bill went over to the sofa and drew to him. "Well, I found you and there's to be afraid of now. How about that milk Pat offered you?"

"No, I don't want it. I don't want a I'd be sick. I feel so nasty. I feel so —

CONTINUED ON PAGE 138

LOVE POEMS IN THE CHINESE MANNER

By DOROTHY HARRIMAN

1

My heart is like a bell,
Your presence sets it ringing.
When are you coming? . . .
I have forgotten the bell's tone.

Now in autumn, sadness winds
Like a vine about the bell of my heart,
Keeping it silent.

When winter comes
Although the vine may die and loosen,
What if the clapper should be frozen?

Oh, come before winter!

2

When your step is slow and thoughtful
And much frowning makes your gaze dark,
I will smooth your tiger eyebrows
And tell you what the waterfal Is singing.

When outside your cottage ba weather
Flies to and fro,
I will arrange at the window
Barley, green leaves and date flowers
In a jade jar.

If you sigh I will play for you Courage tunes on the mellow reed pipe.

When you feel old and gnarle as a cypress,
I will give you a new child Without birthmark.

u don't have to be Gene Tierney to have a movie star complexion

that's the beauty of Lux

Side comments by me Gene Tierney

ftens your skin as it
nes. That's why Gene Tierney, 9 out of 10 Hollywood
s, uses it every day.
How about you?

this is what sold me on Lux— for good and ever en Lux doesn't irritate—doesn't "roughen" kin Instead Lux softens as it cleanses. (Just try see Daily Lux care can actually help you have ad complexion movie stars are famous for.

tru now and it's been true for years—Lux is lar art of most stars' beauty care. And today r t world more women use Lux Toilet Soap ny other. That makes sense. Movie star or er woman wants a soft smooth complexion. ux ftens as it cleanses.

I didn't use Lux before going to Hollywood. But I learn fast lder—of course. Movie actresses often o r nove heavy make-up several times a day. th depend on Lux mildness you know you o.

In filming "the Egyptian" I had to make up as a dark-skinned queen every day for months sn your skin deserve the same fine care as ie ey's . . . especially when Lux care is the t. ost natural, most popular care in the world?

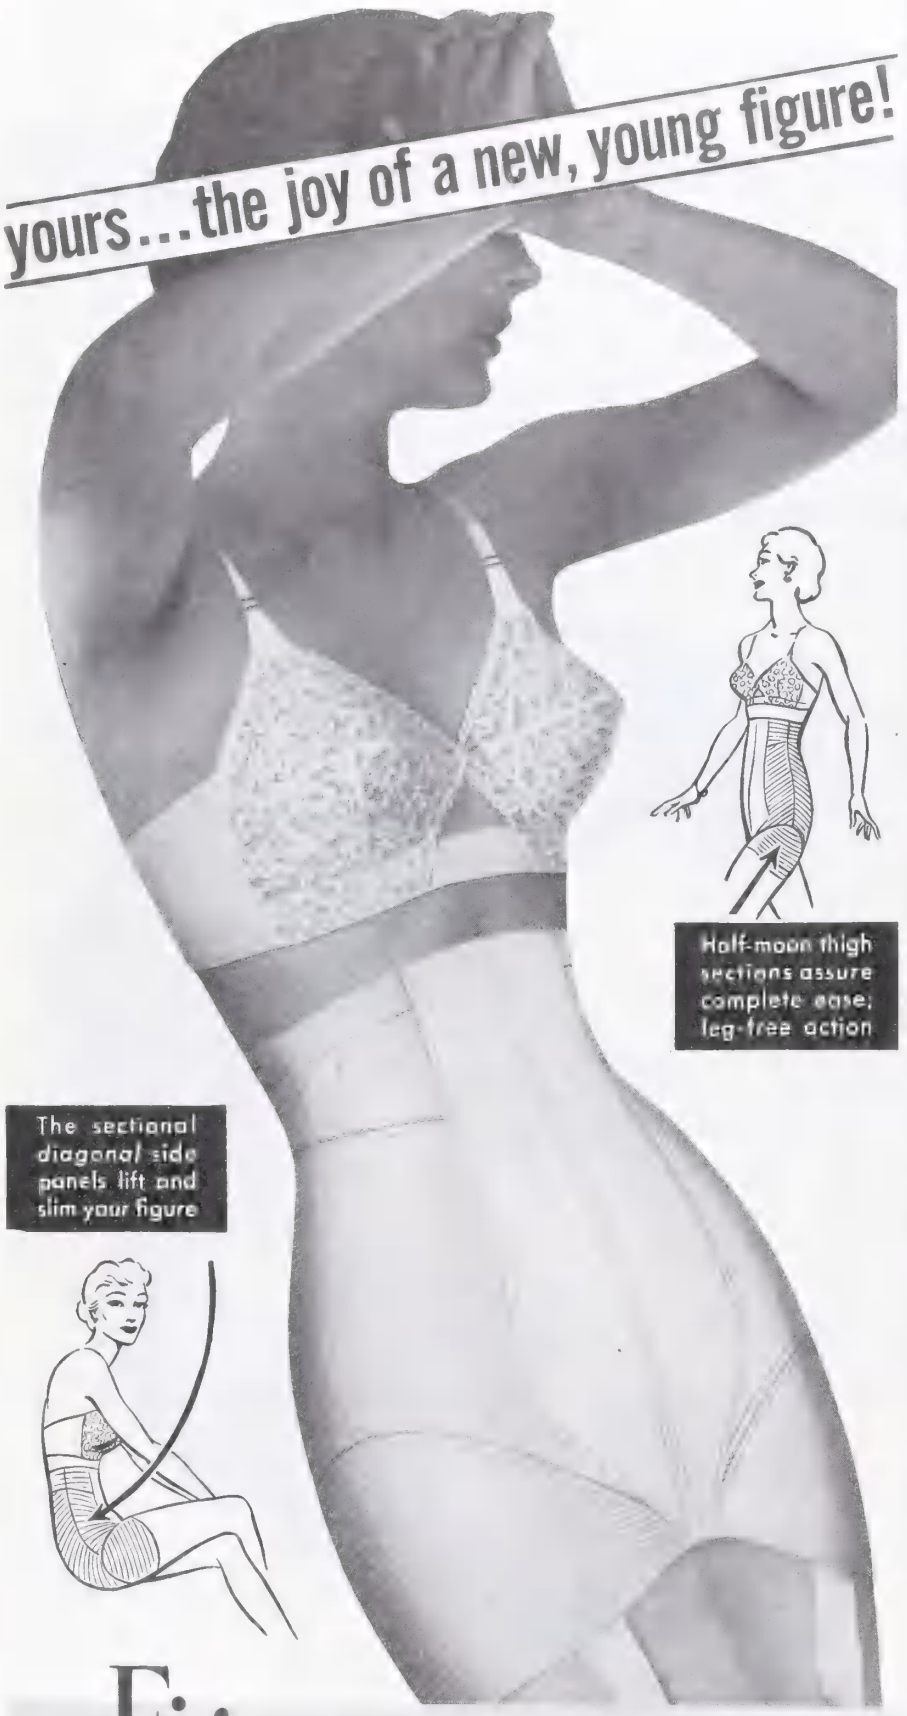
r others unconditionally guarantee that in said about Lux Toilet Soap is true—and y ve your money back if you don't think n st complexion care you've ever had.

Lu nd you'll be on your way toward having s complexion!



)—worth doing

of 0 Hollywood stars believe in it and today more women o the world use Lux than any other complexion care

Lovely Gene Tierney starring in "THE EGYPTIAN" a 20th Century-Fox Production in CinemaScope COLOR BY DELUXE

yours...the joy of a new, young figure!

Half-moon thigh sections assure complete ease; leg-free action

The sectional diagonal side panels lift and slim your figure

Figurama*

fashion's greatest advance in girdle design!

Figurama is different from all other girdles. Waistline, abdomen, thigh and derriere sections are designed separately . . . and joined to provide the control you need. Figurama skilfully lifts and supports your torso muscles . . . with 3-way control: horizontally, vertically, diagonally . . . gives such marvellous freedom you feel you're floating on air! You look inches younger! Figurama Girdles—from $12.95

And . . . for younger, firmer bosom contours . . . Flexees creates Figurama—exclusive *Slip-Loop Bra. Its interlocking cups separate, mold and lift. From $2.95

flexees®

World's Loveliest Foundations

*U. S. Letters Patent 2,607,037; t. m. app. for

Send for "Control Yourself"—free fashion-guide booklet: Flexees, Inc., Dept. LHJ, 417 Fifth Ave., N. Y. 16 covered her face with her hands. "Oh, I'm so ashamed. Once I ran I knew I'd have to hide. I couldn't face Pat. She'd hate me. She'd ——"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 136

"I couldn't hate you, Myra."

"But I had to run. I couldn't stay there. His leg was all curled up funny and he was moaning and there was blood and his face was white like he was dead and I couldn't stand it. It was horrible, so I ran away. Janey was depending on me to recite but I couldn't think of a word he looked so awful, and he reached out for my hand and his had blood on it and I couldn't do anything else but run. Do you forgive me, Pat? Do you forgive me for running from Tommy?"

"Yes, Myra, I forgive you."

"I couldn't stand it if you hated me, Pat. I'd have come right back as soon as the doctors took Tommy away, only I kept thinking of how you'd look at me. I knew you'd hate a coward and I was never coming back to face you and then you came to the house and I couldn't stand being alone and frightened any more."

Pat said, "Let's go to your room and talk this over. It'll be more comfortable. You'll get into bed and I'll sit with you and we'll talk. How about it?"

And they did talk in Myra's room till the child was able to smile again and to believe that Pat had really forgiven her. Pat stayed until the moment came when there was no answer from the bed. She tiptoed over and looked down at the turbulent little soul who slept there and she asked God to look after Myra and she thanked Him for Janey and for Tom, of whom no one had ever said, "My, what an entrancing child!"

She left a small bulb burning and returned to Bill. He had made coffee and they sat down together in the kitchen.

He said, "Long day, wasn't it?"

"Was this only one day?"

"I'm not sure," he told her. "Eat something, honey."

She shook her head. "The coffee will be fine."

THEY climbed the stairs together and walked into their room. It was bright with moonlight and the beach parties were gone and the whole world was silver sand and silver ocean and Bill said, "Don't turn on the light, Pat." He sat down on the small bench at her dressing table and he leaned toward her as she stood at the window. And he said into the quiet, "And now I guess you know what she was like."

There was no point in saying, "Who?"

"Yes, I know."

"They're all like that. The child came by it honestly. Ken walked out on Lisa when she needed him. She wasn't pretty when she was pregnant, I understand, and she was the kind who was sick most of the months. He didn't like that, so he went off on the yacht. Life wasn't pleasant without him and Lisa gave no thought to that poor little kid in there who needed her, so she killed herself. What was that except a more dramatic form of running away? They run, all of them, when the fun is over. That's the way they are."

Pat said, "I didn't think you knew that." She kept her eyes fixed on the bright ocean. Lisa. She was here again. In this room. Here they had spoken of her once before and everything had been wrong from that moment on. Was there a way to silence him, a way to tell him that there must be no more talk of Lisa?

He lighted a cigarette. "There are things you think you'll never tell a soul," he said, "then suddenly you're telling. Pat, she was part of my life. She's all wrapped up with the wonderful time when every day was new and shiny-bright. She was laughter and romance and adventure and she wasn't worth a second thought."

And Pat's heart pounded and the ocean was a silver blur and she turned from the window and looked at Bill's set face in the moonlight.

"She ran from what was real and tough to take. There was nothing to her except froth and that was the way she was." He stood up and walked to an ash tray, though there was one beside him. "And I never wanted anyone to know it. I defended her against my parents and Joanne because ——"

"Because you were in love wit

"Of course I was in love with I certain day and after that I was with her any more. After that I on There is a difference, you know."

Yes, there was a difference 'an what the difference was and she k had been a fool, afraid of a ghost girl who even while she lived ha froth.

"I loved her in a very special wa a way that was all sentiment an She represented the kid years. She the fun and the secrets and the scr excitement of being young and li

NOW

2 DELIGHTFUL FORM

TALC—IN AMERI

BELOVED FRAGRAN

April Sho

1. The long-loved talc . . . and soothing . . . with the f that's fresh as springtime! April Showers REGULAR Talc

2. New! Deodorant For purpose" version of this fa grant talc. Wonderful ingre added for all-over body d protection. April Showers DEODORANT T

. . . and in the same wonderful fragrance the NEW

LIQUID CREAM DEODORANT

You'll want to discover this perspirant in creamy liquid smooth, creamy texture is s your skin . . . pleasant to refreshingly scented! 79¢

Prices plus tax

by CHERA PERFUME

im and put her arms around him. "I didn't understand." of the past, Pat. Part of the days of a fellow's youth." He to him and he said, "A fellow er on, days with his wife and e not carefree days. You pay et. You pay with worry and che. The price is high, but it's s not a sane man alive who'd d kids for the past, but he has mber—and to remember ten- when everything was fun."
nown."
n't you know that I loved you r anybody? Didn't I show my rling. I tried."
inking that ——"
t you kept thinking. Maybe ays thought it if this thing tonight. I never wanted you she was really like. I had a o you understand that, Pat? e the way I feel about a book was a kid. It was called The Triggers and to this day I love body's going to tell me it was de of me I know it was."
e quiet in each other's arms ttle because the book that he trash some- years failed

When you knock on wood you are paying tribute to the god of the tree. The custom originated in times when men believed that gods lived in sticks and stones. Thunder and lightning, the tallest hill, the tallest tree—each had its deity, a wrathful and jealous being. If a man's luck were too flourishing, it would be changed. Consequently a man bragging of good fortune let the nearest god who might overhear him know that he bowed before him, and he did this by knocking on wood.

how only nd of for hat I bout mmy is it loy- rship e and as so Why give now- my ect too much of each other, f we love, can't we sometimes her is only a little kid in need d?

minute you told me that n hurt and that Myra was y she was gone. It was her again, running away from sant. Only this time it was

w?"
med," he said. "Myra was ng."

s ashamed. I was ashamed explain, to apologize and to dy the way she was. I spent ny life defending Lisa. But erything about her and we I can talk of her to you and ven laugh together at some- did."
n, Bill."

filled her with its sweetness as all hers now. Forever and new that the joy she felt in ld not always be with her. ways remember how lucky, as. Another day would find per aflame or her spirit re- small thing or other. But the ht would always be there red into existence if she but

l speak of Lisa without fear ithe, pitiful Lisa who had tragically. And I am sorry had nothing that was genu- nnot be afraid of her again hat she was like. And Bill s like and now we can go on derful security of Bill's arms e thought what it must be and gaiety and her thoughts the other room. The child who was enchanting and captivating and who ran when the fun was over. This child needed a friend, a friend who would stand by ready to say the right word, ready to lend a hand if the going grew rugged. This was Lisa Kerrigan's child.

And Pat thought, I don't owe you anything, Lisa, but you had so little even though you bewitched everyone who ever knew you. Maybe now when it is too late you are concerned about Myra. If so, you may rest, I will try to be Myra's friend. If she ever needs me I will not fail her. I will try to pick up the pieces. Go away, Lisa. Go rest. Good-by.

And she said to Bill, "Bill, did you know that Myra loves me?"

"Yes, honey, I know."

"When is Betsy Kerrigan coming back?"

He did not answer.

"Don't you know? Hasn't she written?"

"Yes, she's written."

"I just thought that maybe we could take Myra home to the apartment with us. She could go to school with Tom and Janey. She could have Christmas with us. We could give her a nice year. Do you think Betsy would let us keep her awhile?"

He laughed shortly. "Betsy? Yes, she'd let us keep her awhile." He stepped away from Pat and switched on a lamp. "I have a letter here from Betsy. She doesn't know whether the child is happy with us or not. She doesn't know what goes on at all. Maybe Myra's miserable with us. Maybe she hates our kids or our food or our guts. Betsy doesn't know and Betsy doesn't care!" He reached into his pocket and drew out a letter. "I'll skip all the amusing episodes and bright witticisms from the lips of celebrities. I'll get to the part that concerns us. Listen: 'Well, Cherry Hill's been sold at last. Brought rather a decent price too. Can't imagine what I'll do with the money. I'm out of the habit of having any. I'm certainly not going to take on the responsibility of a house again. Floria, who adores houses, has just bought two—one in Rome and one in Paris. I'm going to live in hotels the rest of my life unless I live like this—in someone else's house. I can't think what to do about Myra. Floria simply won't have the poor little wretch and I would like to stay here for a time. Would you mind keeping Myra with your two? She can't be much trouble to Peggy since Peggy has children anyway to keep her tied down.'"

Bill folded the letter carefully, then tore it to pieces and tossed it into the wastebasket.

Pat said, "I never would have believed a civilized woman could treat a child that way. Why, it's as though she considered Myra no more than a puppy or a kitten that she can give away and forget."

Bill switched off the lamp and the room was dark now, the silver gone, the night outside soft black velvet.

He said, "They run. If it's no fun, they run."

She did not reply. She stood there in the dark thinking of them, the gay magnificent people who ran when the fun was over. Ken who had run from Lisa, Lisa from her responsibilities, Betsy from the child of her dead daughter. And Myra the young one, she ran too. And there was no happiness in running. They would never find it that way.

If I could tell Myra that. If I could teach her that when you stand your ground, fighting and enduring, something wonderful comes to you—better than fun, more lasting than laughter.

She looked across the room at her husband. He was undressing, making those sleepy sounds that come with the night. He yawned and stretched hugely. "I'm dead on my feet," he said. "Aren't you all in?"

"Yes. It's been quite a day."

But she was not thinking that she was tired. She undressed slowly, thinking about Myra, the gay spirit that was sunlight in a pretty drab world. There weren't many like Myra and that wonderful bright charm that God had given her must never be lost, never be subdued. One must only give her something fine, something solid to add to it. Will Bill understand now? Will he realize what I'm trying to do? Will he be on my side when the chips are down?

He was in bed and after the long minutes of stillness she did not dare to approach him for a good-night kiss. He could easily have drifted off to sleep by now. Silently she crept into her own bed.

Bill stirred. "Pat."

"Yes, dear."

"I love you."

"I know, Bill. I know." She was still again.

Out of the darkness he spoke. "It'll be a tough job but you can do it."

"Do what?"

He said, "You can teach her not to glitter when she walks."

She closed her eyes and a lovely wave of sleepy happiness swept over her.

"Oh, yes, my darling, if you say so I can teach her."

"I say so. Good night, baby."

"Good night, Bill."

And good night, wonderful, wonderful world.

END

Pop's He-man Specials

Try these He-man favorites

All good sandwiches begin with butte

BUTTERY CHEESEBURGER—Butter that bun generously. Broil with a cheeseburger. Top with onion and olive. Then sink your teeth into that buttery-hot goodness! Butter melting-hot tastes just simply wonderful!

BUTTER FRIED EGG SA
Dad makes this for t family. That come-hitl of sizzling butter certai the crowd. Butter browned in the pan, there's nothing like an in butter!

BUTTER AND RYE BREAD with Swiss Cheese and Ham. Favorite meal or snack! So satisfying with plenty of butter, spread on soft and tasty. Enjoy that matchless butter flavor with every tempting bite.

BUTTERED GRILLED SANDWICH—Butter th cheese sandwich. M do. And here's why toasts right into the b cheese is melting. Wh Only Butter toasts
that! And tastes like th

Naturally—every pound of Butter is made from four pints of rich cream.

Naturally—Butter's color and vitamins are natural.

Naturally—Sandwiches made with Butter are Better.

Butter and other dairy foods are 30% of all you eat . . . yet cost only 15¢ of each food dollar.

Homemaker Service and Research for th supported by dairy farmers across the American Dairy Associ

"The Voice of the Dairy Farmer"

20 N. Wacker Drive Building, Chicago 6, Il

As you plant, so shall ye reap—the Parkers chose a new way of life for themselves and find it good.

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

WE STARTED LIFE OVER

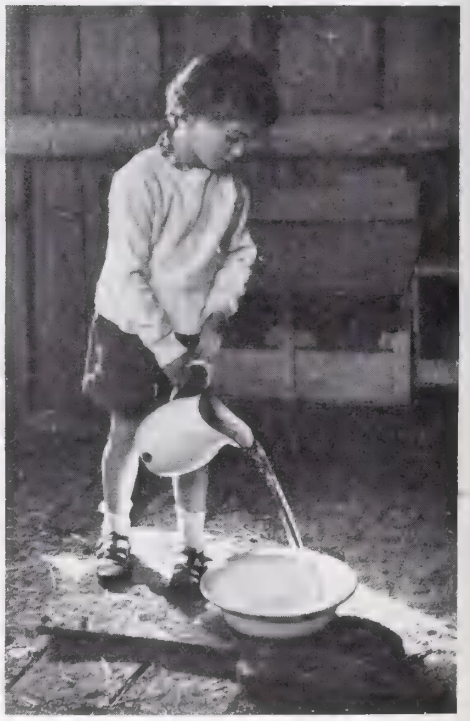
By SCUDDER M. PARKER

On a Vermont farm, Scud and Bets Parker plant, tend and reap. Major crops: peas, berries, potatoes and—most important—children

WILL it come out all right? I didn't know. It's the thing to say about a wedding—"It went off well and the bride looked lovely." No one ever says that it went off badly or how the room looked. But this is my wedding—our wedding—Elizabeth Holden's and mine. Bet Holden—what a strange, distant name! I feel like a bottle of ginger ale—sort of bubbly but essentially watery. My face is setting like quick-drying cement. The organ is too loud—it is a fact practically. "The wedding went off badly and the groom looked terrible."

At the front of the church we turned to wait for the bride. There was my mother, looking straight at me, smiling. Across the aisle was Bet's mother, trying to look cheerful but close to tears. There were a few others—family and friends. But the church seemed empty—cavernous, in fact. "It was a small wedding." Was there ever a little wedding? "It was a tiny, wee wedding and it went off badly. The groom was an inch and a half high and he looked ——"

Suddenly there was Bets starting down the aisle with her father. I strained to see her features clearly—tilted nose, pert, cleft chin and a smile that would make everything right. She was pale—almost as white as her wedding dress. She looked like a girl I had seen before only at a distance. Not a bit like the Bets I knew that December night in Central Park when somehow, without saying it in so many words, we both knew we were engaged.



Now she was coming near and I could see CONTINUED ON PAGE 143

For Denny (11), Sally (6), Stevie (4) and Alan (2), farm life is as perfect as love and work can make it.

Scud reads from the Bible on Sunday night.
Stevie's typical prayer: "God bless mommy and daddy and all of us—and please make the duck's eggs hatch."

It's not bad at all being the only girl in the family—you get to feed the chickens and help with the housework. You have all the boys' fun and a girl's fun too.

Chief inspector and specialist in questions hard to answer, Stevie, the middle boy, shows some signs of preferring play to work—but does plenty of both.

Shoulder-high to his father, Denny, the oldest, walks a mile each way to school-bus stop, sun or storm, comes home to help with milking, feed pigs and his own 4-H calf.

Nobody is too small to work at High Reach Farm. Two-year-old Alan, finds work for himself to do when nobody else can.

"We never walk alone."

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 141 there was a hint of a question in her gray eyes, as there must have been in mine. As she stepped up beside me I could feel that she, too, was trembling. Tentatively I touched the back of my hand against the back of hers. She raised her head a bit higher and I knew she was smiling—once again my Bets the girl I had, it seemed, always known and always loved.

Then it was time for me to speak. I heard the minister pause, but I was gazing at Bets and she at me. Love, honor, cherish? What silly questions to ask two people who could look at each other the way we were, but how wonderful the chance to tell her again, "I will." And how delightful to hear her answer, almost confidentially, in that dear voice with its touch of an English accent, softly "I will."

How will it come out? I know now—at least as well as I know that tomorrow will come.

Bets and I were married by my father in the Cleveland Park Congregational Church in Washington, D. C., on September 5, 1941. I had been graduated from Williams College the preceding June and had a job as assistant secretary to Senator John Chandler Gregg Danaher of Connecticut, and was attending night law classes at Georgetown University. Bets, the only daughter of divorced parents with separate quarters in New York City, had spent much of her life in private schools and was just out of Wellesley. She was not yet twenty-one and accustomed to expensive, if not altogether happy, living. When her mother asked me how I expected to support her, I mentioned proudly that my salary was thirty-five dollars a week. She was unimpressed.

But that was many dreams ago and in another world besides, our dreams are better now though my income is not. I spent three years in the Army Air Force and seven more as owner and editor of two weekly newspapers—the Chicopee (Massachusetts) Herald and the Katonah (New York) Record. Bets was a partner, and not an altogether silent one, in every enterprise. She also had babies at appropriate intervals until the total reached four

When a fellow needs a friend at High Reach Farm, he has one. Hand in hand, Scud and Alan go to the barn to do the evening chores.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY SUZANNE SZASZ

During that time our ideas of what we wanted of life changed greatly.

Early in our marriage, Bets told a friend that she was "determined not to be a traitor to her alma mater and sink into a domestic rut." I don't know what she was taught in one of our best women's colleges to make her feel that way. Perhaps that sort of teaching has changed in the last ten years. Anyway, Bets has. Nevertheless, I can imagine one Wellesley alumna of the class of '41 saying to another, "I wonder whatever happened to Bets Holden?" And I know the answer, for I have heard it in various forms: "Well, she married that Congregational minister's son, you remember, and they had four children. Guess where they are now? Miles from nowhere, nine miles out from a dinky little town at the end of a dirt road in Vermont. All that mud, manure and CONTINUED ON PAGE 158

Before dusk, the Parkers often sleigh over the glistening hills, return stamping to firelit rooms, home-raised food and hard work—"but never a regret at having left urban life behind us."

Now—see what leading sheet manufacturers bring you . . .

A new luxury in sheets of Du Pont Nylon

These new sheets of 100% Du Pont nylon are caressingly smooth . . . give you a feeling of dreamy luxury. Yet Du Pont nylon makes these sheets amazingly easy to care for . . . light in weight . . . so compact they can be stored in little space . . . and so durable they wear and wear. These new sheets of Du Pont nylon come in a rainbow of pastels as well as sparkling white. Look for sheets of Du Pont nylon when you shop at your favorite store.

DU PONT
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING
. . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY

SHEETS of Du Pont nylon wash sparkling clean ever so quickly . . . are amazingly light to handle . . . never need ironing.

FITTED nylon sheets cut bed-making time . . . give you smooth, wrinkle-free comfort!

LUXURIOUS nylon sheets fold easily, compactly for convenient storage in your linen closet.

ci ng new things are happening in NYLON—one of DU PONT'S modern-living fibers Bets in her fireside costume. Gray flannel jumper, Vogue Design No. 8394; her calico blouse, No. 8320.

Mix-and-Match Winter Wardrobe

Bets Parker's wardrobe plan for a cold winter: A gray flannel jumper that does triple duty . . . a peasant cotton blouse and skirt which go together or separately . . . a flannel jacket to match the jumper to look like a suit . . . a gray tweed jersey dress touched with white. Over all, a bright red chinchilla coat lined in fluffy Orlon fleece . . . and under all, a bright red flannelet petticoat.

By NORA O'LEARY
Pattern Editor of the Journal

Jumper wraps to back, has jeweled buttons for evening, gray pearl for day (changeable shank buttons).

Over jumper, matching basque jacket with push-up sleeves. Vogue Design No. 8429. Velveteen cap.

